1. This long introductory note is Jonson's. Leo wrote the Description of Africa (1526); the other three are classical authorities on geography.

2. Some, though not Pliny, identified it as the Nile. "Niger" means "black."

3. Lake Chad.

4. Painted on the front curtain.

5. Effects created by a series of painted cloths raised and lowered by a machine.

6. Sea gods.

7. Back.

8. The Atlantic Ocean, father of the river Niger. Both ride on the backs of hippocamps ("sea horses"), mythological creatures with horses' heads and sea serpents' tails.

9. Sea nymphs, daughters of Oceanus and Tethys.

The masquers were placed in a great concave shell, like mother of pearl, curiously made to move on those waters, and rise with the billow; the top thereof was stuck with a chevron of lights which, indented to the proportion of the shell, struck a glorious beam upon them as they were seated one above another; so that they were all seen, but in an extravagant order.<sup>1</sup>

On sides of the shell did swim six huge sea monsters, varied in their shapes and dispositions, bearing on their backs the twelve torchbearers, who were planted there in several greces,<sup>2</sup> so as the backs of some were seen, some in purple<sup>3</sup> (or side), others in face, and all having their lights burning out of whelks or murex shells.

The attire of the masquers was alike in all, without difference; the colors azure and silver, their hair thick, and curled upright in tresses, like pyramids, but returned on the top with a scroll and antique dressing of feathers, and jewels interlaced with ropes of pearl. And for the front, ear, neck and wrists, the ornament was of the most choice and orient pearl, best setting off from the black.

For the light-bearers, sea green, waved about the skirts with gold and silver; their hair loose and flowing, garlanded with sea grass, and that stuck with branches of coral.

These thus presented, the scene behind seemed a vast sea (and united with this that flowed forth)<sup>4</sup> from the termination or horizon of which (being the level of the state,<sup>5</sup> which was placed in the upper end of the hall) was drawn, by the lines of perspective, the whole work, shooting downwards from the eye; which decorum made it more conspicuous, and caught the eye afar off with a wandering beauty. To which was added an obscure and cloudy night piece,<sup>6</sup> that made the whole set off. So much for the bodily part, which was of Master Inigo Jones his design and act.

By this, one of the tritons, with the two sea maids, began to sing to the others' loud music, their voices being a tenor and two trebles.

SONG

Sound, sound aloud
 The welcome of the orient flood
 Into the west;
 Fair Niger, son to great Oceanus,
 Now honored thus
 With all his beauteous race,
 Who though but black in face,
 Yet are they bright,
 And full of life and light,
 To prove that beauty best
 Which not the color, but the feature
 Assures unto the creature.

OCEANUS Be silent, now the ceremony's done,
 And Niger, say, how comes it, lovely son,
 That thou, the Ethiop's river, so far east,
 Art seen to fall into th'extremest west
 Of me, the king of floods, Oceanus,

1. Spread out (inside the shell).

2. Steps.

3. Profile. "Whelks" (following): mollusks; "murex": a kind of shellfish.

4. The painted backdrop and the wave machine.

5. The king's throne, placed at the ideal viewing position, the vanishing point of the perspective.

6. The upper part of the scenery, through which the moon later descends.

And in mine empire's heart salute me thus?
 My ceaseless current now amazed stands
 To see thy labor through so many lands
 Mix thy fresh billow with my brackish stream,
 And in thy sweetness, stretch thy diademe<sup>0</sup> realm, rule
 To these far distant and unequaled skies,
 This squared circle of celestial bodies.<sup>7</sup>

NIGER Divine Oceanus, 'tis not strange at all
 That, since the immortal souls of creatures mortal
 Mix with their bodies, yet reserve forever
 A power of separation, I should sever
 My fresh streams from thy brackish, like things fixed,
 Though with thy powerful saltness thus far mixed.
 "Virtue though chained to earth, will still live free;
 And hell itself must yield to industry."<sup>8</sup>

OCEANUS But what's the end of thy Herculean labors,
 Extended to these calm and blessed shores?

NIGER To do a kind and careful father's part,
 In satisfying every pensive<sup>0</sup> heart anxious
 Of these my daughters, my most loved birth;
 Who, though they were the first formed dames of earth,<sup>9</sup>
 And in whose sparkling and refulgent<sup>0</sup> eyes radiant
 The glorious sun did still<sup>0</sup> delight to rise, always Though he (the best judge, and most formal cause<sup>1</sup>
 Of all dames' beauties) in their firm hues draws
 Signs of his fervent'st love, and thereby shows
 That in their black the perfect'st beauty grows,
 Since the fixed color of their curled hair
 (Which is the highest grace of dames most fair)
 No cares, no age can change, or there display
 The fearful tincture of abhorred gray,
 Since Death herself (herself being pale and blue)
 Can never alter their most faithful hue;
 All which are arguments to prove how far
 Their beauties conquer in great beauty's war;
 And more, how near divinity they be,
 That stand from passion or decay so free.
 Yet, since the fabulous voices of some few
 Poor brainsick men, styled poets<sup>2</sup> here with you,
 Have, with such envy of their graces, sung
 The painted beauties other empires sprung,
 Letting their loose and winged fictions fly
 To infect all climates, yea, our purity;
 As of one Phaeton, that fired the world,<sup>3</sup>
 And that before his heedless flames were hurled

7. The squared circle is an image of perfection, a hyperbolic compliment to Britain.

8. Alludes to Horace, Odes 1.3.36.

9. The Ethiopian civilization was reputed to be the oldest.

1. Aristotle's formal cause produces the form or essence of anything.

2. English Petrarchan poets, whose ideal of beauty involved fair skin, blonde hair, and blue eyes. See, e.g., the sonnets of Sidney and Spenser.

3. Son of Apollo the sun god, whose ill-fated attempt to drive the sun's chariot scorched the earth and, reportedly, turned the skin of the daughters of Niger black.

About the globe, the Ethiops were as fair
 As other dames, now black with black despair,
 And in respect of their complexions changed,
 Are eachwhere, since, for luckless creatures ranged.
 Which when my daughters heard (as women are Most jealous of their beauties) fear and care
 Possessed them whole; yea, and believing them,<sup>4</sup>
 They wept such ceaseless tears into my stream
 That it hath thus far overflowed his shore
 To seek them patience; who have since e'ermore
 As the sun riseth, charged his burning throne
 With volleys of revilings, 'cause he shone
 On their scorched cheeks with such intemperate fires,
 And other dames made queens of all desires.
 To frustrate which strange error oft I sought,
 Though most in vain against a settled thought
 As women's are, till they confirmed at length
 By miracle what I wish so much strength
 Of argument resisted; else they feigned:
 For in the lake where their first spring they gained,
 As they sat cooling their soft limbs one night,
 Appeared a face all circumfused with light;
 (And sure they saw't, for Ethiops never dream)<sup>5</sup>
 Wherein they might decipher through the stream
 These words:

That they a land must forthwith seek,
 Whose termination (of the Greek)
 Sounds -tania; where bright Sol, that heat
 Their bloods, doth never rise or set,
 But in his journey passeth by,
 And leaves that climate of the sky
 To comfort of a greater light,<sup>6</sup>
 Who forms all beauty with his sight.

In search of this have we three pryncedoms passed
 That speak out -tania in their accents last:
 Black Mauritania<sup>7</sup> first, and secondly
 Swarth Lusitania,<sup>0</sup> next we did descry<sup>0</sup>
 Rich Aquitania,<sup>0</sup> and yet cannot find
 The place unto these longing nymphs designed.<sup>0</sup>
 Instruct and aid me, great Oceanus:
 What land is this that now appears to us?
 OCEANUS This land, that lifts into the temperate air
 His snowy cliff, is Albion the fair,
 So called of Neptune's son,<sup>8</sup> who ruleth here;
 For whose dear guard, myself four thousand year,
 Since old Deucalion's<sup>9</sup> days, have walked the round

5. Jonson cites Pliny for this saying.

6. The allusion is to James, the "Sun-King" of Britain.

7. Land of the Moors in North Africa.

8. King James, regularly so styled because of Britain's close relationship to the sea. Albion (previous line): ancient name for England meaning "white land".

9. A Greek analogue to Noah, as the survivor of a great flood.

About his empire, proud to see him crowned

At this, the moon was discovered in the upper part of the house, triumphant in a silver throne, made in figure of a pyramis.<sup>1</sup> Her garments white and silver, the dressing of her head antique, and crowned with a luminary or sphere of light, which striking on the clouds, and heightened with silver, reflected as natural clouds do by the splendor of the moon. The heaven about her was vaulted with blue silk, and set with stars of silver which had in them their several lights burning. The sudden sight of which made Niger to interrupt Oceanus with this present passion.<sup>2</sup>

NIGER —O see, our silver star!

Whose pure auspicious light greets us thus far!
Great /Ethiopia, goddess of our shore,<sup>3</sup>
Since with particular worship we adore
Thy general brightness, let particular grace
Shine on my zealous daughters. Show the place
Which long their longings urged their eyes to see.
Beautify them, which long have deified thee.

AETHIOPIA Niger, be glad; resume thy native cheer.

Thy daughters' labors have their period here,
And so thy errors. I was that bright face
Reflected by the lake, in which thy race
Read mystic lines (which skill Pythagoras<sup>4</sup>
First taught to men by a reverberate<sup>0</sup> glass).
This blessed isle doth with that-tania end
Which there they saw inscribed, and shall extend Wished satisfaction to their best desires.
Britannia, which the triple world admires,<sup>5</sup>
This isle hath now recovered for her name;
Where reign those beauties that with so much fame
The sacred Muses' sons have honored,
And from bright Hesperus to Eos spread.<sup>6</sup>
With that great name, Britannia, this blest isle
Hath won her ancient dignity and style,<sup>0</sup>
A world divided from the world,<sup>7</sup> and tried
The abstract of it in his general pride.
For were the world, with all his wealth, a ring,
Britannia (whose new name makes all tongues sing)
Might be a diamond worthy to enchase it,
Ruled by a sun, that to this height doth grace it.
Whose beams shine day and night, and are of force
To blanch an Ethiop and revive a corpse.<sup>8</sup>
His light sciential<sup>0</sup> is and (past mere nature)
Can salve the rude defects of every creature.

 Their beauties shall be scorched no more;
 This sun is temperate, and refines

1. The women advanced in pairs holding fans to the audience: on one appeared both names; on the other, an allegorical symbol of their conjoined qualities.

2. Emblems with mottoes.

3. The meaning of the pairs' names and symbols, in order: abundance and splendor, fertility symbol; transparent and flexibility, a twenty-sided water symbol; swiftness and spotless, symbol of purity; moisture and coldness, symbol, the salamander who lives in fire unharmed; sweetness and delicacy, symbol of education; weight and revolving, symbol, the earth's globe. The women are members of Queen Anne's court, two of them notable in literary circles: Donne and Jonson wrote poems about Lucy, countess of Bedford (see Jonson, p. 1430); Lady Mary Wroth wrote poems and a romance (p. 1453), and see Jonson's poem on Wroth, p. 1438.

SONG

Daughters of the subtle flood,
 Do not let earth longer entertain you;
 160 1st ECHO Let earth longer entertain you
 2nd ECHO Longer entertain you

Tis to them enough of good
 That you give this little hope to gain you.
 1st ECHO Give this little hope to gain you.
 2nd ECHO Little hope to gain you.

If they love
 You shall quickly see;
 For when to flight you move,
 They'll follow you, the more you flee.
 170 1st ECHO Follow you, the more you flee.
 2nd ECHO The more you flee.

If not, impute it each to other's matter;
 They are but earth—
 1st ECHO But earth,
 2nd ECHO Earth—
 And what you vowed was water.
 1st ECHO And what you vowed was water
 2nd ECHO You vowed was water.

AETHIOPIA Enough, bright nymphs, the night grows old,
 And we are grieved we cannot hold
 You longer light; but comfort take.
 Your father only to the lake
 Shall make return; yourselves, with feasts,
 Must here remain the Ocean's guests.
 Nor shall this veil the sun hath cast
 Above your blood, more summers last.
 For which, you shall observe these rites:
 Thirteen times thrice, on thirteen nights
 (So often as I fill my sphere
 With glorious light, throughout the year)
 You shall, when all things else do sleep
 Save your chaste thoughts, with reverence steep

5. In Greek mythology the sirens lured seafarers to destruction.

6. Slow and fast dances,
 7. Summoned.

Your bodies in that purer brine
 And wholesome dew, called rosmarine;
 195 Then with that soft and gentler foam,
 Of which the ocean yet yields some,
 Whereof bright Venus, beauty's queen,
 Is said to have begotten been,
 You shall your gentler limbs o'er-lave,
 200 And for your pains, perfection have.
 So that, this night, the year gone round,
 You do again salute this ground;<sup>8</sup>
 And in the beams of yond' bright sun
 Your faces dry, and all is done.

At which, in a dance they returned to the sea, where they took their shell, and with this full song, went out.

Now Dian, <sup>o</sup> with her burning face,	the moon
Declines apace:
By which our waters know
To ebb, that late <sup>o</sup> did flow.	recently
Back seas, back nymphs, but with a forward grace
Keep still your reverence to the place,
And shout with joy of favor you have won,
In sight of Albion, Neptune's son.

Volpone This dark satire on human rapacity is set in Venice, but its true target is the city of London, or the city that, Jonson feared, London was about to become. It is a place devoted to commerce and mired in corruption, populated by greedy fools and conniving rascals. Like Shakespeare, Donne, and Thomas More before him, Jonson was deeply disturbed by the rise of a protocapitalist economic order that seemed to emphasize competition and the acquisition of material goods over reciprocal goodwill and mutual obligation. On the other hand, Jonson was also fascinated by the entrepreneurial potential liberated by the new economic order. His protagonists, Volpone and Mosca, may be morally bankrupt, but they are also the most intelligent, adaptable characters in the play. Moreover, although Jonson was a strong advocate for the educational and morally improving potential of the theater—his theater in particular—the talents of his main characters are essentially those of theatrical performance and improvisation. In fact, as Jonson was well aware, he was himself deeply implicated in what he satirized. The lowborn, unscrupulous, brilliantly inventive Mosca, a flattering aristocratic hanger-on who aspires to high status himself, at times seems to be the author's evil twin. Perhaps his very resemblances to Jonson required Jonson so energetically to repudiate his motives and punish his presumption at the end of the play.

Volpone combines elements from several sources. The classical satirist Lucian provided the theme of the rich old man playing with moneygrubbing scoundrels who hope to inherit his wealth. Roman comedy provided prototypes for some characters: the wily parasite, the unscrupulous lawyer, the avaricious dotard, the voluble woman. Some scenes, such as that in which Volpone disguised as a mountebank woos Celia at her window, are drawn from the Italian commedia dell'arte. Jonson draws as well upon ancient and medieval beast fables: stories about the crafty antihero Reynard the fox, as well as a fable about a fox that plays dead in order to catch greedy birds. But Volpone is much more than the sum of its borrowings. It is a work of enormous comic energy, full of black humor, which holds its loathsome characters up for appalled but gleeful inspection.

Volpone was first performed by the King's Men (Shakespeare's company) in the spring of 1606, at the Globe Theater. (See the illustration, in the appendices to this volume, of a contemporary popular theater constructed on similar lines.) The Globe seated some two thousand persons—aristocrats and prosperous citizens in the tiered galleries, lower-class "groundlings" in the pit in the front of the stage. The play was also performed to great applause before learned audiences at Oxford and Cambridge, to whom Jonson dedicated the printed edition of Volpone. It was first published in quarto form in 1607 and republished with a few changes in the 1616 Works, the basis for the present text.

The Persons of the Play

1. Many of the characters have allegorically apt names. "Volpone" is defined in John Florio's 1598 Italian-English dictionary as "an old fox . . . a sneaking, lurking, wily deceiver." "Mosca" means "fly." "Nano" means "dwarf." "Voltore" means "vulture."

"Corbaccio" means "raven." "Bonario" is derived from bono, meaning "good." "Corvino" means "crow." "Celia" means "heaven." "Politic" means "worldly-wise" or "temporizing." "Peregrine" means "traveler" or "small hawk." In many performances the symbolism of the animal names is reinforced by costuming.

Prologue

Now, luck yet send us, and a little wit
Will serve to make our play hit
According to the palates of the season. <sup>0</sup>	fashionable taste
Here is rhyme not empty of reason.
This we were bid to credit <sup>0</sup> from our poet,	asked to believe
Whose true scope, <sup>0</sup> if you would know it,	aim
In all his poems still hath been this measure,
To mix profit with your pleasure; <sup>1</sup>
And not as some—whose throats their envy failing <sup>0</sup> —	not fully expressing
Cry hoarsely, "all he writes is railing," <sup>0</sup>	personal insult
And when his plays come forth think they can flout them
With saying he was a year about them. <sup>2</sup>

Yet thus much I can give you, as a token
Of his play's worth: no eggs are broken,
Nor quaking custards with fierce teeth affrighted, <sup>3</sup>
Wherewith your rout <sup>0</sup> are so delighted;	mob
Nor hailes he in a gull, <sup>0</sup> old ends <sup>0</sup> reciting,	fool/saws
To stop gaps in his loose writing,
With such a deal of monstrous and forced action
As might make Bethlehem a faction. <sup>4</sup>
Nor made he his play for jests stol'n from each table, <sup>0</sup>	plagiarized jokes
But makes jests to fit his fable,
And so presents quick <sup>0</sup> comedy, refined	lively
As best critics have designed.
The laws of time, place, persons he observeth; <sup>5</sup>

The Argument

1. Plot summary. Jonson imitates the acrostic "arguments" of the Latin playwright Plautus.

Prologue

1. Rule, as laid down by Horace, that the poet ought both to please his audience and teach it something useful.

2. Thomas Dekker ridiculed the slow pace at which Jonson produced new work in Satiromastix, or The Untrussing of the Humorous Poet (1602), and John Marston did the same in The Dutch Courtesan (1605).

3. The satirist John Marston, in a line Jonson had previously ridiculed, boasted: "let custards [cowards] quake, my rage must freely run." Huge custards were a staple feature of city feasts.

4. As might win approval from lunatics (who inhabited Bethlehem hospital in London).

5. He observes the unities of time and place and the consistency of character.

From no needful rule he swerveth.
 All gall and copperas<sup>6</sup> from his ink he draineth;
 Only a little salt<sup>7</sup> remaineth
 Wherewith he'll rub your cheeks, till, red with laughter,
 They shall look fresh a week after.

Act 1

SCENE 1. VOLPONE'S house.

[Enter] VOLPONE [and] MOSCA.<sup>1</sup>

VOLPONE Good morning to the day, and, next, my gold!

Open the shrine that I may see my saint.

[Mosca reveals the treasure.]<sup>2</sup>

Hail the world's soul,<sup>o</sup> and mine! More glad than is animating principle

The teeming earth to see the longed-for sun
 Peep through the horns of the celestial Ram<sup>3</sup>

Am I to view thy splendor darkening his,<sup>o</sup> outshining the sun's

That, lying here amongst my other hoards,
 Show'st like a flame by night, or like the day

Struck out of chaos, when all darkness fled
 Unto the center.<sup>o</sup> O thou son of Sol<sup>4</sup>— center of the earth

But brighter than thy father—let me kiss

With adoration thee and every relic
 Of sacred treasure in this blessed room.

Well did wise poets by thy glorious name
 Title that age which they would have the best,<sup>5</sup>

Thou being the best of things, and far transcending
 All style of joy in children, parents, friends,

Or any other waking dream on earth.

Thy looks when they to Venus did ascribe,

They should have giv'n her twenty thousand Cupids,<sup>6</sup> our love of thee

Such are thy beauties and our loves.<sup>o</sup> Dear saint,

Riches, the dumb god, that giv'st all men tongues,

That canst do naught and yet mak'st men do all things, in the bargain

The price of souls; even hell, with thee to boot,<sup>o</sup>

Is made worth heaven! Thou art virtue, fame, Whoever

Honor, and all things else. Who<sup>o</sup> can get thee,
 He shall be noble, valiant, honest, wise—

MOSCA And what he will, sir. Riches are in fortune

A greater good than wisdom is in nature.

VOLPONE True, my beloved Mosca. Yet I glory

More in the cunning purchase<sup>o</sup> of my wealth acquisition

Than in the glad possession, since I gain

6. Ferrous sulfate, like gall a corrosive substance used in ink.

7. A traditional metaphor for satiric wit.

1. Alternatively, the play may begin with Volpone rising from his onstage bed.

2. The treasure is probably hidden behind a curtain in the alcove at the back of the stage.

3. Aries, the constellation ascendant in early spring.

4. Alchemists believed gold to have issued from the sun ("Sol"). Volpone blasphemously applies this metaphor to God's creation of the world in Genesis.

5. The mythical Golden Age (when, ironically, gold was not yet in use) was influentially described by Ovid in The Metamorphoses.

6. In Latin poetry, Venus was commonly described as aurea, meaning "golden." The throng of Cupids Volpone imagines around her suggests gold's irresistible, and for him highly sexual, appeal.

No common way. I use no trade, no venture;<sup>0</sup> risky commerce
 I wound no earth with plowshares; fat no beasts
 To feed the shambles;<sup>0</sup> have no mills for iron, slaughterhouse
 Oil, corn, or men, to grind 'em into powder;
 I blow no subtle<sup>7</sup> glass; expose no ships
 To threat'nings of the furrow-faced sea;
 I turn<sup>0</sup> no moneys in the public bank, exchange
 Nor usure<sup>0</sup> private— lend money at interest

MOSCA No, sir, nor devour
 Soft prodigals. You shall ha' some will swallow
 A melting<sup>0</sup> heir as glibly as your Dutch financially dwindling
 Will pills<sup>0</sup> of butter, and ne'er purge for't;<sup>8</sup> morsels
 Tear forth the fathers of poor families
 Out of their beds and coffin them alive
 In some kind, clasping<sup>0</sup> prison, where their bones manacling
 May be forthcoming<sup>0</sup> when the flesh is rotten. protruding; carted away
 But your sweet nature doth abhor these courses;
 You loathe the widow's or the orphan's tears
 Should wash your pavements, or their piteous cries
 Ring in your roofs and beat the air for vengeance.

VOLPONE Right, Mosca, I do loathe it.

MOSCA And besides, sir,
 You are not like the thresher that doth stand
 With a huge flail, watching a heap of corn,
 And, hungry, dares not taste the smallest grain,
 But feeds on mallows<sup>0</sup> and such bitter herbs; unpalatable weeds
 Nor like the merchant who hath filled his vaults
 With Romagna and rich Candian wines,
 Yet drinks the lees of Lombard's vinegar.<sup>9</sup>
 You will not lie in straw whilst moths and worms
 Feed on your sumptuous hangings<sup>0</sup> and soft beds. bed curtains
 You know the use of riches, and dare give now
 From that bright heap to me, your poor observer,<sup>0</sup> folllmver
 Or to your dwarf, or your hermaphrodite,
 Your eunuch, or what other household<sup>0</sup> trifle menial
 Your pleasure allows maint'nance<sup>0</sup>—

VOLPONE [giving money] Hold thee, Mosca, You're pleased to support
 Take of my hand; thou strik'st on truth in all,
 And they are envious term<sup>0</sup> thee parasite.
 Call forth my dwarf, my eunuch, and my fool,
 And let 'em make me sport. [Exit MOSCA.] ivho term

What should I do
 But cocker up my genius,<sup>0</sup> and live free indulge my appetite
 To all delights my fortune calls me to?
 I have no wife, no parent, child, ally
 To give my substance to, but whom I make<sup>0</sup> he whom I designate
 Must be my heir, and this makes men observe<sup>0</sup> me. flatter

7. (1) Delicate; (2) artful. (Venice was and is renowned for its art glass.)

8. Never use a remedy for gastric distress. (The Dutch were notoriously fond of butter.)

9. Romagna and rich Candian wines are expensive wines from Greece and Crete. The lees of Lombard's vinegar are the dregs of cheap Italian wine.

This draws new clients<sup>0</sup> daily to my house, petitioners
 Women and men of every sex and age,
 That bring me presents, send me plate,<sup>0</sup> coin, jewels, gold or silver plate
 With hope that when I die—which they expect
 Each greedy minute—it shall then return
 Tenfold upon them; whilst some, covetous
 Above the rest, seek to engross<sup>0</sup> me whole, swallow; monopolize
 And counterwork,<sup>0</sup> the one unto the other, compete; undermine Contend in gifts as they would seem in love;
 All which I suffer, playing with their hopes,
 And am content to coin 'em into profit,
 And look upon their kindness and take more,
 And look on that, still bearing them in hand,<sup>0</sup> leading them on Letting the cherry knock against their lips,
 And draw it by their mouths and back again.<sup>1</sup>—
 How now!

[Enter] MOSCA, NANO, ANDROGYNO, [and] CASTRONE.

NANO Now, room for fresh gamesters,<sup>0</sup> who do will you to know entertainers
 They do bring you neither play nor university show,<sup>1</sup>
 And therefore do entreat you that whatsoever they rehearse
 May not fare a whit the worse for the false pace of the verse.<sup>2</sup>
 If you wonder at this, you will wonder more ere we pass,
 For know here [indicating ANDROGYNO] is enclosed the soul of Pythagoras,<sup>3</sup>
 That juggler<sup>0</sup> divine, as hereafter shall follow; trickster
 Which soul (fast and loose, sir) came first from Apollo,
 And was breathed into Aethalides,<sup>4</sup> Mercurius his<sup>0</sup> son, Mercury's
 Where it had the gift to remember all that ever was done.
 From thence it fled forth and made quick transmigration
 To goldilocked Euphorbus,<sup>5</sup> who was killed in good fashion
 At the siege of old Troy, by the cuckold of Sparta.<sup>6</sup>
 Hermotimus<sup>7</sup> was next—I find it in my charta<sup>0</sup>— record
 To whom it did pass, where no sooner it was missing
 But with one Pyrrhus of Delos<sup>0</sup> it learned to go a-fishing; another philosopher
 And thence did it enter the Sophist of Greece.<sup>0</sup> Pythagoras
 From Pythagore she went into a beautiful piece<sup>0</sup> slut
 Hight<sup>0</sup> Aspasia the meretrix,<sup>8</sup> and the next toss of her named ]. In the game of chop-cherry, one player dangles a cherry in front of another, who tries to bite it.

1.2

1. University students performed classical plays or their imitations to hone their abilities in Latin oratory.

2. The four-stress meter of the skit Nano, Androgyno, and Castrone here perform was common in medieval drama but old-fashioned by Jonson's time.

3. Ancient Greek philosopher, mathematician, and music theorist who believed in the transmigration of souls and in the mystical properties of geometrical relationships (especially triangles [triangles = trigon]). His followers observed strict dietary restrictions and took five-year vows of silence. His thigh was rumored to be made of gold. Jonson adapts much of the career of Pythagoras's soul from The Dialogue of the Cobbler and the Cock, by the Greek satirist Lucian.

4. The herald of the Greek Argonauts and son of the god Mercury, who inherited his father's divine gift of memory. Thus, unlike other souls, which forget their previous lives, Aethalides' soul can recall its transmigrations.

5. Trojan youth who injured Achilles' beloved friend, Patroclus, in the Iliad.

6. Menelaus, the Spartan king whose wife, Helen, was stolen by the Trojan prince Paris.

7. Greek philosopher of about 500 B.C.E.

8. Whore. Aspasia was the mistress of the Athenian statesman Pericles.

Was again of a whore; she became a philosopher,
 Crates the Cynic,<sup>9</sup> as itself doth relate it.
 Since,<sup>0</sup> kings, knights, and beggars, knaves, lords, and fools since then gat<sup>o</sup> it, received
 Besides ox and ass, camel, mule, goat, and brock,<sup>0</sup> badger
 In all which it hath spoke as in the cobbler's cock.<sup>1</sup>
 But I come not here to discourse of that matter,
 Or his one, two, or three, or his great oath, "By quater,"<sup>2</sup>
 His musics, his trigon, his golden thigh,<sup>0</sup> see n. 3, p. 1339
 Or his telling how elements<sup>0</sup> shift; but I earth, air, fire, water
 Would ask how of late thou hast suffered translation,<sup>0</sup> metamorphosis
 And shifted thy coat in these days of reformation?<sup>0</sup> religious change

ANDROGYNO Like one of the reformed, a fool,<sup>3</sup> as you see,
 Counting all old doctrine heresy.

NANO But not on thine own forbid meats hast thou ventured?

ANDROGYNO On fish, when first a Carthusian I entered.<sup>4</sup>

NANO Why, then thy dogmatical silence<sup>0</sup> hath left thee? vow of silence

ANDROGYNO Of that an obstreperous lawyer bereft me.

NANO Oh, wonderful change! When Sir Lawyer forsook thee,
 For Pythagore's sake, what body then took thee?

ANDROGYNO A good dull mule.

NANO And how, by that means,
 Thou wert brought to allow of the eating of beans?

ANDROGYNO Yes.

NANO But from the mule into whom didst thou pass?

ANDROGYNO Into a very strange beast, by some writers called an
 By others a precise, pure, illuminate brother<sup>5</sup>
 Of those devour flesh and sometimes one another,<sup>0</sup> prey on each other
 And will drop you forth a libel<sup>0</sup> or a sanctified lie polemic
 Betwixt every spoonful of a Nativity pie.<sup>6</sup>

NANO Now quit thee, for heaven, of that profane nation,<sup>0</sup>
 And gently report thy next transmigration.

ANDROGYNO TO the same that I am." what I am now

NANO A creature of delight?
 And—what is more than a fool—an hermaphrodite?
 Now pray thee, sweet soul, in all thy variation<sup>0</sup> of all your shapes
 Which body wouldst thou choose to take up thy station?

ANDROGYNO Troth, this I am in, even here would I tarry.

NANO 'Cause here the delight of each sex thou canst vary?

ANDROGYNO Alas, those pleasures be stale and forsaken.
 No, 'tis your fool wherewith I am so taken,
 The only one creature that I can call blessed,
 For all other forms I have proved<sup>0</sup> most distressed. found to be

9. Student of Diogenes, founder of the Cynic philosophy.

1. The speaker in Lucian's dialogue (see note 3 above).

2. A quater is an equilateral triangle the sides of which are evenly divisible by four.

3. The "reformed" are Protestants in general, but more specifically the Puritan wing of the Church of England. Jonson was a Catholic when he wrote

Volpone.

4. Pythagoreans abstained from fish, but Carthusians, an order of Catholic monks, ate fish on fast days.

5. Puritan who claimed immediate, visionary knowledge of religious truth. Puritans did not observe the traditional fasting days (hence "devour flesh" in the following line).

6. Puritans substituted the term "Nativity" for "Christmas," to avoid reference to the Mass.

NANO Spoke true, as thou wert in Pythagoras still.
 This learned opinion we celebrate will,
 Fellow eunuch, as behooves us, with all our wit and art,
 To dignify that<sup>0</sup> whereof ourselves are so great and special a part. folly

VOLPONE [applauding] Now, very, very pretty! Mosca, this Was thy invention?

MOSCA If it please my patron,
 Not else.

VOLPONE It doth, good Mosca.

MOSCA Then it was, sir.

SONG

NANO and CASTRONE [sing]
 Fools, they are the only nation<sup>0</sup> group
 Worth men's envy or admiration,
 Free from care or sorrow-taking,
 Selves<sup>0</sup> and others merry making; Themselves
 All they speak or do is sterling.
 Your fool, he is your great man's darling,
 And your lady's sport and pleasure;
 Tongue and bauble<sup>0</sup> are his treasure. fool's staff; penis
 E'en his face begetteth laughter,
 And he speaks truth free from slaughter.<sup>0</sup> with impunity
 He's the grace of every feast,
 And sometimes the chiefest guest,
 Hath his trencher<sup>0</sup> and his stool, platter
 When wit waits upon the fool.
 Oh, who would not be
 He, he, he? One knocks without.

VOLPONE Who's that? Away!
 [Exeunt NANO and CASTRONE.]
 Look, Mosca.

MOSCA Fool, begone!
 [Exit ANDROGYNO.]

'Tis Signor Voltore, the advocate;
 I know him by his knock.

VOLPONE Fetch me my gown,
 My furs, and nightcaps; say my couch is changing,<sup>7</sup>
 And let him entertain himself awhile
 Without i'th'gallery. [Exit MOSCA.]

Now, now, my clients
 Begin their visitation! Vulture, kite,
 Raven, and gorcrow,<sup>0</sup> all my birds of prey carrion crow
 That think me turning carcass, now they come.
 I am not for 'em<sup>o</sup> yet. ready to die
 [Enter MOSCA.]

How now? The news?

MOSCA A piece of plate,<sup>0</sup> sir. gold platter

VOLPONE Of what bigness?

7. My bedsheets are being changed.

MOSCA Huge,
 Massy, and antique, with your name inscribed
 And arms<sup>0</sup> engraven. coat of arms

VOLPONE Good! And not a fox
 Stretched on the earth, with fine delusive sleights<sup>0</sup> deceptive tricks
 Mocking a gaping crow?<sup>8</sup> Ha, Mosca?

MOSCA [laughing] Sharp, sir.

VOLPONE Give me my furs. Why dost thou laugh so, man?

MOSCA I cannot choose, sir, when I apprehend
 What thoughts he has, without,<sup>0</sup> now, as he walks: outside
 That this might be the last gift he should<sup>0</sup> give; would have to
 That this would fetch you;<sup>0</sup> if you died today bring you around
 And gave him all, what he should be tomorrow;
 What large return would come of all his ventures;
 How he should worshipped be and revered;
 Ride with his furs and footcloths,<sup>9</sup> waited on
 By herds of fools and clients; have clear way
 Made for his mule, as lettered<sup>0</sup> as himself; educated
 Be called the great and learned advocate;
 And then concludes there's naught impossible.

VOLPONE Yes, to be learned, Mosca.

MOSCA Oh, no, rich
 Implies it.<sup>0</sup> Hood an ass with reverend purple,<sup>1</sup> wealth implies learning
 So you can hide his two ambitious<sup>0</sup> ears, aspiring; upraised
 And he shall pass for a cathedral doctor.<sup>0</sup> Doctor of Divinity

VOLPONE My caps, my caps, good Mosca. Fetch him in.

MOSCA Stay, sir, your ointment for your eyes.
[MOSCA helps VOLPONE with his disguise.]

VOLPONE That's true.
 Dispatch, dispatch! I long to have possession
 Of my new present.

MOSCA That, and thousands more
 I hope to see you lord of.

VOLPONE Thanks, land Mosca.

MOSCA And that, when I am lost in blended dust,
 And hundred such as I am in succession—

VOLPONE Nay, that were too much, Mosca.

MOSCA —you shall live
 Still, to delude these Harpies.<sup>2</sup>

VOLPONE Loving Mosca!
 'Tis well. My pillow now, and let him enter.
[Exit MOSCA. VOLPONE lies down.]

Now, my feigned cough, my phthisic,<sup>0</sup> and my gout, consumption; asthma
 My apoplexy, palsy, and catarrhs,<sup>0</sup> mucus discharges
 Help with your forced functions this my posture,<sup>0</sup> imposture

8. In one of Aesop's Fables, the fox tricks the crow into dropping its cheese.

9. Ornamental cloths for the back of a horse.

1. Doctors of Divinity wore purple academic hoods.

2. Mythological ravenous monsters with women's heads and the bodies and claws of birds.

Wherein this three year I have milked their hopes.
He comes, I hear him. [Coughing] Uh, uh, uh, uh! Oh—

SCENE 3. The scene continues.

[Enter] VOLTORE [with a platter, ushered by] MOSCA.

MOSCA [to VOLTORE] YOU still are what you were, sir. Only you,
Of all the rest, are he commands<sup>o</sup> his love; the one who possesses
And you do wisely to preserve it thus
With early visitation and kind notes<sup>o</sup> tokens
Of your good meaning to<sup>o</sup> him, which, I know, intentions toward Cannot but come most grateful. [Loudly, to VOLPONE] Patron, sir!
Here's Signor Voltore is come—

VOLPONE [weakly] What say you?

MOSCA Sir, Signor Voltore is come this morning
To visit you.

VOLPONE I thank him.

MOSCA And hath brought
A piece of antique plate bought of Saint Mark,<sup>1</sup>
With which he here presents you.

VOLPONE He is welcome.

Pray him to come more often.

MOSCA Yes.

VOLPONE [straining to hear] What says he?

MOSCA He thanks you, and desires you see him often.

VOLPONE Mosca.

MOSCA My patron?

VOLPONE [groping] Bring him near. Where is he?

I long to feel his hand.

MOSCA [guiding VOLPONE s hands toward the platter] The plate is here, sir.

VOLTORE HOW fare you, sir?

VOLPONE I thank you, Signor Voltore.

Where is the plate? Mine eyes are bad.

VOLTORE [relinquishing the platter] I'm sorry

To see you still thus weak.

MOSCA [aside] That he is not weaker.

VOLPONE YOU are too munificent.

VOLTORE NO, sir, would to heaven

I could as well give health to you as that plate.

VOLPONE You give, sir, what you can. I thank you. Your love

Hath taste in<sup>o</sup> this, and shall not be unanswered.

is suggested by

I pray you see me often.

VOLTORE Yes, I shall, sir.

VOLPONE Be not far from me.

MOSCA [aside to VOLTORE] DO you observe that, sir?

VOLPONE Hearken unto me still. It will concern you.

MOSCA [aside to VOLTORE] YOU are a happy man, sir. Know your good.

VOLPONE I cannot now last long—

1. Goldsmiths kept shop in the square of Saint Mark's Basilica.

And loud withal,<sup>0</sup> that would not wag nor scarce besides
 Lie still without a fee, when every word
 Your Worship but lets fall is a cecchine!<sup>0</sup> Another knocks. gold coin
 Who's that? One knocks; I would not have you seen, sir.
 And yet—pretend you came and went in haste;
 I'll fashion an excuse. And, gentle sir,
 When you do come to swim in golden lard,
 Up to the arms in honey, that your chin
 Is born up stiff with fatness of the flood,
 Think on your vassal; but<sup>o</sup> remember me. only
 I ha' not been your worst of clients.

VOLTORE Mosca—

MOSCA When will you have your inventory brought, sir?
 Or see a copy of the will? [More knocking.] Anon!<sup>o</sup>— Just a minute!
 I'll bring em to you, sir. Away, begone,
 Put business i'your face.<sup>5</sup> [Exit VOLTORE.]

VOLPONE Excellent, Mosca!

Come hither, let me kiss thee.

MOSCA Keep you still, sir.

Here is Corbaccio.

VOLHONE Set the plate away.

The vulture's gone, and the old raven's come.

SCENE 4. The scene continues.

MOSCA [to VOLPONE] Betake you to your silence and your sleep;
[He puts up the plate.]

Stand there and multiply.<sup>0</sup>—Now shall we see beget more booty
 A wretch who is indeed more impotent
 Than this<sup>0</sup> can feign to be, yet hopes to hop Volpone
 Over his grave.

[Enter] CORBACCIO.

Signor Corbaccio!

You're very welcome, sir.

CORBACCIO How does your patron?

MOSCA Troth, as he did, sir: no amends.

CORBACCIO What? Mends he?

MOSCA NO, sir, he is rather worse.

CORBACCIO That's well. Where is he?

MOSCA Upon his couch, sir, newly fall'n asleep.

CORBACCIO Does he sleep well?

MOSCA NO wink, sir, all this night,
 Nor yesterday, but slumbers.<sup>0</sup> dozes fitfully

CORBACCIO Good! He should take
 Some counsel of physicians. I have brought him
 An opiate here, from mine own doctor—

MOSCA He will not hear of drugs.

CORBACCIO Why, I myself
 Stood by while't was made, saw all th'ingredients,

5. Look as if you were here on business.

And know it cannot but most gently work.
 My life for his, 'tis but to make him sleep.
 VOLPONE [aside] Ay, his last sleep, if he would take it.
 MOSCA Sir,
 He has no faith in physic.<sup>0</sup> medicine
 CORBACCIO 'Say you? 'Say you?
 MOSCA He has no faith in physic. He does think
 Most of your doctors<sup>1</sup> are the greater danger
 And worse disease t'escape. I often have Heard him protest that your physician
 Should never be his heir.
 CORBACCIO Not I his heir?
 MOSCA Not your physician, sir.
 CORBACCIO Oh, no, no, no,
 I do not mean it.
 MOSCA NO, sir, nor their fees
 He cannot brook.<sup>0</sup> He says they flay<sup>o</sup> a man tolerate / skin
 Before they kill him.
 CORBACCIO Bight, I do conceive<sup>0</sup> you. understand
 MOSCA And then, they do it by experiment,<sup>2</sup>
 For which the law not only doth absolve 'em,
 But gives them great reward; and he is loath
 To hire his death so.
 CORBACCIO It is true, they kill
 With as much license as a judge.
 MOSCA Nay, more:
 For he<sup>o</sup> but kills, sir, where the law condemns, the judge
 And these<sup>0</sup> can kill him,<sup>0</sup> too. the doctors / the judge
 CORBACCIO Ay, or me
 Or any man. How does his apoplex?<sup>0</sup> apoplexy, stroke
 Is that strong on him still?
 MOSCA Most violent.<sup>3</sup>
 His speech is broken and his eyes are set,<sup>o</sup> fixed
 His face drawn longer than 'twas wont—
 CORBACCIO HOW? HOW?
 Stronger than he was wont?
 MOSCA NO, sir: his face
 Drawn longer than 'twas wont.
 CORBACCIO Oh, good.
 MOSCA His mouth
 Is ever gaping, and his eyelids hang.
 CORBACCIO Good.
 MOSCA A freezing numbness stiffens all his joints,
 And makes the color of his flesh like lead.
 CORBACCIO 'Tis good.
 MOSCA His pulse beats slow and dull.
 CORBACCIO Good symptoms still.

1.4

1. Not Corbaccio's doctors, but doctors generally.
(Also in line 23.)

2. By testing possible remedies on their patients.

3. In the following lines, Mosca attributes to Volpone a wide variety of symptoms that were, even occurring singly, considered sure signs of impending death.

MOSCA And from his brain—
CORBACCIO Ha? How? Not from his brain?
MOSCA Yes, sir, and from his brain—
CORBACCIO I conceive you, good.
MOSCA —Flows a cold sweat with a continual rheum"
mucus discharge
Forth the resolved<sup>0</sup> corners of his eyes.
ivatory; limp
CORBACCIO Is't possible? Yet I am better, ha!
How does he with the swimming of his head?
MOSCA Oh, sir, 'tis past the scotomy;<sup>4</sup> he now
Hath lost his feeling, and hath left to snort;<sup>0</sup>
stopped snoring
You hardly can perceive him that he breathes.
CORBACCIO Excellent, excellent. Sure I shall outlast him!
This makes me young again a score of years.
MOSCA I was a-coming for you, sir,
CORBACCIO Has he made his will?
What has he giv'n me?
MOSCA NO, sir.
CORBACCIO Nothing? Ha?
MOSCA He has not made his will, sir.
CORBACCIO Oh, oh, oh.
What then did Voltore, the lawyer, here?
MOSCA He smelt a carcass, sir, when he but heard
My master was about his testament<sup>0</sup>— making his will
As I did urge him to it, for your good—
CORBACCIO He came unto him, did he? I thought so.
MOSCA Yes, and presented him this piece of plate.
CORBACCIO To be his heir?
MOSCA I do not know, sir.
CORBACCIO True,
I know it too.
MOSCA [aside] By your own scale,<sup>0</sup> sir.
scale of values
CORBACCIO [showing a hag of gold] Well,
I shall prevent<sup>0</sup> him yet. See, Mosca, look,
forestall
Here I have brought a bag of bright cecchines,
Will quite weigh down his plate.
MOSCA Yea, marry, sir!
This is true physic, this your sacred medicine;
No talk of opiates to<sup>o</sup> this great elixir.<sup>5</sup>
compared to
CORBACCIO Tis aurum palpabile, if not potabile.<sup>6</sup>
MOSCA It shall be ministered to him in his bowl?
CORBACCIO Ay, do, do, do.
MOSCA Most blessed cordial!<sup>0</sup>
heart medicine
This will recover him.
CORBACCIO Yes, do, do, do.
MOSCA I think it were not best, sir.
CORBACCIO What?
MOSCA TO recover him.

4. Dizziness, accompanied by partial blindness.

5. In alchemy, a liquid thought to be capable of prolonging life indefinitely or changing base metal into gold.

6. It is gold that can be felt, if not drunk. (Latin.) Dissolved gold was used as a medicine.

CORBACCIO Oh, no, no, no; by no means.

MOSCA Why, sir, this
Will work some strange effect, if he but feel it.

CORBACCIO 'Tis true, therefore forbear, I'll take my venture.<sup>0</sup> investment
Give me't again. [He snatches for the hag.]

MOSCA [keeping it out of his reach] At no hand.<sup>0</sup> Pardon me, By no means
You shall not do yourself that wrong, sir. I
Will so advise you, you shall have it all.

CORBACCIO HOW?

MOSCA All, sir, 'tis your right, your own; no man
Can claim a part. 'Tis yours without a rival,
Decreed by destiny.

CORBACCIO HOW? HOW, good Mosca?

MOSCA I'll tell you, sir. This fit he shall recover—

CORBACCIO I do conceive you.

MOSCA —and, on first advantage<sup>0</sup> opportunity
Of his gained sense, will I re-importune him
Unto the making of his testament,
And show him this.

CORBACCIO Good, good.

MOSCA 'Tis better yet,
If you will hear, sir.

CORBACCIO Yes, with all my heart.

MOSCA NOW, would I counsel you, make home with speed;
There frame a will, whereto you shall inscribe
My master your sole heir.

CORBACCIO And disinherit
My son?

MOSCA Oh, sir, the better, for that color<sup>0</sup> appearance, fiction
Shall make it much more taking.<sup>0</sup> plausible; attractive

CORBACCIO Oh, but color?<sup>0</sup> it's only a ruse?

MOSCA This will, sir, you shall send it unto me.
Now, when I come to enforce<sup>0</sup>—as I will do— urge
Your cares, your watchings, and your many prayers,
Your more than many gifts, your this day's present,
And last produce your will, where—without thought
Or least regard unto your proper issue,<sup>0</sup> own offspring
A son so brave<sup>0</sup> and highly meriting— splendid
The stream of your diverted love hath thrown you
Upon my master, and made him your heir,
He cannot be so stupid or stone dead
But out of conscience and mere gratitude—

CORBACCIO He must pronounce me his?

MOSCA 'Tis true.

CORBACCIO This plot
Did I think on before.

MOSCA I do believe it.

CORBACCIO DO you not believe it?

MOSCA Yes, sir.

CORBACCIO Mine own project.

MOSCA Which when he hath done, sir—

CORBACCIO Published me his heir?
MOSCA And you so certain to survive him—
CORBACCIO Ay.
MOSCA Being so lusty a man—
CORBACCIO 'Tis true.
MOSCA Yes, sir—
CORBACCIO I thought on that too. See how he<sup>o</sup> should be Mosca
The very organ to express my thoughts!
MOSCA YOU have not only done yourself a good—
CORBACCIO But multiplied it on my son?
MOSCA 'Tis right, sir.
CORBACCIO Still my invention.
MOSCA 'Las, sir, heaven knows,
It hath been all my study, all my care,
(I e'en grow gray withal) how to work things—
CORBACCIO I do conceive, sweet Mosca.
MOSCA YOU are he
For whom I labor here.
CORBACCIO Ay, do, do, do.
I'll straight about it. [CORBACCIO starts to leave.]
MOSCA Rook go with you,<sup>7</sup> raven!
CORBACCIO I know thee honest.
MOSCA YOU do lie, sir—
CORBACCIO And—
MOSCA Your knowledge is no better than your ears, sir.
CORBACCIO I do not doubt to be a father to thee.
MOSCA Nor I to gull my brother of his blessing.<sup>8</sup>
CORBACCIO I may ha' my youth restored to me, why not?
MOSCA Your Worship is a precious ass—
CORBACCIO What say'st thou?
MOSCA I do desire Your Worship to make haste, sir.
CORBACCIO 'Tis done, 'tis done, I go. [Exit.]
VOLPONE [leaping from the bed] Oh, I shall burst!
Let out my sides,<sup>o</sup> let out my sides— Loosen my clothes
MOSCA Contain
Your flux of laughter, sir. You know this hope
Is such a bait it covers any hook.
VOLPONE Oh, but thy working and thy placing it!
I cannot hold;<sup>o</sup> good rascal, let me kiss thee. contain my delight
I never knew thee in so rare a humor.<sup>o</sup> so excellently witty
MOSCA Alas, sir, I but do as I am taught:
Follow your grave instructions, give 'em words,
Pour oil into their ears,<sup>o</sup> and send them hence. Flatter them
VOLPONE 'Tis true, 'tis true. What a rare punishment
Is avarice to itself!<sup>9</sup>

7. May you be swindled ("rooked"). Playing on "rook" meaning "crow," "raven." This speech and Mosca's following lines, through line 130, could be considered asides since Corbaccio cannot hear them; but they need not be delivered sotto voce.

8. If Corbaccio were Mosca's father, then Bonario would be his brother. A reference to Genesis 25, in which Jacob tricks his elder brother, Esau, into resigning his birthright, and Genesis 27, in which Jacob tricks their dying father, Isaac, into giving him the paternal blessing and property.

9. Quoting the Stoic philosopher Seneca's Moral Epistles, no. 115.

MOSCA Ay, with our help, sir.
 VOLPONE SO many cares, so many maladies,
 So many fears attending on old age,
 Yea, death so often called on,<sup>o</sup> as no wish invoked
 Can be more frequent with 'em, their limbs faint,
 Their senses dull, their seeing, hearing, going,<sup>o</sup> ability to walk
 All dead before them; yea, their very teeth,
 Their instruments of eating, failing them—
 Yet this is reckoned life! Nay, here was one
 Is now gone home that wishes to live longer!
 Feels not his gout nor palsy, feigns himself
 Younger by scores of years, flatters his age
 With confident belying it,<sup>1</sup> hopes he may
 With charms, like Aeson,<sup>2</sup> have his youth restored,
 And with these thoughts so battens,<sup>o</sup> as if fate gluts himself
 Would be as easily cheated on as he,
 And all turns air!<sup>o</sup> Another knocks. is illusory
 Who's that there, now? A third?
 MOSCA Close,<sup>o</sup> to your couch again. I hear his voice. Hide yourself
 It is Corvino, our spruce<sup>o</sup> merchant. dapper
 VOLPONE [lying down again] Dead.<sup>o</sup> I'll play dead
 MOSCA Another bout, sir, with your eyes.
 [He applies ointment.]
 Who's there?

SCENE 5. The scene continues.

[Enter] CORVINO.
 Signor Corvino! Come<sup>o</sup> most wished for! Oh, You come
 How happy were you if you knew it now!
 CORVINO Why? What? Wherein?
 MOSCA The tardy hour is come, sir.
 CORVINO He is not dead?
 MOSCA Not dead, sir, but as good;
 He knows no man.
 CORVINO HOW shall I do, then?
 MOSCA Why, sir?
 CORVINO I have brought him here a pearl.
 MOSCA Perhaps he has
 So much remembrance left as to know you, sir;
 He still calls on you; nothing but your name
 Is in his mouth. Is your pearl orient,<sup>1</sup> sir?
 CORVINO Venice was never owner of the like.
 VOLPONE [weakly] Signor Corvino—
 MOSCA Hark.
 VOLPONE —Signor Corvino—
 MOSCA He calls you. Step and give it him.—He's here, sir,
 And he has brought you a rich pearl.

1. Deceives himself, and attempts to deceive others, about his age by vigorously refusing to admit the truth.
 2. Father of the Greek hero Jason; his youth was restored by Medea, his sorceress daughter-in-law.

 1. Especially brilliant. (The most beautiful pearls came from the Indian Ocean.)

CORVINO [to VOLPONE] HOW do you, sir?
 [To MOSCA] Tell him it doubles the twelfth carat.<sup>2</sup>
 [He gives VOLPONE the pearl.]

MOSCA [to CORVINO] Sir,
 He cannot understand. His hearing's gone;
 And yet it comforts him to see you—

CORVINO Say
 I have a diamond for him too.

MOSCA Best show't, sir.
 Put it into his hand; 'tis only there
 He apprehends; he has his feeling yet.
 [CORVINO gives VOLPONE the diamond.]
 See how he grasps it!

CORVINO Las, good gentleman!
 How pitiful the sight is!

MOSCA Tut, forget, sir.
 The weeping of an heir should still<sup>0</sup> be laughter
 Under a Visor. always mask

CORVINO Why, am I his heir?

MOSCA Sir, I am sworn; I may not show the will Till he be dead. But here has been Corbaccio,
 Here has been Voltore, here were others too,
 I cannot number 'em they were so many,
 All gaping here for legacies; but I,
 Taking the vantage<sup>0</sup> of his naming you— opportunity
 "Signor Corvino! Signor Corvino!"—took
 Paper and pen and ink, and there I asked him
 Whom he would have his heir? "Corvino." Who Should be executor? "Corvino." And
 To any question he was silent to,
 I still interpreted the nods he made
 Through weakness for consent, and sent home th'others,
 Nothing bequeathed them but to cry and curse.

CORVINO Oh, my dear Mosca! (They embrace.) Does he not perceive us?

MOSCA NO more than a blind harper.<sup>3</sup> He knows no man,
 No face of friend, nor name of any servant,
 Who 'twas that fed him last or gave him drink;
 Not those he hath begotten or brought up
 Can he remember.

CORVINO Has he children?

MOSCA Bastards,<sup>4</sup>
 Some dozen or more, that he begot on beggars,
 Gypsies and Jews and blackmoors,<sup>0</sup> when he was drunk. black Africans
 Knew you not that, sir? 'Tis the common fable.<sup>0</sup> rumor
 The dwarf, the fool, the eunuch are all his;
 He's the true father of his family
 In all save<sup>0</sup> me, but he has given em nothing. except

2. In the seventeenth century, a carat was between 1/144 and 1/150 of an ounce. A twenty-four-carat pearl was therefore very large, weighing roughly 1/6 of an ounce.

3. Harp players were often blind.

4. By law, ordinarily barred from the line of inheritance.

CORVINO That's well, that's well. Art sure he does not hear us?

MOSCA Sure, sir? Why, look you, credit your own sense.<sup>0</sup> believe your senses
[Shouting at VOLPONE] The pox<sup>o</sup> approach and add to your diseases s)>philis
 If it would send you hence the sooner, sir.
 For your incontinence, it hath deserved it
 Thoroughly<sup>0</sup> and throughly, and the plague to boot. thoroughly
[To CORVINO] YOU may come near, sir. [Shouting at VOLPONE again]
 Would you would once close
 Those filthy eyes of yours, that flow with slime
 Like two frog-pits,<sup>o</sup> and those same hanging cheeks, mud puddles
 Covered with hide instead of skin—nay, help, sir—
 That look like frozen dishclouts<sup>0</sup> set on end! dishrags

CORVINO [shouting at VOLPONE] Or like an old smoked wall on which the rain
 Ran down in streaks!

MOSCA Excellent, sir! Speak out;
 You may be louder yet; a culverin<sup>0</sup> firearm
 Discharged in his ear would hardly bore it.

CORVINO [shouting] His nose is like a common sewer, still<sup>0</sup> continually running.

MOSCA 'Tis good! And what his mouth?

CORVINO [shouting] A very draught!<sup>0</sup> cesspool

MOSCA Oh, stop it up—

CORVINO By no means.

MOSCA Pray you let me.
 Faith, I could stifle him rarely with a pillow
 As well as any woman that should keep<sup>0</sup> him. take care of

CORVINO DO as you will, but I'll be gone.

MOSCA Be so;
 It is your presence makes him last so long.

CORVINO I pray you, use no violence.

MOSCA No, sir? Why?
 Why should you be thus scrupulous? Pray you, sir.

CORVINO Nay, at your discretion.

MOSCA Well, good sir, begone.

CORVINO I will not trouble him now to take my pearl?

MOSCA Pooh! Nor your diamond. What a needless care
 Is this afflicts you? Is not all here yours?
 Am not I here, whom you have made your creature?
 That owe my being to you?

CORVINO Grateful Mosca!
 Thou art my friend, my fellow, my companion,
 My partner, and shalt share in all my fortunes.

MOSCA Excepting one.

CORVINO What's that?

MOSCA Your gallant<sup>0</sup> wife, sir. splendid
[Exit CORVINO.]

Now is he gone. We had no other means
 To shoot him hence but this.

VOLPONE My divine Mosca!
 Thou hast today outgone thyself. Another knocks.
 Who's there?

I will be troubled with no more. Prepare
 Me music, dances, banquets, all delights.
 The Turk<sup>5</sup> is not more sensual in his pleasures
 Than will Volpone. [Exit MOSCA.]

Let me see, a pearl?
 A diamond? Plate? Cecchines? Good morning's purchase.<sup>0</sup> haul
 Why, this is better than rob churches, yet,
 Or fat by eating, once a month, a man." i.e., taking monthly interest
[Enter MOSCA.]

Who is't?
 MOSCA The beauteous Lady Would-be, sir,
 Wife to the English knight, Sir Politic Would-be—
 This is the style, sir, is directed me<sup>6</sup>—
 Hath sent to know how you have slept tonight,<sup>0</sup> last night
 And if you would be visited.

VOLPONE Not now.
 Some three hours hence—

MOSCA I told the squire<sup>0</sup> so much. messenger

VOLPONE When I am high with mirth and wine: then, then.
 'Fore heaven, I wonder at the desperate<sup>0</sup> valor reckless
 Of the bold English, that they dare let loose
 Their wives to all encounters!<sup>7</sup>

MOSCA Sir, this knight
 Had not his name for nothing. He is politic,<sup>0</sup> canny
 And knows, howe'er his wife affect strange<sup>0</sup> airs, foreign; bizarre
 She hath not yet the face<sup>8</sup> to be dishonest.<sup>0</sup> unchaste
 But had she Signor Corvino's wife's face—

VOLPONE Has she so rare a face?

MOSCA Oh, sir, the wonder,
 The blazing star<sup>9</sup> of Italy! A wench
 O'the first year!<sup>0</sup> A beauty ripe as harvest! unflawed and in her prime Whose skin is whiter than a swan, all over,
 Than silver, snow, or lilies! A soft lip,
 Would<sup>0</sup> tempt you to eternity of kissing! That would
 And flesh that melteth in the touch to blood!<sup>1</sup>
 Bright as your gold, and lovely as your gold!

VOLPONE Why had not I known this before?

MOSCA Alas, sir,
 Myself but yesterday discovered it.

VOLPONE HOW might I see her?

MOSCA Oh, not possible.
 She's kept as warily as is your gold:
 Never does come abroad,<sup>0</sup> never takes air outside
 But at a window. All her looks are sweet
 As the first<sup>0</sup> grapes or cherries, and are watched of the season

5. Stereotyped as given to decadent luxuries.

6. This is the mode of address I've been told to use.

7. Married Englishwomen were reputed to enjoy more personal freedom than their southern European counterparts; Venetian wives in particular were much restricted, though Celia's situation is obviously extreme (see below, lines 118—26).

8. (1) Beauty; (2) shamelessness.

9. Comet. (Rare and beautiful.)

1. (1) Blushes; (2) sexual responsiveness. (Mosca is evidently conjecturing here.)

As near<sup>0</sup> as they are. closely
 VOLPONE I must see her—
 MOSCA Sir,
 There is a guard of ten spies thick upon her—
 All his whole household—each of which is set
 Upon his fellow, and have all their charge
 When he goes out; when he comes in, examined.<sup>2</sup>
 VOLPONE I will go see her, though but at her window.
 MOSCA In some disguise, then.
 VOLPONE That is true. I must Maintain mine own shape still the same.<sup>3</sup> We'll think.
[Exeunt.]

Act 2

SCENE 1. Saint Mark's Square.

[Enter] POLITIC WOULD-BE [and] PEREGRINE,
 POLITIC Sir, to a wise man all the world's his soil.<sup>1</sup>
 It is not Italy, nor France, nor Europe
 That must bound me if my fates call me forth.
 Yet I protest it is no salt<sup>0</sup> desire inordinate
 Of seeing countries, shifting a religion,<sup>2</sup>
 Nor any disaffection to the state
 Where I was bred—and unto which I owe
 My dearest plots<sup>0</sup>—hath brought me out;<sup>0</sup> much less projects/abroad
 That idle, antique, stale, gray-headed project
 Of knowing men's minds and manners with Ulysses;<sup>3</sup>
 But a peculiar humor<sup>0</sup> of my wife's whim
 Laid for this height<sup>0</sup> of Venice, to observe, latitude
 To quote,<sup>0</sup> to learn the language, and so forth.— jot things down
 I hope you travel, sir, with license?<sup>4</sup>
 PEREGRINE Yes.
 POLITIC I dare the safelier converse. How long, sir,
 Since you left England?
 PEREGRINE Seven weeks.
 POLITIC SO lately!
 You ha' not been with my Lord Ambassador?
 PEREGRINE Not yet, sir.
 POLITIC Pray you, what news, sir, vents our climate?<sup>5</sup>
 I heard last night a most strange thing reported
 By some of my lord's<sup>0</sup> followers, and I long the ambassador's
 To hear how't will be seconded.<sup>0</sup> confirmed
 PEREGRINE What was't, sir?
 POLITIC Marry, sir, of a raven that should build<sup>0</sup> reportedly built
 In a ship royal of the King's.

2. Each member of the household spies on all the others; each gets his instructions when Corvino departs and is interrogated when he returns.

3. I must, in my own person, continue to pretend to be near death.

2.1

1. Proverbial, like most of Sir Pol's "original" advice. "Soil": native land.

2. Throughout the 16th and 17th centuries, members of religious minorities throughout Europe sought refuge in lands more hospitable to their faiths.

3. The hero of the Odyssey, an archetype of the wise traveler.

4. A passport. (English people could not travel abroad without permission.)

5. Comes from our part of the world?

PEREGRINE [aside] This fellow,
 Does he gulf me, trow?<sup>6</sup> Or is gulled?—Your name, sir? trick / do you suppose?

POLITIC My name is Politic Would-be.

PEREGRINE [aside] Oh, that speaks<sup>0</sup> him,— characterizes
 A knight, sir?

POLITIC A poor knight, sir.<sup>6</sup>

PEREGRINE Your lady
 Lies<sup>0</sup> here in Venice for intelligence<sup>0</sup> stays / news
 Of tires<sup>0</sup> and fashions and behavior apparel
 Among the courtesans?<sup>7</sup> The fine Lady Would-be?

POLITIC Yes, sir, the spider and the bee ofttimes
 Suck from one flower.

PEREGRINE Good Sir Politic,
 I cry you mercy!<sup>0</sup> I have heard much of you. heg your pardon
 'Tis true, sir, of your raven.

POLITIC On your knowledge?

PEREGRINE Yes, and your lion's whelping in the Tower.<sup>8</sup>

POLITIC Another whelp!

PEREGRINE Another, sir.

POLITIC NOW, heaven!
 What prodigies<sup>0</sup> be these? The fires at Berwick! strange occurrences
 And the new star!<sup>9</sup> These things concurring,<sup>0</sup> strange! happening together
 And full of omen! Saw you those meteors?

PEREGRINE I did, sir.

POLITIC Fearful! Pray you sir, confirm me:
 Were there three porpoises seen above the bridge,<sup>1</sup>
 As they give out?<sup>0</sup> people report

PEREGRINE Six, and a sturgeon, sir.

POLITIC I am astonished!

PEREGRINE Nay, sir, be not so.
 I'll tell you a greater prodigy than these—

POLITIC What should these things portend!

PEREGRINE The very day—
 Let me be sure—that I put forth from London,
 There was a whale discovered in the river
 As high<sup>0</sup> as Woolwich,<sup>2</sup> that had waited there— far upstream
 Few know how many months—for the subversion
 Of the Stode Fleet.<sup>3</sup>

POLITIC Is't possible? Believe it,
 'Twas either sent from Spain or the Archdukes.<sup>4</sup>
 Spinola's<sup>5</sup> whale, upon my life, my credit!<sup>0</sup> honor
 Will they not leave these projects? Worthy sir,
 Some other news.

6. In the first decade of the 17th century. King James I raised badly needed money by selling knighthoods to many whose birth, attainments, or wealth would not have previously merited a title.

7. Venice was famous for its elegant prostitutes.

8. A lioness kept at the Tower of London gave birth in 1604 and 1605.

9. The fires at Berwick were aurora borealis visible above Berwick, Northumberland, in 1605, said to resemble battling armies. The new star, a supernova, was described by the astronomer Johannes Kepler in 1604.

1. A porpoise was found upstream of London Bridge in the Thames River the January before Volpone was first performed.

2. A town on the Thames, a bit to the east of London.

3. The English merchant adventurers' ships, which were harboring at Stade, in the mouth of the Elbe River.

4. The Archduke Albert of Austria and his wife, Isabella, the Infanta of Spain, ruled the Netherlands in the name of Spain.

5. Ambrosio de Spinola was general of the Spanish army in the Netherlands.

- PEREGRINE            Faith, Stone the fool is dead;
 And they do lack a tavern-fool extremely.
- POLITIC    Is Mas' Stone dead?<sup>6</sup>
- PEREGRINE            He's dead, sir. Why, I hope
 You thought him not immortal? [Aside] Oh, this knight,
 Were he well known, would be a precious thing
 To fit our English stage. He that should write
 But such a fellow should be thought to feign
 Extremely, if not maliciously.
- POLITIC                            Stone dead!
- PEREGRINE    Dead. Lord, how deeply, sir, you apprehend it!
 He was no kinsman to you?
- POLITIC                            That<sup>0</sup> I know of.                            Not that
- Well, that same fellow was an unknown fool.<sup>7</sup>
- PEREGRINE    And yet you knew him, it seems?
- POLITIC                            I did so. Sir,
 I knew him one of the most dangerous heads
 Living within the state, and so I held<sup>0</sup> him.                            considered
- PEREGRINE    Indeed, sir?
- POLITIC                            While he lived, in action,<sup>0</sup>                            subversive activities
 He has received weekly intelligence,
 Upon my knowledge, out of the Low Countries,
 For all parts of the world, in cabbages,<sup>0</sup>                            a Dutch import
 And those dispensed again to ambassadors
 In oranges, muskmelons, apricots,
 Lemons, pome-citrons,<sup>o</sup> and suchlike—sometimes                            grapefruitlike fruits
 In Colchester oysters, and your Selsey cockles.<sup>8</sup>
- PEREGRINE    YOU make me wonder!
- POLITIC                            Sir, upon my knowledge.
 Nay, I have observed him at your public ordinary<sup>0</sup>                            tavern
 Take his advertisement<sup>0</sup> from a traveler—                            information
 A concealed statesman—in a trencher<sup>0</sup> of meat,                            xwooden plate
 And instantly before the meal was done
 Convey an answer in a toothpick.<sup>9</sup>
- PEREGRINE                            Strange!
 How could this be, sir?
- POLITIC                            Why, the meat was cut
 So like his character,<sup>0</sup> and so laid as he                            code letters
 Must easily read the cipher.
- PEREGRINE                            I have heard
 He could not read, sir.
- POLITIC                            SO 'twas given out,
 In polity,<sup>0</sup> by those that did employ him.                            craftily
 But he could read, and had your languages,<sup>0</sup>                            knew foreign languages
 And to't<sup>o</sup> as sound a noddle<sup>0</sup>—                            in addition / head
- PEREGRINE                            I have heard, sir,

6. "Mas'" means "master," a term of address for boys and fools. Stone, KingJames's outspoken courtjester, was a well-known urban character. He was whipped the year before Volpone's first performance for slandering the Lord Admiral. Politic is evidently unaware of the play on words in "Stone dead."

7. The person who said this was not commonly recognized as a spy; he used foolery as his cover.

8. Expensive delicacies, unlikely tavern fare.

9. Presumably by inserting a tiny note into a toothpick hollowed out for espionage use.

That your baboons were spies, and that they were
 A kind of subtle nation near to China.

POLITIC Ay, ay, your Mamuluchi.<sup>1</sup> Faith, they had Their hand in a French plot or two, but they Were so extremely given to women as
 They made discovery of all. Yet I
 Had my advices<sup>0</sup> here, on Wednesday last,
 From one of their own coat;<sup>o</sup> they were returned,
 Made their relations,<sup>o</sup> as the fashion is,
 And now stand fair<sup>o</sup> for fresh employment.

PEREGRINE [aside] Heart,
 This Sir Pol will be<sup>o</sup> ignorant of nothing.
 [To POLITIC] It seems, sir, you know all?

POLITIC Not all, sir. But I have some general notions; I do love
 To note and to observe. Though I live out,<sup>o</sup>
 Free from the active torrent, yet I'd mark
 The currents and the passages of things
 For mine own private use, and know the ebbs
 And flows of state.

PEREGRINE Believe it, sir, I hold
 Myself in no small tie unto my fortunes<sup>o</sup>
 For casting me thus lucidly upon you,
 Whose knowledge—if your bounty equal it—
 May do me great assistance in instruction
 For my behavior and my bearing, which
 Is yet so rude and raw—

POLITIC Why, came you forth
 Empty of rules for travel?

PEREGRINE Faith, I had
 Some common ones from out that vulgar grammar,<sup>2</sup>
 Which he that cried<sup>o</sup> Italian to me taught me.

POLITIC Why, this it is that spoils all our brave bloods,<sup>o</sup>
 Trusting our hopeful<sup>o</sup> gentry unto pedants,
 Fellows of outside and mere bark.<sup>3</sup> You seem
 To be a gentleman of ingenuous race<sup>o</sup>—
 I not profess it,<sup>o</sup> but my fate hath been
 To be where I have been consulted with
 In this high kind,<sup>o</sup> touching some great men's sons,
 Persons of blood<sup>o</sup> and honor—

PEREGRINE Who be these, sir?

SCENE 2. The scene continues.

[Enter] MOSCA [and] NANO [disguised as a mountebank's assistants].

MOSCA Under that window, there't must be. The same.

[MOSCA and NANO set up a platform.]

1. Mamluks, a class of warriors originally from Asia
 Minor, who ruled Egypt from 1250 to 1517.
 2. Modern language textbook, which sometimes included travelers' tips.

 3. Superficial accomplishments.

POLITIC Fellows to mount a bank!<sup>0</sup> Did your instructor platform
 In the dear tongues<sup>1</sup> never discourse to you
 Of the Italian mountebanks?

PEREGRINE Yes, sir.

POLITIC Why,
 Here shall you see one.

PEREGRINE They are quacksalvers,
 Fellows that live by venting<sup>0</sup> oils and drugs. selling

POLITIC Was that the character he gave you of them?

PEREGRINE AS I remember.

POLITIC Pity his ignorance.
 They are the only knowing men of Europe!
 Great general scholars, excellent physicians,
 Most admired statesmen, professed favorites
 And cabinet counselors<sup>0</sup> to the greatest princes! close advisers
 The only languaged<sup>0</sup> men of all the world! most eloquent

PEREGRINE And I have heard they are most lewd<sup>0</sup> impostors,
 Made all of terms<sup>0</sup> and shreds, no less beliers ignorant
 Of great men's favors than their own vile med'cines, jargon
 Which they will utter<sup>0</sup> upon monstrous oaths, advertise for sale
 Selling that drug for twopence ere they part
 Which they have valued at twelve crowns<sup>0</sup> before. silver or gold coins

POLITIC Sir, calumnies are answered best with silence.
 Yourself shall judge. [To MOSCA and NANO] Who is it mounts, my friends?

MOSCA Scoto of Mantua,<sup>2</sup> sir.

POLITIC Is't he? [To PEREGRINE] Nay, then,
 I'll proudly promise, sir, you shall behold
 Another man than has been fancied<sup>0</sup> to you. presented in imagination
 I wonder yet that he should mount his bank
 Here in this nook, that has been wont t'appear
 In face oP the piazza! Here he comes. Facing [Enter] VOLPONE [disguised as a mountebank, followed by] a crowd.

VOLPONE [to NANO] Mount, zany.<sup>o</sup> clown; performer
 [VOLPONE and NANO climb onto the platform.]

CROWD Follow, follow, follow, follow, follow!

POLITIC See how the people follow him! He's a man
 May write ten thousand crowns in bank here. Note,
 Mark but his gesture. I do use<sup>0</sup> to observe make it my practice
 The state<sup>0</sup> he keeps, in getting up. stateliness

PEREGRINE 'Tis worth it, sir.

VOLPONE Most noble gentlemen and my worthy patrons, it may seem strange that I, your Scoto Mantuano, who was ever wont to fix my bank in face of the public piazza near the shelter of the portico to the procuratia,<sup>3</sup> should now, after eight months' absence from this illustrious city of Ven-

- POLITIC [to PEREGRINE] Did not I now object the same?<sup>0</sup> ask the same question
- PEREGRINE Peace, sir.
- VOLPONE Let me tell you: I am not, as your Lombard proverb saith, cold on my feet,<sup>o</sup> or content to part with my commodities at a cheaper rate than I accustomed; look not for it. Nor that the calumnious reports of that impudent detractor and shame to our profession (Alessandro Buttone,<sup>0</sup> I mean) who gave out in public I was condemned a 'sforzato<sup>0</sup> to the galleys for poisoning the Cardinal Bembo's—cook,<sup>4</sup> hath at all attached,<sup>0</sup> much less dejected me. No, no, worthy gentlemen. To tell you true, I cannot endure to see the rabble of these ground ciarlitani,<sup>5</sup> that spread their cloaks on the pavement as if they meant to do feats of activity<sup>0</sup> and then come in lamely with their moldy tales out of Boccaccio, like stale Tabarine,<sup>6</sup> the fabulist: some of them discoursing their travels and of their tedious captivity in the Turks' galleys, when indeed, were the truth known, they were the Christians' galleys, where very temperately they ate bread and drunk water as a wholesome penance, enjoined them by their confessors, for base pilferies.
- POLITIC [to PEREGRINE] Note but his bearing and contempt of these.
- VOLPONE These turdy-facy-nasty-paty-lousy-fartical rogues, with one poor groatsworth<sup>0</sup> of unprepared antimony,<sup>7</sup> finely wrapped up in several scartoccios<sup>o</sup> are able very well to kill their twenty a week, and play;<sup>o</sup> yet these meager starved spirits, who have half stopped the organs of their minds with earthy oppilations,<sup>0</sup> want not their favorers among your shriveled, salad-eating artisans, who are overjoyed that they may have their ha'p'orth<sup>0</sup> of physic; though it purge 'em into another world, 't makes no matter.
- POLITIC Excellent! Ha' you heard better language, sir?
- VOLPONE Well, let 'em go.<sup>o</sup> And, gentlemen, honorable gentlemen, know that for this time, our bank, being thus removed from the clamors of the canaglia<sup>o</sup> shall be the scene of pleasure and delight. For I have nothing to sell, little or nothing to sell. say no more about them
- POLITIC I told you, sir, his end. mob
- PEREGRINE You did so, sir.
- VOLPONE I protest, I and my six servants are not able to make of this precious liquor so fast as it is fetched away from my lodging by gentlemen of your city, strangers of the terra firma,<sup>8</sup> worshipful merchants, ay, and senators too, who ever since my arrival have detained me to their uses by their

POLITIC Ay, is't not good?

VOLPONE For when a humid flux<sup>o</sup> or catarrh, by the mutability of air, falls from your head into an arm or shoulder or any other part, take you a ducat or your cecchine of gold and apply to the place affected; see what good effect it can work. 9. Renaissance medicine was based on the theory of the humors, four bodily fluids whose balance within the body determined both physical and mental health. Their qualities, in various combinations, were hot, cold, moist, and dry; hence Peregrine's comment in the next line.

1. Volpone's list of diseases includes "mal caduco," epilepsy; "tremor cordia," palpitations; "retired nerves," withered sinews; "ill vapors of the spleen," short temper; "stone," kidney stones; "strangury," painful urination; "hernia ventosa," a hernia contain-

NANO [sings] Had old Hippocrates or Galen,<sup>5</sup>

PEREGRINE All this yet will not do; eight crowns is high.

VOLPONE [to NANO] No more.—Gentlemen, if I had but time to discourse to you the miraculous effects of this my oil, surnamed oglio del Scoto, with the countless catalogue of those I have cured of th'aforsaid and many more diseases, the patents and privileges of all the princes and commonwealths of Christendom, or but the depositions of those that appeared on my part before the signory of the Sanitd,<sup>9</sup> and most learned College of Physicians, where I was authorized, upon notice taken of the admirable virtues of my medica-ments and mine own excellency in matter of rare and unknown secrets, not only to disperse them publicly in this famous city but in all the territories that happily joy under the government of the most pious and magnificent states of Italy. But may some other gallant fellow say, "Oh, there be divers that make profession<sup>0</sup> to have as good and as experimented receipts as yours." Indeed, very many have assayed like apes in imitation of that which is really and essentially in me, to make oP this oil; bestowed great cost in furnaces, stills, alembics,<sup>1</sup> continual fires, and preparation of the ingredients (as indeed there goes to it six hundred several simples,<sup>0</sup> besides some quantity of human fat for the conglutination,<sup>0</sup> which we buy of the anatomists); but, when these practitioners come to the last decoction,<sup>0</sup> blow, blow, always from my youth have endeavored to get the rarest

Take it or leave it howsoever, both it and I am at your service. I ask you not as the value of the thing, for then I should demand<sup>o</sup> of you a thousand crowns; so the Cardinals Montalto, Fernese, the great Duke of Tuscany, my gossip,<sup>o</sup> with divers other princes, have given me. But I despise money. Only to show my affection to you, honorable gentlemen, and your illustrious state here, I have neglected the messages of these princes, mine own offices,<sup>o</sup> framed<sup>o</sup> my journey hither only to present you with the fruits of my travels.  only a pledge of your loves, to carry something from amongst you to show I am not contemned<sup>0</sup> by you.
 Therefore now, toss your handkerchiefs cheerfully, cheerfully, and be advertised<sup>0</sup> that the first heroic spirit that deigns to grace me with a handkerchief, I will give it a little remembrance of something beside, shall please<sup>0</sup> it better than if I had presented it with a double pistolet.<sup>4</sup>

 CELIA at the window throws down her handkerchief
[with a coin tied inside it].
 Oh, see! The window has prevented you.<sup>0</sup>

VOLPONE Lady, I kiss your bounty, and, for this timely grace
 you have done your poor Scoto of Mantua, I will return you, over and above my oil, a secret of that high and inestimable nature shall<sup>0</sup> make you forever enamored on that minute wherein your eye first descended on so mean,<sup>0</sup> yet not altogether to be despised, an object. Here is a powder concealed in this paper of which, if I should speak to the worth, nine thousand volumes were but as one page, that page as a line, that line as a word—so short is this pilgrimage of man, which some call life, to<sup>o</sup> the expressing of it. Would I reflect on the price, why, the whole world were but as an empire, that empire as a province, that province as a bank, that bank as a private purse, to the purchase of it. I will only tell you it is the powder that made Venus a goddess, given her by Apollo,<sup>5</sup> that kept her perpetually young, cleared her wrinkles, firmed her gums, filled<sup>0</sup> her skin, colored her hair; from her derived to Helen, and at the sack of Troy unfortunately lost; till now in this our age it was as happily<sup>0</sup> recovered by a studious antiquary out of some ruins of Asia, who sent a moiety<sup>0</sup> of it to the court of France (but much sophisticated)<sup>0</sup> wherewith the ladies there now color their hair. The rest, at this present, remains with me, extracted to a quintessence,<sup>0</sup> so that wherever it but touches, in youth it perpetually preserves, in age restores the complexion; seats your teeth, did<sup>o</sup> they dance like virginaljacks,<sup>6</sup> firm as a wall; makes them white as ivory that were black as—

SCENE 3. The scene continues.[Enter] CORVINO. He beats away the mountebank, etc.

CORVINO Spite o'the devil, and my shame! Come down here,
 Come down! No house but mine to make your scene?<sup>0</sup>

3. I won't reduce the price by even a tiny coin.
 4. Spanish gold coin worth about one English pound.
 5. In his capacity as the god of health.

6. The virginal is a type of harpsichord; its "jacks" are quills that pluck strings when the keys are played, but the term was also sometimes used for the keys.

 followed by CORVINO and the crowd.]

PEREGRINE What should this mean, Sir Pol?

POLITIC Some trick of state, believe it. I will home.

PEREGRINE It may be some design on you.

POLITIC I know not.

I'll stand upon my guard.

PEREGRINE It is your best,<sup>0</sup> sir.

best course of action

POLITIC This three weeks, all my advices, all my letters,

They have been intercepted,

PEREGRINE Indeed, sir?

Best have a care.

POLITIC Nay, so I will.

PEREGRINE This knight,

I may not lose him,<sup>0</sup> for my mirth, till night.

[Exit.]

I won't leave him

SCENE 4. VOLPONE'S house.

[Enter] VOLPONE [and] MOSCA.

VOLPONE Oh, I am wounded!

MOSCA Where, sir?

VOLPONE Not without;<sup>0</sup>

externally

Those blows were nothing; I could bear them ever,

But angry Cupid, bolting<sup>0</sup> from her<sup>0</sup> eyes,

shooting darts / Celia's

Hath shot himself into me like a flame,

Where now he flings about his burning heat,

As in a furnace an ambitious<sup>0</sup> fire

rising

Whose vent is stopped. The fight is all within me.

I cannot live except thou help me, Mosca;

My liver<sup>1</sup> melts, and I, without the hope

Of some soft air from her refreshing breath,

Am but a heap of cinders.

MOSCA 'Las, good sir!

Would you had never seen her.

VOLPONE Nay, would thou

Hadst never told me of her.

MOSCA Sir, 'tis true;

I do confess I was unfortunate,

And you unhappy; but I'm bound in conscience

No less than duty to effect my best

To your release of torment, and I will, sir.

1. Corvino imagines the scene in terms of a stock episode from the Italian commedia dell'arte, in which the young lover, conventionally named Flaminio after the famous actor Flaminio Scala, seduces Franciscina, the easygoing serving wench.

2. The pantalone is another stock figure in the commedia dell'arte, a decrepit old man suspicious of his desirable young wife. Di bisogniosi is his jocular surname, meaning "descended from poor people."

1. Supposed to be the seat of lust.

VOLPONE Dear Mosca, shall I hope?
MOSCA Sir, more than dear,
I will not bid you to despair of aught
Within a human compass. that's humanly possible

VOLPONE Oh, there spoke
My better angel. Mosca, take my keys.
Gold, plate, and jewels, all's at thy devotion;<sup>0</sup> disposal
Employ them how thou wilt; nay, coin me too,<sup>2</sup>
So° thou in this but crown my longings. Mosca? provided that

MOSCA Use but your patience.
VOLPONE SO I have.<sup>3</sup>
MOSCA I doubt not
To bring success to your desires.

VOLPONE Nay, then,
I not repent me of my late disguise.
MOSCA If you can horn him,<sup>4</sup> sir, you need not.
VOLPONE True;
Besides, I never meant him for my heir.
Is not the color o' my beard and eyebrows<sup>5</sup>
To make me known?

MOSCA NO jot.
VOLPONE I did it well.
MOSCA SO well, would I could follow you in mine
With half the happiness!<sup>0</sup> And yet I would success
Escape your epilogue.<sup>0</sup> the beating

VOLPONE But were they gulled<sup>0</sup> fooled
With a belief that I was Scoto?

MOSCA Sir,
Scoto himself could hardly have distinguished!
I have not time to flatter you now. We'll part,
And, as I prosper, so applaud my art. [Exeunt.]

SCENE 5. CORVINO S house.

[Enter] CORVINO [and] CELIA.

CORVINO Death of mine honor, with the city's fool?
A juggling, tooth-drawing,<sup>1</sup> prating<sup>0</sup> mountebank? chattering
And at a public window? Where, whilst he
With his strained action<sup>0</sup> and his dole of faces<sup>2</sup> overacting
To his drug lecture draws your itching ears,
A crew of old, unmarried, noted lechers
Stood leering up like satyrs;<sup>0</sup> and you smile lustfid goat-men
Most graciously! And fan your favors forth
To give your hot spectators satisfaction!
What, was your mountebank their call? Their whistle?<sup>3</sup>
Or were you enamored on his copper rings?

2. Use my coins as well. (But also with the implication "make coins out of me," i.e., "turn my body into money.")

3. Punning on the original meaning of "patience," "enduring blows."

4. Cuckold him. (The husbands of adulterous wives were traditionally supposed to sprout horns.)

5. Red, because he is a fox.

2.5

1. Mountebanks, like barbers, performed dental work.

2. Small repertory of facial expressions.

3. Used to lure trained falcons.

His saffron jewel with the toadstone<sup>0</sup> in't?
 Or his embroidered suit with the cope-stitch,<sup>5</sup>
 Made of a hearse-cloth? Or his old tilt-feather?<sup>4</sup>
 Or his starched beard? Well! You shall have him, yes.
 He shall come home and minister unto you
 The fricace for the mother.<sup>5</sup> Or, let me see,
 I think you'd rather mount?<sup>6</sup> Would you not mount?
 Why, if you'll mount, you may; yes truly, you may—
 And so you may be seen down to th'foot.
 Get you a cittern, Lady Vanity,<sup>7</sup>
 And be a dealer with the virtuous man;
 Make one.<sup>8</sup> I'll but protest<sup>0</sup> myself a cuckold
 And save your dowry.<sup>9</sup> I am a Dutchman, I!
 For if you thought me an Italian,
 You would be damned ere you did this, you whore.<sup>1</sup>
 Thou'dst tremble to imagine that the murder
 Of father, mother, brother, all thy race,
 Should follow as the subject of my justice!
 CELIA Good sir, have patience!
 CORVINO [drawing a weapon] What couldst thou propose
 Less to thyself than, in this heat of wrath
 And stung with my dishonor, I should strike
 This steel unto thee, with as many stabs
 As thou wert gazed upon with goatish<sup>0</sup> eyes?
 CELIA Alas, sir, be appeased! I could not think
 My being at the window should more now
 Move your impatience than at other times.
 CORVINO NO? Not to seek and entertain a parley<sup>0</sup>
 With a known knave? Before a multitude?
 You were an actor with your handkerchief!
 Which he most sweetly kissed in the receipt,
 And might, no doubt, return it with a letter,
 And point the place where you might meet—your sister's,
 Your mother's, or your aunt's might serve the turn.<sup>0</sup>
 CELIA Why, dear sir, when do I make these excuses?
 Or ever stir abroad but to the church?
 And that, so seldom—
 CORVINO Well, it shall be less;
 And thy restraint before was liberty
 To what I now decree: and therefore, mark me.
 [Pointing to the window] First, I will have this bawdy light dammed up,
 And, till't be done, some two or three yards off
 I'll chalk a line, o'er which if thou but chance

 5. Womb massage; with obvious sexual innuendo. "The mother" was a term for the uterus, but also for a variety of ailments, from cramps to depression, that were supposed to originate there.
 6. (1) Climb up on the mountebank's stage yourself; (2) take the top sexual position.
 7. Allegorical character of a morality play representing pride and worldly pleasure. A cittern is a guitarlike instrument that conventionally was played by whores.

 8. Join up with him. (With sexual innuendo.)
 9. The husbands of proven adultresses could divorce them and keep their dowry.
 1. The Dutch were proverbially phlegmatic, in contrast to Italians, who were stereotypically impetuous and vengeful.

 More wild, remorseless rage shall seize on thee

 Then here's a lock which I will hang upon thee.

[He shows a chastity belt.]

And now I think on't, I will keep thee backwards;<sup>3</sup>
 Thy lodging shall be backwards, thy walks backwards,
 Thy prospect<sup>0</sup>—all be backwards; and no pleasure

 But I will make thee an anatomy,<sup>4</sup>
 Dissect thee mine own self, and read a lecture
 Upon thee to the city, and in public.
 Away!

[Exit CELIA.]

Who's there?

[Enter] Servitore [a SERVANT],

SERVANT 'Tis Signor Mosca, sir.

SCENE 6. The scene continues.

CORVINO Let him come in. [Exit SERVANT.]

His master's dead! There's yet
 Some good to help the bad.

[Enter] MOSCA.

My Mosca, welcome!

I guess your news.

MOSCA I fear you cannot, sir.

CORVINO Is't not his death?

MOSCA Rather the contrary.

CORVINO Not his recovery?

MOSCA Yes, sir.

CORVINO I am cursed, I am cursed,

I am bewitched! My crosses<sup>0</sup> meet to vex me! misfortunes

How? How? How? How?

MOSCA Why, sir, with Scoto's oil.

Corbaccio and Voltore brought of it
 Whilst I was busy in an inner room—

2. Conjurers protected themselves from the devils who served them by staying inside a magical circle.

3. In the back part of the house, lacking a view out onto the piazza; but with the suggestion of anal intercourse, supposedly favored by Italians.

4. Use you for anatomical research. (In the early modern period, physicians obtained the bodies of executed criminals upon which to perform dissections, often before large crowds.)

- CORVINO Death! That damned mountebank! But for the law,
 Now, I could kill the rascal. T cannot be
 His oil should have that virtue. Ha' not I Known him a common rogue, come fiddling in
 To th'osteria<sup>o</sup> with a tumbling whore, tavern (Italian)
 And, when he has done all his forced tricks, been glad
 Of a poor spoonful of dead wine with flies in't?
 It cannot be. All his ingredients
 Are a sheep's gall, a roasted bitch's marrow,
 Some few sod<sup>o</sup> earwigs, pounded caterpillars, boiled
 A little capon's grease, and fasting spittle:<sup>1</sup>
 I know 'em to a dram.<sup>o</sup> tiny amount
- MOSCA I know not, sir,
 But some on't there they poured into his ears,
 Some in his nostrils, and recovered him,
 Applying but the fricace.<sup>o</sup> massage
- CORVINO Pox o'that fricace!
- MOSCA And since, to seem the more officious<sup>o</sup> zealous
 And flatt'ring of his health, there they have had—
 At extreme fees—the College of Physicians
 Consulting on him how they might restore him;
 Where one would have a cataplas<sup>m</sup><sup>2</sup> of spices,
 Another a flayed ape clapped to his breast,
 A third would ha' it a dog, a fourth an oil
 With wildcats' skins. At last, they all resolved
 That to preserve him was no other means
 But some young woman must be straight sought out,
 Lusty and full of juice, to sleep by him;
 And to this service—most unhappily
 And most unwillingly—am I now employed,
 Which here I thought to preacquaint you with,
 For your advice, since it concerns you most,
 Because I would not do that thing might cross
 Your ends,<sup>3</sup> on whom I have my whole dependence, sir.
 Yet if I do it not, they may delate<sup>4</sup>
 My slackness to my patron, work me out
 Of his opinion;<sup>o</sup> and there all your hopes, favor
 Ventures, or whatsoever, are all frustrate.
 I do but tell you, sir. Besides, they are all
 Now striving who shall first present him. Therefore,
 I could entreat you briefly, conclude somewhat;<sup>o</sup> decide something
 Prevent 'em if you can.
- CORVINO Death to my hopes!
 This is my villainous fortune! Best to hire
 Some common courtesan.
- MOSCO Ay, I thought on that, sir.

1. Saliva of a fasting person (Scoto cannot afford anything to eat).
 2. Poultice. (The substances described in the following lines were believed to work by absorbing the patient's infection, which bodes ill for the young woman prescribed for Volpone in lines 34–35.)

3. Do anything that might frustrate your purposes.

4. Report. (A legal term for making an accusation.)

But they are all so subtle,<sup>0</sup> full of art,<sup>o</sup> cunning / deceit
 And age again<sup>0</sup> doting and flexible, old people moreover
 So as—I cannot tell—we may perchance
 Light on a quean<sup>0</sup> may cheat us all. whore (who)

CORVINO 'Tis true.

MOSCA No, no; it must be one that has no tricks, sir,
 Some simple thing, a creature made unto<sup>0</sup> it; suited to; forced into
 Some wench you may command. Ha' you no kinswoman?
 Godso<sup>0</sup>—think, think, think, think, think, think, think, sir. an oath
 One o'the doctors offered there his daughter.

CORVINO How!

MOSCA Yes, Signor Lupo,<sup>0</sup> the physician. Wolf (Italian)

CORVINO His daughter?

MOSCA And a virgin, sir. Why, alas,
 He knows the state of's body, what it is,
 That naught can warm his blood, sir, but a fever,
 Nor any incantation raise his spirit.<sup>0</sup> vigor; semen
 A long forgetfulness hath seized that part.<sup>0</sup> his penis
 Besides, sir, who shall know it? Some one or two—

CORVINO I pray thee give me leave.<sup>0</sup> [He wallz apart.] If any give me a minute
 man
 But I had had this luck—The thing in 'tself,
 I know, is nothing.—Wherefore should not I
 As well command my blood and my affections
 As this dull doctor? In the point of honor
 The cases are all one, of wife and daughter.

MOSCA [aside] I hear him coming.<sup>0</sup> coming around

CORVINO [aside] She shall do't. 'Tis done.
 'Slight,<sup>0</sup> if this doctor, who is not engaged, by God's light (an oath)
 Unless't be for his counsel (which is nothing),<sup>5</sup>
 Offer his daughter, what should I, that am
 So deeply in? I will prevent him. Wretch!
 Covetous wretch!—Mosca, I have determined.

MOSCA How, sir?

CORVINO We'll make all sure. The party you wot<sup>o</sup> of know (a circumlocution)
 Shall be mine own wife, Mosca.

MOSCA Sir, the thing
 (But that I would not seem to counsel you)
 I should have motioned<sup>0</sup> to you at the first. proposed
 And, make your count,<sup>0</sup> you have cut all their throats. rest assured
 Why, 'tis directly taking a possession!<sup>6</sup>
 And in his next fit we may let him go.
 'Tis but to pull the pillow from his head
 And he is throttled; t had been done before,
 But for your scrupulous doubts,

CORVINO Ay, a plague on't!
 My conscience fools my wit.<sup>o</sup> Well, I'll be brief, common sense
 And so be thou, lest they should be before us.

5. Who is not financially involved, except for whatever slight fee he could expect for his advice.

6. A legal term for the heir's formal assumption of inherited property.

Go home, prepare him, tell him with what zeal
 And willingness I do it; swear it was
 On the first hearing (as thou mayst do, truly)
 Mine own free motion.<sup>0</sup> initiative

95 MOSCA Sir, I warrant you,
 I'll so possess<sup>0</sup> him with it that the rest impress
 Of his starved clients shall be banished all,
 And only you received. But come not, sir,
 Until I send, for I have something else

100 To ripen for your good; you must not know't.
 CORVINO But do not you forget to send, now.
 MOSCO Fear not.
[Exit.]

SCENE 7. The scene continues.

CORVINO Where are you, wife? My Celia? Wife?
[Enter] CELIA [weeping.]

What, blubbering?
 Come, dry those tears. I think thou thought'st me in earnest?
 Ha! By this light, I talked so but to try<sup>o</sup> thee. test
 Methinks the lightness<sup>0</sup> of the occasion triviality

5 Should ha' confirmed thee.<sup>1</sup> Come, I am not jealous.
 CELIA No?
 CORVINO
 Faith, I am not, I, nor never<sup>2</sup> was;
 It is a poor, unprofitable humor.
 Do not I know if women have a will They'll do 'gainst all the watches<sup>0</sup> o'the world? despite the vigilance

10 And that the fiercest spies are tamed with gold?
 Tut, I am confident in thee, thou shalt see't;
 And see, I'll give thee cause too, to believe it.
 Come, kiss me. Go and make thee ready straight
 In all thy best attire, thy choicest jewels;

15 Put em all on, and, with em thy best looks.
 We are invited to a solemn feast
 At old Volpone's, where it shall appear
 How far I am free from jealousy or fear. [Exeunt.]

Act 3

SCENE 1. The piazza.

[Enter] MOSCA.

MOSCA I fear I shall begin to grow in love
 With my dear self and my most prosp'rous parts,<sup>0</sup> talents
 They do so spring and burgeon.<sup>0</sup> I can feel swell; thrive
 A whimsy<sup>0</sup> i'my blood. I know not how, giddiness

5 Success hath made me wanton. I could skip

2.7

1. Convinced you that I was not serious.

2. Double negatives are grammatical in Jacobean English.

Out of my skin now like a subtle snake,
 I am so limber. Oh, your parasite
 Is a most precious thing, dropped from above,<sup>0</sup> sent from heaven
 Not bred mongst clods and clodpolls here on earth.
 I muse the mystery was not made a science,
 It is so liberally professed!<sup>1</sup> Almost
 All the wise world is little else in nature
 But parasites or subparasites. And yet
 I mean not those that have your bare town-art,<sup>2</sup>
 To know who's fit to feed em; have no house,
 No family, no care, and therefore mold
 Tales for men's ears,<sup>0</sup> to bait<sup>0</sup> that sense; or get tell juicy rumors I entice
 Kitchen-invention, and some stale receipts<sup>0</sup> recipes
 To please the belly and the groin;<sup>0</sup> nor those, as aphrodisiacs
 With their court-dog tricks, that can fawn and fleer,<sup>0</sup> smile insincerely
 Make their revenue out of legs and faces,
 Echo my lord, and lick away a moth;<sup>3</sup>
 But your fine, elegant rascal, that can rise
 And stoop almost together, like an arrow,
 Shoot through the air as nimbly as a star,<sup>0</sup> meteor
 Turn short as doth a swallow, and be here
 And there and here and yonder all at once,
 Present to any humor, all occasion,<sup>4</sup>
 And change a visor<sup>0</sup> swifter than a thought! mask; expression
 This is the creature had the art born with him,
 Toils not to learn it, but doth practice it
 Out of most excellent nature, and such sparks
 Are the true parasites, others but their zanies.<sup>0</sup> clownish imitators

SCENE 2. The scene continues.

[Enter] BONARIO.

[Aside] Who's this? Bonario? Old Corbaccio's son?
 The person I was bound<sup>0</sup> to seek.—Fair sir, on my way
 You are happ'ly met.

BONARIO That cannot be by thee.

MOSCA Why, sir?

BONARIO Nay, pray thee know thy way and leave me

I would be loath to interchange discourse

With such a mate<sup>0</sup> as thou art. fellow (contemptuous)

MOSCA Courteous sir,

Scorn not my poverty.

BONARIO Not I, by heaven,

But thou shalt give me leave to hate thy baseness.

MOSCA Baseness?

BONARIO Ay. Answer me, is not thy sloth

Sufficient argument? Thy flattery?

3.1

1. I wonder why the craft was not made a subject for academic study, it is so frequently practiced! (Punning on the "liberal professions.")

2. Crude skills of ingratiation, sufficient only for getting free meals in taverns.

3. Make a living from bows and sycophantic looks, repeat anything a nobleman says, and fawn over him, fussing over every detail of his appearance.

4. Ready to respond to any mood or opportunity.

- Thy means of feeding?
 MOSCA Heaven, be good to me!
 These imputations are too common, sir,
 And eas'ly stuck on virtue when she's poor.
 You are unequal<sup>0</sup> to me, and howe'er superior; unfair
 Your sentence<sup>0</sup> may be righteous, yet you are not, verdict
 That, ere you know me, thus proceed in censure.
 Saint Mark bear witness 'gainst you, 'tis inhuman. [He weeps.]
 BONARIO [aside] What? Does he weep? The sign is soft and good.
 I do repent me that I was so harsh.
 MOSCA 'Tis true that, swayed by strong necessity,
 I am enforced to eat my careful bread
 With too much obsequy;<sup>0</sup> 'tis true, beside, obsequiousness
 That I am fain<sup>o</sup> to spin mine own poor raiment obliged
 Out of my mere observance,<sup>0</sup> being not born deferential service
 To a free fortune. But that I have done
 Base offices in rending friends asunder,
 Dividing families, betraying counsels,
 Whispering false lies, or mining<sup>0</sup> men with praises, undermining Trained<sup>0</sup> their credulity with perjuries, lured on Corrupted chastity, or am in love
 With mine own tender ease, but would not rather Prove<sup>0</sup> the most rugged and laborious course undergo
 That might redeem my present estimation,<sup>1</sup>
 Let me here perish in all hope of goodness.
 BONARIO [aside] This cannot be a personated passion!—
 I was to blame, so to mistake thy nature;
 Pray thee forgive me, and speak out thy business.
 MOSCA Sir, it concerns you; and though I may seem great
 At first to make a main<sup>o</sup> offense in manners
 And in my gratitude unto my master,
 Yet for the pure love which I bear all right
 And hatred of the wrong, I must reveal it.
 This very hour your father is in purpose
 To disinherit you—
 BONARIO How!
 MOSCA And thrust you forth
 As a mere stranger to his blood. 'Tis true, sir.
 The work no way engageth<sup>0</sup> me but as concerns
 I claim an interest in the general state
 Of goodness and true virtue, which I hear
 T'abound in you, and for which mere respect,<sup>0</sup> for which reason alone
 Without a second aim, sir, I have done it.
 BONARIO This tale hath lost thee much of the late<sup>o</sup> trust recent Thou hadst with me. It is impossible.
 I know not how to lend it any thought<sup>0</sup> believe that
 My father should be so unnatural.
 MOSCA It is a confidence that well becomes

Your piety;<sup>0</sup> and formed, no doubt, it is filial loyalty
 From your own simple innocence, which makes
 Your wrong more monstrous and abhorred. But, sir,
 I now will tell you more. This very minute
 60 It is or will be doing; and if you
 Shall be but pleased to go with me, I'll bring you,
 I dare not say where you shall see, but where
 Your ear shall be a witness of the deed:
 Hear yourself written bastard, and professed
 The common issue of the earth.<sup>2</sup>

65 BONARIO I'm mazed!
 MOSCA Sir, if I do it not, draw your just sword
 And score your vengeance on my front<sup>0</sup> and face; brow
 Mark me your villain. You have too much wrong,
 And I do suffer for you, sir. My heart
 Weeps blood in anguish—

70 BONARIO Lead. I follow thee. [Exeunt.]

SCENE 3. VOLPONE'S house.

[Enter] VOLPONE, NANO, ANDROGYNO, [and] CASTRONE.

VOLPONE Mosca stays long, methinks. Bring forth your sports
 And help to make the wretched time more sweet.

NANO Dwarf, fool, and eunuch, well met here we be.
 A question it were now, whether<sup>0</sup> of us three, which 5 Being all the known delicates<sup>0</sup> of a rich man, playthings
 In pleasing him, claim the precedency can?

CASTRONE I claim for myself.

ANDROGYNO And so doth the fool.

NANO 'Tis foolish indeed; let me set you both to school.
 First, for your dwarf: he's little and witty,
 10 And everything, as it is little, is pretty;
 Else why do men say to a creature of my shape,
 So soon as they see him, "It's a pretty little ape"?
 And why a pretty ape? But for pleasing imitation
 Of greater men's action in a ridiculous fashion.

15 Beside, this feat<sup>0</sup> body of mine doth not crave neat, trim
 Half the meat, drink, and cloth one of your bulks will have.
 Admit your fool's face be the mother of laughter,
 Yet for his brain, it must always come after;<sup>0</sup> he lesser
 And though that do feed him,<sup>0</sup> it's a pitiful case,<sup>1</sup> earns his keep

 VOLPONE Who's there? My couch. [He lies doxvn.] Away, look, Nano, see!
 Give me my caps, first—go, inquire.
[Exeunt NANO, ANDROGYNO, and CASTRONE.]
 Now, Cupid
 Send<sup>0</sup> it be Mosca, and with fair return!<sup>0</sup> grant / good results

2. A bastard was called Jiiiis terrae, "son of the earth."

3.3

1. With a pun on "container."

[Enter NANO.]

NANO It is the beauteous Madam—

VOLPONE Would-be—is it?

NANO The same

VOLPONE NOW, torment on me! Squire her in,

For she will enter or dwell here forever.

Nay, quickly, that my fit were past! [Exit NANO.]

I fear

A second hell, too, that my loathing this

Will quite expel my appetite to the other.<sup>0</sup> Celia

Would she were taking, now, her tedious leave.

Lord, how it threatens me what I am to suffer!

SCENE 4. The scene continues.

[Enter] LADY [WOULD-BE and] NANO.

LADY WOULD-BE [to NANO] I thank you, good sir. Pray you signify

Unto your patron I am here.<sup>1</sup> [Regarding herself in a mirror] This band<sup>0</sup> ruff

Shows not my neck enough. I trouble you, sir.

Let me request you, bid one of my women

Come hither to me. [Exit NANO.]

In good faith, I am dressed

Most favorably today!<sup>0</sup> It is no matter; sarcastic

Tis well enough.

[Enter NANO and FIRST] WOMAN.

Look, see, these petulant things!<sup>0</sup> her women; her curls

How they have done this!

VOLPONE [aside] I do feel the fever

Ent'ring in at mine ears. Oh, for a charm

To fright it hence!

LADY WOULD-BE [to FIRST WOMAN] Come nearer. Is this curl

In his<sup>o</sup> right place? Or this? Why is this higher its

Than all the rest? You ha' not washed your eyes yet?

Or do they not stand even<sup>o</sup> i' your head? level

Where's your fellow? Call her. [Exit FIRST WOMAN.]

NANO [aside] Now Saint Mark

Deliver us! Anon she'll beat her women

Because her nose is red.

[Enter FIRST and SECOND WOMEN.]

LADY WOULD-BE I pray you, view

This tire,<sup>0</sup> forsooth. Are all things apt or no? headdress

SECOND WOMAN One hair a little here sticks out, forsooth.

LADY WOULD-BE Does't so, forsooth? [To FIRST WOMAN] And where was your dear sight

When it did so, forsooth? What now? Bird-eyed?<sup>o</sup> startled (?); asquint (?)

[To SECOND WOMAN]

And you, too? Pray you both approach and mend it.

[They tend to her.]

Now, by that light,<sup>0</sup> I muse you're not ashamed! i.e., by heaven

3.4

1. Much of Lady Would-be's dialogue in the following scene is adapted from Libanius of Antioch's On Talkative Women.

I, that have preached these things so oft unto you,
 Read you the principles, argued all the grounds,
 Disputed every fitness, every grace,
 Called you to counsel of so frequent dressings—
 NANO (aside) More carefully than of your fame<sup>0</sup> or honor. reputation
 LADY WOULD-BE Made you acquainted what an ample dowry
 The knowledge of these things would be unto you,
 Able alone to get you noble husbands
 At your return,<sup>0</sup> and you thus to neglect it? to England
 Besides, you seeing what a curious<sup>0</sup> nation fastidious
 Th'Italians are, what will they say of me?
 "The English lady cannot dress herself."
 Here's a fine imputation to our country!
 Well, go your ways, and stay i'the next room.
 This fucus<sup>0</sup> was too coarse, too; it's no matter. makeup
 [To NANO] Good sir, you'll give 'em entertainment?<sup>0</sup> look after them
 [Exeunt NANO and WOMEN.]

VOLPONE [aside] The storm comes toward me.
 LADY WOULD-BE [approaching the bed] How does my Volp?
 VOLPONE Troubled with noise. I cannot sleep; I dreamt
 That a strange Fury entered now my house,
 And with the dreadful tempest of her breath
 Did cleave my roof asunder.
 LADY WOULD-BE Believe me, and I
 Had the most fearful dream, could I remember't—VOLPONE [aside] Out on<sup>o</sup> my fate! I ha' giv'n her the occasion curses on How to torment me: she will tell me hers.
 LADY WOULD-BE Methought the golden mediocrity,<sup>0</sup> golden mean
 Polite and delicate—
 VOLPONE Oh, if you do love me,
 No more! I sweat and suffer at the mention
 Of any dream. Feel how I tremble yet.
 LADY WOULD-BE Alas, good soul! The passion of the heart.<sup>0</sup> heartburn
 Seed pearl were good now, boiled with syrup of apples,
 Tincture of gold and coral, citron pills,
 Your elecampane<sup>0</sup> root, myrobalans<sup>2</sup>— perennial herb
 VOLPONE [aside] Ay me, I have ta'en a grasshopper by the wing!
 LADY WOULD-BE Burnt silk and amber; you have muscadel
 Good i'the house—
 VOLPONE YOU will not drink and part?
 LADY WOULD-BE NO, fear not that. I doubt we shall not get
 Some English saffron—half a dram would serve—
 Your sixteen cloves, a little musk, dried mints,
 Bugloss,<sup>0</sup> and barley-meal— an herb
 VOLPONE [aside] She's in again.
 Before I feigned diseases; now I have one.
 LADY WOULD-BE And these applied with a right scarlet cloth—
 VOLPONE [aside] Another flood of words! A very torrent!
 LADY WOULD-BE Shall I, sir, make you a poultice?

2. Dried tropical fruits.

VOLPONE
 I'm very well; you need prescribe no more.
 LADY WOULD-BE I have a little studied physic, but now
 I'm all for music, save i'the forenoons
 An hour or two for painting. I would have
 A lady indeed t' have all letters and arts,
 Be able to discourse, to write, to paint,
 But principal, as Plato holds,<sup>0</sup> your music in The Republic
 (And so does wise Pythagoras, I take it)
 Is your true rapture, when there is concent<sup>0</sup> harmony
 In face, in voice, and clothes, and is indeed
 Our sex's chiefest ornament.

VOLPONE The poet<sup>o</sup> Sophocles, in Ajax
 As old in time as Plato, and as knowing,
 Says that your highest female grace is silence.

LADY WOULD-BE Which o' your poets? Petrarch? Or Tasso? Or Dante?
 Guarini? Ariosto? Aretine?
 Cieco di Hadria?<sup>3</sup> I have read them all.

VOLPONE [aside] Is everything a cause to my destruction?
 LADY WOULD-BE [searching her garments] I think I ha' two or three of 'em about me.

VOLPONE [aside] The sun, the sea will sooner both stand still
 Than her eternal tongue! Nothing can scape it.

LADY WOULD-BE Here's Pastor Fido<sup>4</sup>—

VOLPONE [aside] Profess obstinate silence,
 That's now my safest.

LADY WOULD-BE All our English writers,
 I mean such as are happy in th'Italian,
 Will deign to steal out of this author mainly,
 Almost as much as from Montaignie,<sup>0</sup> French essayist
 He has so modern and facile<sup>0</sup> a vein, graceful
 Fitting the time, and catching the court ear.
 Your Petrarch is more passionate, yet he,
 In days of sonneting, trusted em with much.<sup>5</sup>
 Dante is hard, and few can understand him.
 But for a desperate<sup>0</sup> wit, there's Aretine! outrageous
 Only his pictures are a little obscene<sup>6</sup>—
 You mark me not?

VOLPONE Alas, my mind's perturbed.

LADY WOULD-BE Why, in such cases we must cure ourselves,
 Make use of our philosophy—

VOLPONE Ay me!

LADY WOULD-BE And, as we find our passions do rebel,
 Encounter em with reason, or divert em
 By giving scope unto some other humor
 Of lesser danger—as in politic bodies<sup>0</sup> political councils

3. Lady Would-be juxtaposes major Italian writers with the minor di Hadria and the obscene Aretine.

4. A pastoral by Giovanni Guarini, translated into English in 1602.

5. When sonnet writing was popular, gave poets

plenty to imitate.

6. The libertine poems of Aretine (Pietro Aretine 1492—1556) were published with pornographic illustrations by Giulio Romano.

There's nothing more doth overwhelm the judgment
 And clouds the understanding than too much
 Settling and fixing and (as 'twere) subsiding<sup>0</sup> alchemical jargon
 Upon one object. For the incorporating
 Of these same outward things into that part
 Which we call mental leaves some certain feces<sup>0</sup> dregs
 That stop the organs and, as Plato says,
 Assassinate our knowledge.

VOLPONE [aside] Now, the spirit
 Of patience help me!

LADY WOULD-BE Come, in faith, I must
 Visit you more o'days and make you well.
 Laugh and be lusty.<sup>0</sup> merry

VOLPONE [aside] My good angel save me!

LADY WOULD-BE There was but one sole man in all the world
 With whom I e'er could sympathize, and he Would lie you<sup>0</sup> often three, four hours together lie
 To hear me speak, and be sometime so rapt
 As he would answer me quite from the purpose,
 Like you—and you are like him, just. I'll discourse—
 An't<sup>o</sup> be but only, sir, to bring you asleep— if it
 How we did spend our time and loves together
 For some six years.

VOLPONE Oh, oh, oh, oh, oh, oh!

LADY WOULD-BE For we were coaetani<sup>0</sup> and brought up— the same age

VOLPONE [aside] Some power, some fate, some fortune rescue me!

SCENE 5. The scene continues.

[Enter] MOSCA.

MOSCA God save you, madam.

LADY WOULD-BE Good sir.

VOLPONE [aside to MOSCA] Mosca? Welcome,
 Welcome to my redemption.

MOSCA [to VOLPONE] Why, sir?

VOLPONE [aside to MOSCA] Oh,
 Rid me of this my torture quickly, there,
 My madam with the everlasting voice!

5 The bells in time of pestilence ne'er made
 Like noise, or were in that perpetual motion;<sup>1</sup>
 The cockpit<sup>0</sup> comes not near it. All my house cockfighting arena
 But now steamed like a bath with her thick breath.
 A lawyer could not have been heard, nor scarce

10 Another woman, such a hail of words
 She has let fall. For hell's sake, rid her hence.

MOSCA [aside to VOLPONE] Has she presented?<sup>0</sup> given a gift

VOLPONE [aside to MOSCA] Oh, I do not care.
 I'll take her absence upon any price,
 With any loss.

3.5

1. Church bells marked the deaths of parishioners; in times of plague they therefore rang almost constantly.

MOSCA                    M a d a m—
LADY WOULD-BE            I ha' brought your patron
A toy,<sup>o</sup> a cap here, of mine own work—                    trifle; embroidered piece
MOSCA [taking it from her]                    Tis well.
I had forgot to tell you, I saw your knight
Where you'd little think it—
LADY WOULD-BE                    Where?
MOSCA    Marry,
Where yet, if you make haste, you may apprehend him,
Rowing upon the water in a gondole
With the most cunning courtesan of Venice.
LADY WOULD-BE    Is't true?
MOSCA    Pursue em, and believe your eyes.
Leave me to make your gift.                    [Exit LADY WOULD-BE.]
I knew 'twould take.<sup>o</sup>    do the trick
For lightly,<sup>o</sup> they that use themselves most license                    commonly
Are Still<sup>o</sup> most jealous.    always
VOLPONE    Mosca, hearty thanks
For thy quick fiction and delivery of me.
Now, to my hopes, what say'st thou?
[Enter LADY WOULD-BE.]
LADY WOULD-BE    But do you hear, sir?
VOLPONE [aside]    Again! I fear a paroxysm.<sup>o</sup>    relapse
LADY WOULD-BE    Which way
Rowed they together?
MOSCA    Toward the Rialto.<sup>o</sup>    commercial district
LADY WOULD-BE    I pray you, lend me your dwarf.
MOSCA    I pray you, take him.
[Exit LADY WOULD-BE.]
Your hopes, sir, are like happy blossoms: fair,
And promise timely fruit if you will stay
But the maturing. Keep you at your couch.
Corbaccio will arrive straight with the will;
When he is gone I'll tell you more.    [Exit.]
VOLPONE    My blood,
My spirits are returned. I am alive;
And like your wanton<sup>o</sup> gamester at primero,<sup>2</sup>    reckless; lustful
Whose thought had whispered to him, not go<sup>o</sup> less,                    don't gamble
Methinks I lie, and draw—for an encounter.<sup>3</sup>
[He gets into bed and closes the bed curtains.]

SCENE 6. The scene continues.

[Enter] MOSCA [and] BONARIO. [MOSCA shows BONARIO to a hiding place.]

MOSCA    Sir, here concealed you may hear all. But pray you
Have patience, sir. (One knocks.) The same's your father knocks.
I am compelled to leave you.
BONARIO    DO SO. Yet

2. A card game.

3. (1) Winning play in primero; (2) sexual act.

Cannot my thought imagine this a truth.

[He conceals himself.]

SCENE 7. The scene continues.

[Enter] CORVINO [and] CELIA. MOSCA [crosses the stage to intercept them],

MOSCA Death on me! You are come too soon. What meant you?

Did not I say I would send?

CORVINO Yes, but I feared

You might forget it, and then they prevent us.

MOSCA [aside] Prevent? Did e'er man haste so for his horns?<sup>0</sup> cuckold's horns

A courtier would not ply it so for a place.<sup>1</sup>

[To CORVINO] Well, now there's no helping it, stay here;

I'll presently return. [He crosses the stage to BONARIO.]

CORVINO Where are you, Celia?

You know not wherefore I have brought you hither?

CELIA Not well, except you told me.

CORVINO Now I will.

Hark hither. [CORVINO and CELIA talk apart.]

MOSCA (to BONARIO) Sir, your father hath sent word

It will be half an hour ere he come;

And therefore, if you please to walk the while

Into that gallery, at the upper end

There are some books to entertain the time;

And I'll take care no man shall come unto you, sir.

BONARIO Yes, I will stay there, [aside] I do doubt this fellow.

[He retires.]

MOSCA There, he is far enough; he can hear nothing.

And for<sup>o</sup> his father, I can keep him off.

as for

[MOSCA joins VOLPONE and opens his bed curtains.]

CORVINO [to CELIA] Nay, now, there is no starting back, and therefore Resolve upon it; I have so decreed.

It must be done. Nor would I move<sup>t</sup> afore,

suggest it

Because I would avoid all shifts<sup>o</sup> and tricks

evasions

That might deny me.

CELIA Sir, let me beseech you,

Affect<sup>o</sup> not these strange trials. If you doubt

undertake

My chastity, why, lock me up forever;

Make me the heir of darkness. Let me live

Where I may please<sup>o</sup> your fears, if not your trust.

satisfy

CORVINO Believe it, I have no such humor, I.

All that I speak, I mean; yet I am not mad,

Not horn-mad,<sup>o</sup> see you? Go to, show yourself

crazy with jealous}<sup>1</sup>

Obedient, and a wife.

CELIA O heaven!

CORVINO I say it,

Do so.

CELIA Was this the train?<sup>o</sup>

scheme

3.7

1. Work so hard for a position at court.

- CORVINO I have told you reasons:
 What the physicians have set down; how much
 It may concern me; what my engagements are;
 My means, and the necessity of those means
 For my recovery. Wherefore, if you be Loyal and mine, be won, respect my venture.<sup>0</sup> su-ppon my endeavor
- CELIA Before your honor?
- CORVINO Honor? Tut, a breath.
 There's no such thing in nature; a mere term
 Invented to awe fools. What is my gold
 The worse for touching? Clothes for being looked on?
 Why, this's no more. An old, decrepit wretch,
 That has no sense,<sup>0</sup> no sinew; takes his meat sensoiy perception
 With others' fingers; only knows to gape
 When you do scald his gums; a voice, a shadow.
 And what can this man hurt you?
- CELIA Lord! What spirit
 Is this hath entered him?
- CORVINO And for your fame,<sup>0</sup> reputation
 That's such a jig;<sup>o</sup> as if I would go tell it, joke
 Cry<sup>o</sup> it on the piazza! Who shall know it advertise
 But he that cannot speak it,<sup>o</sup> and this fellow<sup>0</sup> Volpone/Mosca
 Whose lips are i'my pocket, save yourself?
 If you'll proclaim't, you may. I know no other
 Should come to know it.
- CELIA Are heaven and saints then nothing?
 Will they be blind or stupid?
- CORVINO HOW?<sup>0</sup> What's this?
- CELIA Good sir,
 Be jealous still, emulate them, and think
 What hate they burn with toward every sin.
- CORVINO I grant you, if I thought it were a sin
 I would not urge you. Should I offer this
 To some young Frenchman, or hot Tuscan blood
 That had read Aretine, conned<sup>0</sup> all his prints, learned hy heart
 Knew every quirk within lust's labyrinth,
 And were professed critic<sup>0</sup> in lechery, connoisseur
 And I would look upon him and applaud him,
 This were a sin. But here 'tis contrary,
 A pious work, mere charity, for physic,
 And honest polity<sup>0</sup> to assure mine own. prudence
- CELIA O heaven! Canst thou suffer such a change?
- VOLPONE [aside to MOSCA] Thou art mine honor, Mosca, and my pride,
 My joy, my tickling, my delight! Go, bring 'em.
- MOSCA [to CORVINO] Please you draw near, sir.
- CORVINO [dragging CELIA toward VOLPONE] Come on, what—
 You will not be rebellious? By that light—
- MOSCA [to VOLPONE] Sir, Signor Corvino here is come to see you.
- VOLPONE Oh!
- MOSCA And, hearing of the consultation had
 So lately for your health, is come to offer,
 Or rather, sir, to prostitute—

CORVINO Thanks, sweet Mosca.
MOSCA Freely, unasked or unentreated—
CORVINO Well.
MOSCA AS the true, fervent instance of his love,
His own most fair and proper wife, the beauty
Only of price<sup>0</sup> in Venice— beyond comparison
CORVINO Tis well urged.
MOSCA To be your comfortress and to preserve you.
VOLPONE Alas, I am past already! Pray you, thank him
For his good care and promptness. But for<sup>o</sup> that, as for
'Tis a vain labor e'en to fight 'gainst heaven,
Applying fire to a stone (uh! uh! uh! uh!),
Making a dead leaf grow again. I take
His wishes gently, though; and you may tell him
What I have done for him. Marry, my state is hopeless!
Will him to pray for me, and t' use his fortune
With reverence when he comes to't.
MOSCA [to CORVINO] DO you hear, sir?
Go to him with your wife.
CORVINO [to CELIA] Heart of my father!<sup>0</sup> an oath
Wilt thou persist thus? Come, I pray thee, come.
Thou see'st 'tis nothing. [He threatens to strike her.] Celia! By this hand,
I shall grow violent. Come, do't, I say.
CELIA Sir, kill me, rather. I will take down poison,
Eat burning coals, do anything—
CORVINO Be damned!
Heart! I will drag thee hence, home, by the hair,
Cry thee a strumpet through the streets, rip up
Thy mouth unto thine ears, and slit thy nose
Like a raw rochet!<sup>0</sup>—Do not tempt me. Come, a fish, the red gurnard
Yield! I am loath—Death!<sup>0</sup> I will buy some slave God's death! (an oath)
Whom I will kill,<sup>2</sup> and bind thee to him alive,
And at my window hang you forth, devising
Some monstrous crime, which I in capital letters
Will eat into thy flesh with aquafortis<sup>0</sup> nitric acid
And burning cor'sives<sup>0</sup> on this stubborn breast. corrosives
Now, by the blood thou hast incensed, I'll do t.
CELIA Sir, what you please, you may; I am your martyr.
CORVINO Be not thus obstinate. I ha' not deserved it.
Think who it is entreats you. Pray thee, sweet!
Good faith, thou shalt have jewels, gowns, attires,
What<sup>0</sup> thou wilt think and ask. Do but go kiss him. whatever
Or touch him but. For my sake. At my suit.
This once. No? Not? I shall remember this.
Will you disgrace me thus? Do you thirst my undoing?
MOSCA Nay, gentle lady, be advised.
CORVINO NO, no.
She has watched her time.<sup>3</sup> God's precious,<sup>4</sup> this is scurvy;

2. In the following lines, Corvino elaborates luridly upon the fate that the notorious rapist Tarquin promised the chaste Roman matron Lucretia if she did not capitulate; unlike Celia, Lucretia yielded to threats.

3. Waited for her chance (to ruin me).

4. God's precious blood. (An oath.)

Tis very scurvy, and you are—
 MOSCA Nay, good, sir.
 CORVINO An arrant locust,<sup>0</sup> by heaven, a locust. Whore, destroyer
 Crocodile,<sup>5</sup> that hast thy tears prepared,
 Expecting<sup>0</sup> how thou'lt bid 'em flow! anticipating
 MOSCA Nay, pray you, sir,
 She will consider.
 CELIA Would my life would serve
 To satisfy—
 CORVINO 'Sdeath, if she would but speak to him
 And save my reputation, 'twere somewhat—
 But spitefully to effect my utter ruin!
 MOSCA Ay, now you've put your fortune in her hands.
 Why, i'faith, it is her modesty; I must quit<sup>0</sup> her. absolve
 If you were absent she would be more coming,<sup>0</sup> compliant
 I know it, and dare undertake for her.
 What woman can before her husband? Pray you,
 Let us depart and leave her here.
 CORVINO Sweet Celia,
 Thou mayst redeem all yet; I'll say no more.
 If not, esteem yourself as lost.—Nay, stay there.
 [Exeunt CORVINO and MOSCA.]
 CELIA O God and his good angels! Whither, whither
 Is shame fled human breasts, that with such ease
 Men dare put off your<sup>0</sup> honors and their own? God's and the angels'
 Is that which ever was a cause of life<sup>0</sup> sex and wedlock
 Now placed beneath the basest circumstance,<sup>0</sup> lowest of concerns
 And modesty an exile made for money?
 He [VOLPONE] leaps off from his couch.
 VOLPONE Ay, in Corvino, and such earth-fed minds
 That never tasted the true heav'n of love.
 Assure thee, Celia, he that would sell thee
 Only for hope of gain, and that uncertain,
 He would have sold his part of paradise
 For ready money, had he met a copeman." buyer
 Why art thou mazed to see me thus revived?
 Rather applaud thy beauty's miracle;
 Tis thy great work, that hath, not now alone<sup>0</sup> not only just now
 But sundry times raised me in several shapes,
 And but this morning like a mountebank
 To see thee at thy window. Ay, before
 I would have left my practice<sup>0</sup> for thy love, scheming
 In varying figures I would have contended
 With the blue Proteus or the horned flood.<sup>6</sup>
 Now art thou welcome.
 CELIA Sir!
 VOLPONE Nay, fly me not,

5. Which was supposed to weep while preying upon its victims.

6. Proteus is a shape-changing sea god with whom

Menelaus wrestles in the Odyssey.<sup>1</sup> The "horned flood" is the river god Achelous, defeated by Hercules despite changing into an ox.

Nor let thy false imagination
 That I was bedrid make thee think I am so.
 Thou shalt not find it. I am now as fresh,
 As hot, as high, and in as jovial plight<sup>0</sup> robust condition
 As when—in that so celebrated scene,
 At recitation of our comedy
 For entertainment of the great Valois<sup>7</sup>—
 I acted young Antinoiis,<sup>8</sup> and attracted
 The eyes and ears of all the ladies present,
 T'admire each graceful gesture, note, and footing.<sup>0</sup> dance step

SONG

[He sings.] Come, my Celia, let us prove,<sup>9</sup>
 While we can, the sports of love.
 Time will not be ours forever;
 He at length our good will sever.
 Spend not then his gifts in vain.
 Suns that set may rise again,
 But if once we lose this light
 Tis with us perpetual night.
 Why should we defer our joys?
 Fame and rumor are but toys.<sup>0</sup> trifles
 Cannot we delude the eyes
 Of a few poor household spies?
 Or his<sup>0</sup> easier ears beguile, Corvino's
 Thus removed by our wile?
 Tis no sin love's fruits to steal,
 But the sweet thefts to reveal.
 To be taken,<sup>0</sup> to be seen, caught
 These have crimes accounted been.
 CELIA Some serene<sup>0</sup> blast me, or dire lightning strike poisonous mist
 This my offending face!
 VOLPONE Why droops my Celia?
 Thou hast in place of a base husband found
 A worthy lover. Use thy fortune well,
 With secrecy and pleasure. See, behold
 What thou art queen of, not in expectation,<sup>0</sup> merely in hope
 As I feed others, but possessed and crowned.
 [He reveals his treasures.]
 See here a rope of pearl, and each more orient<sup>0</sup> brilliant
 Than that the brave Egyptian queen caroused;<sup>1</sup>
 Dissolve and drink em. See, a carbuncle<sup>2</sup>
 May put out both the eyes of our Saint Mark;<sup>3</sup>
 A diamond would have bought Lollia Paulina<sup>4</sup>

7. Henry of Valois, Duke of Anjou, and later King Henry III of France (1574—89), was sumptuously entertained at Venice in 1574. His sexual taste for men was widely remarked.

8. The beautiful homosexual favorite of the Roman emperor Hadrian.

9. Try out. (The song is an adaptation of the Roman poet Catullus's fifth ode.)

1. Cleopatra dissolved and drank a pearl during a banquet with her lover, Marc Antony. "Brave": magnificent.

2. Ruby, thought to emit light.

3. Patron saint of Venice, whose statue stood in the basilica.

4. Third wife of the Roman emperor Caligula.

When she came in like starlight, hid with jewels
 That were the spoils of provinces. Take these,
 And wear, and lose 'em; yet remains an earring
 To purchase them again, and this whole state.
 A gem but worth a private patrimony
 Is nothing; we will eat such at a meal.
 The heads of parrots, tongues of nightingales,
 The brains of peacocks and of ostriches
 Shall be our food, and, could we get the phoenix,<sup>5</sup>
 Though nature lost her kind,<sup>0</sup> she were our dish.

it became extinct

CELIA Good sir, these things might move a mind affected
 With such delights; but I, whose innocence
 Is all I can think wealthy<sup>0</sup> or worth th'enjoying,
 And which once lost, I have naught to lose beyond it,
 Cannot be taken with these sensual baits.
 If you have conscience—

valuable

VOLPONE 'Tis the beggar's virtue.

If thou hast wisdom, hear me, Celia.
 Thy baths shall be the juice of July flowers,<sup>0</sup>
 Spirit<sup>0</sup> of roses, and of violets,
 The milk of unicorns, and panthers' breath<sup>6</sup>
 Gathered in bags, and mixed with Cretan wines.
 Our drink shall be prepared gold and amber,
 Which we will take until my roof whirl round
 With the vertigo; and my dwarf shall dance,
 My eunuch sing, my fool make up the antic,<sup>7</sup>
 Whilst we, in changed shapes, act Ovid's tales:
 Thou like Europa now and I like Jove,
 Then I like Mars and thou like Erycine,<sup>8</sup>
 So of the rest, till we have quite run through
 And wearied all the fables of the gods.
 Then will I have thee in more modern forms,
 Attired like some sprightly dame of France,
 Brave Tuscan lady, or proud Spanish beauty;
 Sometimes unto the Persian Sophy's<sup>0</sup> wife,
 Or the Grand Signor's<sup>0</sup> mistress; and for change,
 To one of our most artful courtesans,
 Or some quick<sup>0</sup> Negro, or cold Russian.
 And I will meet thee in as many shapes,
 Where we may so transfuse<sup>0</sup> our wand'ring souls
 Out at our lips, and score up sums of pleasures,
 [He sings.] That the curious shall not know
 How to tell<sup>o</sup> them as they flow;
 And the envious, when they find
 What their number is, be pined.<sup>0</sup>

5. Mythical bird, of which it was supposed that only one existed at a time; it died in flames and was reborn from its own ashes.

6. Panthers were believed to use their sweet-smelling breath to lure prey.

7. Grotesque dance or pageant.

8. Ovid's Metamorphoses retells the pagan myths of transformation. Jove, king of the gods, became a bull to seduce the lovely Europa. The adulterous couple Mars, god of war, and Erycine (Venus), goddess of sexual love, were caught in a net by Vulcan, her husband.

CELIA If you have ears that will be pierced, or eyes
 That can be opened, a heart may be touched,
 Or any part that yet sounds man<sup>9</sup> about you;
 If you have touch of holy saints or heaven,
 Do me the grace to let me scape. If not,
 Be bountiful and kill me. You do know
 I am a creature hither ill betrayed
 By one whose shame I would forget it were.
 If you will deign me neither of these graces,
 Yet feed your wrath, sir, rather than your lust—
 It is a vice comes nearer manliness—
 And punish that unhappy crime of nature
 Which you miscall my beauty. Flay my face
 Or poison it with ointments for seducing
 Your blood to this rebellion.<sup>0</sup> Rub these hands
 With what may cause an eating leprosy
 E'en to my bones and marrow—anything
 That may disfavor me,<sup>o</sup> save in my honor—
 And I will kneel to you, pray for you, pay down
 A thousand hourly vows, sir, for your health,
 Report and think you virtuous—

sexual mutiny

make me ugly

VOLPONE Think me cold,
 Frozen, and impotent, and so report me?
 That I had Nestor's<sup>1</sup> hernia, thou wouldst think.
 I do degenerate, and abuse my nation<sup>2</sup>
 To play with opportunity thus long.
 I should have done the act and then have parleyed.
 Yield, or I'll force thee.

CELIA O just God!

VOLPONE [seizing CELIA] In vain—

He [BONARIO] leaps out from where MOSCA had placed him.

BONARIO Forbear, foul ravisher, libidinous swine!
 Free the forced lady or thou diest, impostor.
 But that I am loath to snatch thy punishment
 Out of the hand of justice, thou shouldst yet
 Be made the timely sacrifice of vengeance
 Before this altar and this dross,<sup>0</sup> thy idol.—
 Lady, let's quit the place. It is the den
 Of villainy. Fear naught; you have a guard;
 And he<sup>o</sup> ere long shall meet his just reward.

the treasure

Volpone

[Exeunt BONARIO and CELIA.]

VOLPONE Fall on me, roof, and bury me in ruin!
 Become my grave, that wert my shelter! Oh!
 I am unmasked, unspirited, undone,
 Betrayed to beggary, to infamy—

9. That has a hint of manliness.

1. Nestor was the oldest of the Greek leaders in the Trojan War.

2. I fall away from my ancestors' virtues and abuse the Italian reputation for virility.

SCENE 8. The scene continues.[Enter] MOSCA [bloody].<sup>1</sup>

MOSCA Where shall I run, most wretched shame of men,
To beat out my unlucky brains?

VOLPONE Here, here.

What! Dost thou bleed?

MOSCA Oh, that his well-driv'n sword
Had been so courteous to have cleft me down
Unto the navel, ere I lived to see
My life, my hopes, my spirits, my patron, all
Thus desperately engaged<sup>0</sup> by my error!

placed at risk

VOLPONE Woe on thy fortune!

MOSCA And my follies, sir.

VOLPONE Th'hast made me miserable.

MOSCA And myself, sir.

Who would have thought he would have hearkened<sup>0</sup> SO?

eavesdropped

VOLPONE What shall we do?

MOSCA I know not. If my heart
Could expiate the mischance, I'd pluck it out.
Will you be pleased to hang me, or cut my throat?
And I'll requite you, sir. Let's die like Romans,
Since we have lived like Grecians.<sup>2</sup> They knock without.

VOLPONE Hark, who's there?

I hear some footing: officers, the Saffi,<sup>0</sup>
Come to apprehend us! I do feel the brand
Hissing already at my forehead; now
Mine ears are boring.<sup>3</sup>

arresting officers

MOSCA To your couch, sir; you
Make that place good, however.<sup>4</sup> [VOLPONE gets into bed.]

Guilty men

Suspect<sup>0</sup> what they deserve still.<sup>0</sup> [He opens the door.]

dread/always

Signor Corbaccio!

SCENE 9. The scene continues.[Enter] CORBACCIO [and converses with] MOSCA;VOLTRE [enters unnoticed by them.]

CORBACCIO Why, how now, Mosca!

MOSCA Oh, undone, amazed, sir.

Your son—I know not by what accident—
Acquainted with your purpose to my patron
Touching<sup>0</sup> your will and making him your heir,
Entered our house with violence, his sword drawn,

concerning

3.8

1. Bonario apparently remembered Mosca's invitation, in 3.2.66—68, to punish him if he turns out to be lying: "draw your just sword / And score your vengeance on my front and face; / Mark me your villain."

2. Romans often committed suicide in adversity; Greeks were thought to be pleasure-loving.

3. Branding was a common criminal punishment; ear-boring is described as an Italian torture in Thomas Nashe's Unfortunate Traveler (1594).

4. (1) Defend that place, whatever happens; (2) maintain your invalid's role at all costs, since that role suits you.

Sought for you, called you wretch, unnatural,
Vowed he would kill you.

CORBACCIO Me?

MOSCA Yes, and my patron.

CORBACCIO This act shall disinherit him indeed.

Here is the will.

MOSCA [taking it from him] Tis well, sir.

CORBACCIO Right and well.

Be you as careful now for me.

MOSCA My life, sir,

Is not more tendered;<sup>0</sup> I am only yours. cherished.

CORBACCIO How does he? Will he die shortly, think'st thou?

MOSCA I fear

He'll outlast May.

CORBACCIO Today?

MOSCA NO, last out May, sir.

CORBACCIO Couldst thou not gi' him a dram?<sup>o</sup> dose (of poison)

MOSCA Oh, by no means, sir.

CORBACCIO Nay, I'll not bid you.

VOLTRE [aside] This is a knave, I see.

[VOLTRE comes forward to speak privately with MOSCA.]

MOSCA [aside] How, Signor Voltre! Did he hear me?

VOLTRE Parasite!

MOSCA Who's that? Oh, sir, most timely welcome—

VOLTRE Scarce<sup>0</sup> only just in time

To the discovery of your tricks, I fear.

You are his only? And mine also? Are you not?

MOSCA Who, I, sir? [They speak out of CORBACCIO S hearing.]

VOLTRE YOU, sir. What device<sup>0</sup> is this ruse

About a will?

MOSCA A plot for you, sir.

VOLTRE Come,

Put not your foists<sup>0</sup> upon me. I shall scent 'em. tricks; stences

MOSCA Did you not hear it?

VOLTRE Yes, I hear Corbaccio

Hath made your patron there his heir.

MOSCA 'Tis true,

By my device, drawn to it by my plot,

With hope—

VOLTRE Your patron should reciprocate?

And you have promised?

MOSCA For your good I did, sir.

Nay, more, I told his son, brought, hid him here

Where he might hear his father pass the deed,

Being persuaded to it by this thought, sir,

That the unnaturalness, first, of the act,

And then, his father's oft disclaiming in<sup>o</sup> him

disowning

(Which I did mean t' help on) would sure enrage him

To do some violence upon his parent,

On which the law should take sufficient hold,

And you be stated<sup>0</sup> in a double hope. installed
 Truth be my comfort and my conscience,
 My only aim was to dig you a fortune
 Out of these two old rotten sepulchres—
 VOLTORE I cry thee mercy, Mosca.
 MOSCA Worth your patience
 And your great merit, sir. And see the change!
 VOLTORE Why? What success?<sup>0</sup> outcome
 MOSCA Most hapless!<sup>0</sup> You must help, sir. unfortunate
 Whilst we expected th'old raven, in comes
 Corvino's wife, sent hither by her husband—
 VOLTORE What, with a present?
 MOSCA No, sir, on visitation—
 I'll tell you how, anon—and, staying long,
 The youth, he grows impatient, rushes forth,
 Seizeth the lady, wounds me, makes her swear—
 Or he would murder her, that was his vow—
 T'affirm my patron to have done her rape,
 Which how unlike<sup>0</sup> it is, you see! And hence, unlikely
 With that pretext, he's gone t'accuse his father,
 Defame my patron, defeat you—
 VOLTORE Where's her husband?
 Let him be sent for straight.
 MOSCA Sir, I'll go fetch him.
 VOLTORE Bring him to the Scrutino.<sup>0</sup> Venetian law court
 MOSCA Sir, I will.
 VOLTORE This must be stopped.
 MOSCA Oh, you do nobly, sir.
 Alas, 'twas labored all, sir, for your good;
 Nor was there want of counsel<sup>0</sup> in the plot. lack of wisdom
 But fortune can at any time o'erthrow
 The projects of a hundred learned clerks,<sup>0</sup> sir. scholars
 CORBACCIO [striving to hear] What's that?
 VOLTORE [to CORBACCIO] Will't please you, sir, to go along?
 [Exeunt CORBACCIO and VOLTORE.]
 MOSCA Patron, go in and pray for our success.
 VOLPONE [rising] Need makes devotion. Heaven your labor bless!

Act 4

SCENE 1. The piazza.[Enter] POLITIC [and] PEREGRINE,

POLITIC I told you, sir, it<sup>o</sup> was a plot. You see the mountebank episode
 What observation is! You mentioned me
 For<sup>0</sup> some instructions; I will tell you, sir, as one who could give
 Since we are met here, in this height<sup>0</sup> of Venice, latitude
 Some few particulars I have set down
 Only for this meridian, fit to be known
 Of your crude<sup>0</sup> traveler, and they are these. inexperienced

I will not touch, sir, at your phrase or clothes,
 For they are old.<sup>1</sup>

PEREGRINE                   Sir, I have better.

POLITIC                                 Pardon,
 I meant as they are themes.<sup>0</sup>   topics for advice

PEREGRINE                             Oh, sir, proceed.
 I'll slander<sup>0</sup> you no more of wit, good sir.   accuse

POLITIC     First, for your garb,<sup>2</sup> it must be grave and serious,
 Very reserved and locked;<sup>0</sup> not<sup>o</sup> tell a secret   guarded / do not
 On any terms, not to your father; scarce
 A fable<sup>3</sup> but with caution. Make sure choice
 Both of your company and discourse. Beware
 You never speak a truth—

PEREGRINE                             HOW!
 POLITIC   Not to strangers,<sup>0</sup>   foreigners
 For those be they you must converse with most;
 Others<sup>0</sup> I would not know, sir, but at distance,   fellow countrymen
 So as I still might be a saver<sup>4</sup> in em.
 You shall have tricks else passed upon you hourly.
 And then, for your religion, profess none,
 But wonder at the diversity of all,
 And, for your part, protest, were there no other
 But simply the laws o'th'land, you could content you.
 Nick Machiavel and Monsieur Bodin both
 Were of this mind.<sup>5</sup> Then must you learn the use
 And handling of your silver fork<sup>0</sup> at meals,   an Italian novelty
 The metal<sup>0</sup> of your glass—these are main matters   composition
 With your Italian—and to know the hour
 When you must eat your melons and your figs.

PEREGRINE     IS that a point of state,<sup>0</sup> too?   statecraft

POLITIC   Here it is.
 For your Venetian, if he see a man
 Preposterous in the least, he has<sup>0</sup> him straight;   sees through
 He has, he strips<sup>0</sup> him. I'll acquaint you, sir.   ridicules; defrauds
 I now have lived here—'tis some fourteen months;
 Within the first week of my landing here,
 All took me for a citizen of Venice,
 I knew the forms so well—

PEREGRINE [aside]                             And nothing else.

POLITIC     I had read Contarine,<sup>6</sup> took me a house,
 Dealt with my Jews<sup>7</sup> to furnish it with movables<sup>0</sup>—   household goods
 Well, if I could but find one man, one man
 To mine own heart, whom I durst trust, I would—

4.1

1. I will not discuss those familiar ("old") topics: the language one ought to use or the clothes one ought to wear. In the next line, in an attempt at a joke, Peregrine deliberately misconstrues "your clothes" to refer to his own apparel, but Politic does not get it.

2. As for a traveler's bearing.

3. An apparently trivial story subject to political allegorization.

4. So that I might not be imposed upon. ("Be a saver" is a gambling term, meaning "to escape loss.")

5. Political theorists Niccolo Machiavelli (1469-1527) and Jean Bodin (1530-1596) argued that religious zeal was often politically inexpedient or divisive; as a result both were popularly thought to be atheists.

6. An English translation of Gasparo Contarini's important book, The Commonwealth and Government of Venice, was published in 1599.

7. The usual Jews. (In Venice Jews served as money-lenders and pawnbrokers.)

- PEREGRINE What? What, sir?
 POLITIC Make him rich, make him a fortune.
 He should not think<sup>0</sup> again. I would command it. have to think
- PEREGRINE AS how?
 POLITIC With certain projects<sup>0</sup> that I have— entrepreneurial schemes
 Which I may not discover.<sup>0</sup> reveal
- PEREGRINE [aside] If I had
 But one<sup>0</sup> to wager with, I would lay odds, now, Someone
 He tells me instantly.
- POLITIC One is—and that
 I care not greatly who knows—to serve the state
 Of Venice with red herrings for three years,
 And at a certain rate, from Rotterdam,<sup>8</sup>
 Where I have correspondence. [He shows PEREGRINE a paper.]
 There's a letter
 Sent me from one o'th'States,<sup>0</sup> and to that purpose; Dutch provinces
 He cannot write his name, but that's his mark.
- PEREGRINE [examining the paper] He is a chandler?<sup>9</sup>
 POLITIC NO, a cheesemonger.
 There are some other<sup>0</sup> too, with whom I treat<sup>0</sup> others / deal
 About the same negotiation;
 And I will undertake it, for 'tis thus
 I'll do't with ease; I've cast it all.<sup>0</sup> Your hoy<sup>1</sup> figured it all out
 Carries but three men in her and a boy,
 And she shall make me three returns<sup>0</sup> a year. round trips
 So if there come but one of three, I save;<sup>0</sup> break even
 If two, I can defalk.<sup>0</sup> But this is, now, pay off loans
 If my main project fail.
- PEREGRINE Then you have others?
 POLITIC I should be loath to draw<sup>0</sup> the subtle air breathe
 Of such a place without my thousand aims.
 I'll not dissemble, sir: where'er I come,
 I love to be considerative;<sup>0</sup> and 'tis true analytic
 I have at my free hours thought upon
 Some certain goods<sup>0</sup> unto the state of Venice, benefits
 Which I do call my cautions,<sup>0</sup> and, sir, which precautions
 I mean, in hope of pension,<sup>0</sup> to propound financial reward
 To the Great Council, then unto the Forty,
 So to the Ten.<sup>2</sup> My means<sup>0</sup> are made already— contacts
- PEREGRINE By whom?
 POLITIC Sir, one that though his place b'obscure,
 Yet he can sway and they will hear him. He's A commendatore.
- PEREGRINE What, a common sergeant?

8. Venice, on the Adriatic Sea, had little need to import pickled fish from afar.

9. Candlemaker. (Evidently the paper is grease-stained.)

1. Small vessel, not suitable for long voyages. Sir Pol's scheme is thus obviously impractical.

2. The Great Council was a large legislative group made up of wealthy Venetians; the Councils of Forty were much smaller groups that oversaw judicial affairs; the Council of Ten consisted of the elected Doge and his cabinet.

POLITIC Sir, such as they are put it in their mouths
 What they should say, sometimes, as well as greater.<sup>3</sup>
 I think I have my notes to show you—
[He searches in his garments.]

PEREGRINE Good, sir.

POLITIC But you shall swear unto me on your gentry<sup>0</sup> gentleman's honor
 Not to anticipate—

PEREGRINE I, sir?

POLITIC Nor reveal
 A circumstance—My paper is not with me.

PEREGRINE Oh, but you can remember, sir.

POLITIC My first is Concerning tinderboxes.<sup>0</sup> You must know for lighting fires
 No family is here without its box.
 Now, sir, it being so portable a thing,
 Put case<sup>0</sup> that you or I were ill affected<sup>0</sup> suppose/disposed
 Unto the state; sir, with it in our pockets
 Might not I go into the Arsenale?<sup>4</sup>
 Of you? Come out again? And none the wiser?

PEREGRINE Except yourself, sir.

POLITIC GO TO,<sup>0</sup> then. I therefore impatient expression
 Advertise to<sup>0</sup> the state how fit it were warn
 That none but such as were known patriots,
 Sound lovers of their country, should be suffered
 T'enjoy them<sup>0</sup> in their houses, and even those tinderboxes
 Sealed<sup>0</sup> at some office, and at such a bigness licensed; sealed shut
 As might not lurk in pockets.

PEREGRINE Admirable!

POLITIC My next is, how t'inquire and be resolved<sup>0</sup> satisfied
 By present<sup>0</sup> demonstration whether a ship immediate Newly arrived from Syria, or from Any suspected part of all the Levant,<sup>0</sup> Middle East
 Be guilty of the plague. And where they use<sup>0</sup> are accustomed
 To lie out<sup>0</sup> forty, fifty days sometimes at anchor
 About the Lazaretto,<sup>5</sup> for their trial,
 I'll save that charge and loss unto the merchant,
 And in an hour clear the doubt.

PEREGRINE Indeed, sir?

POLITIC Or—I will lose my labor.

PEREGRINE My faith, that's much.

POLITIC Nay, sir, conceive<sup>0</sup> me. 'Twill cost me in onions<sup>6</sup> understand
 Some thirty livres<sup>0</sup>— French coins

PEREGRINE Which is one pound sterling.

POLITIC Beside my waterworks. For this I do, sir.
 First I bring in your ship<sup>0</sup> 'twixt two brick walls— a ship in question
 But those the state shall venture.<sup>0</sup> On the one pay for

3. Common men, as well as those of higher status, may sometimes make suggestions to the government.
 4. Shipyard where Venice built and repaired its naval vessels.

5. Quarantine hospital on an outlying island.
 6. Onions were popularly supposed to absorb plague infection.

I strain<sup>0</sup> me a fair tarpaulin, and in that stretch
 I stick my onions cut in halves; the other
 Is full of loopholes out at which I thrust
 The noses of my bellows, and those bellows
 I keep with<sup>0</sup> waterworks in perpetual motion<sup>7</sup>— by means of Which is the easiest matter of a hundred.<sup>0</sup> as easy as can be
 Now, sir, your onion, which doth naturally
 Attract th'infection, and your bellows, blowing
 The air upon him,<sup>0</sup> will show instantly it (the onion)
 By his changed color if there be contagion,
 Or else remain as fair as at the first.
 Now 'tis known, 'tis nothing.<sup>0</sup> there's nothing to it

PEREGRINE You are right, sir.

POLITIC I would I had my note.
[He searches again in his garments.]

PEREGRINE Faith, so would I;
 But, you ha' done well for once, sir.

POLITIC Were I false,<sup>0</sup> traitorous
 Or would be made so, I could show you reasons
 How I could sell this state now to the Turk,<sup>8</sup>
 Spite of their galleys<sup>0</sup> or their— warships

PEREGRINE Pray you, Sir Pol.

POLITIC I have 'em<sup>o</sup> not about me. the notes

PEREGRINE That I feared.
 They are there, sir? [He indicates a hook POLITIC is holding.]

POLITIC NO, this is my diary,
 Wherein I note my actions of the day.<sup>9</sup>

PEREGRINE Pray you, let's see, sir. What is here? [Reading]
"Notandum Be it noted
 A rat had gnawn my spur leathers;<sup>0</sup> notwithstanding laces
 I put on new and did go forth, but first
 I threw three beans over the threshold.<sup>0</sup> Item, for good luck
 I went and bought two toothpicks, whereof one
 I burst immediately in a discourse
 With a Dutch merchant, bout ragion' del stato.<sup>o</sup> political expediency
 From him I went, and paid a moccinigo<sup>0</sup> small coin
 For piecing<sup>0</sup> my silk stockings; by the way mending
 I cheapened sprats,<sup>1</sup> and at Saint Mark's I urined."
 Faith, these are politic notes!

POLITIC Sir, I do slip<sup>0</sup> let pass
 No action of my life thus but I quote<sup>0</sup> it. without noting

PEREGRINE Believe me, it is wise!

POLITIC Nay, sir, read forth.

7. Perpetual-motion machines were popular attractions in early modern England, but Jonson regarded them contemptuously. Since Venice is in flat marshland, there are no waterfalls to harness there, as Sir Pol proposes.

8. The Ottoman Turks, southeast of Venice along the Adriatic Sea, were maritime and religious rivals and a long-standing military threat.

9. Many Renaissance travel writers recommended that travelers keep a written record of their journeys.

1. Bargained over some small fish.

SCENE 2. The scene continues.

[Enter] LADY [WOULD-BE], NANO, [and the two] WOMEN.

[They do not see POLITIC and PEREGRINE at first.]

LADY WOULD-BE Where should this loose knight be, trow?<sup>o</sup> do you suppose?
Sure he's housed.<sup>o</sup> in a brothel

NANO Why, then he's fast.<sup>o</sup> fast-moving; secure
LADY WOULD-BE Ay, he plays both<sup>o</sup> with me. both fast and loose

I pray you, stay. This heat will do more harm
To my complexion than his heart is worth.
I do not care to hinder, but to take<sup>o</sup> him. catch

[She rubs her cheeks.]

How it<sup>o</sup> comes off! the makeup

FIRST WOMAN [pointing] My master's yonder.

LADY WOULD-BE Where?

FIRST WOMAN With a young gentleman.

LADY WOULD-BE That same's the party,

In man's apparel!<sup>1</sup> [To NANO] Pray you, sir, jog my knight.

I will be tender to his reputation,
However he demerit.<sup>o</sup> deserves blame

POLITIC [seeing her] My lady!

PEREGRINE Where?

POLITIC 'Tis she indeed, sir; you shall know her. She is,

Were she not mine,<sup>2</sup> a lady of that merit

For fashion and behavior; and for beauty

I durst compare—

PEREGRINE It seems you are not jealous,

That dare commend her.

POLITIC Nay, and for discourse—

PEREGRINE Being your wife, she cannot miss<sup>o</sup> that. lack (sarcastic)

POLITIC [introducing PEREGRINE] Madam,

Here is a gentleman; pray you use him fairly.

He seems a youth, but he is—

LADY WOULD-BE None?

POLITIC Yes, one

Has<sup>o</sup> put his face as soon<sup>o</sup> into the world— who has / so young

LADY WOULD-BE YOU mean, as early? But today

POLITIC HOW'S this!

LADY WOULD-BE Why, in this habit,<sup>o</sup> sir; you apprehend<sup>o</sup> me. apparel / understand

Well, Master Would-be, this doth not become you;

I had thought the odor, sir, of your good name

Had been more precious to you, that you would not

Have done this dire massacre on your honor—

One of your gravity and rank besides!

But knights, I see, care little for the oath

They make to ladies, chiefly their own ladies.

POLITIC Now, by my spurs—the symbol of my knighthood—

4.2

1. Lady Would-be believes that Peregrine is the whore

Mosca mentioned, in transvestite attire.

2. Even though I, her husband, say so.

- PEREGRINE {aside} Lord, how his brain is humbled<sup>3</sup> for an oath!
 POLITIC —I reach<sup>0</sup> you not. comprehend
- LADY WOULD-BE Right, sir, your polity<sup>0</sup> cunning
 May bear<sup>0</sup> it through thus. [To PEREGRINE] Sir, a word with you. bluff
 I would be loath to contest publicly
 With any gentlewoman, or to seem Froward<sup>0</sup> or violent; as The Courtier<sup>4</sup> says, bad-tempered
 It comes too near rusticity<sup>0</sup> in a lady, ill breeding
 Which I would shun by all means. And however
 I may deserve from Master Would-be, yet
 T' have one fair gentlewoman<sup>0</sup> thus be made i.e., Peregrine
 Th'unkind instrument to wrong another,
 And one she knows not, ay, and to persevere,
 In my poor judgment is not warranted
 From being a solecism<sup>0</sup> in our sex, impropriety
 If not in manners.
- PEREGRINE HOW is this?
 POLITIC Sweet madam,
 Come nearer to your aim.<sup>0</sup> speak more clearly
- LADY WOULD-BE Marry, and will, sir.
 Since you provoke me with your impudence
 And laughter of your light land-siren<sup>5</sup> here,
 Your Sporus,<sup>6</sup> your hermaphrodite—
- PEREGRINE What's here?
 Poetic fury and historic storms!<sup>7</sup>
- POLITIC The gentleman, believe it, is of worth,
 And of our nation.
- LADY WOULD-BE Ay, your Whitefriars<sup>0</sup> nation! London brothel district
 Come, I blush for you, Master Would-be, I,
 And am ashamed you should ha' no more forehead<sup>0</sup> shame
 Than thus to be the patron, or Saint George,<sup>8</sup>
 To a lewd harlot, a base fricatrice,<sup>0</sup> whore
 A female devil in a male outside.
- POLITIC [to PEREGRINE] Nay,
 An<sup>o</sup> you be such a one, I must bid adieu If
 To your delights. The case appears too liquid.<sup>9</sup>
 [POLITIC starts to leave.]
- LADY WOULD-BE Ay, you may carry't clear, with your state-
 face!<sup>0</sup> dignified expression
 But for your carnival concupiscence,<sup>0</sup> lecherous strumpet
 Who here is fled for liberty of conscience<sup>0</sup> licentious conduct
 From furious persecution of the marshal,<sup>1</sup>
 Her will I disc'ple.<sup>0</sup> discipline

3. Literally, "brought down" to his feet—where spurs, the appurtenances of a knight, are worn.

4. Baldassare Castiglione's famous handbook of gentility.

5. The Sirens were mythical sea creatures who lured sailors to their deaths by sitting on dangerous rocks and singing irresistibly. (Lady Would-be refers to Peregrine.)

6. A eunuch whom the emperor Nero dressed in drag and married.

7. Peregrine notes that even Lady Would-be's tantrums include literary allusions.

8. Patron saint of England, often pictured rescuing a damsel from a dragon.

9. Obvious. (Politic has become convinced that his wife is right in believing that Peregrine is a transvestite whore.)

1. Official charged with punishing prostitutes. Lady Would-be thinks that Peregrine has dressed as a man to flee prosecution.

[Exit POLITIC, LADY POLITIC UCCOSIS PEREGRINE.]

PEREGRINE                   This is fine, i'faith!
 And do you use this<sup>0</sup> often? Is this part                   act this way
 Of your wit's exercise, 'gainst you have occasion?<sup>2</sup>
 Madam—

LADY WOULD-BE   GO tO,<sup>o</sup> sir.   impatient    expression

PEREGRINE                   Do you hear me, lady?
 Why, if your knight have set you to beg shirts,<sup>3</sup>
 Or to invite me home, you might have done it
 A nearer<sup>o</sup> way by far.   more   direct

LADY WOULD-BE            This cannot work you
 Out of my snare.

PEREGRINE                 Why, am I in it, then?
 Indeed, your husband told me you were fair,
 And so you are; only your nose inclines—
 That side that's next the sun—to the queen-apple.<sup>4</sup>

LADY WOULD-BE   This cannot be endured by any patience.

SCENE 3. The scene continues.

[Enter] MOSCA.

MOSCA   What's the matter, madam?

LADY WOULD-RE   If the Senate<sup>o</sup>   Venetian    government
 Right not my quest<sup>o</sup> in this, I will protest 'em   petition
 To all the world no aristocracy.

MOSCA   What is the injury, lady?

LADY WOULD-BE   Why, the callet<sup>o</sup>   prostitute
 You told me of, here I have ta'en disguised.

MOSCA   Who, this? What means Your Ladyship? The creature
 I mentioned to you is apprehended now
 Before the Senate. You shall see her—

LADY WOULD-BE   Where?

MOSCA   I'll bring you to her. This young gentleman,
 I saw him land this morning at the port.

LADY WOULD-BE   Is't possible! How has my judgment wandered!
 [Releasing PEREGRINE] Sir, I must, blushing, say to you I have erred,
 And plead your pardon.

PEREGRINE                   What, more changes yet?

LADY WOULD-BE   I hope you ha' not the malice to remember
 A gentlewoman's passion. If you stay
 In Venice here, please you to use me,<sup>1</sup> sir—

MOSCA   Will you go, madam?

LADY WOULD-BE   Pray you, sir, use me. In faith,
 The more you see me, the more I shall conceive
 You have forgot our quarrel.

[Exeunt MOSCA, LADY WOULD-BE, NANO, and WOMEN.]

2. To keep it ready for when it is really needed?

3. Peregrine pretends to believe that Lady Would-be is tearing off his shirt in order to give it to her husband. Probably she is just trying to prevent his leaving.

4. A bright red apple. See 3.4.15–16, where we learn that Lady Would-be is sensitive about her red nose.

4.3

1. Make use of my services. (With a sexual innuendo continued in "The more you see me, the more I shall conceive" [line 18], where "conceive" means both "understand" and "conceive a child.")

PEREGRINE    This is rare!
 Sir Politic Would-be? No, Sir Politic Bawd,
 To bring me thus acquainted with his wife!
 Well, wise Sir Pol, since you have practiced thus
 Upon my freshmanship,<sup>2</sup> I'll try your salt-head,
 What proof<sup>0</sup> it is against a counterplot.    [Exit.]    how invulnerable

SCENE 4. The Scrutineo, or Court of Law, in the Doge's palace

[Enter] VOLTORE, CORBACCIO, CORVINO, [and] MOSCA.

VOLTORE Well, now you know the carriage<sup>0</sup> of the business,    management
 Your constancy is all that is required
 Unto the safety of it.

MOSCA    Is the lie
 Safely conveyed<sup>0</sup> amongst us? Is that sure?    agreed upon
 Knows every man his burden?<sup>0</sup>    refrain, tune

CORVINO    Yes.

MOSCA    Then shrink not.

CORVINO [aside to MOSCA] But knows the advocate the truth?

MOSCA [aside to CORVINO]    Oh, sir,    elaborate
 By no means. I devised a formal<sup>0</sup> tale

That salv'd your reputation. But be valiant, sir.

CORVINO I fear no one but him,<sup>0</sup> that this his pleading    Voltore
 Should make him stand for a co-heir—

 Hang him, we will but use his tongue, his noise,
 As we do Croaker's,<sup>0</sup> here.    Corbaccio's

CORVINO    Ay, what shall he do?

MOSCA When we ha' done, you mean?

CORVINO    Yes.

MOSCA    Why, we'll think—
 Sell him for *mummi*a;<sup>2</sup> he's half dust already.
 {[Aside] to VOLTORE} DO not you smile to see this buffalo,<sup>3</sup>
 How he doth sport it with his head? [To himself] I should,
 If all were well and past. {[Aside] to CORBACCIO} Sir, only you
 Are he that shall enjoy the crop<sup>0</sup> of all,    harvest
 And these not know for whom they toil.

CORBACCIO    Ay, peace!

MOSCA {[aside] to CORVINO} But you shall eat it. [To himself]
 Much!<sup>0</sup> (then to VOLTORE again) Worshipful sir,    Sure you will!
 Mercury<sup>4</sup> sit upon your thund'ring tongue,
 Or the French Hercules, and make your language
 As conquering as his club,<sup>5</sup> to beat along,
 As with a tempest, flat, our adversaries!

2. Taken advantage of my inexperience. (Peregrine apparently believes that Sir Pol has deliberately involved him in a humiliating setup. "Salt-head," following, plays on both "salt" meaning "seasoned," "old," and "salt" meaning "lecherous."
 4.4

1. Playing on "halter," a hangman's noose, to suggest that both Corbaccio and Voltore are being duped.

2. Powdered embalmed corpse, used medicinally.

3. Corvino, with his cuckold's horns.

4. May the god of rhetoric (and thieves).

5. After his tenth labor, according to some legendary accounts, Hercules, aged by now but powerfully eloquent, fathered the Celts in Gaul, or France. He was traditionally pictured with a club.

[Aside to CORVINO] But much more yours,<sup>0</sup> sir. your adversaries
 VOLTORE Here they come. Ha' done.<sup>0</sup> shut up
 MOSCA I have another witness<sup>0</sup> if you need, sir, Lady Would-be
 I can produce.
 VOLTORE Who is it?
 MOSCA Sir, I have her.

SCENE 5. The scene continues.

[Enter] four AVOCATORI, BONARIO, CELIA. Notario
 [NOTARY], COMMENDATORI<sup>0</sup> [and other court officials]. laiv court deputies
 FIRST AVOCATORE The like of this the Senate never heard of.
 SECOND AVOCATORE 'Twill come most strange to them when we report it.
 FOURTH AVOCATORE The gentlewoman has been ever held
 Of unproved name.
 THIRD AVOCATORE SO, the young man.
 FOURTH AVOCATORE The more unnatural part that of his father.
 SECOND AVOCATORE More of the husband.
 FIRST AVOCATORE I not know to give
 His act a name, it is so monstrous!
 FOURTH AVOCATORE But the impostor,<sup>0</sup> he is a thing created Volpone
 T'exceed example!<sup>0</sup> precedent
 FIRST AVOCATORE And all aftertimes!<sup>0</sup> later eras
 SECOND AVOCATORE I never heard a true voluptuary
 Described but him.
 THIRD AVOCATORE Appear yet those were cited?
 NOTARY All but the old magnifico, Volpone.
 FIRST AVOCATORE Why is not he here?
 MOSCA Please Your Fatherhoods,
 Here is his advocate. Himself's so weak,
 So feeble—
 FOURTH AVOCATORE What are you?
 BONARIO His parasite,
 His knave, his pander! I beseech the court
 He may be forced to come, that your grave eyes
 May bear strong witness of his strange impostures.
 VOLTORE Upon my faith and credit with your virtues,
 He is not able to endure the air.
 SECOND AVOCATORE Bring him, however.
 THIRD AVOCATORE We will see him.
 FOURTH AVOCATORE Fetch him.
 [Exit officers.]
 VOLTORE Your Fatherhoods' fit pleasures be obeyed,
 But sure the sight will rather move your pities
 Than indignation. May it please the court,
 In the meantime he may be heard in me.
 I know this place most void of prejudice,
 And therefore crave it, since we have no reason
 To fear our truth should hurt our cause.
 THIRD AVOCATORE Speak free.
 VOLTORE Then know, most honored fathers, I must now

Discover<sup>0</sup> to your strangely abused ears reveal
 The most prodigious and most frontless<sup>0</sup> piece shameless
 Of solid<sup>0</sup> impudence and treachery complete
 That ever vicious nature yet brought forth
 To shame the state of Venice. [Indicating CECLIA] This lewd woman,
 That wants<sup>0</sup> no artificial looks or tears who lacks
 To help the visor<sup>0</sup> she has now put on, (weeping) mask
 Hath long been known a close<sup>0</sup> adulteress secret; intimate
 To that lascivious youth there [indicating BONARIO]; not suspected,
 I say, but known, and taken in the act
 With him; and by this man, the easy<sup>0</sup> husband, lenient
 Pardoned; whose timeless<sup>0</sup> bounty makes him now unseasonable; endless
 Stand here, the most unhappy, innocent person
 That ever man's own goodness made accused.<sup>1</sup>
 For these, not knowing how to owe" a gift acknowledge
 Of that dear grace but<sup>0</sup> with their shame, being placed other than
 So above all powers of their gratitude,<sup>2</sup>
 Began to hate the benefit, and in place
 Of thanks devise t'extirp<sup>0</sup> the memory to extirpate, wipe out
 Of such an act. Wherein I pray Your Fatherhoods
 To observe the malice, yea, the rage of creatures
 Discovered in their evils, and what heart<sup>0</sup> audacity
 Such take even from their crimes. But that anon
 Will more appear. This gentleman, the father,
     [indicating CORBACCIO]
 Hearing of this foul fact,<sup>0</sup> with many others deed
 Which daily struck at his too tender ears,
 And grieved in nothing more than that he could not Preserve himself a parent—his son's ills<sup>0</sup> evil deeds
 Growing to that strange flood—at last decreed
 To disinherit him.

FIRST AVOCATORE    These be strange turns!
 SECOND AVOCATORE   The young man's fame<sup>0</sup> was ever fair reputation and honest.

VOLTORE    So much more full of danger is his vice,
 That can beguile so under shade of virtue.
 But, as I said, my honored sires, his father
 Having this settled purpose, by what means
 To him<sup>o</sup> betrayed we know not, and this day Bonario
 Appointed for the deed, that parricide—
 I cannot style him better<sup>0</sup>—by confederacy give him a better name
 Preparing this his paramour to be there,
 Entered Volpone's house—who was the man,
 Your Fatherhoods must understand, designed
 For the inheritance—there sought his father.
 But with what purpose sought he him, my lords?
 I tremble to pronounce it, that a son

4.5

1. That ever had his own goodness turned against him.

2. Since the rare value of Corvino's forgiveness was so far beyond their powers of gratitude.

Unto a father, and to such a father,
 Should have so foul, felonious intent:
 It was to murder him. When, being prevented
 By his more happy<sup>o</sup> absence, what then did he? Corbaccio's fortunate
 Not check his wicked thoughts; no, now new deeds—
 Mischief doth ever end where it begins<sup>3</sup>—
 An act of horror, fathers! He dragged forth
 The aged gentleman, that had there lain bedrid
 Three years and more, out of his innocent couch;
 Naked upon the floor there left him; wounded
 His servant in the face, and with this strumpet,
 The stale<sup>o</sup> to his forged practice,<sup>o</sup> who was glad decoy/plot
 To be so active—I shall here desire
 Your Fatherhoods to note but my collections<sup>o</sup> deductions
 As most remarkable—thought at once to stop
 His father's ends,<sup>o</sup> discredit his free choice aims
 In the old gentleman,<sup>o</sup> redeem themselves Volpone
 By laying infamy upon this man<sup>o</sup> Corvino
 To whom with blushing they should owe their lives.
 FIRST AVOCATORE What proofs have you of this?
 BONARIO Most honored fathers,
 I humbly crave there be no credit given
 To this man's mercenary tongue.
 SECOND AVOCATORE Forbear.
 BONARIO His soul moves in his fee.
 THIRD AVOCATORE Oh, sir!
 BONARIO This fellow,
 For six sols<sup>o</sup> more, would plead against his Maker. halfpennies
 FIRST AVOCATORE You do forget yourself.
 VOLTRE Nay, nay, grave fathers,
 Let him have scope. Can any man imagine
 That he will spare 's<sup>o</sup> accuser, that would not spare his
 Have spared his parent?
 FIRST AVOCATORE Well, produce your proofs.
 CELIA I would I could forget I were a creature!<sup>o</sup> living being
 VOLTRE [calling a ivitness] Signor Corbaccio!
 FOURTH AVOCATORE What is he?
 VOLTRE The father.
 SECOND AVOCATORE Has he had an oath?
 NOTARY Yes.
 CORBACCIO What must I do now?
 NOTARY Your testimony's craved.
 CORBACCIO [mis-hearing] Speak to the knave?
 I'll ha' my mouth first stopped with earth! My heart
 Abhors his knowledge;<sup>o</sup> I disclaim in<sup>o</sup> him. knowing him/disavow
 FIRST AVOCATORE But for what cause?
 CORBACCIO The mere portent of nature.<sup>4</sup>
 He is an utter stranger to my loins.

3. Wickedness is always persistent.

4. A completely monstrous birth. (A deformed child was often considered to be a portent, or evil omen.)

BONARIO Have they made you to this?
CORBACCIO I will not hear thee,
Monster of men, swine, goat, wolf, parricide!
Speak not, thou viper.
BONARIO Sir, I will sit down,
And rather wish my innocence should suffer
Than I resist the authority of a father.
VOLTORE [calling a witness] Signor Corvino!
SECOND AVOCATORE This is strange!
FIRST AVOCATORE Who's this?
NOTARY The husband.
FOURTH AVOCATORE Is he sworn?
NOTARY He is.
THIRD AVOCATORE Speak, then.
CORVINO This woman, please Your Fatherhoods, is a whore
Of most hot exercise, more than a partridge,<sup>5</sup>
Upon record<sup>0</sup>— as is well attested
FIRST AVOCATORE No more.
CORVINO Neighs like a jennet.<sup>0</sup> mare (in heat)
NOTARY Preserve the honor of the court.
CORVINO I shall,
And modesty of your most reverend ears.
And yet I hope that I may say these eyes
Have seen her glued unto that piece of cedar,
That fine well-timbered gallant;<sup>6</sup> and that here
[Pointing to his forehead] The letters may be read, thorough the horn,<sup>7</sup>
That make the story perfect.<sup>0</sup> complete
MOSCA [aside to CORVINO] Excellent, sir!
CORVINO [aside to MOSCA] There is no shame in this, now, is there?
MOSCA [aside to CORVINO] None.
CORVINO [to the court] Or if I said I hoped that she were onward<sup>0</sup> well on her way
To her damnation, if there be a hell
Greater than whore and woman—a good Catholic
May make the doubt<sup>0</sup>— may wonder
THIRD AVOCATORE His grief hath made him frantic.
FIRST AVOCATORE Remove him hence. She [CELIA] swoons.
SECOND AVOCATORE Look to the woman!
CORVINO [taunting her] Rare!
Prettily feigned! Again!
FOURTH AVOCATORE Stand from about her.
FIRST AVOCATORE Give her the air.
THIRD AVOCATORE [to MOSCA] What can you say?
MOSCA My wound,
May't please Your Wisdoms, speaks for me, received
In aid of my good patron when he<sup>o</sup> missed Bonario

5. A bird capable of numerous consecutive sexual acts and so a byword for lechery.

6. Corvino sarcastically compliments Bonario as a strapping fellow to whom Celia no doubt wishes to cling. The cedars of the Middle East are tall and stately.

7. Children learned to read the alphabet from pages protected by transparent sheets of horn. (With an allusion to the cuckold's horn.)

His sought-for father, when that well-taught dame
 Had her cue given her to cry out a rape.

BONARIO Oh, most laid<sup>0</sup> impudence! Fathers— •premeditated

THIRD AVOCATORE Sir, be silent.

You had your hearing free,<sup>0</sup> so must they theirs. uninterrupted

SECOND AVOCATORE I do begin to doubt th'imposture here.

FOURTH AVOCATORE This woman has too many moods.

VOLTRE Grave fathers,
 She is a creature of a most professed
 And prostituted lewdness.

CORVINO Most impetuous!
 Unsatisfied,<sup>0</sup> grave fathers! insatiable

VOLTRE May her feignings
 Not take<sup>0</sup> Your Wisdoms! But<sup>0</sup> this day she baited take in I only
 A stranger, a grave knight, with her loose eyes
 And more lascivious kisses. This man<sup>0</sup> saw 'em Mosca
 Together on the water in a gondola.

MOSCA Here is the lady herself that saw 'em too,
 Without;<sup>0</sup> who then had in the open streets waiting outside
 Pursued them, but for saving her knight's honor.

FIRST AVOCATORE Produce that lady.

SECOND AVOCATORE Let her come.

[Exit MOSCA.]

FOURTH AVOCATORE These things,
 They strike with wonder!

THIRD AVOCATORE I am turned a stone!

SCENE 6. The scene continues.

[Enter] MOSCA [and] LADY [WOULD-BE],

MOSCA Be resolute, madam.

LADY WOULD-BE Ay, this same is she.
 [To CELIA] Out, thou chameleon<sup>0</sup> harlot! Now thine eyes deceitfully changeable
 Vie tears with the hyena.<sup>1</sup> Dar'st thou look Upon my wronged face? [To the AVOCATORI] I cry<sup>o</sup> your pardons. beg
 I fear I have forgettingly transgressed
 Against the dignity of the court—

SECOND AVOCATORE NO, madam.

LADY WOULD-BE And been exorbitant<sup>0</sup>— excessive

SECOND AVOCATORE You have not, lady.

FOURTH AVOCATORE These proofs are strong.

LADY WOULD-BE Surely, I had no purpose
 To scandalize your honors, or my sex's.

THIRD AVOCATORE We do believe it.

LADY WOULD-BE Surely, you may believe it.

SECOND AVOCATORE Madam, we do.

LADY WOULD-BE Indeed, you may. My breeding
 Is not so coarse—

FOURTH AVOCATORE We know it.

4.6

1. A symbol of treachery, the hyena was supposed to be able to change its sex and the color of its eyes at will and to imitate human voices.

LADY WOULD-BE —to offend
 With pertinacy<sup>0</sup>— stubborn resolution

THIRD AVOCATORE Lady—

LADY WOULD-BE —such a presence;
 No, surely.

FIRST AVOCATORE We well think it.

LADY WOULD-BE YOU may think it.

FIRST AVOCATORE [to the other AVOCATORL] Let her o'ercome." have the last word
 [To CELIA and BONARIO] What witnesses have you
 To make good your report?

BONARIO Our consciences.

CELIA And heaven, that never fails the innocent.

FOURTH AVOCATORE These are no testimonies.

BONARIO Not in your courts,
 Where multitude and clamor overcomes.

FIRST AVOCATORE Nay, then, you do wax insolent.
 VOLPONE is brought in [on a litter], as impotent.<sup>0</sup> disabled
 [LADY WOULD-BE embraces him.]<sup>o</sup> see 5.2.97

VOLTORE Here, here
 The testimony comes that will convince
 And put to utter dumbness their bold tongues.
 See here, grave fathers, here's the ravisher,
 The rider on men's wives, the great impostor,
 The grand voluptuary! Do you not think
 These limbs should affect venery?<sup>2</sup> Or these eyes
 Covet a concubine? Pray you, mark these hands:
 Are they not fit to stroke a lady's breasts?
 Perhaps he doth dissemble?

BONARIO So he does.

VOLTORE Would you ha' him tortured?

BONARIO I would have him proved.<sup>3</sup>

VOLTORE Best try him, then, with goads or burning irons;
 Put him to the strappado.<sup>4</sup> I have heard
 The rack<sup>5</sup> hath cured the gout; faith, give it him
 And help him of a malady; be courteous.
 I'll undertake, before these honored fathers,
 He shall have yet as many left<sup>0</sup> diseases remaining
 As she has known adulterers, or thou strumpets.
 O my most equal<sup>0</sup> hearers, if these deeds, impartial
 Acts of this bold and most exorbitant strain,
 May pass with sufferance,<sup>0</sup> what one citizen be permitted
 But owes the forfeit of his life, yea, fame
 To him that dares traduce him?<sup>6</sup> Which of you
 Are safe, my honored fathers? I would ask,
 With leave of Your grave Fatherhoods, if their plot

2. Delight in sexual activity.

3. Tested for impotence, a regular court procedure in some divorce and rape cases. (Torture was another method sometimes used to extract confessions.)

4. Torture in which the victim's arms were tied behind his back; he was then hoisted up by the wrists and dropped.

5. Torture instrument that stretched the victim to the point of dislocating his joints.

6. What citizen is there whose life and reputation might not be forfeit to a slanderer?

Have any face or color like to truth?
 Or if unto the dullest nostril here
 It smell not rank and most abhorred slander?
 I crave your care of this good gentleman,
 Whose life is much endangered by their fable;
 And as for them, I will conclude with this:
 That vicious persons, when they are hot, and fleshed<sup>7</sup>
 In impious acts, their constancy<sup>0</sup> abounds. resoluteness
 Damned deeds are done with greatest confidence.
 FIRST AVOCATORE Take 'em to custody, and sever them.
 SECOND AVOCATORE 'Tis pity two such prodigies<sup>0</sup> should live. monsters
[Exeunt CELIA and BONARIO, guarded.]
 FIRST AVOCATORE Let the old gentleman be returned with care.
 I'm sorry our credulity wronged him.
[Exeunt litter-bearers with VOLPONE.]
 FOURTH AVOCATORE These are two creatures!<sup>0</sup> monsters
 THIRD AVOCATORE I have an earthquake in me!
 SECOND AVOCATORE Their shame, even in their cradles, fled their faces.
 FOURTH AVOCATORE [to VOLTORE] You've done a worthy service to the state, sir,
 In their discovery.
 FIRST AVOCATORE You shall hear ere night
 What punishment the court decrees upon 'em.
 VOLTORE We thank Your Fatherhoods.
[Exeunt AVOCATORI, NOTARY, COMMENDATORI.]
[To MOSCA] HOW like you it?
 MOSCA Rare!
 I'd ha' your tongue, sir, tipped with gold for this;
 I'd ha' you be the heir to the whole city;
 The earth I'd have want men ere you want living.<sup>0</sup> lack income
 They're bound to erect your statue in Saint Mark's.—
 Signor Corvino, I would have you go
 And show yourself,<sup>8</sup> that you have conquered
 CORVINO Yes.
 MOSCA [aside to CORVINO] It was much better that you should profess
 Yourself a cuckold thus, than that the other<sup>9</sup>
 Should have been proved.
 CORVINO Nay, I considered that.
 Now it is her fault.
 MOSCA Then it had been yours.
 CORVINO True. I do doubt this advocate still.
 MOSCA I'faith,
 You need not; I dare ease you of that care.
 CORVINO I trust thee, Mosca.
 MOSCA As your own soul, sir.
[Exit CORVINO.]
 CORBACCIO Mosca!
 MOSCA Now for your business, sir.

7. Excited by the taste of blood, like hunting hounds.

8. Appear in public. (To indicate that he is not ashamed of having admitted to being a cuckold.)

9. The attempt to prostitute Celia to Volpone.

CORBACCIO How? Ha' you business?
MOSCA Yes, yours, sir.
CORBACCIO Oh, none else?
MOSCA None else, not I.
CORBACCIO Be careful, then.
MOSCA Best you with both your eyes,<sup>0</sup> sir. rest assured
CORBACCIO Dispatch it.<sup>1</sup>
MOSCA Instantly.
CORBACCIO And look that all
Whatever be put in: jewels, plate, moneys,
Household stuff, bedding, curtains.
MOSCA Curtain rings, sir.
Only the advocate's fee must be deducted.
CORBACCIO I'll pay him, now; you'll be too prodigal.
MOSCA Sir, I must tender<sup>0</sup> it. present
CORBACCIO TWO cecchines is well?
MOSCA No, six, sir.
CORBACCIO 'Tis too much.
MOSCA He talked a great while,
You must consider that, sir.
CORBACCIO [giving money] Well, there's three—
MOSCA I'll give it him.
CORBACCIO DO SO, and [he tips MOSCA] there's for thee.
[Exit CORBACCIO.]
MOSCA [aside] Bountiful bones! What horrid strange offense
Did he commit 'gainst nature in his youth
Worthy this age?<sup>o</sup> [To VOLTORE] YOU see, sir, how I work to deserve this old age
Unto your ends; take you no notice.<sup>0</sup> leave it to me
VOLTORE No,
I'll leave you.
MOSCA All is yours, [Exit VOLTORE.]
[aside] the devil and all,
Good advocate! [To LADY WOULD-BE] Madam, I'll bring you home
LADY WOULD-BE NO, I'll go see your patron.
MOSCA That you shall not.
I'll tell you why. My purpose is to urge
My patron to reform<sup>0</sup> his will; and, for
The zeal you've shown today, whereas before
You were but third or fourth, you shall be now
Put in the first, which would appear as begged
If you were present. Therefore—
LADY WOULD-BE You shall sway me.
[Exeunt. ]

Act 5

SCENE 1. VOLPONE'S house.[Enter] VOLPONE [attended].VOLPONE Well, I am here, and all this brunt<sup>0</sup> is past.

1. I.e., Hurry to make Volpone's will, since Corbaccio has already delivered on his half of the promise.

I ne'er was in dislike with my disguise
 Till this fled<sup>o</sup> moment; here 'twas good, in private, past
 But, in your public—cave<sup>o</sup> whilst I breathe. watch out
 Fore God, my left leg 'gan to have the cramp,
 And I apprehended straight<sup>o</sup> some power had struck me thought at once
 With a dead palsy.<sup>o</sup> Well, I must be merry paralysis
 And shake it off. A many of these fears
 Would put me into some villainous disease,
 Should they come thick upon me. I'll prevent 'em.
 Give me a bowl of lusty wine to fright
 This humor from my heart.<sup>1</sup>—Hum, hum, hum! He drinks.
 'Tis almost gone already; I shall conquer,<sup>o</sup> overcome my fears
 Any device, now, of rare ingenious knavery,
 That would possess me with a violent laughter,
 Would make me up<sup>o</sup> again. So, so, so, so. Drinks again. restore me
 This heat is life; 'tis blood by this time. [Calling] Mosca!

SCENE 2. The scene continues.

[Enter] MOSCA

MOSCA How now, sir? Does the day look clear again?
 Are we recovered and wrought out of error
 Into our way, to see our path before us?
 Is our trade free once more?

VOLPONE Exquisite Mosca!

MOSCA Was it not carried learnedly?

VOLPONE And stoutly.<sup>o</sup> resolutely

Good wits are greatest in extremities.

MOSCA It were a folly beyond thought to trust
 Any grand act unto a cowardly spirit.

You are not taken with it enough, methinks?

VOLPONE Oh, more than if I had enjoyed the wench!

The pleasure of all womankind's not like it.

MOSCA Why, now you speak, sir. We must here be fixed;
 Here we must rest. This is our masterpiece.
 We cannot think to go beyond this.

VOLPONE True,

MOSCA Nay, sir,

To gull<sup>o</sup> the court— hoodwink

VOLPONE And quite divert the torrent

Upon the innocent.

MOSCA Yes, and to make

So rare a music out of discords<sup>2</sup>—

VOLPONE Right.

That yet to me's the strangest, how th'ast borne it!<sup>o</sup> *brought it off*That these,<sup>o</sup> being so divided 'mongst themselves, *these men*Should not scent<sup>o</sup> somewhat, or<sup>o</sup> in me or thee, suspect I either

5.1

1. Wine was supposed to convert quickly to blood (see line 17), thus giving courage to the drinker.

5.2

1. Professional fencers "played the prize," i.e., competed for purses and titles, in virtuoso displays of swordsmanship.

2. To bring harmony out of various discordant elements was thought to be the highest achievement of art.

Or doubt their own side." position

MOSCA True, they will not see't.
 Too much light blinds em, I think. Each of 'em
 Is so possessed and stuffed with his own hopes
 That anything unto the contrary,
 Never so true or never so apparent,
 Never so palpable, they will resist it—

VOLPONE Like a temptation of the devil.

MOSCA Bight, sir.
 Merchants may talk of trade, and your great signors
 Of land that yields well; but if Italy
 Have any glebe<sup>0</sup> more fruitful than these fellows, soil
 I am deceived. Did not your advocate rare?<sup>0</sup> do brilliantly

VOLPONE Oh!—"My most honored fathers, my grave fathers,
 Under correction of Your Fatherhoods,
 What face of truth is here? If these strange deeds
 May pass, most honored fathers"—I had much ado
 To forbear laughing.

MOSCA 'T seemed to me you sweat,<sup>0</sup> sir. sweated (with fear)

VOLPONE In troth, I did a little.

MOSCA But confess, sir,
 Were you not daunted?

VOLPONE In good faith, I was
 A little in a mist,<sup>0</sup> but not dejected;<sup>0</sup> uncertain / overwhelmed
 Never but still myself.

MOSCA I think<sup>0</sup> it, sir. believe
 Now, so truth help me, I must needs say this, sir,
 And out of conscience for your advocate:
 He's taken pains, in faith, sir, and deserved,
 In my poor judgment—I speak it under favor,<sup>0</sup> with your permission
 Not to contrary<sup>0</sup> you, sir—very richly— contradict
 Well—to be cozened.<sup>0</sup> cheated

VOLPONE Troth, and I think so too,
 By that<sup>0</sup> I heard him<sup>o</sup> in the latter end. what / him say

MOSCA Oh, but before, sir! Had you heard him first
 Draw it to certain heads, then aggravate,<sup>3</sup>
 Then use his vehement figures<sup>0</sup>—I looked still figiies of speech
 When he would shift<sup>4</sup> a shirt; and doing this
 Out of pure love, no hope of gain—

VOLPONE Tis right.
 I cannot answer<sup>0</sup> him, Mosca, as I would, repay
 Not vet; but for thy sake, at thy entreaty
 I will begin ev'n now to vex 'em all,
 This very instant.

MOSCA Good, sir.

VOLPONE Call the dwarf
 And eunuch forth.

MOSCA [calling] Castrone, Nano!

3. Arrange his material under various headings, then bring charges.

4. Change (because his efforts made him sweat),

[Enter] NANO [and] CASTRONE.

NANO Here.

VOLPONE Shall we have a jig, now?

MOSCA What you please, sir.

VOLPONE [to CASTRONE and NANO] GO,
 Straight give out about the streets, you two,
 That I am dead. Do it with constancy,<sup>0</sup> conviction
 Sadly, do you hear? Impute it to the grief
 Of this late slander. [Exeunt CASTRONE and NANO.]

MOSCA What do you mean, sir?

VOLPONE Oh,
 I shall have instantly my vulture, crow,
 Raven come flying hither on the news
 To peck for carrion, my she-wolf and all, Lady Would-be Greedy and full of expectation—

MOSCA And then to have it ravished from their mouths?

VOLPONE 'Tis true. I will ha' thee put on a gown<sup>5</sup>
 And take upon thee as ° thou wert mine heir; act as though
 Show 'em a will. Open that chest and reach
 Forth one of those that has the blanks.<sup>0</sup> I'll straight blank spaces
 Put in thy name.

MOSCA [fetching a blank will] It will be rare, sir.

VOLPONE Ay,
 When they e'en gape, and find themselves deluded—

MOSCA Yes.

VOLPONE And thou use them scurvily. Dispatch,
 Get on thy gown.
 [VOLPONE signs the will MOSCA has given him.
 MOSCA puts on a mourning garment.]

MOSCA But, what, sir, if they ask
 After the body?

VOLPONE Say it was corrupted.

MOSCA I'll say it stunk, sir, and was fain° t'have it I was obliged Coffined up instantly and sent away.

VOLPONE Anything; what thou wilt. Hold, here's my will.
 Get thee a cap, a count-book, pen and ink,
 Papers afore thee; sit as thou wert taking
 An inventory of parcels.<sup>0</sup> I'll get up
 Behind the curtain on a stool, and hearken;
 Sometime peep over, see how they do look,
 With what degrees their blood doth leave their faces.
 Oh, 'twill afford me a rare meal of laughter!

MOSCA Your advocate will turn stark dull<sup>0</sup> upon it. gloomy

VOLPONE It will take off his oratory's edge.

MOSCA But your clarissimo,<sup>0</sup> old round-back, he aristocrat (Corbaccio)
 Will crump you<sup>0</sup> like a hog-louse with the touch. curl up on you

VOLPONE And what Corvino?

5. This must be the long black gown ordinarily worn by chief mourners, not the clarissimo's (aristocrat's) garment, which Mosca dons later in the scene and which constitutes a different kind of insult to Voltore, Corbaccio, and Corvino.

MOSCA Oh, sir, look for him
 Tomorrow morning with a rope and a dagger<sup>6</sup>
 To visit all the streets; he must run mad.
 My lady, too, that came into the court
 To bear false witness for Your Worship—

VOLPONE Yes,
 And kissed me 'fore the fathers, when my face
 Flowed all with oils.<sup>0</sup> see 4.6.20.1-2

MOSCA And sweat, sir. Why, your gold
 Is such another<sup>0</sup> med'cine, it dries up so effective a
 All those offensive savors! It transforms
 The most deformed, and restores 'em lovely,
 As 'twere the strange poetical girdle.<sup>7</sup> Jove
 Could not invent t'himself a shroud more subtle
 To pass Acrisius' guards.<sup>8</sup> It is the thing
 Makes all the world her grace, her youth, her beauty.

VOLPONE I think she loves me.

MOSCA Who? The lady, sir?
 She's jealous of you.<sup>9</sup>

VOLPONE Dost thou say so?
[Knocking offstage.]

MOSCA Hark,
 There's some already.

VOLPONE Look.

MOSCA [peeping out the door] It is the vulture.
 He has the quickest scent.

VOLPONE I'll to my place,
 Thou to thy posture.<sup>0</sup> pose

MOSCA I am set.

VOLPONE But, Mosca,
 Play the artificer<sup>0</sup> now; torture em rarely. artist
[VOLPONE conceals himself]

SCENE 3. The scene continties.

[Enter] VOLTORE.

VOLTORE How now, my Mosca?

MOSCA [pretending not to notice him, and reading from an inventory] "Turkey carpets,<sup>0</sup> nine"— Oriental rugs

VOLTORE Taking an inventory? That is well.

MOSCA "TWO suits of bedding, tissue"<sup>1</sup>—

VOLTORE Where's the will?
 Let me read that the while.<sup>0</sup> while you're busy

[Enter] CORBACCIO [on a litter].

CORBACCIO [to the litter-heaters] So, set me down

6. Traditional equipment of suicidal madmen, borne by the allegorical figure of Despair in Spenser's Faerie Queene 1.9, and by the revenger Hieronimo in The Spanish Tragedy.

7. The girdle of Venus, the goddess of love, made its wearer irresistible.

8. King Acrisius shut his daughter Danae in a tower, but the god Jove came to her in a shower of gold.

9. (1) Devoted to you; (2) covetous of your wealth.

5.3

1. Sets of bedcovers and hangings, made of cloth with gold or silver threads interwoven. The fancy textiles Mosca mentions in this scene were extremely expensive to produce in the days before automation.

And get you home. [Exeunt litter-bearers.]
VOLTRE Is he come now to trouble us?
MOSCA "Of cloth-of-gold,<sup>2</sup> two more"—
CORBACCIO Is it done, Mosca?
MOSCA "Of several velvets,<sup>0</sup> eight"— separate velvet hangings
VOLTRE [aside] I like his care.
CORBACCIO [to MOSCA] Dost thou not hear?
[Enter] CORVINO.
CORVINO Ha! Is the hour come, Mosca?
VOLPONE peeps from behind a traverse.<sup>0</sup> expose
VOLPONE [aside] Ay, now they muster.<sup>0</sup> assemble
CORVINO What does the advocate here?
Or this Corbaccio?
CORBACCIO What do these here?
[Enter] LADY [WOULD-BE].
LADY WOULD-BE MOSCA,
Is his thread spun?<sup>3</sup>
MOSCA "Eight chests of linen"—
VOLPONE [aside] Oh,
My fine Dame Would-be, too!
CORVINO Mosca, the will,
That I may show it these, and rid 'em hence.
MOSCA "Six chests of diaper, four of damask"<sup>4</sup>—there.
[He gives them the will.]
CORBACCIO Is that the will?
MOSCA "Down beds and bolsters"—
VOLPONE [aside] Rare!
Be busy still. Now they begin to flutter;
They never think of me. Look, see, see, see!
How their swift eyes run over the long deed
Unto the name, and to the legacies,
What is bequeathed them there—
MOSCA "Ten suits of hangings"<sup>0</sup>— sets of tapestries
VOLPONE [aside] Ay, i' their garters,<sup>5</sup> Mosca. Now their hopes
Are at the gasp.<sup>6</sup> last gasp
VOLTRE Mosca the heir!
CORBACCIO What's that?
VOLPONE [aside] My advocate is dumb. Look to my merchant;
He has heard of some strange storm, a ship is lost,
He faints. My lady will swoon. Old glazen-eyes,<sup>6</sup>
He hath not reached his despair yet.
CORBACCIO All these
Are out of hope; I'm sure the man.
CORVINO But, Mosca—
MOSCA "Two cabinets"—

2. Cloth made of gold threads.

3. Is he dead? (In Greek mythology, the Fates spin out the thread of a human being's life and cut it at the time of death.)

4. Two kinds of costly textile with interwoven motifs. Diaper was linen with a diamond pattern; damask could be linen or silk with floral or other designs.

5. "Go hang yourself in your own garters" was a common phrase of ridicule.

6. Corbaccio wears spectacles (see also line 63 below).

CORVINO Is this in earnest?
 MOSCA "One
 Of ebony"—
 CORVINO Or do you but delude me?
 MOSCA "The other, mother-of-pearl"—I am very busy.
 Good faith, it is a fortune thrown upon me—
 "Item, one salt<sup>0</sup> of agate"—not my seeking. saltcellar
 LADY WOULD-BE Do you hear, sir?
 MOSCA "A perfumed box"—pray you, forbear;
 You see I am troubled<sup>0</sup>—"made of an onyx"— busy
 LADY WOULD-BE HOW!
 MOSCA Tomorrow or next day I shall be at leisure
 To talk with you all.
 CORVINO Is this my large hope's issue?<sup>0</sup>
 LADY WOULD-BE Sir, I must have a fairer answer.
 MOSCA Madam!
 Marry, and shall: pray you, fairly<sup>0</sup> quit my house. positively
 Nay, raise no tempest with your looks, but hark you,
 Remember what Your Ladyship offered me' implicitly, sexual favors
 To put you in<sup>o</sup> an heir; go to, think on't, your name in as
 And what you said e'en your best madams did
 For maintenance,<sup>0</sup> and why not you? Enough. financial support
 Go home and use the poor Sir Pol, your knight, well,
 For fear I tell some riddles.<sup>0</sup> Go, be melancholic. secrets
[Exit LADY WOULD-BE.]
 VOLPONE [aside] Oh, my fine devil!
 CORVINO Mosca, pray you a word.
 MOSCA Lord! Will not you take your dispatch hence yet?
 Methinks of all you should have been th'example.<sup>0</sup> led the way
 Why should you stay here? With what thought? What promise?
 Hear you, do not you know I know you an ass?
 And that you would most fain have been a wittoP 'tiling cuckold
 If fortune would have let you? That you are
 A declared cuckold, on good terms?<sup>0</sup> This pearl, good standing
 You'll say, was yours? Bight. This diamond?
 I'll not deny't, but thank you. Much here else?
 It may be so. Why, think that these good works
 May help to hide your bad. I'll not betray you.
 Although you be but extraordinary<sup>0</sup> in name only
 And have it<sup>o</sup> only in title, it sufficeth. the name of cuckold
 Go home. Be melancholic too, or mad. [Exit CORVINO.]
 VOLPONE [aside] Bare, Mosca! How his villainy becomes him!
 VOLTRE [aside] Certain he doth delude all these for me.
 CORBACCIO [finally making out the will] Mosca the heir?
 VOLPONE [aside] Oh, his four eyes have found it!
 CORBACCIO I'm cozened, cheated by a parasite-slave!
 Harlot,<sup>7</sup> th'ast gulled me.
 MOSCA Yes, sir. Stop your mouth,
 Or I shall draw the only tooth is left.

7. A word used of wicked men as well as women.

Are not you he, that filthy covetous wretch
 With the three legs,<sup>0</sup> that here, in hope of prey, including his cane
 Have, any time this three year, snuffed about
 With your most grov'ling nose, and would have hired
 Me to the pois'ning of my patron? Sir?
 Are not you he that have today in court
 Professed the disinheriting of your son?
 Perjured yourself? Go home, and die, and stink.
 If you but croak a syllable, all comes out.
 Away and call your porters. Go, go stink! [Exit CORBACCIO.]
 VOLPONE [aside] Excellent varlet!<sup>0</sup> servant; rascal
 VOLTORE Now, my faithful Mosca,
 I find thy constancy—
 MOSCA Sir?
 VOLTORE Sincere.
 MOSCA "A table
 Of porphyry"—I mar I<sup>o</sup> you'll be thus troublesome. marvel
 VOLTORE Nay, leave off now, they are gone.
 MOSCA Why, who are you?
 What? Who did send for you? Oh, cry you mercy,<sup>0</sup> beg your pardon
 Reverend sir! Good faith, I am grieved for you,
 That any chance of mine should thus defeat
 Your—I must needs say—most deserving travails.
 But I protest, sir, it was cast upon me,
 And I could almost wish to be without it,
 But that the will o'th'dead must be observed.
 Marry, my joy is that you need it not;
 You have a gift, sir—thank your education—
 Will never let you want, while there are men
 And malice to bleed causes.<sup>0</sup> Would I had lawsuits
 But half the like, for all my fortune, sir!
 If I have any suits—as I do hope,
 Things being so easy and direct,<sup>8</sup> I shall not—
 I will make bold with your obstreperous<sup>0</sup> aid, vociferous
 Conceive me, for your fee,<sup>9</sup> sir. In meantime
 You, that have so much law, I know, ha' the conscience
 Not to be covetous of what is mine.
 Good sir, I thank you for my plate;<sup>0</sup> 'twill help see 1.3.1-20
 To set up a young mail." Good faith, you look set up my household
 As you were costive;<sup>0</sup> best go home and purge, sir.
[Exit VOLTORE.]
 VOLPONE [coming from behind the traverse] Bid him eat lettuce<sup>0</sup> well. My witty mischief, used as a laxative
 Let me embrace thee! [He hugs MOSCA.] Oh, that I could now
 Transform thee to a Venus!<sup>0</sup> Mosca, go, for Volpone's sexual use
 Straight take my habit of clarissimo<sup>1</sup>
 And walk the streets; be seen, torment em more.

8. The situation being so straightforward.

9. It being understood that I will pay you, of course.

1. Aristocrat. (By obeying this order, Mosca violates the sumptuary laws that restricted the wearing of distinctive high-status garments, such as the clarissimo's robe, to persons of the appropriate rank.)

We must pursue as well as plot. Who would Have lost<sup>0</sup> this feast? missed
MOSCA I doubt<sup>0</sup> it will lose them.<sup>0</sup> fear/as dupes
VOLPONE Oh, my recovery shall recover all.<sup>2</sup>
That I could now but think on some disguise
To meet 'em in, and ask em questions.
How I would vex 'em still at every turn!
MOSCA Sir, I can fit you.
VOLPONE Canst thou?
MOSCA Yes, I know
One o'the commendatori, sir, so like you,
Him will I straight make drunk, and bring you his habit.
VOLPONE A rare disguise, and answering thy brain!<sup>0</sup> suiting your wit
Oh, I will be a sharp disease unto 'em.
MOSCA Sir, you must look for curses—
VOLPONE Till they burst!
The fox fares ever best when he is curst.<sup>0</sup> [Exeunt.] proverbial wisdom

SCENE 4. The WOULD-BES' house.

[Enter] PEREGRINE [in disguise, and] three MERCATORI
[MERCHANTS],
PEREGRINE Am I enough disguised?
FIRST MERCHANT I warrant you.
PEREGRINE All my ambition is to fright him only.
SECOND MERCHANT If you could ship him away, 'twere excellent.
THIRD MERCHANT TO Zante, or to Aleppo?<sup>1</sup>
PEREGRINE Yes, and ha' his Adventures put i'th'book of voyages,<sup>2</sup>
And his gulled<sup>0</sup> story registered for truth? erroneous
Well, gentlemen, when I am in awhile,
And that you think us warm in our discourse,
Know<sup>0</sup> your approaches. make
FIRST MERCHANT Trust it to our care.
[Exeunt MERCHANTS.]
[PEREGRINE knocks. A] WOMAN [servant answers the door].
PEREGRINE Save you, fair lady. Is Sir Pol within?
WOMAN I do not know, sir.
PEREGRINE Pray you, say unto him
Here is a merchant upon earnest business
Desires to speak with him.
WOMAN I will see, sir.
PEREGRINE Pray you.
[Exit WOMAN.]
I see the family is all female here.
[Enter WOMAN.]

2. Volpone believes that by "undoing" his death, he will be able to resuscitate his scam.
5.4

1. Zante is an island off Greece under Venetian control; Aleppo, a big trading center, is in Syria.

2. An enlarged edition of Richard Hakluyt's Principal Navigations, Voyages, Traffics, and Discoveries of the English Nation was published in 1598-1600.

WOMAN He says, sir, he has weighty affairs of state
 That now require him whole;<sup>0</sup> some other time demand all his attention
 You may possess<sup>0</sup> him. gain audience with

PEREGRINE Pray you say again,
 If those require him whole, these will exact him<sup>o</sup> force him out
 Whereof I bring him tidings. [Exit WOMAN.]

What might be
 His grave affair of state, now? How to make Bolognian sausages here in Venice, sparing
 One o'th'ingredients?
[Enter WOMAN.]

WOMAN Sir, he says he knows
 By your word "tidings" that you are no statesman,<sup>3</sup>
 And therefore wills you stay.<sup>0</sup> wishes you to wait

PEREGRINE Sweet, pray you return<sup>0</sup> him reply to
 I have not read so many proclamations
 And studied them for words as he has done,
 But—here he deigns to come.
[Enter] POLITIC.

[Exit WOMAN.]

POLITIC Sir, I must crave
 Your courteous pardon. There hath chanced today
 Unkind disaster 'twixt my lady and me,
 And I was penning my apology
 To give her satisfaction, as you came now.

PEREGRINE Sir, I am grieved I bring you worse disaster.
 The gentleman you met at th'port today,
 That told you he was newly arrived—

POLITIC Ay, was
 A fugitive punk?<sup>o</sup> prostitute

PEREGRINE NO, sir, a spy set on you;
 And he has made relation to the Senate
 That you professed to him to have a plot
 To sell the state of Venice to the Turk.<sup>0</sup> see 4.1.128-30

POLITIC Oh, me!

PEREGRINE For which warrants are signed by this time
 To apprehend you, and to search your study
 For papers—

POLITIC Alas, sir, I have none but notes
 Drawn out of playbooks<sup>0</sup>— printed plays

PEREGRINE All the better, sir.

POLITIC And some essays. What shall I do?

PEREGRINE Sir, best
 Convey yourself into a sugar-chest;
 Or, if you could lie round, a frail were rare,<sup>4</sup>
 And I could send you aboard.

POLITIC Sir, I but talked so,
 For discourse sake merely.<sup>0</sup> They knock without. Just to be conversing

3. Government agent. (Sir Politic believes that a spy would use the word "intelligence.")

4. If you could curl up, a fruit basket would be excellent.

PEREGRINE Hark, they are there!

POLITIC I am a wretch, a wretch!

PEREGRINE What will you do, sir?
Ha' you ne'er a currant-butt<sup>o</sup> to leap into? casket for currants

They'll put you to the rack; you must be sudden.

POLITIC Sir, I have an engine<sup>o</sup>— contrivance

THIRD MERCHANT [without] Sir Politic Would-be!

SECOND MERCHANT [without] Where is he?

POLITIC That I have thought upon beforetime.

PEREGRINE What is it?

POLITIC I shall ne'er endure the torture!
Marry, it is, sir, of a tortoiseshell, [producing the shell]
Fitted for these extremities. Pray you sir, help me.
Here I have a place, sir, to put back my legs—
Please you to lay it on, sir—with this cap
And my black gloves. I'll lie, sir, like a tortoise
Till they are gone.

PEREGRINE [laying the shell on POLITIC'S back] And call you this an engine?

POLITIC Mine own device—good sir, bid my wife's women
To burn my papers. [Exit PEREGRINE.]
They [the MERCHANTS] rush in.

FIRST MERCHANT Where's he hid?

THIRD MERCHANT We must
And will, sure, find him.

SECOND MERCHANT Which is his study?
[Enter PEREGRINE.]

FIRST MERCHANT What
Are you, sir?

PEREGRINE I'm a merchant, that came here
To look upon this tortoise.

THIRD MERCHANT How?

FIRST MERCHANT Saint Mark!
What beast is this?

PEREGRINE It is a fish.

SECOND MERCHANT [to POLITIC] Come out here!

PEREGRINE Nay, you may strike him, sir, and tread upon him.
He'll bear a cart.

FIRST MERCHANT What, to run over him?

PEREGRINE Yes.

THIRD MERCHANT Let's jump upon him.

SECOND MERCHANT Can he not go?<sup>o</sup> walk

PEREGRINE He creeps, sir.

FIRST MERCHANT [poking POLITIC] Let's see him creep.

PEREGRINE No, good sir, you will hurt him.

SECOND MERCHANT Heart! I'll see him creep, or prick his guts.

THIRD MERCHANT [to POLITIC] Come out here!

PEREGRINE [aside to POLITIC] Pray you, sir, creep a little.
[POLITIC creeps.]

FIRST MERCHANT Forth!

SECOND MERCHANT Yet further.
 PEREGRINE [aside to POLITIC] Good sir, creep.
 SECOND MERCHANT We'll see his legs.
They pull off the shell and discover<sup>0</sup> him. expose
 THIRD MERCHANT Godso, he has garters!
 FIRST MERCHANT Ay, and gloves!
 SECOND MERCHANT Is this
 Your fearful tortoise?
 PEREGRINE [revealing himself] Now, Sir Pol, we are even.
 For your next project I shall be prepared.
 I am sorry for the funeral of your notes, sir. •
 FIRST MERCHANT Twere a rare motion to be seen in Fleet Street!<sup>5</sup>
 SECOND MERCHANT Ay, i'the term.
 FIRST MERCHANT Or Smithfield, in the fair.<sup>6</sup>
 THIRD MERCHANT Methinks 'tis but a melancholic sight!
 PEREGRINE Farewell, most politic tortoise.
[Exeunt PEREGRINE and MERCHANTS.]
[Enter WOMAN.]
 POLITIC Where's my lady?
 Knows she of this?
 WOMAN I know not, sir.
 POLITIC Inquire.
[Exit WOMAN.]
 Oh, I shall be the fable of all feasts,<sup>0</sup>
 The freight of the gazetti, ship boys' tale,<sup>7</sup>
 And, which is worst, even talk for ordinaries.<sup>0</sup>
[Enter WOMAN.]
 WOMAN My lady's come most melancholic home,
 And says, sir, she will straight to sea for physic.
 POLITIC And I, to shun this place and clime forever,
 Creeping with house on back, and think it well
 To shrink my poor head in my politic shell. [Exeunt.]

SCENE 5. VOLPONE's house.

[Enter] VOLPONE [and] MOSCA, the first in the habit of a commendatore, the other, of a clarissimo.<sup>0</sup> see 5.3.104-15

VOLPONE Am I then like him?
 MOSCA Oh, sir, you are he.
 No man can sever<sup>0</sup> you. distinguish
 VOLPONE Good.
 MOSCA But what am I?
 VOLPONE 'Fore heav'n, a brave<sup>0</sup> clarissimo; thou becom'st it! splendid
 Pity thou wert not born one.
 MOSCA If I hold
 My made one, 'twill be well.
 VOLPONE I'll go and see

5. Puppet shows, called "motions," were frequently performed on London's Fleet Street, adjacent to the Inns of Court, where attorneys were trained and cases were argued during the three law terms.

6. Smithfield, just northwest of London, was the site every August of Bartholomew Fair; puppet shows were a prime entertainment there.

7. Topic of the newspapers and the gossip of boys serving on board ships.

What news, first, at the court.
MOSCA Do so. [Exit VOLPONE.]
My fox
Is out on<sup>o</sup> his hole,<sup>1</sup> and ere he shall reenter of I'll make him languish in his borrowed case,<sup>o</sup> disguise
Except he come to composition<sup>o</sup> with me. unless he makes a deal
[Calling] Androgyno, Castrone, Nano!
[Enter ANDROGYNO, CASTRONE, and NANO.]
ALL Here.
MOSCA Go recreate yourselves abroad;<sup>o</sup> go sport. outside
[Exeunt ANDROGYNO, CASTRONE, and NANO.]
So, now I have the keys, and am possessed.<sup>o</sup> in possession
Since he will needs be dead afore his time,
I'll bury him or gain by him. I am his heir,
And so will keep me<sup>o</sup> till he share at least. remain
To cozen him of all were but a cheat
Well placed; no man would construe it a sin.
Let his sport pay for't.<sup>o</sup> This is called the Fox Trap. [Exit.] for itself

SCENE 6. A street in Venice.

[Enter] CORBACCIO [and] CORVINO.
CORBACCIO They say the court is set.<sup>o</sup> in session
CORVINO We must maintain
Our first tale good, for both our reputations.
CORBACCIO Why, mine's no tale; my son would there have killed me.
CORVINO That's true; I had forgot. [Aside] Mine is, I am sure.—
But for your will, sir.
CORBACCIO Ay, I'll come upon him
For that hereafter, now his patron's dead.
[Enter] VOLPONE [disguised].
VOLPONE Signor Corvino! And Corbaccio! Sir,
Much joy unto you.
CORVINO Of what?
VOLPONE The sudden good
Dropped down upon you—
CORBACCIO Where?
VOLPONE And none knows how—
From old Volpone, sir.
CORBACCIO Out, arrant knave!
VOLPONE Let not your too much wealth, sir, make you furious.<sup>o</sup> insane
CORBACCIO Away, thou varlet!
VOLPONE Why, sir?
CORBACCIO Dost thou mock me?
VOLPONE YOU mock the world, sir.<sup>1</sup> Did you not change<sup>o</sup> wills? exchange
CORBACCIO Out, harlot!
VOLPONE [to CORVINO] Oh, belike you are the man,
Signor Corvino? Faith, you carry it<sup>o</sup> well; carry it off
You grow not mad withal. I love your spirit.

5.5

1. Alluding to the children's game, fox-in-the-hole.

5.6

1. Volpone pretends to believe that Corbaccio is misleading people by refusing to admit to his good fortune.

You are not overleavened<sup>0</sup> with your fortune. too puffed up
 You should ha' some would swell now like a wine-vat
 With such an autumn.<sup>0</sup> Did he gi' you all, sir? harvest
 CORVINO Avoid,<sup>0</sup> you rascal! Go away
 VOLPONE Troth, your wife has shown Herself a very<sup>0</sup> woman. But you are well; typical
 You need not care; you have a good estate
 To bear it out, sir, better by this chance—
 Except Corbaccio have a share?
 CORBACCIO Hence, varlet!
 VOLPONE You will not be aknownd,<sup>2</sup> sir; why, 'tis wise.
 Thus do all gamesters at all games dissemble.
 No man will seem to win.<sup>0</sup> admit he's winning [Exeunt CORBACCIO and CORVINO.]
 Here comes my vulture,
 Heaving his beak up i'the air and snuffing.

SCENE 7. The scene continues.

[Enter] VOLTORE.
 VOLTORE [to himself] Outstripped thus by a parasite? A slave
 Would run on errands, and make legs<sup>0</sup> for crumbs? curtsies
 Well, what I'll do—
 VOLPONE The court stays for<sup>0</sup> Your Worship. awaits
 I e'en rejoice, sir, at Your Worship's happiness,
 And that it fell into so learned hands
 That understand the fingering<sup>1</sup>—
 VOLTORE What do you mean?
 VOLPONE I mean to be a suitor to Your Worship
 For the small tenement, out of reparations<sup>2</sup>—
 That at the end of your long row of houses
 By the piscaria.<sup>0</sup> It was in Volpone's time, fish market
 Your predecessor, ere he grew diseased,
 A handsome, pretty, customed<sup>0</sup> bawdy house much-patronized
 As any was in Venice—none dispraised<sup>3</sup>—
 But fell with him; his body and that house
 Decayed together.
 VOLTORE Come, sir, leave your prating.<sup>0</sup> chattering
 VOLPONE Why, if Your Worship give me but your hand,
 That I may ha' the refusal,<sup>0</sup> I have done. right of first refusal
 'Tis a mere toy to you, sir, candle-rents,<sup>4</sup>
 As Your learned Worship knows—
 VOLTORE What do I know?
 VOLPONE Marry, no end of your wealth, sir, God decrease<sup>0</sup> it. instead of "increase"
 VOLTORE Mistaking knave! What, mock'st thou my misfortune?
 VOLPONE His<sup>0</sup> blessing on your heart, sir! Would 'twere more. God's
 [Exit VOLTORE.]
 Now, to my first<sup>5</sup> again, at the next corner.

2. You prefer not to be recognized (as heir).

5.7

1. That understand how to handle money.

2. For the rental house in bad repair.

3. Not to disparage the others.

4. (1) Revenue from deteriorating property; (2) "pin money," money for incidentals.

5. The ones I was taunting earlier, Corvino and Corbaccio.

SCENE 8. The scene continues.

[Enter] CORBACCIO [and] CORVINO. [Enter] MOSCA, passant<sup>0</sup> [over the stage in clarissimo's attire, and exit]. passing

CORBACCIO See, in our habit! See the impudent varlet!

CORVINO That I could shoot mine eyes at him, like gunstones!<sup>0</sup> cannonballs

VOLPONE But, is this true, sir, of the parasite?

CORBACCIO Again t'afflict us? Monster!

VOLPONE In good faith, sir,
 I'm heartily grieved a beard of your grave length<sup>0</sup> so wise an old man
 Should be so overreached. I never brooked<sup>0</sup> could stand
 That parasite's hair; methought his nose should cozen.<sup>0</sup> he had a cheating nose
 There still<sup>0</sup> was somewhat in his look did promise. always
 The bane<sup>0</sup> of a clarissimo. ruin

CORBACCIO Knave—

VOLPONE [to CORVINO] Methinks
 Yet you that are so traded<sup>0</sup> i'the world, experienced
 A witty merchant, the fine bird Corvino,
 That have such moral emblems<sup>1</sup> on your name,
 Should not have sung your shame and dropped your cheese,
 To let the fox laugh at your emptiness.<sup>2</sup>

CORVINO Sirrah, you think the privilege of the place,<sup>3</sup>
 And your red saucy cap, that seems to me
 Nailed to your jolt-head with those two cecchines,<sup>4</sup>
 Can warrant<sup>0</sup> your abuses. Come you hither. sanction

You shall perceive, sir, I dare beat you. Approach!

VOLPONE No haste, sir, I do know your valor well,
 Since you durst publish<sup>0</sup> what you are, sir. make public

[VOLPONE makes as if to leave.]

CORVINO Tarry!
 I'd speak with you.

VOLPONE Sir, sir, another time—

CORVINO Nay, now.

VOLPONE Oh, God, sir! I were a wise man
 Would stand<sup>0</sup> the fury of a distracted cuckold. to withstand

MOSCA [enters and] walks by 'em.

CORBACCIO What! Come again?

VOLPONE [aside to MOSCA] Upon 'em, Mosca; save me.

CORBACCIO The air's infected where he breathes.

CORVINO Let's fly him.

[Exeunt CORVINO and CORBACCIO.]

VOLPONE Excellent basilisk!<sup>5</sup> Turn upon the vulture.

SCENE 9. The scene continues.

[Enter] VOLTORE.
 VOLTORE [to Mosca] Well, flesh fly, it is summer with you now;

5.8

1. Mottoes accompanying symbolic engravings.

2. As in Aesop's fable; see 1.2.95-97 and note.

3. Violence was forbidden near the court.

4. The commendatore's cap is decorated with gold buttons.

5. A legendary monster whose breath and glance were deadly.

Your winter will come on.

MOSCA Good advocate,
Pray thee not rail, nor threaten out of place<sup>0</sup> thus; unsuitably
Thou'lt make a solecism,<sup>0</sup> as madam says. see 4.2.43
Get you a biggin<sup>1</sup> more; your brain breaks loose.

VOLTORE Well, sir. [Exit MOSCA.]

VOLPONE Would you ha' me beat the insolent slave?
Throw dirt upon his first good clothes?

VOLTORE This same<sup>0</sup> the disguised Volpone
Is doubtless some familiar!<sup>0</sup> attendant devil

VOLPONE Sir, the court,
In troth, stays for you. I am mad<sup>o</sup> a mule furious that
That never read Justinian<sup>2</sup> should get up
And ride an advocate. Had you no quirk<sup>0</sup> trick
To avoid gullage,<sup>0</sup> sir, by such a creature? deception
I hope you do but jest; he has not done't.
This's but confederacy to blind the rest.<sup>0</sup> Corvino and Corbaccio
You are the heir?

VOLTORE A strange, officious,
Troublesome knave! Thou dost torment me.

VOLPONE I know—
It cannot be, sir, that you should be cozened;
Tis not within the wit of man to do it.
You are so wise, so prudent, and 'tis fit
That wealth and wisdom still should go together.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE 10. The law court.

[Enter] four AVOCATORI, NOTARIO [NOTARY], COMMEN-
DATORI, BONARIO [and] CELIA [under guard], CORBAC-
CIO, [and] CORVINO.

FIRST AVOCATORE Are all the parties here?

NOTARY All but the advocate.

SECOND AVOCATORE And here he comes.

FIRST AVOCATORE Then bring 'em forth to sentence.

[Enter] VOLTORE, [and] VOLPONE [still disguised as a commendatore].

VOLTORE O my most honored fathers, let your mercy

Once win upon<sup>0</sup> your justice, to forgive— prevail over

I am distracted—

VOLPONE (aside) What will he do now?

VOLTORE O h,

I know not which t'address myself to first,

Whether Your Fatherhoods or these innocents<sup>0</sup>— Celia and Bonario

CORVINO [aside] Will he betray himself?

VOLTORE Whom equally

I have abused, out of most covetous ends—

5.9

1. A larger skullcap (worn by lawyers).

2. The Roman law, codified under Emperor Justinian and still influential on the Continent. Lawyers traditionally rode mules to the courts; here the image is comically inverted.

CORVINO [aside to CORBACCIO] The man is mad!
CORBACCIO What's that?
CORVINO He is possessed.
VOLTORE For which, now struck in conscience, here I prostrate
Myself at your offended feet for pardon.
[He throws himself down.]
FIRST AND SECOND AVOCATORI Arise!
CELIA O heav'n, how just thou art!
VOLPONE [aside] I'm caught
I' mine own noose—
CORVINO [aside to CORBACCIO] Be constant, sir; naught now
Can help but impudence. [VOLTORE rises.]
FIRST AVOCATORE [to VOLTORE] Speak forward.<sup>0</sup> continue
COMMENDATORI [to the courtroom] Silence!
VOLTORE It is not passion<sup>0</sup> in me, reverend fathers, madness
But only conscience, conscience, my good sires,
That makes me now tell truth. That parasite,
That knave hath been the instrument of all.
SECOND AVOCATORE Where is that knave? Fetch him.
VOLPONE [as commendatore] I go. [Exit.]
CORVINO Grave fathers,
This man's distracted; he confessed it now;<sup>0</sup> just now
For, hoping to be old Volpone's heir,
Who now is dead—
THIRD AVOCATORE How?
SECOND AVOCATORE Is Volpone dead?
CORVINO Dead since,<sup>0</sup> grave fathers— since his appearance here
BONARIO O sure vengeance!
FIRST AVOCATORE Stay.
Then he was no deceiver?
VOLTORE Oh, no, none.
The parasite, grave fathers.
CORVINO He does speak
Out of mere envy, 'cause the servant's made
The thing he gaped<sup>0</sup> for. Please Your Fatherhoods, Voltore yearned
This is the truth; though I'll not justify
The other,<sup>0</sup> but he may be somedeap faulty. Mosca / somewhat
VOLTORE Ay, to your hopes as well as mine, Corvino;
But I'll use modesty.<sup>0</sup> Pleaseth Your Wisdoms self-control
To view these certain notes, and but confer<sup>0</sup> them. compare
As I hope favor, they shall speak clear truth.
[He gives documents to the AVOCATORI.]
CORVINO The devil has entered him!
BONARIO Or bides in you.
FOURTH AVOCATORE We have done ill, by a public officer
To send for him, if he be heir.
SECOND AVOCATORE For whom?
FOURTH AVOCATORE Him that they call the parasite.
THIRD AVOCATORE 'Tis true;
He is a man of great estate now left.<sup>0</sup> bequeathed to him

FOURTH AVOCATORE [to NOTARY.] Go you and learn his name, and say the court
 Entreats his presence here but to the clearing
 Of some few doubts. [Exit NOTARY]

SECOND AVOCATORE This same's a labyrinth!

FIRST AVOCATORE [to CORVINO] Stand you unto<sup>o</sup> your first report? Do you stand by
 CORVINO My state,<sup>o</sup> estate
 My life, my fame<sup>o</sup>— reputation

BONARIO Where is't?<sup>1</sup>

CORVINO —are at the stake.

FIRST AVOCATORE [to CORBACCIO] Is yours so too?

CORBACCIO The advocate's a knave,
 And has a forked tongue—

SECOND AVOCATORE Speak to the point.

CORBACCIO so is the parasite, too.

FIRST AVOCATORE This is confusion.

VOLTORE I do beseech Your Fatherhoods, read but those.

CORVINO And credit nothing the false spirit hath writ.
 It cannot be but he is possessed, grave fathers.
[The AVOCATORI examine VOLTORE S papers.]

SCENE 11. A street.<sup>1</sup>

[Enter] VOLPONE [on a separate part of the stage].

VOLPONE To make a snare for mine own neck! And run
 My head into it willfully! With laughter!
 When I had newly scaped, was free and clear!
 Out of mere wantonness!<sup>o</sup> Oh, the dull devil caprice
 Was in this brain of mine when I devised it,
 And Mosca gave it second. He must now
 Help to sear up<sup>o</sup> this vein, or we bleed dead.
[Enter] NANO, ANDROGYNO, [and] CASTRONE.

How now, who let you loose? Whither go you now?
 What, to buy gingerbread? Or to drown kitlings?<sup>o</sup> kittens

NANO Sir, Master Mosca called us out of doors,
 And bid us all go play, and took the keys.

ANDROGYNO Yes.

VOLPONE Did Master Mosca take the keys? Why, so!
 I am farther in.<sup>o</sup> These are my fine conceits!<sup>o</sup> in trouble / notions
 I must be merry, with a mischief to me!
 What a vile wretch was I, that could not bear
 My fortune soberly! I must ha' my crotchets<sup>o</sup> perverse whims
 And my conundrums! Well, go you and seek him.
 His meaning may be truer than my fear.<sup>2</sup>
 Bid him he straight come to me, to the court.
 Thither will I, and, if't be possible,

5.10

1. Implying that Corvino has nothing of worth to lose.

5.11

1. The courtroom characters remain visible onstage, perhaps in silent tableau, while Volpone is understood to be outside.

2. Mosca's intentions may be truer (more my fear is true (accurate)).

Unscrew<sup>0</sup> my advocate upon<sup>0</sup> new hopes. dissuade/by means of
 When I provoked him, then I lost myself.
[Exeunt VOLPONE and his entourage.
The AVOCATORI and parties to the courtroom proceedings remain onstage. ]

SCENE 12. 77ZE courtroom.

FIRST AVOCATORE [with VOLTORE'S notes] These things can ne'er be reconciled. He here Bonario
 Professeth that the gentleman<sup>0</sup> was wronged,
 And that the gentlewoman was brought thither,
 Forced by her husband, and there left.
 VOLTORE Most true.
 CELIA How ready is heav'n to those that pray!
 FIRST AVOCATORE But that
 Volpone would have ravished her, he holds
 Utterly false, knowing his impotence.
 CORVINO Grave fathers, he is possessed; again I say,
 Possessed. Nay, if there be possession
 And obsession, he has both.
 THIRD AVOCATORE Here comes our officer.
[Enter VOLPONE, still disguised.]
 VOLPONE The parasite will straight be here, grave fathers.
 FOURTH AVOCATORE YOU might invent some other name, sir varlet.
 THIRD AVOCATORE Did not the notary meet him?
 VOLPONE Not that I know.
 FOURTH AVOCATORE His coming will clear all.
 SECOND AVOCATORE Yet it is misty.
 VOLTORE May't please Your Fatherhoods—
 VOLPONE (-whispers [to] the advocate) Sir, the parasite
 Willed me to tell you that his master lives,
 That you are still the man, your hopes the same;
 And this was only a jest—
 VOLTORE [aside to VOLPONE] HOW?
 VOLPONE [aside to VOLTORE] Sir, to try
 If you were firm, and how you stood affected.<sup>0</sup> how loyal you were
 VOLTORE Art sure he lives?
 VOLPONE DO I live,<sup>0</sup> sir? he's as alive as I am
 VOLTORE Oh, me!
 I was too violent.
 VOLPONE Sir, you may redeem it.
 They said you were possessed; fall down, and seem so.
 I'll help to make it good. VOLTORE falls.
[Aloud] God bless the man!
[Aside to VOLTORE] Stop your wind hard, and swell.<sup>1</sup> [Aloud]
 See, see, see, see!

5.12

1. The details of Voltore's dispossession in the following lines resemble the fake exorcisms described in

Samuel Harsnett's lively expose, A Discovery of the Fraudulent Practices of John Darrell (1599). "Stop your wind": hold your breath.

He vomits crooked pins! His eyes are set
 Like a dead hare's hung in a poulter's<sup>2</sup> shop!
 His mouth's running away!<sup>o</sup> [To CORVINO] DO you see, twitching spasmodically signor?
 Now 'tis in his belly.
 CORVINO Ay, the devil!
 VOLPONE Now in his throat.
 CORVINO Ay, I perceive it plain.
 VOLPONE Twill out, 'twill out! Stand clear. See where it flies,
 In shape of a blue toad with a bat's wings!
 [To CORBACCIO] DO not you see it, sir?
 CORBACCIO What? I think I do.
 CORVINO 'Tis too manifest.
 VOLPONE Look! He comes t' himself!
 VOLTRE Where am I?
 VOLPONE Take good heart; the worst is past, sir.
 You are dispossessed.
 FIRST AVOCATORE What accident<sup>o</sup> is this? unforeseen event
 SECOND AVOCATORE Sudden, and full of wonder!
 THIRD AVOCATORE If he were Possessed, as it appears, all this<sup>o</sup> is nothing. Voltore's written statement
 CORVINO He has been often subject to these fits.
 FIRST AVOCATORE Show him that writing. [To VOLTRE] DO you know it, sir?
 VOLPONE [aside to VOLTRE] Deny it, sir; forswear it; know it not.
 VOLTRE Yes, I do know it well, it is my hand;
 But all that it contains is false.
 BONARIO Oh, practice!<sup>o</sup> deception
 SECOND AVOCATORE What maze is this!
 FIRST AVOCATORE is he not guilty, then,
 Whom you there name the parasite?
 VOLTRE Grave fathers,
 No more than his good patron, old Volpone.
 FOURTH AVOCATORE Why, he is dead!
 VOLTRE Oh, no, my honored fathers.
 He lives—
 FIRST AVOCATORE HOW! Lives?
 VOLTRE Lives.
 SECOND AVOCATORE This is subtler yet!
 THIRD AVOCATORE [to VOLTRE] YOU said he was dead?
 VOLTRE Never.
 THIRD AVOCATORE [to CORVINO] YOU said so?
 CORVINO I heard so.
 FOURTH AVOCATORE Here comes the gentleman; make him way.
 [Enter MOSCA.]
 THIRD AVOCATORE A stool!
 FOURTH AVOCATORE [aside] A proper<sup>o</sup> man! And, were Volpone dead, handsome
 A fit match for my daughter.

2. Seller of poultry and small game.

THIRD AVOCATORE Give him way.
VOLPONE [aside to MOSCA] iMosca, I was almost lost; the advocate
Had betrayed all; but now it is recovered.
All's o'the hinge<sup>0</sup> again. Say I am living. running smoothly

I sooner had attended your grave pleasures,
But that my order for the funeral
Of my dear patron did require me—

VOLPONE [aside] Mosca!
MOSCA Whom I intend to bury like a gentleman.
VOLPONE [aside] Ay, quick,<sup>0</sup> and cozen me of all.<sup>3</sup> alive

SECOND AVOCATORE Still stranger!
More intricate!

FIRST AVOCATORE And come about<sup>0</sup> again! reversing direction
FOURTH AVOCATORE [aside] It is a match; my daughter is bestowed.
MOSCA [aside to VOLPONE] Will you gi' me half?
VOLPONE [aside to MOSCA] First, I'll be hanged.
MOSCA [aside to VOLPONE]

I know

Your voice is good. Cry not so loud.
FIRST AVOCATORE Demand<sup>0</sup> question
The advocate. [To VOLTORE] Sir, did not you affirm
Volpone was alive?

VOLPONE Yes, and he is;
This gent'man told me so. (Aside to MOSCA) Thou shalt have half.
MOSCA Whose drunkard is this same? Speak, some that know him;
I never saw his face. (Aside to VOLPONE) I cannot now
Afford it you so cheap.

VOLPONE (aside to MOSCA) No?
FIRST AVOCATORE [to VOLTORE] What say you?
VOLTORE The officer told me.
VOLPONE I did, grave fathers,
And will maintain he lives with mine own life,
And that this creature<sup>0</sup> told me. (Aside) I was born Mosca
With all good stars my enemies.

MOSCA Most grave fathers,
If such an insolence as this must pass<sup>0</sup> be permitted
Upon me, I am silent. 'Twas not this
For which you sent, I hope.

SECOND AVOCATORE [pointing to VOLPONE] Take him away.
VOLPONE (aside to MOSCA) Mosca!
THIRD AVOCATORE Let him be whipped.
VOLPONE (aside to MOSCA) Wilt thou betray me?
Cozen me?

THIRD AVOCATORE And taught to bear himself
Toward a person of his<sup>0</sup> rank. Mosca's
FOURTH AVOCATORE Away!
[Officers seize VOLPONE.]

3. Volpone sees that Mosca's pious pretense of burying the "dead" Volpone will mean an end to all of Volpone's hopes; he'll be cheated out of everything.

MOSCA I humbly thank Your Fatherhoods.

VOLPONE Soft, soft. [Aside] Whipped?
 And lose all that I have? If I confess,
 It cannot be much more.

FOURTH AVOCATORE [to MOSCA] Sir, are you married?

VOLPONE [aside] They'll be allied<sup>0</sup> anon; I must be resolute. linked, by marriage
 The fox shall here uncase.<sup>0</sup> He puts off his disguise. reveal himself

MOSCA- (aside) Patron!

VOLPONE Nay, now
 My ruins shall not come alone. Your match
 I'll hinder sure; my substance shall not glue you
 Nor screw you into a family.

MOSCA (aside) Why, patron!

VOLPONE I am Volpone, and [pointing to MOSCA] this is my knave;
[Pointing to VOLTORE] This his own knave; [pointing to CORBACCIO] this,
 avarice's fool;
[Pointing to CORVINO] This, a chimera<sup>0</sup> of wittol, fool, monstrous combination and knave;
 And, reverend fathers, since we all can hope
 Naught but a sentence, let's not now despair it.<sup>0</sup> be disappointed (ironic)
 You hear me brief.<sup>0</sup> That's all I have to say

CORVINO May it please Your Fatherhoods—

COMMENDATORE<sup>4</sup> Silence!

FIRST AVOCATORE The knot is now undone by miracle!

SECOND AVOCATORE Nothing can be more clear.

THIRD AVOCATORE Or can more prove
 These innocent.

FIRST AVOCATORE Give 'em their liberty.
[BONARIO and CELIA are released.]

BONARIO Heaven could not long let such gross crimes be hid.

SECOND AVOCATORE If this be held the highway to get riches,
 May I be poor!

THIRD AVOCATORE This's not the gain, but torment.

FIRST AVOCATORE These possess wealth as sick men possess fevers,
 Which trulier may be said to possess them.

SECOND AVOCATORE Disrobe that parasite.
[MOSCA is stripped of his clarissimo's robe.]

CORVINO [and] MOSCA Most honored fathers!

FIRST AVOCATORE Can you plead aught to stay the course of justice?
 If you can, speak.

CORVINO [and] VOLTORE We beg favor—

CELIA And mercy.

FIRST AVOCATORE [to CELIA] YOU hurt your innocence, suing<sup>0</sup> for pleading the guilty.
[To the others] Stand forth; and, first, the parasite. You appear T'have been the chiefest minister,<sup>0</sup> if not plotter, agent
 In all these lewd<sup>0</sup> impostures, and now, lastly, vile, obscene
 Have with your impudence abused the court

4. Not Volpone, of course, but one of the genuine Commendatori. They are probably the officers who strip Mosca at line 103.

And habit<sup>0</sup> of a gentleman of Venice, garb
 Being a fellow of no birth or blood;
 For which our sentence is, first thou be whipped,
 Then live perpetual prisoner in our galleys.

VOLPONE I thank you for him.

MOSCA Bane to<sup>o</sup> thy wolfish nature! curses on
 FIRST AVOCATORE Deliver him to the saffi.<sup>o</sup> [MOSCA is placed bailiffs
under guard.] Thou, Volpone,
 By blood and rank a gentleman, canst not fall
 Under like censure;<sup>0</sup> but our judgment on thee the same sentence
 Is that thy substance<sup>0</sup> all be straight confiscate wealth
 To the hospital of the Incurabili;<sup>5</sup>
 And since the most was gotten by imposture,
 By feigning lame, gout, palsy, and such diseases,
 Thou art to lie in prison, cramped with irons,
 Till thou be'st sick and lame indeed.—Bemove him.

[VOLPONE is placed under guard.]

VOLPONE This is called mortifying<sup>6</sup> of a fox.

FIRST AVOCATORE Thou, Voltore, to take away the scandal
 Thou hast giv'n all worthy men of thy profession,
 Art banished from their fellowship and our state.<sup>0</sup> Venice

[VOLTORE is placed under guard.]

Corbaccio—bring him near.—We here possess
 Thy son of all thy state,<sup>0</sup> and confine thee estate
 To the monastery of San' Spirito,<sup>0</sup> the Holy Spirit
 Where, since thou knew'st not how to live well here,
 Thou shalt be learned<sup>0</sup> to die well. taught

CORBACCIO Ha! What said he?

COMMENDATORE You shall know anon,<sup>o</sup> sir. soon enough

[CORBACCIO is placed under guard.]

FIRST AVOCATORE Thou, Corvino, shalt
 Be straight embarked from thine own house and rowed
 Bound about Venice, through the Grand Canal,
 Wearing a cap with fair<sup>0</sup> long ass's ears handsome; clearly visible
 Instead of horns, and so to mount, a paper
 Pinned on thy breast, to the berlino<sup>7</sup>—

CORVINO Yes,
 And have mine eyes beat out with stinking fish,
 Bruised fruit, and rotten eggs—Tis well. I'm glad
 I shall not see my shame yet.

FIRST AVOCATORE And to expiate
 Thy wrongs done to thy wife, thou art to send her
 Home to her father with her dowry trebled.<sup>8</sup>
 And these are all your judgments—

5. The Hospital of the Incurables was founded in Venice in 1522 to care for people terminally ill with syphilis.

6. (1) Hanging of meat to make it tender; (2) disciplining spiritually; (3) killing. (Volpone's sentence is almost certain to bring about his death.)

7. Pillory. Versions of such shaming punishments were commonly imposed for sexual and marital infractions. The offender typically had to wear a placard specifying his crimes; hence the paper pinned on Cor-vino's breast.

8. The judges grant Celia "separation from bed and board." Such legal separations could be permitted to the innocent party in a case of adultery or, as here, to a victim of gross spousal abuse. Because legal separation entailed the finding of serious fault, the guilty spouse could also, as here, be forced to pay financial damages. Legal separation did not bring with it, however, the right of remarriage for either party.

145 ALL Honored fathers!
 FIRST AVOCATORE Which may not be revoked. Now you begin,
 When crimes are done and past and to be punished,
 To think what your crimes are.—Away with them!
 [MOSCA, VOLPONE, VOLTORE, CORBACCIO, and CORVINO retire to the hack of the stage, guarded.]<sup>9</sup>
 Let all that see these vices thus rewarded
 150 Take heart,<sup>0</sup> and love to study 'em. Mischiefs feed take them to heart
 Like beasts, till they be fat, and then they bleed.
 [The AVOCATORI step hack.]
 [VOLPONE comes forward.]
 VOLPONE The seasoning of a play is the applause
 Now, though the fox be punished by the laws,
 He yet doth hope there is no suffering due
 155 Nor any fact<sup>0</sup> which he hath done 'gainst you. crime
 If there be, censure him; here he, doubtful,<sup>0</sup> stands. apprehensive
 If not, fare jovially, and clap your hands. [Exeunt.]

FROM EPIGRAMS<sup>1</sup>

To My Book

It will be looked for, book, when some but see
 Thy title, Epigrams, and named of me,
 Thou should'st be bold, licentious, full of gall,
 Wormwood<sup>0</sup> and sulphur, sharp and toothed<sup>2</sup> withal, bitter-tasting plant
 5 Become a petulant thing, hurl ink and wit
 As madmen stones, not caring whom they hit.
 Deceive their malice who could wish it so,
 And by thy wiser temper let men know
 Thou art not covetous of least self-fame
 10 Made from the hazard of another's shame<sup>3</sup>—
 Much less with lewd, profane, and beastly phrase
 To catch the world's loose laughter or vain gaze.
 He that departs<sup>0</sup> with his own honesty parts
 For vulgar praise, doth it too dearly buy.

1616

9. Alternatively, the prisoners, and later the Avocatori and the others, could exit, and Volpone could return to speak the epilogue. The advantage of the staging preferred here is that almost all the players are onstage to receive the audience's applause.

1. Epigrams are commonly thought of as brief, witty, incisive poems of personal invective, often with a surprise turn at the end. But Jonson uses the word in a more liberal sense. His "Epigrams," a separate section in his collected Works of 1616, include not only sharp, satiric poems but many complimentary ones to friends and patrons, as well as memorial epitaphs and a verse letter, "Inviting a Friend to Supper."

2. The distinction between toothed (biting) and toothless (general) satires was a commonplace.

3. Here, as often elsewhere, Jonson echoes the greatest Roman epigrammatist, Martial.

On Something, That Walks Somewhere

At court I met it, in clothes brave<sup>0</sup> enough fine
 To be a courtier, and looks grave enough
 To seem a statesman: as I near it came,
 It made me a great face. I asked the name.
 5 "A lord," it cried, "buried in flesh and blood,
 And such from whom let no man hope least good,
 For I will do none; and as little ill,
 For I will dare none." Good lord, walk dead still.

1616

To William Camden<sup>1</sup>

Camden, most reverend head, to whom I owe
 All that I am in arts, all that I know
 (How nothing's that!), to whom my country owes
 The great renown and name wherewith she goes;<sup>2</sup>
 5 Than thee the age sees not that thing more grave,
 More high, more holy, that she more would crave.
 What name, what skill, what faith hast thou in things!
 What sight in searching the most antique springs!
 What weight and what authority in thy speech!
 10 Man scarce can make that doubt, but<sup>3</sup> thou canst teach.
 Pardon free truth and let thy modesty,
 Which conquers all, be once o'ercome by thee.
 Many of thine<sup>0</sup> this better could than I; your pupils
 But for<sup>o</sup> their powers, accept my piety. in place of

On My First Daughter<sup>1</sup>

Here lies, to each her parents' ruth,<sup>o</sup> grief
 Mary, the daughter of their youth;
 Yet all heaven's gifts being heaven's due,
 It makes the father less to rue.<sup>0</sup> regret
 5 At six months' end she parted hence
 With safety of her innocence;
 Whose soul heaven's queen,<sup>0</sup> whose name she bears, Mary
 In comfort of her mother's tears,
 Hath placed amongst her virgin-train:

1. Camden, a distinguished scholar and antiquary, had been Jonson's teacher at Westminster School.
 2. Camden's studies of his native land in Britannia (1586) and Remains of a Greater Work Concerning Britain (1605) ran to several editions and were translated abroad.

3. One hardly needs wonder whether.

1. Probably written in the late 1590s, in Jonson's Roman Catholic period (ca. 1598-1610).

10 Where, while that severed doth remain
 This grave partakes the fleshly birth;<sup>0</sup> the body
 Which cover lightly, gentle earth!<sup>2</sup>

To John Donne

Donne, the delight of Phoebus<sup>0</sup> and each Muse, god of poetry
 Who, to thy one, all other brains refuse;<sup>1</sup>
 Whose every work, of thy most early wit,
 Came forth example<sup>2</sup> and remains so yet;
 5 Longer a-knowing than most wits do live,
 And which no affection praise enough can give.
 To it<sup>3</sup> thy language, letters, arts, best life,
 Which might with half mankind maintain a strife.
 All which I meant to praise, and yet I would,
 10 But leave, because I cannot as I should.

On Giles and Joan

Who says that Giles and Joan at discord be?
 Th' observing neighbors no such mood can see.
 Indeed, poor Giles repents he married ever,
 But that his Joan doth too. And Giles would never 5 By his free will be in Joan's company;
 No more would Joan he should. Giles riseth early,
 And having got him out of doors is glad;
 The like is Joan. But turning home is sad,
 And so is Joan. Ofttimes, when Giles doth find
 10 Harsh sights at home, Giles wisheth he were blind:
 All this doth Joan. Or that his long-yearned<sup>1</sup> life
 Were quite outspun. The like wish hath his wife.
 The children that he keeps Giles swears are none
 Of his begetting; and so swears his Joan.
 15 In all affections<sup>0</sup> she concurrereth still. desires
 If now, with man and wife, to will and nilP not will
 The self-same things a note of concord be,
 I know no couple better can agree.

2. A common sentiment in Latin epitaphs.

1. I.e., the muses shower their favors exclusively on you.

2. A pattern for others to imitate.

3. In addition to your wit.

1. Spun from long skeins of yarn.

On My First Son

Farewell, thou child of my right hand,<sup>1</sup> and joy;
 My sin was too much hope of thee, loved boy:
 Seven years thou wert lent to me, and I thee pay,
 Exacted by thy fate, on the just day.
 5 O could I lose all father now! For why
 Will man lament the state he should envy,
 To have so soon 'scaped world's and flesh's rage,
 And, if no other misery, yet age?
 Rest in soft peace, and asked, say, "Here doth lie
 10 Ben Jonson his best piece of poetry."<sup>2</sup>
 For whose sake henceforth all his vows be such
 As what he loves may never like too much.<sup>3</sup>

On Lucy, Countess of Bedford<sup>1</sup>

This morning, timely rapt with holy fire,
 I thought to form unto my zealous muse,
 What kind of creature I could most desire,
 To honor, serve, and love; as poets use.<sup>2</sup>
 5 I meant to make her fair, and free, and wise,
 Of greatest blood, and yet more good than great;
 I meant the day-star<sup>o</sup> should not brighter rise,
 Nor lend like influence<sup>3</sup> from his lucent seat.
 I meant she should be courteous, facile,<sup>o</sup> sweet,
 10 Hating that solemn vice of greatness, pride;
 I meant each softest virtue, there should meet,
 Fit in that softer bosom to reside.
 Only a learned, and a manly soul
 I purposed her; that should, with even powers,
 15 The rock, the spindle, and the shears<sup>4</sup> control
 Of destiny, and spin her own free hours.
 Such when I meant to feign, and wished to see,
 My muse bad, Bedford write, and that was she.

1. A literal translation of the Hebrew name "Benjamin," which implies the meaning "dexterous" or "fortunate." The boy was born in 1596 and died on his birthday in 1603~

2. Poet and father, are both "makers," Jonson's favorite term for the poet.

3. The obscure grammar of the last lines allows for various readings; "like" may carry the sense of "please."

4. The Countess of Bedford was a famous patroness of the age, to whom Jonson, Donne, and many other poets addressed poems of compliment.

2. This elegant epigram of praise plays off against the Pygmalion story, in which the sculptor molds a statue of his ideal woman and she then comes to life.

3. Stars were supposed to emit an ethereal fluid, or "influence," that affected the affairs of mortals, for good or ill.

4. Emblems of the three Fates: Clotho spun the thread of life, Lachesis decided its length, and Atropos cut the thread to end life.

To Lucy, Countess of Bedford, with Mr. Donne's Satires<sup>1</sup>

Lucy, you brightness<sup>2</sup> of our sphere, who are Life of the Muses' day, their morning star!
 If works, not th' authors, their own grace should look,<sup>0</sup> have regard to Whose poems would not wish to be your book?
 5 But these, desired by you, the maker's ends
 Crown with their own. Rare poems ask rare friends.
 Yet satires, since the most of mankind be
 Their unavoi<sup>0</sup>ded subject, fewest see: inevitable
 For none e'er took that pleasure in sin's sense,<sup>0</sup> experience
 10 But, when they heard it taxed, took more offense.
 They then that, living where the matter is bred,<sup>3</sup>
 Dare for these poems yet both ask and read
 And like them too, must needfully, though few,
 Be of the best: and 'mongst those, best are you;
 15 Lucy, you brightness of our sphere, who are
 The Muses' evening, as their morning star.<sup>4</sup>

To Sir Thomas Roe<sup>1</sup>

Thou hast begun well, Roe, which stand<sup>0</sup> well too, continue
 And I know nothing more thou hast to do.
 He that is round<sup>0</sup> within himself, and straight, honest
 Need seek no other strength, no other height;
 5 Fortune upon him breaks herself, if ill,
 And what should hurt his virtue makes it still.<sup>0</sup> constant
 That thou at once, then, nobly may'st defend
 With thine own course the judgment of thy friend,
 Be always to thy gathered self the same,
 10 And study conscience, more than thou wouldst fame.
 Though both be good, the latter yet is worst,
 And ever is ill got without the first.

Inviting a Friend to Supper

Tonight, grave sir, both my poor house and I
 Do equally desire your company:

1. With this poem, Jonson offered a manuscript collection of Donne's satires (see p. 1284), such as commonly passed from hand to hand in court circles.

2. Lucy's name derives from the Latin lux, meaning "light."

3. I.e., at court.

4. The planet Venus is called Lucifer ("light-bearing") when it appears before sunrise, Hesperus when it appears after sunset.

1. Knighted in 1605, Roe was sent as ambassador to the Great Mogul in 1614. His collection of coins and of Greek and Oriental manuscripts is in the Bodleian Library.

Not that we think us worthy such a guest,
 But that your worth will dignify our feast
 5 With those that come; whose grace may make that seem Something, which else could hope for no esteem.
 It is the fair acceptance, sir, creates
 The entertainment perfect: not the cates. food
 Yet shall you have, to rectify your palate,
 10 An olive, capers, or some better salad
 Ushering the mutton; with a short-legged hen,
 If we can get her, full of eggs, and then
 Lemons and wine for sauce; to<sup>o</sup> these, a coney<sup>o</sup> besides/rabbit
 Is not to be despaired of for our money;
 15 And though fowl now be scarce, yet there are clerks,<sup>o</sup> scholars
 The sky not falling, think we may have larks.
 I'll tell you of more, and lie, so you will come:
 Of partridge, pheasant, woodcock, of which some
 May yet be there; and godwit if we can,
 20 Knot, rail, and ruff, too.<sup>1</sup> Howsoe'er, my man" servant
 Shall read a piece of Virgil, Tacitus,
 Livy, or of some better book to us,
 Of which we'll speak our minds amidst our meat;<sup>o</sup> food (of any kind)
 And I'll profess<sup>o</sup> no verses to repeat: promise
 25 To this,<sup>o</sup> if aught appear which I not know of, on this point
 That will the pastry, not my paper, show of.<sup>2</sup>
 Digestive cheese and fruit there sure will be;
 But that which most doth take my muse and me
 Is a pure cup of rich canary wine,
 30 Which is the Mermaid's now, but shall be mine;
 Of which, had Horace or Anacreon<sup>3</sup> tasted,
 Their lives, as do their lines, till now had lasted.
 Tobacco, nectar, or the Thespian spring
 Are all but Luther's beer to this I sing.<sup>4</sup>
 35 Of this we will sup free but moderately,
 And we will have no Pooly or Parrot<sup>5</sup> by;
 Nor shall our cups make any guilty men,
 But at our parting we will be as when
 We innocently met. No simple word
 40 That shall be uttered at our mirthful board
 Shall make us sad next morning, or affright
 The liberty that we'll enjoy tonight.

1. All these are edible birds.

2. Paper-lined pans were used to keep pies from sticking; the writing sometimes rubbed off on the piecrust.

3. Horace and Anacreon (one in Latin, the other in Greek) wrote many poems in praise of wine. The Mermaid tavern was a favorite haunt of the poets; sweet wine from the Canary Islands was popular in England.

4. Tobacco was an expensive New World novelty in Jonson's time. Nectar is the drink of the gods. The Thespian spring, on Mount Helicon, is a legendary source of poetic inspiration. Compared with canary, these intoxicants are no better than inferior German beer.

5. Pooly and Parrot were government spies. As a Roman Catholic, Jonson had reason to be wary of undercover agents.

On Gut

Gut eats all day, and lechers all the night,
 So all his meat he tasteth over twice;
 And striving so to double his delight,
 He makes himself a thoroughfare of vice.
 5 Thus in his belly can he change a sin:
 Lust it comes out, that gluttony went in.

Epitaph on S. P., a Child of Queen Elizabeth's Chapel<sup>1</sup>

Weep with me, all you that read
 This little story;
 And know for whom a tear you shed,
 Death's self is sorry.
 5 'Twas a child that so did thrive
 In grace and feature,
 As Heaven and Nature seemed to strive
 Which owned the creature.
 Years he numbered scarce thirteen
 10 When Fates turned cruel,
 Yet three filled zodiacs had he been
 The stage's jewel;<sup>2</sup>
 And did act (what now we moan)
 Old men so duly,<sup>0</sup> aptly
 15 As, sooth,<sup>0</sup> the Parcae<sup>0</sup> thought him one, in truth/Fates
 He played so truly.
 So, by error, to his fate
 They all consented;
 But, viewing him since (alas, too late),
 20 They have repented,
 And have sought (to give new birth)
 In baths<sup>3</sup> to steep him;
 But, being so much too good for earth,
 Heaven vows to keep him.

1. Salomon Pavy, a boy actor in the troupe known as the Children of Queen Elizabeth's Chapel, who had appeared in several of Jonson's plays; he died in 1602.

2. He had been on the stage for three seasons.
 3. Perhaps such magic baths as that of Medea, which restored Jason's father to his first youth (Ovid, Metamorphoses 7).

FROM THE FOREST<sup>1</sup>To Penshurst<sup>2</sup>

Thou art not, Penshurst, built to envious show,
 Of touch<sup>3</sup> or marble; nor canst boast a row
 Of polished pillars, or a roof of gold;
 Thou hast no lantern<sup>0</sup> whereof tales are told, cupola
 Or stair, or courts; but stand'st an ancient pile,<sup>0</sup> edifice
 And, these grudged at,<sup>4</sup> art revered the while.
 Thou joy'st in better marks, of soil, of air,
 Of wood, of water; therein thou art fair.
 Thou hast thy walks for health, as well as sport;
 Thy mount, to which the dryads<sup>0</sup> do resort, wood nymphs
 Where Pan and Bacchus their high feasts have made,
 Beneath the broad beech and the chestnut shade;
 That taller tree, which of a nut was set
 At his great birth where all the Muses met.<sup>5</sup>
 There in the writhed bark are cut the names
 Of many a sylvan,<sup>0</sup> taken with his flames; countryman
 And thence the ruddy satyrs oft provoke
 The lighter fauns<sup>6</sup> to reach thy Lady's Oak.<sup>7</sup>
 Thy copse<sup>0</sup> too, named of Gamage<sup>8</sup> thou hast there, little woods
 That never fails to serve thee seasoned deer
 When thou wouldst feast or exercise thy friends.
 The lower land, that to the river bends,
 Thy sheep, thy bullocks, kine,<sup>0</sup> and calves do feed; cattle
 The middle grounds thy mares and horses breed.
 Each bank doth yield thee conies;<sup>0</sup> and the tops,<sup>0</sup> rabbits / ground
 Fertile of wood, Ashore and Sidney's copse,
 To crown thy open table, doth provide
 The purpled pheasant with the speckled side;
 The painted partridge lies in every field,
 And for thy mess<sup>0</sup> is willing to be killed. table
 And if the high-swollen Medway<sup>9</sup> fail thy dish,
 Thou hast thy ponds, that pay thee tribute fish:
 Fat aged carps that run into thy net,
 And pikes, now weary their own kind to eat,
 As loath the second draft or cast to stay,
 Officially<sup>0</sup> at first themselves betray; dutifully
 Bright eels that emulate them, and leap on land
 Before the fisher, or into his hand.
 Then hath thy orchard fruit, thy garden flowers,

1. In the 1616 Works, Jonson grouped some of his nonepigrammatic poems under the heading "The Forest," a translation of the term Sylvae, meaning a poetic miscellany. "To Penshurst" and the two following poems are from that group.

2. Penshurst, in Kent, was the estate of Robert Sidney, Viscount Lisle (later, Earl of Leicester), a younger brother of the poet Sir Philip Sidney. Along with Lanier's "Description of Cookham" (p. 1319), this poem inaugurated the small genre of English "country-house" poems, which includes Marvell's Upon Appleton House (p. 1716).

3. Touchstone, an expensive black basalt.

4. More pretentious houses attract envy.

5. Sir Philip Sidney was born at Penshurst.

6. Satyrs and fauns were woodland spirits. Satyrs had the bodies of men and the legs (and horns) of goats. "Provoke": challenge to a race.

7. Named after a lady of the house who went into labor under its branches.

8. Lady Barbara (Gamage) Sidney, wife of Sir Robert.

9. The local river.

40 Fresh as the air, and new as are the hours.
 The early cherry, with the later plum,
 Fig, grape, and quince, each in his time doth come;
 The blushing apricot and woolly peach
 Hang on thy walls, that every child may reach.

45 And though thy walls be of the country stone,
 They're reared with no man's ruin, no man's groan;
 There's none that dwell about them wish them down;
 But all come in, the farmer and the clown,<sup>0</sup> peasant
 And no one empty-handed, to salute

50 Thy lord and lady, though they have no suit.<sup>0</sup> request to make
 Some bring a capon, some a rural cake,
 Some nuts, some apples; some that think they make
 The better cheeses bring them, or else send
 By their ripe daughters, whom they would commend

55 This way to husbands, and whose baskets bear
 An emblem of themselves in plum or pear.
 But what can this (more than express their love)
 Add to thy free provisions, far above
 The need of such? whose liberal board doth flow

60 With all that hospitality doth know;
 Where comes no guest but is allowed to eat,
 Without his fear, and of thy lord's own meat;<sup>0</sup> food
 Where the same beer and bread, and selfsame wine,
 That is his lordship's shall be also mine,<sup>1</sup>

65 And I not fain to sit (as some this day
 At great men's tables), and yet dine away.
 Here no man tells<sup>0</sup> my cups; nor, standing by, counts
 A waiter doth my gluttony envy,<sup>0</sup> resent
 But gives me what I call, and lets me eat;

70 He knows below<sup>0</sup> he shall find plenty of meat. in the servants' quarters
 Thy tables hoard not up for the next day;
 Nor, when I take my lodging, need I pray
 For fire, or lights, or livery;<sup>0</sup> all is there, provisions
 As if thou then wert mine, or I reigned here:

75 There's nothing I can wish, for which I stay.<sup>0</sup> wait
 That found King James when, hunting late this way
 With his brave son, the Prince,<sup>2</sup> they saw thy fires
 Shine bright on every hearth, as the desires
 Of thy Penates<sup>0</sup> had been set on flame Roman household gods

80 To entertain them; or the country came
 With all their zeal to warm their welcome here.
 What (great I will not say, but) sudden cheer
 Didst thou then make 'em! And what praise was heaped
 On thy good lady then, who therein reaped

85 The just reward of her high housewifery;
 To have her linen, plate, and all things nigh,
 When she was far; and not a room but dressed
 As if it had expected such a guest!

1. Different courses might be served to different guests, depending on their social status. The lord would have the best food.

2. Prince Henry, the heir apparent, who died in November 1612.

These, Penshurst, are thy praise, and yet not all.
 90 Thy lady's noble, fruitful, chaste withal.
 His children thy great lord may call his own,
 A fortune in this age but rarely known.
 They are, and have been, taught religion; thence
 Their gentler spirits have sucked innocence.
 95 Each morn and even they are taught to pray,
 With the whole household, and may, every day,
 Read in their virtuous parents' noble parts<sup>0</sup>
 The mysteries of manners,<sup>0</sup> arms, and arts. attributes
 Now, Penshurst, they that will proportion<sup>0</sup> thee moral behavior
 100 With other edifices, when they see corn-pare
 Those proud, ambitious heaps, and nothing else,
 May say, their lords have built, but thy lord dwells.

Song: To Celia<sup>1</sup>

Drink to me only with thine eyes,
 And I will pledge with mine;
 Or leave a kiss but in the cup,
 And I'll not look for wine.
 5 The thirst that from the soul doth rise
 Doth ask a drink divine:
 But might I of Jove's nectar sup,
 I would not change for thine.
 I sent thee late a rosy wreath,
 10 Not so much honoring thee,
 As giving it a hope that there
 It could not withered be.
 But thou thereon didst only breathe,
 And sent'st it back to me;
 15 Since when it grows and smells, I swear,
 Not of itself, but thee.

To Heaven

Good and great God, can I not think of thee
 But it must straight<sup>0</sup> my melancholy be? immediately
 Is it interpreted in me disease
 That, laden with my sins, I seek for ease?
 5 Oh, be thou witness, that the reins<sup>1</sup> dost know
 And hearts of all, if I be sad for show,

1. These famous lines translate a patchwork of five separate prose passages by Philostratus, a Greek sophist (3rd century C.E.). The music that has made it a barroom favorite is by an anonymous

18th-century composer.

1. Literally, kidneys, but also the seat of the affections, with a glance at Psalm 7:9: "the righteous God trieth the hearts and reins."

And judge me after, if I dare pretend
 To aught but grace, or aim at other end.
 As thou art all, so be thou all to me,
 10 First, midst, and last, converted<sup>0</sup> one and three, interchanging
 My faith, my hope, my love; and in this state,
 My judge, my witness, and my advocate.
 Where have I been this while exiled from thee,
 And whither rapt,<sup>o</sup> now thou but stoop'st to me? carried off
 15 Dwell, dwell here still:<sup>o</sup> Oh, being everywhere, always
 How can I doubt to find thee ever here?
 I know my state, both full of shame and scorn,
 Conceived in sin and unto labor born,
 Standing with fear, and must with horror fall,
 20 And destined unto judgment after all.
 I feel my griefs too, and there scarce is ground
 Upon my flesh to inflict another wound.
 Yet dare I not complain or wish for death
 With holy Paul,<sup>2</sup> lest it be thought the breath
 25 Of discontent; or that these prayers be
 For weariness of life, not love of thee.

FROM UNDERWOOD<sup>1</sup>*From A Celebration of Charis in Ten Lyric Pieces<sup>2</sup>*4. Her Triumph<sup>3</sup>

See the chariot at hand here of Love,
 Wherein my lady rideth!
 Each that draws is a swan or a dove,<sup>4</sup>
 And well the car Love guideth.
 5 As she goes, all hearts do duty
 Unto her beauty;
 And enamored do wish, so they might
 But enjoy such a sight,
 That they still<sup>o</sup> were to run by her side, always 10 Through swords, through seas, whither she would ride.

 Do but look on her eyes, they do light
 All that Love's world compriseth!
 Do but look on her hair, it is bright
 As Love's star<sup>o</sup> when it riseth! Venus, the morning star
 15 Do but mark,<sup>o</sup> her forehead's smoother observe

2. "Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" (Romans 7.24).

1. Preparing a second edition of his Works (published posthumously in 1640—41), Jonson added a third section of poems, "Underwood," "out of the analogy they hold to The Forest in my former book."

2. The Greek word charis, from which Jonson's lady takes her name, means "grace" or "loveliness."

3. Following Petrarch, many Renaissance poets used the figure of the triumphal procession to celebrate a person or concept—time, chastity, fame, etc. Metrically, this poem is highly complex.

4. Venus's birds.

Than words that soothe her!
 And from her arched brows, such a grace
 Sheds itself through the face,
 As alone there triumphs to the life
 20 All the gain, all the good, of the elements' strife.<sup>5</sup>

Have you seen but a bright lily grow,
 Before rude hands have touched it?
 Have you marked but the fall o' the snow,
 Before the soil hath smutched it?
 25 Have you felt the wool o' the beaver,
 Or swan's down ever?
 Or have smelt o' the bud o' the briar,
 Or the nard<sup>6</sup> i' the fire?
 Or have tasted the bag o' the bee?
 30 O so white! O so soft! O so sweet is she!

A Sonnet, to the Noble Lady, the Lady Mary Wroth<sup>1</sup>

I that have been a lover, and could show it,
 Though not in these,<sup>0</sup> in rhymes not wholly dumb,     in sonnets
 Since I exscribe<sup>0</sup> your sonnets, am become     copy out
 A better lover, and much better poet.
 5 Nor is my muse, or I, ashamed to owe it
 To those true numerous graces; whereof some
 But charm the senses, others overcome
 Both brains and hearts; and mine now best do know it:
 For in your verse all Cupid's armory,
 10 His flames, his shafts, his quiver, and his bow,
 His very eyes are yours to overthrow.
 But then his mother's<sup>0</sup> sweets you so apply,     Venus's
 Her joys, her smiles, her loves, as readers take
 For Venus' ceston,<sup>2</sup> every line you make.

My Picture Left in Scotland<sup>1</sup>

I now think Love is rather deaf than blind,
 For else it could not be

5. The four elements—earth, water, air, fire—were thought to be in perpetual conflict.

6. Spikenard, an aromatic ointment.

1. Mary Wroth, author of the sonnet sequence Pamphilia to Amphilanthus (p. 1456) and the romance The Countess of Montgomery's Irania (p. 1453), was the daughter of Robert Sidney and his wife, Barbara Gamage, of Penshurst, the niece of Sir Philip Sidney and the Countess of Pembroke; she was the wife of Sir Robert Wroth, whose country estate Jonson also praised in "The Forest." The poem exhibits how poems were exchanged within a coterie, though Jonson also writes as a client to a patron. This is Jonson's only sonnet, used here to pay tribute to Wroth's sequence, and notably to its erotic power.

2. Venus's girdle or belt, which had aphrodisiacal powers; it aroused passion in all beholders.

1. After his walking tour of Scotland in 1618-19, Jonson sent a manuscript version of this poem to William Drummond, with whom he had stayed. The woman of the poem may or may not be a real person.

That she
 Whom I adore so much should so slight me
 And cast my love behind;
 I'm sure my language to her was as sweet,
     And every close<sup>0</sup> did meet cadence
     In sentence<sup>0</sup> of as subtle feet,<sup>o</sup> wise sayings / rhythm
     As hath the youngest he
 That sits in shadow of Apollo's tree.<sup>2</sup>

O, but my conscious fears
     That fly my thoughts between,
     Tell me that she hath seen
 My hundreds of gray hairs,
     Told<sup>o</sup> seven and forty years, counted
 Read so much waist<sup>3</sup> as she cannot embrace
 My mountain belly and my rocky face;
 And all these through her eyes have stopped her ears.

1640-41

The Ode on Cary and Morison The ode, originally a classical form, is a lyric poem in an elevated style, celebrating a lofty theme, a noble personage, or a grand occasion. The Greek poet Pindar wrote many odes for winners of the Olympic games, known as "Great Odes" because of their exalted subject and style. Later, the Roman poet Horace wrote more restrained poems that came to be known as "Lesser Odes." Jonson's Cary-Morison ode comes closer than any other in the language to the lofty style and manner of Pindar, while his "To Penshurst" is in the Horatian style, as is, later, Marvell's "Horatian Ode upon Cromwell's Return from Ireland".

Pindar's odes were designed to be sung by a chorus and often followed a three-part scheme: the chorus moved in one direction while chanting the strophe, reversed direction for the antistrophe, and stood still for the epode. Jonson imitates this pattern with his triple division of "turn," "counterturn," and "stand"—the terms more or less literally translated from the original Greek. His turns and counterturns rhyme in couplets, with line lengths varying in all stanzas according to a uniform scheme; the twelve-line stands follow a more complex but equally strict design. He imitates Pindar also in his moral generalizations and lofty but impersonal praise of the two noble friends. Later in the century, under the influence of Abraham Cowley and under a misapprehension about Pindar's style, odes became more extravagant, more vehement in tone, and more irregular in form.

To the Immortal Memory and Friendship of That Noble Pair, Sir Lucius Cary and Sir H. Morison<sup>1</sup>

The Turn

Brave infant of Saguntum,<sup>2</sup> clear<sup>o</sup> explain
 Thy coming forth in that great year

2. Bay laurel, the tree associated with Apollo, god of poetry.

3. With a pun on "waste," meaning "untillable ground."

1. Henry Morison died in 1629 at the age of twenty. His good friend Lucius Cary (son of Elizabeth Cary, the author of Mariam, p. 1536)

became the second Viscount Falkland. He was known for his learning, and he died fighting for King Charles in the first years of the civil war.

2. Pliny tells the story of an infant born while Sagunto, in Spain, was being assaulted by Hannibal; he dived back into his mother's womb (setting a record for brevity of life) and was buried there.

When the prodigious Hannibal did crown
 His rage, with razing your immortal town.
 5 Thou, looking then about
 Ere thou wert half got out,
 Wise child, didst hastily return
 And mad'st thy mother's womb thine urn. burial vessel
 How summed<sup>0</sup> a circle<sup>3</sup> didst thou leave mankind com-plete
 10 Of deepest lore, could we the center find!

The Counterturn

Did wiser nature draw thee back
 From out the horror of that sack,
 Where shame, faith, honor, and regard of right
 Lay trampled on?—the deeds of death and night
 15 Urged, hurried forth, and hurled
 Upon th' affrighted world?
 Sword, fire, and famine, with fell<sup>0</sup> fury met, fierce
 And all on utmost ruin set:
 As, could they but life's miseries foresee,
 20 No doubt all infants would return like thee.

The Stand

For what is life if measured by the space,
 Not by the act?
 Or masked man, if valued by his face,
 Above his fact?<sup>0</sup> deeds
 25 Here's one outlived his peers
 And told forth fourscore years:
 He vexed time, and busied the whole state,
 Troubled both foes and friends,
 But ever to no ends:
 30 What did this stirrer but die late?<sup>4</sup>
 How well at twenty had he fall'n or stood!
 For three of his four score, he did no good.

He<sup>5</sup> entered well, by virtuous parts,<sup>0</sup> qualities
 Got up and thrived with honest arts:
 35 He purchased friends and fame and honors then,
 And had his noble name advanced with men;
 But, weary of that flight,
 He stooped in all men's sight
 To sordid flatteries, acts of strife,
 40 And sunk in that dead sea of life
 So deep, as he did then death's waters sup;
 But that the cork of title buoyed him up.

3. Emblem of perfection.

5. I.e., another man.

4. Punning on "dilate," meaning "talk endlessly."

The Counterturn

Alas, but Morison fell young;—
 He never fell, thou fall'st,<sup>6</sup> my tongue.
 45 He stood, a soldier, to the last right end,
 A perfect patriot and a noble friend,
 But most a virtuous son.
 All offices<sup>0</sup> were done duties of life
 By him, so ample, full, and round
 50 In weight, in measure, number, sound,
 As, though his age imperfect might appear,
 His life was of humanity the sphere.

The Stand

Go now, and tell out<sup>0</sup> days summed up with fears,
 And make them years;
 55 Produce thy mass of miseries on the stage
 To swell thine age;
 Repeat of things a throng,
 To show thou hast been long,
 Not lived; for life doth her great actions spell,<sup>0</sup> tell over 60 By what was done and wrought
 In season, and so brought
 To light: her measures are, how well
 Each syllab'e<sup>0</sup> answered, and was formed how fair; syllable
 These make the lines of life, and that's her air.<sup>7</sup>

The Turn

65 It is not growing like a tree

 Or standing long an oak, three hundred year,
 To fall a log at last, dry, bald, and sere:<sup>0</sup> withered
 A lily of a day
 70 Is fairer far in May,
 Although it fall and die that night;
 It was the plant and flower of light.
 In small proportions we just beauties see,
 And in short measures life may perfect be.

The Counterturn

75 Call, noble Lucius, then for wine,
 And let thy looks with gladness shine:
 Accept this garland,<sup>8</sup> plant it on thy head,
 And think, nay, know, thy Morison's not dead.
 He leaped the present age,
 80 Possessed with holy rage,<sup>o</sup> inspiration

Slow, Slow, Fresh Fount<sup>1</sup>

Slow, slow, fresh fount, keep time with my salt tears;
 Yet slower, yet, O faintly, gentle springs!
 List to the heavy part the music bears:
 Woe weeps out her division,<sup>2</sup> when she sings.
 5 Droop herbs and flowers;
 Fall grief in showers;
 Our beauties are not ours.
 O, I could still,
 Like melting snow upon some craggy hill,
 10 Drop, drop, drop, drop,
 Since nature's pride is now a withered daffodil.

Queen and Huntress<sup>1</sup>

Queen and huntress, chaste and fair,
 Now the sun is laid to sleep,
 Seated in thy silver chair,
 State in wonted<sup>0</sup> manner keep; accustomed
 5 Hesperus entreats thy light,
 Goddess excellently bright.

 Earth, let not thy envious shade
 Dare itself to interpose;<sup>2</sup>
 Cynthia's shining orb was made
 10 Heaven to clear, when day did close.
 Bless us then with wished sight,
 Goddess excellently bright.

1. From the play Cynthia's Revels (1.2). This lyric is a lament sung by Echo for Narcissus, who was entranced by his own reflection and who was ultimately transformed into a flower.

2. Grief at parting; also a rapid melodic passage of music.

1. Also from Cynthia's Revels (4.3), this song is sung by Hesperus, the evening star, to Cynthia, or Diana, goddess of chastity and the moon—with whom Queen Elizabeth was constantly compared.

2. Eclipses were thought to portend evil.

Lay thy bow of pearl apart,
 And thy crystal-shining quiver;
 15 Give unto the flying hart
 Space to breathe, how short soever.
 Thou that mak'st a day of night,
 Goddess excellently bright.

Still to Be Neat<sup>1</sup>

Still<sup>0</sup> to be neat, still to be dressed always
 As<sup>o</sup> you were going to a feast, as though
 Still to be powdered, still perfumed;
 Lady, it is to be presumed,

To the Memory of My Beloved, The Author, Mr. William Shakespeare, and What He Hath Left Us<sup>1</sup>

To draw no envy, Shakespeare, on thy name,
 Am I thus ample<sup>0</sup> to thy book and fame, copious
 While I confess thy writings to be such
 As neither man nor muse can praise too much.
 5 'Tis true, and all men's suffrage.<sup>0</sup> But these ways admission
 Were not the paths I meant unto thy praise;
 For silliest<sup>0</sup> ignorance on these may light, simplest
 Which, when it sounds at best, but echoes right;
 Or blind affection, which doth ne'er advance
 10 The truth, but gropes, and urgeth all by chance;
 Or crafty malice might pretend this praise,
 And think to ruin where it seemed to raise.
 These are as<sup>o</sup> some infamous bawd or whore as though
 Should praise a matron. What could hurt her more?
 15 But thou art proof against them, and, indeed,
 Above th' ill fortune of them, or the need.

1. Sung in the play Epicene, this song concerns the art of makeup, but also art more generally. Compare Herrick's "Delight in Disorder"

(p. 1656).

1. This poem was prefixed to the first folio of Shakespeare's plays (1623).

I therefore will begin. Soul of the age!
 The applause! Delight! The wonder of our stage!
 My Shakespeare, rise; I will not lodge thee by Chaucer or Spenser, or bid Beaumont lie
 A little further to make thee a room:<sup>2</sup>
 Thou art a monument without a tomb,
 And art alive still while thy book doth live,
 And we have wits to read and praise to give.
 That I not mix thee so, my brain excuses,
 I mean with great, but disproportioned<sup>0</sup> Muses; not com-parable
 For, if I thought my judgment were of years,
 I should commit thee surely with thy peers,
 And tell how far thou didst our Lyly outshine,
 Or sporting Kyd, or Marlowe's mighty line.<sup>3</sup>
 And though thou hadst small Latin and less Greek,<sup>4</sup>
 From thence to honor thee I would not seek<sup>0</sup> lack
 For names, but call forth thund'ring Aeschylus,
 Euripides, and Sophocles to us,
 Pacuvius, Accius, him of Cordova dead,<sup>5</sup>
 To life again, to hear thy buskin<sup>0</sup> tread symbol of tragedy
 And shake a stage; or, when thy socks<sup>0</sup> were on, symbol of comedy
 Leave thee alone for the comparison
 Of all that insolent Greece or haughty Rome
 Sent forth, or since did from their ashes come.
 Triumph, my Britain; thou hast one to show
 To whom all scenes<sup>0</sup> of Europe homage owe. stages
 He was not of an age, but for all time!
 And all the Muses still were in their prime
 When like Apollo<sup>0</sup> he came forth to warm god of poetry
 Our ears, or like a Mercury<sup>0</sup> to charm. god of eloquence
 Nature herself was proud of his designs,
 And joyed to wear the dressing of his lines,
 Which were so richly spun, and woven so fit,
 As, since, she will vouchsafe<sup>0</sup> no other wit: grant
 The merry Greek, tart Aristophanes,
 Neat Terence, witty Plautus<sup>6</sup> now not please,
 But antiquated and deserted lie,
 As they were not of Nature's family.
 Yet must I not give nature all; thy art,
 My gentle Shakespeare, must enjoy a part.
 For though the poet's matter<sup>0</sup> nature be, subject matter
 His art doth give the fashion;<sup>0</sup> and that he form, style
 Who casts<sup>0</sup> to write a living line must sweat undertakes
 (Such as thine are) and strike the second heat
 Upon the Muses' anvil; turn the same,

2. Chaucer, Spenser, and Francis Beaumont were buried in Westminster Abbey; Shakespeare, in Stratford.

3. John Lyly, Thomas Kyd, and Christopher Marlowe were Elizabethan dramatists contemporary or nearly contemporary with Shakespeare.

4. Shakespeare's Latin was pretty good, but Jonson is judging by the standard of his own remarkable scholarship.

5. Marcus Pacuvius, Lucius Accius (2nd century B.C.E.), and "him of Cordova," Seneca the Younger (1st century c.E.), were Latin tragedians. Seneca's tragedies had a large influence on Elizabethan revenge tragedy.

6. Aristophanes, an ancient Greek satirist and writer of comedy; Terence and Plautus (2nd and 3rd centuries B.C.E.), Roman writers of comedy.

And himself with it, that he thinks to frame,
 Or for<sup>o</sup> the laurel he may gain a scorn;
 For a good poet's made as well as born,
 65 And such wert thou. Look how the father's face
 Lives in his issue;<sup>o</sup> even so the race
 Of Shakespeare's mind and manners brightly shines
 In his well-turned and true-filed lines,
 In each of which he seems to shake a lance,<sup>7</sup>
 70 As brandished at the eyes of ignorance.
 Sweet swan of Avon, what a sight it were
 To see thee in our waters yet appear,
 And make those flights upon the banks of Thames
 That so did take Eliza and our James!<sup>8</sup>
 75 But stay; I see thee in the hemisphere
 Advanced and made a constellation there!<sup>9</sup>
 Shine forth, thou star of poets, and with rage
 Or influence<sup>1</sup> chide or cheer the drooping stage,
 Which, since thy flight from hence, hath mourned like night,
 so And despairs day, but for thy volume's light.

Ode to Himself<sup>1</sup>

Come, leave the loathed stage,
 And the more loathsome age,
 Where pride and impudence, in faction knit,
 Usurp the chair of wit,
 5 Indicting and arraigning every day
 Something they call a play.
 Let their fastidious, vain
 Commission of the brain
 Run on and rage, sweat, censure, and condemn:
 10 They were not made for thee, less thou for them.

 Say that thou pour'st them wheat,
 And they will acorns eat;
 'Twere simple<sup>o</sup> fury still thyself to waste
 On such as have no taste!
 15 To offer them a surfeit of pure bread,
 Whose appetites are dead!
 No, give them grains their fill,
 Husks, draff to drink, and swill:<sup>2</sup>
 If they love lees,<sup>o</sup> and leave the lusty wine,
 20 Envy them not; their palate's with the swine.

Timber, or Discoveries Published posthumously in the Works (1640-41), Jonson's observations on literary matters had their origins in a commonplace book that culled extracts from Sir Philip Sidney's Defense of Poesy, from major classical theorists like Aristotle, Cicero, Seneca, Quintilian, and Horace; and from recent Continental critics. Jonson digested all this under various topics, setting it forth in his own voice and intermixing trenchant observations on his own contemporaries. Among his major precepts are that the essence of poetry is its "fiction" or imitation; that natural talent is the major quality needed in a poet, though "art" and practice are also necessary; that one learns to become a poet by first imitating a single model, that good sense should have priority over style; and that the language of poetry should be clear, strong, and succinct. In the tradition of the Renaissance humanists, Jonson insists that the good poet is also the good man, who properly comprehends encyclopedic wisdom in himself, fitting him to be a counselor to rulers. Despite its disjointed form, Timber is the most important English commentary on poetics between Sidney and Thomas Hobbes.

From Timber,<sup>1</sup> or Discoveries

Poetry in this latter age hath proved but a mean mistress to such as have wholly addicted themselves to her, or given their names up to her family. They who have but saluted her on the by, and now and then tendered their visits, she hath done much for, and advanced in the way of their own professions (both the law and the gospel)<sup>2</sup> beyond all they could have hoped, or done for themselves without her favor. Wherein she doth emulate the judicious but preposterous bounty of the times' grandees,<sup>3</sup> who accumulate all they can upon the parasite or freshman<sup>4</sup> in their friendship, but think an old client or honest servant bound by his place to write and starve.

Indeed, the multitude commend writers as they do fencers or wrestlers, who, if they come in robustiously and put for it with a deal of violence, are received for the braver fellows; when many times their own rudeness is a cause of their disgrace, and a slight touch of their adversary gives all that boisterous force the foil. But in these things the unskilful are naturally deceived, and judging wholly by the bulk think rude things greater than polished, and scattered more numerous than composed.<sup>5</sup> Nor think this only to be true in the sordid multitude, but the neater sort of our gallants; for all are the multitude, only they differ in clothes, not in judgment or understanding.

I remember the players have often mentioned it as an honor to Shakespeare that in his writing, whatsoever he penned, he never blotted out a line. My answer hath been, Would he had blotted a thousand: which they thought a malevolent speech. I had not told posterity this, but for their ignorance who choose that circumstance to commend their friend by wherein he most faulted, and to justify mine own candor, for I loved the man and do honor his memory, on this side idolatry, as much as any. He was indeed honest and of an open and free nature, had an excellent fancy, brave notions, and gentle expressions, wherein he flowed with that facility that sometimes it was necessary he should be stopped: Suffiaminandus erat, as Augustus said of Haterius.<sup>6</sup> His wit was in his own power; would the rule of it had been so too. Many times he fell into those things could not escape laughter, as when he said in the person of Caesar, one speaking to him: "Caesar, thou dost me wrong," he replied: "Caesar did never wrong but with just cause," and such like, which were ridiculous.<sup>7</sup> But he redeemed his vices with his virtues. There was ever more in him to be praised than to be pardoned.

For a man to write well, there are required three necessities: to read the best authors, observe the best speakers, and much exercise of his own style.<sup>8</sup> In style, to consider what ought to be written, and after what manner. He must first think and excogitate his matter, then choose his words and examine the weight of either. Then take care, in placing and ranking both matter and words, that the composition be comely; and to do this with diligence and often. No matter how slow the style be at first, so it be labored<sup>9</sup> and accurate; seek the best, and be not glad of the forward conceits<sup>1</sup> or first words that offer themselves to us; but judge of what we invent, and order what we approve. Repeat often what we have formerly written; which, beside that it helps the consequence and makes the juncture better, it quickens the heat of imagination, that often cools in the time of setting down, and gives it new strength, as if it grew lustier by the going back. As we see in the contention of leaping, they jump farthest that fetch their race largest; or as in throwing a dart or javelin, we force back our arms to make our loose<sup>2</sup> the stronger. Yet if we have a fair gale of wind, I forbid not the steering out of our sail, so the favor of the gale deceive us not. For all that we invent doth please us in the conception or birth, else we would never set it down. But the safest is to return to our judgment and handle over again those things the easiness of which might make them justly suspected. So did the best writers in their beginnings; they imposed upon themselves care and industry. They did nothing rashly. They obtained first to write well, and then custom made it easy and a habit. By little and little their matter showed itself to them more plentifully, their words answered, their composition followed; and all, as in a well-ordered family, presented itself in the place. So that the sum of all is: Ready writing makes not good writing, but good writing brings on ready writing.

Yet when we think we have got the faculty, it is even then good to resist it, as to give a horse a check sometimes with [his] bit, which doth not so much stop his course as stir his mettle. Again, whither a man's genius is best able to reach, thither it should more and more contend, lift, and dilate itself; as men of low stature raise themselves on their toes, and so oftentimes get even, if not eminent. Besides, as it is fit for grown and able writers to stand of themselves and work with their own strength, to trust and endeavor by their own faculties; so it is fit for the beginner and learner to study others, and the best. For the mind and memory are more sharply exercised in comprehending another man's things than our own; and such as accustom themselves and are familiar with the best authors shall ever and anon find somewhat of them in themselves; and in the expression of their minds, even when they feel it not, be able to utter something like theirs, which hath an authority above their own. Nay, sometimes it is the reward of a man's study, the praise of quoting another man fitly. And though a man be more prone and able for one kind of writing than another, yet he must exercise all. For as in an instrument, so in style, there must be a harmony and consent of parts.

Custom is the most certain mistress of language, as the public stamp makes the current money.<sup>3</sup> But we must not be too frequent with the mint, every day coining; nor fetch words from the extreme and utmost ages, since the chief virtue of a style is perspicuity, and nothing so vicious in it as to need an interpreter. Words borrowed of antiquity do lend a kind of majesty to style, and are not without their delight sometimes. For they have the authority of years, and out of their intermission do win to themselves a kind of grace-like newness. But the eldest of the present and newest of the past language is the best. For what was the ancient language, which some men so dote upon, but the ancient custom? Yet when I name custom, I understand not the vulgar custom, for that were a precept no less dangerous to language than life, if we should speak or live after the manners of the vulgar. But that I call custom of speech which is the consent of the learned, as custom of life which is the consent of the good. Virgil was most loving of antiquity; yet how rarely doth he insert aquai and pictai!<sup>4</sup> Lucretius is scabrous and rough in these; he seeks them, as some do Chaucerisms with us, which were better expunged and banished. Some words are to be culled out for ornament and color, as we gather flowers to strew houses or make garlands; but they are better when they grow to our style as in a meadow, where, though the mere grass and greenness delights, yet the variety of flowers doth heighten and beautify. Marry, we must not play or riot too much with them, as in paronomasias;<sup>5</sup> nor use too swelling or ill-sounding words, quae per salebras altaque saxa cadunt.<sup>6</sup> It is true, there is no sound but shall find some lovers, as the bitterest confections are grateful to some palates. Our composition must be more accurate in the beginning and end than in the midst, and in the end more than in the beginning; for through the midst the stream bears us. And this is attained by custom more than care or diligence. We must express readily and fully, not profusely. There is difference between a liberal and a prodigal hand. As it is a great point of art, when our matter requires it, to enlarge and veer out all sail, so to take it in and contract it is of no less praise when the argument doth ask it. Either of them hath their fitness in the place. A good man always profits by his endeavor, by his help; yea, when he is absent; nay, when he is dead, by his example and memory. So good authors in their style.

A strict and succinct style is that where you can take away nothing without loss, and that loss to be manifest. The brief style is that which expresseth much in little. The concise style, which expresseth not enough, but leaves somewhat to be understood. The abrupt style, which hath many breaches, and doth not seem to end but fall. The congruent and harmonious fitting of parts in a sentence hath almost the fastening and force of knitting and connection, as in stones well squared, which will rise strong a great way without mortar. Periods<sup>7</sup> are beautiful when they are not too long, for so they have their strength too, as in a pike or javelin. As we must take the care that our words and sense be clear, so if the obscurity happen through the hearer's or reader's want of understanding, I am not to answer for them, no more than for their not listening or marking;<sup>8</sup> I must neither find them ears nor mind. But a man cannot put a word so in sense but something about it will illustrate it, if the writer understand himself. For order helps much to perspicuity, as confusion hurts. Rectitudo lucem adfert; obliquitas et circumductio offuscet.<sup>9</sup> We should therefore speak what we can the nearest way, so as we keep our gait, not leap; for too short may as well not be let into the memory as too long not kept in. Whatsoever loseth the grace and clearness converts into a riddle; the obscurity is marked, but not the value. That perisheth, and is passed by, like the pearl in the fable.<sup>1</sup> Our style should be like a skein of silk, to be carried and found by the right thread, not raveled and perplexed; then all is a knot, a heap.

MARY WROTH

1587—1651?

Lady Mary Wroth was the most prolific, self-conscious, and impressive female author of the Jacobean era. Her published work (1621) include two firsts for an Englishwoman: a 558-page romance, The Countess of Montgomery's Urania, which includes more than fifty poems, and appended to it a Petrarchan lyric sequence that had circulated some years in manuscript, 103 sonnets and elegant songs titled Pamphilia to Amphilanthus. Wroth left unpublished a very long but unfinished continuation of the Urania and a pastoral drama, Love's Victory, also a first for an Englishwoman. Her achievement was fostered by her strong sense of identity as a Sidney, heir to the literary talent and cultural role of her famous uncle Sir Philip Sidney, her famous aunt Mary Sidney Herbert, Countess of Pembroke, who may have served as mentor to her; and her father Robert Sidney, Viscount Lisle, author of a recently discovered sonnet sequence. But she used that heritage transgressively to replace heroes with heroines in genres employed by the male Sidney authors—notably Philip Sidney's Astrophil and Stella and The Countess of Pembroke's Arcadia—transforming their gender politics and exploring the poetics and situation of women writers.

As Robert Sidney's eldest daughter, she lived and was educated at Penshurst, the Sidney country house celebrated by Ben Jonson, and was often at her aunt's "little college" at Wilton. She danced at court in The Masque of Blackness and perhaps in other masques; she was married (incompatibly) at age seventeen to Sir Robert Wroth of Durrance and Loughton Manor, whose office it was to facilitate the king's hunting; and she was patron to several poets, including Jonson. He celebrated her in two epigrams and in a verse letter honoring her husband, dedicated his great comedy The Alchemist to her, and claimed in his only sonnet (p. 1438) that the artistry and erotic power of her sonnets had made him "a better lover, and much better poet." After her husband's death she carried on a long-standing love affair with her married first cousin, William Herbert, Earl of Pembroke, himself a poet, a powerful courtier, and a patron of the theater and of literature. That relationship produced two children and occasioned some scandal.

The significant names in the title of Wroth's Petrarchan sequence, Pamphilia ("all-loving") to Am-philanthus ("lover of two"), are from characters in her romance who at times shadow Wroth and her lover Pembroke. The Petrarchan lyric sequence had long served as the major genre for analyzing a male lover's passions, frustrations, and fantasies (and sometimes his career anxieties). So although the sonnet sequence was becoming passe by Wroth's time, it was an obvious choice for a woman poet undertaking the construction of subjectivity in a female lover-speaker. Wroth does not, however, simply reverse roles. Pamphilia addresses very few sonnets to Amphilanthus and seldom assumes the Petrarchan lover's position of abject servitude to a cruel beloved. Instead, she proclaims subjection to Cupid, usually identified with the force of her own desire. This radical revision identifies female desire as the source and center of the love relationship and celebrates the woman lover-poet's movement from the bondage of chaotic passion to the freedom of self-chosen constancy.

Wroth's romance, Urania, breaks the romance convention of a plot centered on courtship, portraying instead married heroines and their love relationships, both inside and outside of marriage. It is in part an idealizing fantasy: the principal characters are queens, kings, and emperors, with the power and comparative freedom such positions allow. However, the landscape is not Arcadia or Fairyland but war-torn Europe and Asia. The romance fantasy, with Spenserian symbolic places and knights fighting evil tyrants and monsters, only partially overlays a rigidly patriarchal Jacobean world rife with rape, incest, arranged or forced marriages, jealous husbands, tortured women, and endangered children. Those perils, affecting all women from shepherdesses to queens, are rendered in large part through the numerous stories interpolated in romance fashion within the principal plots. The male heroes are courageous fighters and attractive lovers, but all are flawed by inconstancy. For Wroth, true heroism consists of integrity in love despite social constraints and psychological pressures. A few women are heroic in this sense: Pamphilia, the good queen and pattern of constancy; Urania, the wise counselor who wins self-knowledge and makes wise choices in love; and Veralinda, who weds her true lover after great trials. Almost all Wroth's female characters define themselves through storytelling and making poems. The women compose twice as many of the poems as the men do. Pamphilia, Wroth's surrogate, is singled out as a poet by vocation, both by the number of her poems and by their recognized excellence.

Many contemporaries assumed that the Urania was a scandalous roman a clef, alluding not only to Sidney-Pembroke-Wroth affairs but to notable personages of the Jacobean court. A public outcry from one of them, Lord Edward Denny, elicited a spirited satiric response from Wroth. Although she suggested to the king's minister Buckingham that she withdraw the work from circulation, there is no evidence that she actually did so. The uproar, however, may have discouraged her from publishing part 2 of the romance and her pastoral drama.

When the spring began to appear like the welcome messenger of summer, one sweet (and in that more sweet) morning, after Aurora<sup>2</sup> had called all careful eyes to attend the day, forth came the fair shepherdess Urania<sup>3</sup> (fair indeed; yet that far too mean a title for her, who for beauty deserved the highest style<sup>4</sup> could be given by best-knowing judgments). Into the mead<sup>5</sup> she came, where usually she drove her flocks to feed, whose leaping and wantonness showed they were proud of such a guide: but she, whose sad thoughts led her to another manner of spending her time, made her soon leave them, and follow her late-begun custom; which was (while they delighted themselves) to sit under some shade, bewailing her misfortune; while they fed, to feed upon her own sorrow and tears, which at this time she began again to summon, sitting down under the shade of a well-spread beech; the ground (then blest) and the tree, with full and fine-leaved branches, growing proud to bear and shadow such perfections. But she regarding nothing, in comparison of her woe, thus proceeded in her grief: "Alas Urania," said she (the true servant to misfortune), "of any misery that can befall woman, is not this the most and greatest which thou art fallen into? Can there be any near the unhappiness of being ignorant, and that in the highest kind, not being certain of mine own estate or birth? Why was I not still continued in the belief I was, as I appear, a shepherdess, and daughter to a shepherd? My ambition then went no higher than this estate, now flies it to a knowledge; then was I contented, now perplexed. O ignorance, can thy dullness yet procure so sharp a pain? and that such a thought as makes me now aspire unto knowledge? How did I joy in this poor life, being quiet! blessed in the love of those I took for parents, but now by them I know the contrary, and by that knowledge, now to know myself. Miserable Urania, worse art thou now than these thy lambs; for they know their dams, while thou dost live unknown of any." By this were others come into that mead with their flocks: but she, esteeming her sorrowing thoughts her best and choicest company, left that place, taking a little path which brought her to the further side of the plain, to the foot of the rocks, speaking as she went these lines, her eyes fixed upon the ground, her very soul turned into mourning.

Unseen, unknown, I here alone complain
 To rocks, to hills, to meadows, and to springs,
 Which can no help return to ease my pain,
 But back my sorrows the sad Echo<sup>6</sup> brings.

5 Thus still increasing are my woes to me,

1. Wroth's title echoes The Countess of Pembroke's Arcadia, the romance written by her uncle Sir Philip Sidney. The countess of Montgomery was Susan (Vere) Herbert, Wroth's close friend and the sister-in-law of her lover, William Herbert. The opening of Urania is meant to be compared to (and contrasted with) the opening of the Arcadia, in which two shepherds lament the absence of their beloved, the mysterious shepherdess Urania.

2. The Greek goddess of the dawn.

3. The name has multiple associations: the Muse of astronomy, the Muse of Christian poetry, a surname for Aphrodite (Venus) designating heavenly beauty. It was also an honorific commonly bestowed on Wroth's aunt, Mary Sidney, Countess of Pembroke. In Wroth's romance, Urania is a founding adopted by shepherds but actually the daughter of the king of Naples: after losing one lover and gaining another, she marries, becomes a matriarch, and is throughout (as in this episode) a counselor of others.

4. Title.

5. Meadow.

6. In classical mythology Echo was a wood nymph who pined away in unrequited love for the handsome Narcissus until only her voice remained (Ovid, Metamorphoses 3).

Doubly resounded by that moanful voice,
 Which seems to second me in misery,
 And answer gives like friend of mine own choice.
 Thus only she doth my companion prove,
 10 The others silently do offer ease.
 But those that grieve, a grieving note do love;
 Pleasures to dying eyes bring but disease:
 And such am I, who daily ending live,
 Wailing a state which can no comfort give.

In this passion she went on, till she came to the foot of a great rock, she thinking of nothing less than ease, sought how she might ascend it; hoping there to pass away her time more peaceably with loneliness, though not to find least respite from her sorrow, which so dearly she did value, as by no means she would impart it to any. The way was hard, though by some windings making the ascent pleasing. Having attained the top, she saw under some hollow trees the entry into the rock: she fearing nothing but the continuance of her ignorance, went in; where she found a pretty room, as if that stony place had yet in pity, given leave for such perfections to come into the heart as chiefest, and most beloved place, because most loving. The place was not unlike the ancient (or the descriptions of ancient) hermitages, instead of hangings, covered and lined with ivy, disdaining aught else should come there, that being in such perfection. This richness in Nature's plenty made her stay to behold it, and almost grudge the pleasant fullness of content that place might have, if sensible, while she must know to taste of torments. As she was thus in passion mixed with pain, throwing her eyes as wildly as timorous lovers do for fear of discovery, she perceived a little light, and such a one, as a chink doth oft discover to our sights. She curious to see what this was, with her delicate hands put the natural ornament aside, discerning a little door, which she putting from her, passed through it into another room, like the first in all proportion; but in the midst there was a square stone, like to a pretty table, and on it a wax candle burning; and by that a paper,<sup>7</sup> which had suffered itself patiently to receive the discovering of so much of it, as presented this sonnet (as it seemed newly written) to her sight.

Here all alone in silence might I mourn:
 But how can silence be where sorrows flow?
 Sighs with complaints have poorer pains outworn;
 But broken hearts can only true grief show.
 5 Drops of my dearest blood shall let Love know
 Such tears for her I shed, yet still do burn,
 As no spring can quench least part of my woe,
 Till this live earth, again to earth do turn.
 Hateful all thought of comfort is to me,
 10 Despised day, let me still night possess;
 Let me all torments feel in their excess,
 And but this light allow my state to see.
 Which still doth waste, and wasting as this light,
 Are my sad days unto eternal night.

7. The episode alludes to an episode in Sidney's Old Arcadia in which one of the heroines, Cleophila, enters a darkened cave illuminated by a single candle and finds a poem on top of a stone table.

"Alas Urania!" sighed she. "How well do these words, this place, and all agree with thy fortune? Sure, poor soul, thou wert here appointed to spend thy days, and these rooms ordained to keep thy tortures in; none being assuredly so matchlessly unfortunate."

Turning from the table, she discerned in the room a bed of boughs, and on it a man lying, deprived of outward sense, as she thought, and of life, as she at first did fear, which struck her into a great amazement: yet having a brave spirit, though shadowed under a mean habit,<sup>8</sup> she stepped unto him, whom she found not dead, but laid upon his back, his head a little to her wards,<sup>9</sup> his arms folded on his breast, hair long, and beard disordered, manifesting all care;<sup>1</sup> but care itself had left him: curiousness thus far afforded him, as to be perfectly discerned the most exact piece of misery; apparel he had suitable to the habitation, which was a long gray<sup>2</sup> robe. This grieveful spectacle did much amaze the sweet and tender-hearted shepherdess; especially, when she perceived (as she might by the help of the candle) the tears which distilled from his eyes; who seeming the image of death, yet had this sign of worldly sorrow, the drops falling in that abundance, as if there were a kind strife among them, to rid their master first of that burdensome<sup>3</sup> carriage; or else meaning to make a flood, and so drown their woeful patient in his own sorrow, who yet lay still, but then fetching a deep groan from the profoundest part of his soul, he said:

"Miserable Perissus,<sup>4</sup> canst thou thus live, knowing she that gave thee life is gone? Gone, O me! and with her all my joy departed. Wilt thou (unblessed creature) lie here complaining for her death, and know she died for thee? Let truth and shame make thee do something worthy of such a love, ending thy days like thyself, and one fit to be her servant. But that I must not do: then thus remain and foster storms, still to torment thy wretched soul withall, since all are little, and too too little for such a loss. O dear Limena,<sup>5</sup> loving Limena, worthy Limena, and more rare, constant Limena: perfections delicately feigned to be in women were verified in thee, was such worthiness framed only to be wondered at by the best, but given as a prey to base and unworthy jealousy? When were all worthy parts joined in one, but in thee my best Limena? Yet all these grown subject to a creature ignorant of all but ill; like unto a fool, who in a dark cave, that hath but one way to get out, having a candle, but not the understanding what good it doth him, puts it out: this ignorant wretch not being able to comprehend thy virtues, did so by thee in thy murder, putting out the world's light, and men's admiration: Limena, Limena, O my Limena."

With that he fell from complaining into such a passion, as weeping and crying were never in so woeful a perfection, as now in him; which brought as deserved a compassion from the excellent shepherdess, who already had her heart so tempered with grief, as that it was apt to take any impression that it would come to seal withal. Yet taking a brave courage to her, she stepped unto him, kneeling down by his side, and gently pulling him by the arm, she thus spoke.

"Sir," said she, "having heard some part of your sorrows, they have not only made me truly pity you, but wonder at you; since if you have lost so great a treasure, you should not lie thus leaving her and your love unrevenged, suffering her murderers to live, while you lie here complaining; and if such perfections be dead in her, why make you not the phoenix<sup>6</sup> of your deeds live again, as to new life raised out of the revenge you should take on them? Then were her end satisfied, and you deservedly accounted worthy of her favor, if she were so worthy as you say."

"If she were, O God," cried out Perissus, "what devilish spirit art thou, that thus dost come to torture me? But now I see you are a woman; and therefore not much to be marked, and less resisted: but if you know charity, I pray now practice it, and leave me who am afflicted sufficiently without your company; or if you will stay, discourse not to me."

"Neither of these will I do," said she.

"If you be then," said he, "some Fury<sup>7</sup> of purpose sent to vex me, use your force to the uttermost in martyring me; for never was there a fitter subject, then the heart of poor Perissus is."

"I am no Fury," replied the divine Urania, "nor hither come to trouble you, but by accident lighted on this place; my cruel hap being such, as only the like can give me content, while the solitariness of this like cave might give me quiet, though not ease. Seeking for such a one, I happened hither; and this is the true cause of my being here, though now I would use it to a better end if I might: Wherefore favor me with the knowledge of your grief; which heard, it may be I shall give you some counsel, and comfort in your sorrow."

"Cursed may I be," cried he, "if ever I take comfort, having such cause of mourning: but because you are, or seem to be afflicted, I will not refuse to satisfy your demand, but tell you the saddest story that ever was rehearsed by dying man to living woman, and such a one, as I fear will fasten too much sadness in you; yet should I deny it, I were to blame, being so well known to these senseless places; as were they sensible of sorrow, they would condole, or else amazed at such cruelty stand dumb as they do, to find that man should be so inhuman."

SONG<sup>8</sup>

Love what art thou? A vain thought
 In our minds by fancy wrought.
 Idle smiles did thee beget,
 While fond wishes made the net
 5 Which so many fools have caught.

Love what art thou? Light and fair,
 Fresh as morning, clear as th' air.
 But too soon thy evening change
 Makes thy worth with coldness range;
 10 Still thy joy is mixed with care.

Love what art thou? A sweet flower
 Once full blown,<sup>0</sup> dead in an hour. in full bloom.

6. Mythical bird said to live five hundred years, then expire in flames, out of which a new phoenix arose. Only one phoenix existed at a time.

7. Goddess of vengeance.

8. This song, one of a group of eclogues that marks the conclusion of Book 1 of the Urania, is sung to a shepherdess by a shepherd, "being, as it seemed, fallen out with Love."

Dust in wind as staid remains
 As thy pleasure or our gains,
 15 If thy humor<sup>0</sup> change, to lour.<sup>o</sup> whim/frown

Love what art thou? Childish, vain,
 Firm as bubbles made by rain,
 Wantonness thy greatest pride.
 These foul faults thy virtues hide—
 20 But babes can no staidness gain.

Love what art thou? Causeless cursed,
 Yet alas these not the worst:
 Much more of thee may be said.
 But thy law I once obeyed,
 25 Therefore say no more at first.

From Pamphilia to Amphilanthus<sup>1</sup>

1

When night's black mantle could most darkness prove,
 And sleep, death's image, did my senses hire
 From knowledge of myself, then thoughts did move
 Swifter than those most swiftness need require.
 5 In sleep, a chariot drawn by winged desire
 I saw, where sat bright Venus, Queen of Love,
 And at her feet, her son,<sup>o</sup> still adding fire Cupid
 To burning hearts, which she did hold above.
 But one heart flaming more than all the rest
 10 The goddess held, and put it to my breast.
 "Dear son, now shut,"<sup>2</sup> said she: "thus must we win."
 He her obeyed, and martyred my poor heart.
 I, waking, hoped as dreams it would depart:
 Yet since, O me, a lover I have been.

16

Am I thus conquered? Have I lost the powers
 That to withstand, which joys to ruin me?<sup>3</sup>
 Must I be still while it my strength devours,
 And captive leads me prisoner, bound, unfree?

1. Pamphilia ("all-loving") is the protagonist of Urania. Her unfaithful beloved's name means "lover of two." These characters are first cousins, like Mary Wroth and William Herbert; their names adumbrate the main theme of both the romance and the appended sonnet sequence, constancy in the face of unfaithfulness.

Pamphilia to Amphilanthus is broken into several separately numbered series (the first of which includes forty-eight sonnets, with songs inserted after every sixth sonnet except the last). In Josephine A. Roberts's edition of Wroth's poetry, the poems are numbered consecutively throughout the work; we have adopted this convenient renumbering.

2. I.e., shut the burning heart into Pamphilia's breast.

3. I.e., have I lost the power to withstand love ("That"), which takes pleasure in ruining me?

- 5 Love first shall leave men's fancies to them free,<sup>4</sup>
 Desire shall quench Love's flames, spring hate sweet showers,
 Love shall loose all his darts, have sight, and see
 His shame, and wishings hinder happy hours.
 Why should we not Love's purblind<sup>0</sup> charms resist? completely blind
 10 Must we be servile, doing what he list?<sup>0</sup> what pleases him
 No, seek some host to harbor thee: I fly
 Thy babish tricks, and freedom do profess.
 But O my hurt makes my lost heart confess
 I love, and must: So farewell liberty.

28

SONG<sup>5</sup>

- Sweetest love, return again,
 Make not too long stay:
 Killing mirth and forcing pain,
 Sorrow leading way.
 5 Let us not thus parted be:
 Love and absence ne'er agree.

 But since you must needs depart,
 And me hapless leave,
 In your journey take my heart,
 10 Which will not deceive.
 Yours it is, to you it flies,
 Joying in those loved eyes.

 So in part we shall not part,
 Though we absent be:
 15 Time, nor place, nor greatest smart
 Shall my bands make free.
 Tied I am, yet think it gain:
 In such knots I feel no pain.

 But can I live, having lost
 20 Chiefest part of me?
 Heart is fled, and sight is crossed,
 These my fortunes be.
 Yet dear heart go, soon return:
 As good there as here to burn.

39

- Take heed mine eyes, how you your looks do cast
 Lest they betray my heart's most secret thought,
 Be true unto yourselves, for nothing's bought
 More dear than doubt which brings a lover's fast.<sup>6</sup>
 5 Catch you all watching eyes, ere they be past,
 Or take yours fixed where your best love hath sought

4. I.e., this and the other impossibilities that follow will occur before I surrender to love.
 5. The poem seems to revise one of Donne's songs:

"Sweetest love, I do not go," p. 1269.

6. Lack of nourishment for love, due to jealousy ("doubt").

The pride of your desires; let them be taught
 Their faults for shame, they could no truer last.
 Then look, and look with joy for conquest won
 10 Of those that searched your hurt in double kind;<sup>7</sup>
 So you kept safe, let them themselves look blind,
 Watch, gaze, and mark till they to madness run,
 While you, mine eyes enjoy full sight of love
 Contented that such happinesses move.

40

False hope which feeds but to destroy, and spill<sup>8</sup>
 What it first breeds; unnatural to the birth
 Of thine own womb; conceiving but to kill,
 And plenty gives to make the greater dearth,<sup>9</sup>
 5 So tyrants do who falsely ruling earth
 Outwardly grace them,<sup>1</sup> and with profits fill,
 Advance those who appointed are to death,
 To make their greater fall to please their will.
 Thus shadow<sup>0</sup> they their wicked vile intent, conceal
 10 Coloring evil with a show of good
 While in fair shows their malice so is spent;<sup>2</sup>
 Hope kills the heart, and tyrants shed the blood.
 For hope deluding brings us to the pride
 Of our desires the farther down to slide.

68

My pain, still smothered in my grieved breast,
 Seeks for some ease, yet cannot passage find
 To be discharged of this unwelcome guest:
 When most I strive, most fast his burdens bind,
 5 Like to a ship on Goodwin's<sup>3</sup> cast by wind,
 The more she strives, more deep in sand is pressed,
 Till she be lost; so am I, in this kind,<sup>0</sup> manner
 Sunk, and devoured, and swallowed by unrest,
 Lost, shipwrecked, spoiled, debarred of smallest hope,
 10 Nothing of pleasure left; save thoughts have scope,
 Which wander may. Go then, my thoughts, and cry
 "Hope's perished, love tempest-beaten, joy lost:
 Killing despair hath all these blessings crossed."
 Yet faith still cries, "love will not falsify."

SONG

Love a child is ever crying,
 Please him, and he straight is flying;

7. Those who spy and pry with their two eyes, to discover my secret love.

8. Kill. The image is of miscarriage or infanticide.

9. Gives abundance only to make scarcity more painful afterward.

1. I.e., those whom they mean to destroy (see next line).

2. Expended, employed. "Shows": appearances.

3. Goodwin Sands, a line of shoals at the entrance to the Strait of Dover.

Give him, he the more is craving,
Never satisfied with having.

5 His desires have no measure,
Endless folly is his treasure;
What he promiseth he breaketh:
Trust not one word that he speaketh.

He vows nothing but false matter,
10 And to cozen<sup>0</sup> you he'll flatter. cheat
Let him gain the hand,<sup>0</sup> he'll leave you, the u-pper hand
And still glory to deceive you.

He will triumph in your wailing,
And yet cause be of your failing:
15 These his virtues are, and slighter
Are his gifts, his favors lighter.

Feathers are as firm in staying,
Wolves no fiercer in their preying.
As a child then leave him crying,
20 Nor seek him, so given to flying.

From A Crown of Sonnets Dedicated to Love<sup>4</sup>

77

In this strange labyrinth how shall I turn?
Ways<sup>0</sup> are on all sides, while the way I miss: paths
If to the right hand, there in love I burn;
Let me go forward, therein danger is;
5 If to the left, suspicion hinders bliss,
Let me<sup>o</sup> turn back, shame cries I ought return, if I
Nor faint though crosses<sup>5</sup> with my fortunes kiss;
Stand still is harder, although sure to mourn.<sup>6</sup>
Then let me take the right- or left-hand way;
10 Go forward, or stand still, or back retire;
I must these doubts endure without allay<sup>0</sup> abatement
Or help, but travail find for my best hire.<sup>7</sup>
Yet that which most my troubled sense doth move
Is to leave all, and take the thread of love.<sup>8</sup>

4. The "crown" is a difficult poetic form (originally Italian and usually known by its Italian name, corona) in which the last line of each poem serves as the first line of the next, until a circle is completed by the last line of the final poem, which is the same as the first line of the first one. The number of poems varies from seven to (as in Wroth's corona) fourteen.

In contrast to the errant-child Cupid of the preceding part of the sequence, Love in this series is a mature and just monarch, whose true service ennobles lovers. The crown is in part a recantation of the harsh judgment of love earlier in the sequence. But Pamphilia relapses into melancholy afterward.

5. Troubles, adversity. "Faint": lose heart.

6. I.e., certain to make me mourn.

7. I.e., I find travail (with a pun on "travel," the spelling in the 1621 edition) is my only reward.

8. Ariadne gave Theseus a thread to follow so as to find his way out of the Labyrinth, after killing the Minotaur at its center.

103

My muse now happy, lay thyself to rest,
 Sleep in the quiet of a faithful love,
 Write you no more, but let these fancies move
 Some other hearts, wake not to new unrest.
 5 But if you study, be those thoughts addressed
 To truth, which shall eternal goodness prove;
 Enjoying of true joy, the most, and best,
 The endless gain which never will remove.
 Leave the discourse of Venus and her son
 10 To young beginners,<sup>9</sup> and their brains inspire
 With stories of great love, and from that fire
 Get heat to write the fortunes they have won.
 And thus leave off, what's past shows you can love,
 Now let your constancy your honor prove.<sup>1</sup>

1621

9. In Neoplatonic love philosophy, "beginners" in love are attracted to physical beauty and sensory delights, while more advanced lovers love virtue and spiritual beauty. Writing love sonnets is traditionally the business of young lovers.

1. In a symbolic episode in the Urania, Pamphilia embodies the virtue of Constancy; she accepts the keys to the Throne of Love, "at which instant Constancy vanished as metamorphosing herself into her breast" (1.1.141).

JOHN WEBSTER

1580?—1625?

John Webster's fame rests on two remarkable tragedies, both set in Boman Catholic Italy and both evoking the common Jacobean stereotype of that land as a place of sophisticated corruption. Both have at their center bold and brave heroines who choose for themselves in love and refuse to submit to male authority. The White Devil, first performed in 1608, is based on events that took place in Italy in 1581—85; in this play Vittoria Corombona boldly defies a courtroom full of corrupt magistrates who convict her of adultery and murder. The Duchess of Malfi, first performed in 1614 and published in 1623, is based on an Italian novella. In this play, the spirited ruler of Malfi secretly marries her steward for love, defying her brothers, a duke and a cardinal, who demand that she remain a widow. Their dark motives include greed for her fortune, overweening pride in their noble blood, and incestuous desire. The play weds sublime poetry and gothic horror in the devious machinations set in motion against the duchess by her brothers' melancholy spy Bosola, in the macabre mental and physical torments to which they subject her, in the desperate lunatic ravings of the duke after having her strangled, and in the final scenes in which the stage is littered with the slaughtered bodies of all the principal characters. Webster's portrayal of the independent spirit and courage of the duchess invites comparison with the royal heroine of Elizabeth Cary's tragedy Mariam, written at about the same date.

Webster was the son of a London tailor and a member of the Merchant Tailors' Company, but we know little else about him. He wrote a tragicomedy, The Devil's

Law Case (1621), and collaborated on several plays with contemporary playwrights, among them Thomas Dekker in Westward Ho (1607) and John Marston in The Malcontent (1604). Of all the Stuart dramatists, Webster is the one who comes closest to Shakespeare in his power of tragic utterance and his flashes of poetic brilliance.

Act 1

SCENE 1. Amalfi; a hall in the DUCHESS'S palace.

[Enter ANTONIO and DELIO.]

DELIO You are welcome to your country, dear Antonio;
You have been long in France, and you return
A very formal Frenchman in your habit.<sup>1</sup>
How do you like the French court?

ANTONIO I admire it:

5 In seeking to reduce both state and people
To a fixed order, their judicious king
Begins at home; quits<sup>0</sup> first his royal palace rids
Of flattering sycophants, of dissolute
And infamous persons—which he sweetly terms
10 His Master's masterpiece, the work of heaven<sup>2</sup>—
Considering duly that a prince's court
Is like a common fountain, whence should flow
Pure silver drops in general, but if't chance
Some cursed example poison't near the head,
15 Death and diseases through the whole land spread.
And what is't makes this blessed government
But a most provident council, who dare freely

i.i

1. An absolute Frenchman in your dress.

2. Alludes to Christ ridding the temple of moneychangers (John 2.13—22).

Inform him the corruption of the times?
 Though some o' th' court hold it presumption
 To instruct princes what they ought to do,
 It is a noble duty to inform them
 What they ought to foresee.—Here comes Bosola,
 The only court-gall;<sup>3</sup> yet I observe his railing
 Is not for simple love of piety.
 Indeed, he rails at those things which he wants;
 Would be as lecherous, covetous, or proud,
 Bloody, or envious, as any man,
 If he had means to be so. Here's the cardinal.

[Enter the CARDINAL and BOSOLA.]

BOSOLA I do haunt you still.

CARDINAL So.

BOSOLA I have done you better service than to be slighted thus. Miserable age, where the only reward of doing well is the doing of it!

CARDINAL You enforce your merit too much.

BOSOLA I fell into the galleys<sup>4</sup> in your service; where, for two years together, I wore two towels instead of a shirt, with a knot on the shoulder, after the fashion of a Roman mantle. Slighted thus? I will thrive some way. Blackbirds fatten best in hard weather; why not I in these dog days?<sup>5</sup>

CARDINAL Would you could become honest!

BOSOLA With all your divinity do but direct me the way to it. I have known many travel far for it, and yet return as arrant knaves as they went forth, because they carried themselves always along with them. [Exit CARDINAL.] Are you gone? Some fellows, they say, are possessed with the devil, but this great fellow were able to possess the greatest devil, and make him worse.

ANTONIO He hath denied thee some suit?

BOSOLA He and his brother are like plum trees that grow crooked over standing pools;<sup>6</sup> they are rich and o'erladen with fruit, but none but crows, pies,<sup>7</sup> and caterpillars feed on them. Could I be one of their flattering panders, I would hang on their ears like a horse leech till I were full and then drop off. I pray, leave me. Who would rely upon these miserable dependencies, in expectation to be advanced tomorrow? What creature ever fed worse than hoping Tantalus?<sup>8</sup> Nor ever died any man more fearfully than he that hoped for a pardon. There are rewards for hawks and dogs when they have done us service; but for a soldier that hazards his limbs in a battle, nothing but a kind of geometry is his last supportation.<sup>9</sup>

DELIO Geometry?

BOSOLA Aye, to hang in a fair pair of slings, take his latter swing in the world upon an honorable pair of crutches, from hospital to hospital.<sup>1</sup> Fare ye well, sir: and yet do not you scorn us; for places in the court are but like

3. One who frets the court, but with the overtone of a disease, a blight.

4. Forced labor at the oar of a Mediterranean galley was the last penalty this side of torture and execution, and was likely to be a death sentence.

5. The hot, sultry season of midsummer.

6. Stagnant waters.

7. Magpies, birds of evil omen like blackbirds.

8. Tantalus, in classical mythology, was "tantalized" by the constant presence of delectable food and drink that, though he was desperate, he could never reach.

9. Support.

1. In the 17th century, a place of last resort for the indigent dying.

beds in the hospital, where this man's head lies at that man's foot, and so lower and lower. [Exit.]

DELIO I knew this fellow seven years<sup>2</sup> in the galleys
For a notorious murder; and 'twas thought
The cardinal suborned it. He was released
By the French general, Gaston de Foix,
When he recovered Naples.<sup>3</sup>

ANTONIO 'Tis great pity
He should be thus neglected; I have heard
He's very valiant. This foul melancholy
Will poison all his goodness; for, I'll tell you,
If too immoderate sleep be truly said
To be an inward rust unto the soul,
It then doth follow want of action
Breeds all black malcontents; and their close rearing,
Like moths in cloth, do hurt for want of wearing.<sup>4</sup>

SCENE 2. The scene continues.

[Enter CASTRUCCIO, SILVIO, RODERIGO, and GRISOLAN.]

DELIO The presence<sup>0</sup> gins to fill: you promised me audience hall
To make me the partaker of the natures
Of some of your great courtiers.

ANTONIO The Lord Cardinal's,
And other strangers' that are now in court?
I shall. Here comes the great Calabrian duke.

[Enter FERDINAND and ATTENDANTS.]

FERDINAND Who took the ring oftenest?<sup>1</sup>

SILVIO Antonio Bologna, my lord.

FERDINAND Our sister duchess' great master of her household? Give him the jewel. When shall we leave this sportive action, and fall to action indeed?

CASTRUCCIO Methinks, my lord, you should not desire to go to war in person.

FERDINAND Now for some gravity. Why, my lord?

CASTRUCCIO It is fitting a soldier arise to be a prince, but not necessary a prince descend to be a captain.

FERDINAND No?

CASTRUCCIO No, my lord, he were far better do it by a deputy.

FERDINAND Why should he not as well sleep or eat by a deputy? This might take idle, offensive, and base office from him, whereas the other deprives him of honor.

CASTRUCCIO Believe my experience, that realm is never long in quiet where the ruler is a soldier.

FERDINAND Thou told'st me thy wife could not endure fighting.

CASTRUCCIO True, my lord.

2. In speaking to the cardinal himself (line 34), Bosola had mentioned only two years.

3. Gaston de Foix, French commander, was active in Italy during the early 1500s; hence, the time of the tragedy is about a hundred years before Webster wrote. Ferdinand and the cardinal are Spaniards established in Italy, like the infamous house of Borgia.

4. I.e., enforced idleness breeds discontent, as moths breed in unused clothing.

1.2

1. A common game around court, used in training for tournaments, involved catching a hanging ring on the tip of a lance. But some of Webster's audience would have caught a sexual analogy.

FERDINAND And of a jest she broke of a captain she met full of wounds.
I have forgot it.

CASTRUCCIO She told him, my lord, he was a pitiful fellow, to lie, like the children of Israel, all in tents.<sup>2</sup>

FERDINAND Why, there's a wit were able to undo all the chirurgeons<sup>3</sup> o' the city; for although gallants should quarrel and had drawn their weapons and were ready to go to it, yet her persuasions would make them put up.

CASTRUCCIO That she would, my lord.

FERDINAND How do you like my Spanish gennet?<sup>4</sup>

RODERIGO He is all fire.

FERDINAND I am of Pliny's opinion, I think he was begot by the wind; he runs as if he were ballasted<sup>5</sup> with quicksilver.

SILVIO True, my lord, he reels from the tilt often.<sup>6</sup>

RODERIGO and GRISOLAN Ha, ha, ha!

FERDINAND Why do you laugh? Methinks, you that are courtiers should be my touchwood, take fire when I give fire; that is, laugh but when I laugh, were the subject never so witty.

CASTRUCCIO True, my lord, I myself have heard a very good jest, and have scorned to seem to have so silly a wit as to understand it.

FERDINAND But I can laugh at your fool, my lord.

CASTRUCCIO He cannot speak, you know, but he makes faces: my lady cannot abide him.

FERDINAND No?

CASTRUCCIO Nor endure to be in merry company, for she says too much laughing and too much company fills her too full of the wrinkle.

FERDINAND I would, then, have a mathematical instrument made for her face, that she might not laugh out of compass.<sup>7</sup> I shall shortly visit you at Milan, Lord Silvio.

SILVIO Your grace shall arrive most welcome.

FERDINAND You are a good horseman, Antonio. You have excellent riders in France. What do you think of good horsemanship?

ANTONIO Nobly, my lord: as out of the Grecian horse issued many famous princes,<sup>8</sup> so out of brave horsemanship arise the first sparks of growing resolution that raise the mind to noble action.

FERDINAND You have bespoke it worthily.

SILVIO Your brother, the Lord Cardinal, and sister duchess.
[Reenter CARDINAL, with DUCHESS, CARIOLA, and JULIA.]

CARDINAL Are the galleys come about?

GRISOLAN They are, my lord.

FERDINAND Here's the Lord Silvio, is come to take his leave.

DELIO [Aside to ANTONIO] Now, sir, your promise. What's that Cardinal? I mean his temper? They say he's a brave fellow,
Will play<sup>9</sup> his five thousand crowns at tennis, dance,
Court ladies, and one that hath fought single combats.

ANTONIO Some such flashes superficially hang on him for form; but observe

2. Lint bandages were called "tents."

3. Surgeons.

4. Sometimes "jennet": a small Spanish horse of Arabian stock.

5. Ballasted. Pliny in his Natural History tells about some Spanish horses generated by a swift wind (8.67).

6. Veers away from the target, undesirable in a war horse.

7. Excessively; with a pun on the draftsman's compass.

8. The Trojan horse, in which the Greek warriors hid, to overrun Troy.

9. Wager. "Brave": fine; ostentatious.

- his inward character: he is a melancholy churchman; the spring in his face is nothing but the engendering of toads; where he is jealous of any man, he lays worse plots for them than ever was imposed on Hercules,<sup>1</sup> for
- 70 he strews in his way flatterers, panders, intelligencers,<sup>2</sup> atheists, and a thousand such political monsters. He should have been Pope; but instead of coming to it by the primitive decency of the church, he did bestow bribes so largely and so impudently as if he would have carried it away without heaven's knowledge. Some good he hath done—
- 75 DELIO YOU have given too much of him. What's his brother?
ANTONIO The duke there? A most perverse and turbulent nature.
What appears in him mirth is merely outside;
If he laugh heartily, it is to laugh
All honesty out of fashion.
- DELIO Twins?
- 80 ANTONIO In quality.
He speaks with others' tongues, and hears men's suits
With others' ears; will seem to sleep o' th' bench
Only to entrap offenders in their answers;
Dooms men to death by information;<sup>0</sup> testimony of spies
Rewards by hearsay.<sup>0</sup> random report
- 85 DELIO Then the law to him
Is like a foul black cobweb to a spider:
He makes of it his dwelling and a prison
To entangle those shall feed him.
- ANTONIO Most true:
He ne'er pays debts unless they be shrewd turns,<sup>0</sup> hurtful acts
- 90 And those he will confess that he doth owe.
Last, for his brother there, the Cardinal,
They that do flatter him most say oracles
Hang at his lips; and verily I believe them,
For the devil speaks in them.
- 95 But for their sister, the right noble duchess,
You never fixed your eye on three fair medals
Cast in one figure, of so different temper.
For her discourse, it is so full of rapture,
You only will begin then to be sorry
- 100 When she doth end her speech, and wish, in wonder,
She held it less vainglory<sup>0</sup> to talk much, excessive pride
Than your penance to hear her: whilst she speaks,
She throws upon a man so sweet a look,
That it were able to raise one to a galliard<sup>0</sup> gay and lively dance
- 105 That lay in a dead palsy, and to dote
On that sweet countenance; but in that look
There speaketh so divine a continence
As cuts off all lascivious and vain hope.
Her days are practiced in such noble virtue
- 110 That sure her nights, nay, more, her very sleeps,
Are more in heaven than other ladies' shrifts.<sup>0</sup> confessions

1. Hercules' uncle, King Eurystheus, sent him on twelve suicide missions to get rid of him, but Hercules performed all these "labors" successfully,

2. Spies, "political" schemers.

Let all sweet ladies break their flattering glasses,<sup>0</sup> mirrors
 And dress themselves in her.

DELIO Fie, Antonio,
 You play the wire-drawer<sup>3</sup> with her commendations.

ANTONIO I'll case<sup>0</sup> the picture up only thus much; frame
 All her particular worth grows to this sum:
 She stains<sup>0</sup> the time past, lights the time to come. darkens

CARDINAL YOU must attend my lady in the gallery,
 Some half an hour hence.

ANTONIO I shall. [Exeunt ANTONIO and DELIO.]

FERDINAND Sister, I have a suit to you.

DUCHESS To me, sir?

FERDINAND A gentleman here, Daniel de Bosola,
 One that was in the galleys—

DUCHESS Yes, I know him.

FERDINAND A worthy fellow he is. Pray, let me entreat for
 The provisorship of your horse.<sup>4</sup>

DUCHESS Your knowledge of him
 Commends him and prefers him.

FERDINAND Call him hither. [Exit ATTENDANT.]
 We are now upon<sup>0</sup> parting. Good Lord Silvio, at the point of
 Do us commend to all our noble friends
 At the leaguer.<sup>0</sup> camp

SILVIO Sir, I shall.

DUCHESS YOU are for Milan?

SILVIO I am.

DUCHESS Bring the caroches. We'll bring you down to the haven.'
[Exeunt all but FERDINAND and the CARDINAL.]

CARDINAL Be sure you entertain<sup>0</sup> that Bosola hire
 For your intelligence:<sup>0</sup> I would not be seen in't; spy
 And therefore many times I have slighted him
 When he did court our furtherance, as this morning.

FERDINAND Antonio, the great master of her household,
 Had been far fitter.

CARDINAL You are deceived in him:
 His nature is too honest for such business.
 He comes: I'll leave you. [Exit.]
[Reenter BOSOLA.]

BOSOLA I was lured to you.

FERDINAND My brother here the cardinal could never Abide you.

BOSOLA Never since he was in my debt.

FERDINAND Maybe some oblique character<sup>0</sup> in your face crooked feature
 Made him suspect you.

BOSOLA Doth he study physiognomy?
 There's no more credit to be given to th' face
 Than to a sick man's urine, which some call
 The physician's whore, because she cozens<sup>0</sup> him. tricks

3. Draw out her praises excessively.

of your horse.

4. Let me beg (for him) the position of supervisor

5. Harbor. "Caroches": carriages.

He did suspect me wrongfully.

FERDINAND For that
You must give great men leave to take their times.
Distrust doth cause us seldom be deceived:
You see, the oft shaking of the cedar tree
Fastens it more at root.

BOSOLA Yet, take heed;
For to suspect a friend unworthily
Instructs him the next<sup>0</sup> way to suspect you, nearest
And prompts him to deceive you.

FERDINAND [giving him money] There's gold.

BOSOLA SO:
What follows? Never rained such showers as these Without thunderbolts i' th' tail of them.
Whose throat must I cut?

FERDINAND Your inclination to shed blood rides post<sup>0</sup> hurries
Before my occasion to use you. I give you that
To live i' th' court here, and observe the duchess;
To note all the particulars of her 'havior,
What suitors do solicit her for marriage,
And whom she best affects. She's a young widow:
I would not have her marry again.

BOSOLA NO, sir?

FERDINAND Do not you ask the reason, but be satisfied
I say I would not.

BOSOLA It seems you would create me
One of your familiars.<sup>0</sup> diabolical s-pirits

FERDINAND Familiar? What's that?

BOSOLA Why, a very quaint invisible devil in flesh,
An intelligencer.<sup>0</sup> spy

FERDINAND Such a land of thriving thing
I would wish thee, and ere long thou may'st arrive
At a higher place by't.

BOSOLA Take your devils,
Which hell calls angels;<sup>5</sup> these cursed gifts would make
You a corrupter, me an impudent traitor;
And should I take these, they'd take me to hell.

FERDINAND Sir, I'll take nothing from you that I have given:
There is a place that I procured for you
This morning, the provisorship o' th' horse;
Have you heard on't?

BOSOLA NO.

FERDINAND Tis yours. Is't not worth thanks?

BOSOLA I would have you curse yourself now, that your bounty,
Which makes men truly noble, e'er should make me
A villain. Oh, that to avoid ingratitude
For the good deed you have done me, I must do
All the ill man can invent! Thus the devil
Candies all sins o'er; and what heaven terms vile,

6. Gold coins, marked with the image of the archangel Michael.

That names he complimentary.<sup>0</sup>

gracious

FERDINAND

Be yourself;
Keep your old garb of melancholy; 'twill express
You envy those that stand above your reach,
Yet strive not to come near 'em: this will gain
Access to private lodgings, where yourself
May, like a politic dormouse—

BOSOLA

As I have seen some
Feed in a lord's dish, half asleep, not seeming
To listen to any talk; and yet these rogues
Have cut his throat in a dream. What's my place?
The provisorship o' th' horse? Say, then, my corruption
Grew out of horse dung. I am your creature.

FERDINAND

Away!

BOSOLA

Let good men, for good deeds, covet good fame,
Since place and riches oft are bribes of shame:
Sometimes the devil doth preach.

[Exit.]

SCENE 3. The scene continues.

[Enter DUCHESS, CARDINAL, and CARIOLA.]

CARDINAL

We are to part from you, and your own discretion
Must now be your director.

FERDINAND

You are a widow:
You know already what man is; and therefore
Let not youth, high promotion, eloquence—

CARDINAL

NO, nor any thing without the addition, honor,
Sway your high blood.

FERDINAND

Marry! They are most luxurious<sup>0</sup>
Will wed twice.

lecherous

CARDINAL

Oh, fie!

FERDINAND

Their livers are more spotted
Than Laban's sheep.<sup>1</sup>

DUCHESS

Diamonds are of most value,
They say, that have passed through most jewelers' hands.

FERDINAND

Whores by that rule are precious.

DUCHESS

Will you hear me?
I'll never marry.

CARDINAL

So most widows say;
But commonly that motion<sup>0</sup> lasts no longer
Than the turning of an hourglass; the funeral sermon
And it end both together.

impulse

FERDINAND

Now hear me:
You live in a rank pasture, here, i' th' court;
There is a kind of honeydew<sup>2</sup> that's deadly;
'Twill poison your fame<sup>0</sup> look to't; be not cunning;
For they whose faces do belie their hearts

reputation

1.3

1. Dividing his flock with Jacob, Laban took the speckled sheep (Genesis 30.31—33); the liver as seat of the passions was thought to be diseased when discolored.

2. A sweet, sticky substance left on plants by aphids.

Are witches ere they arrive at twenty years,
Aye, and give the devil suck.

DUCHESS This is terrible good counsel.

FERDINAND Hypocrisy is woven of a fine small thread,
Subtler than Vulcan's engine:<sup>3</sup> yet, believe't,
Your darkest actions, nay, your privatest thoughts,
Will come to light.

CARDINAL YOU may flatter yourself,
And take your own choice; privately be married
Under the eaves of night—

FERDINAND Think't the best voyage
That e'er you made; like the irregular crab,
Which, though't goes backward, thinks that it goes right
Because it goes its own way; but observe,
Such weddings may more properly be said
To be executed than celebrated.

CARDINAL The marriage night
Is the entrance into some prison.

FERDINAND And those joys,
Those lustful pleasures, are like heavy sleeps
Which do forerun man's mischief.

CARDINAL Fare you well.

Wisdom begins at the end: remember it. [Exit.]

DUCHESS I think this speech between you both was studied,
It came so roundly<sup>0</sup> off. glibly

FERDINAND You are my sister;
This was my father's poniard,<sup>0</sup> do you see? dagger

I'd be loath to see't look rusty, 'cause 'twas his.
I would have you to give o'er these chargeable<sup>0</sup> revels: expensive

A visor<sup>4</sup> and a mask are whispering rooms
That were ne'er built for goodness—fare ye well—
And women like that part which, like the lamprey,<sup>5</sup>
Hath never a bone in't.

DUCHESS Fie, sir!

FERDINAND Nay,

I mean the tongue; variety of courtship.
What cannot a neat knave with a smooth tale
Make a woman believe? Farewell, lusty widow. [Exit.]

DUCHESS Shall this move me? If all my royal kindred
Lay in my way unto this marriage,

I'd make them my low footsteps; and even now,
Even in this hate, as men in some great battles,
By apprehending danger, have achieved
Almost impossible actions (I have heard soldiers say so),
So I through frights and threatenings will assay<sup>0</sup> attempt

This dangerous venture. Let old wives report
I winked and chose a husband. Cariola,

3. The net in which Vulcan, Venus's husband, caught her misbehaving with Mars.

4. A half-mask, worn by ladies at carnivals, theaters, and other dubious resorts.

5. Lamprey eels have a cartilaginous, not a bony, skeleton.

To thy known secrecy I have given up
More than my life—my fame.

CARIOLA Both shall be safe,
For I'll conceal this secret from the world
As warily as those that trade in poison
Keep poison from their children.

DUCHESS Thy protestation
Is ingenious<sup>0</sup> and hearty:<sup>0</sup> I believe it. ingenuous/sincere
Is Antonio come?

CARIOLA He attends you.

DUCHESS Good dear soul,
Leave me, but place thyself behind the arras,<sup>6</sup>
Where thou mayst overhear us. Wish me good speed,
For I am going into a wilderness
Where I shall find nor path nor friendly clue
To be my guide. [CARIOLA goes behind the arras.]

[Enter ANTONIO]

I sent for you: sit down;
Take pen and ink, and write. Are you ready?

ANTONIO Yes.

DUCHESS What did I say?

ANTONIO That I should write somewhat.

DUCHESS Oh, I remember:
After these triumphs<sup>0</sup> and this large expense, tournaments
It's fit, like thrifty husbands,<sup>7</sup> we inquire
What's laid up for tomorrow.

ANTONIO So please your beauteous excellence.

DUCHESS Beauteous?

Indeed, I thank you: I look young for your sake;
You have ta'en my cares upon you.

ANTONIO I'll fetch your grace

The particulars of your revenue and expense.

DUCHESS Oh, you are an upright treasurer: but you mistook;

For when I said I meant to make inquiry

What's laid up for tomorrow, I did mean

What's laid up yonder for me.

ANTONIO Where?

DUCHESS In heaven.

I am making my will (as 'tis fit princes should,

In perfect memory), and I pray sir, tell me,

Were not one better make it smiling thus

Than in deep groans and terrible ghastly looks,

As if the gifts we parted with procured<sup>0</sup>

That violent distraction? brought on

ANTONIO Oh, much better.

DUCHESS If I had a husband now, this care were quit:

But I intend to make you overseer.

6. Tapestries were often hung in Renaissance palaces to moderate the chill of the bare walls.

7. Though used here in its original sense of one who preserves and safeguards property, the word shows where the duchess's thoughts are tending.

What good deed shall we first remember? Say.
 ANTONIO Begin with that first good deed begun i' th' world
 After man's creation, the sacrament of marriage:
 I'd have you first provide for a good husband;
 Give him all.
 DUCHESS All?
 ANTONIO Yes, your excellent self.
 DUCHESS In a winding-sheet?
 ANTONIO In a couple.
 DUCHESS Saint Winfred, that were a strange will!<sup>8</sup>
 ANTONIO 'Twere stranger if there were no will in you
 To marry again.
 DUCHESS What do you think of marriage?
 ANTONIO I take't, as those that deny purgatory;
 It locally<sup>0</sup> contains or heaven or hell; within itself
 There's no third place in't.
 DUCHESS How do you affect it?<sup>o</sup> feel about it
 ANTONIO My banishment,<sup>o</sup> feeding my melancholy, solitary condition
 Would often reason thus—
 DUCHESS Pray, let's hear it.
 ANTONIO Say a man never marry, nor have children,
 What takes that from him? Only the bare name
 Of being a father, or the weak delight
 To see the little wanton ride a-cock-horse
 Upon a painted stick, or hear him chatter
 Like a taught starling.
 DUCHESS Fie, fie, what's all this?
 One of your eyes is bloodshot; use my ring to't,
 They say 'tis very sovereign.<sup>9</sup> 'Twas my wedding ring,
 And I did vow never to part with it
 But to my second husband.
 ANTONIO You have parted with it now.
 DUCHESS Yes, to help your eyesight.
 ANTONIO You have made me stark blind.
 DUCHESS How?
 ANTONIO There is a saucy and ambitious devil
 Is dancing in this circle.<sup>1</sup>
 DUCHESS Remove him.
 ANTONIO How?
 DUCHESS There needs small conjuration, when your finger
 May do it: thus; is it fit? [She puts the ring upon his finger; he kneels.]
 ANTONIO What said you?
 DUCHESS Sir,
 This goodly roof of yours<sup>2</sup> is too low built;
 I cannot stand upright in't nor discourse,
 Without I raise it higher: raise yourself;

8. Saint Winifred, Welsh virgin and martyr, is an odd saint for the Duchess of Malfi to swear on. "In a couple": i.e., of sheets—but with a play on "coupling."

9. Healing, but with an overtone implying royal power.

1. To conjure up a devil, the necromancer first draws a charmed circle on the ground—like the duchess's ring.

2. His head as he kneels.

Or, if you please, my hand to help you: so. [Raises him.]

ANTONIO Ambition, madam, is a great man's madness,
 125 That is not kept in chains and close-pent rooms,
 But in fair lightsome lodgings, and is girt
 With the wild noise of prattling visitants,
 Which makes it lunatic beyond all cure.
 Conceive not I am so stupid but I aim
 130 Whereto your favors tend; but he's a fool
 That, being a-cold, would thrust his hands i' th' fire
 To warm them.

DUCHESS So, now the ground's broke,
 You may discover what a wealthy mine
 I make you lord of.

ANTONIO O my unworthiness!

135 DUCHESS You were ill to sell<sup>0</sup> yourself: evaluate
 This darkening of your worth is not like that
 Which tradesmen use i' th' city; their false lights
 Are to rid bad wares off:<sup>3</sup> and I must tell you,
 If you will know where breathes a complete man
 HO (I speak it without flattery), turn your eyes,
 And progress through yourself.

ANTONIO Were there nor heaven
 Nor hell, I should be honest: I have long served virtue,
 And ne'er ta'en wages of her.

DUCHESS Now she pays it.
 The misery of us that are born great!
 145 We are forced to woo, because none dare woo us;
 And as a tyrant doubles<sup>0</sup> with his words speaks ambiguously
 And fearfully equivocates, so we
 Are forced to express our violent passions
 In riddles and in dreams, and leave the path
 150 Of simple virtue, which was never made
 To seem the thing it is not. Go, go brag
 You have left me heartless;<sup>0</sup> mine is in your bosom: without a heart
 I hope 'twill multiply love there. You do tremble:
 Make not your heart so dead a piece of flesh,
 155 To fear more than to love me. Sir, be confident:
 What is't distracts you? This is flesh and blood, sir;
 'Tis not the figure cut in alabaster
 Kneels at my husband's tomb. Awake, awake, man!
 I do here put off all vain ceremony,
 160 And only do appear to you a young widow
 That claims you for her husband, and, like a widow,
 I use but half a blush in't.

ANTONIO Truth speak for me,
 I will remain the constant sanctuary
 Of your good name.

DUCHESS I thank you, gentle love:
 165 And 'cause<sup>0</sup> you shall not come to me in debt, so that

3. Tradesmen in the city display their goods in a poor light so the defects won't be seen.

Being now my steward, here upon your lips
 I sign your Quietus est.<sup>4</sup> This you should have begged now;
 I have seen children oft eat sweetmeats thus,
 As fearful to devour them too soon.

ANTONIO But for your brothers?

DUCHESS Do not think of them.
 All discord without this circumference<sup>5</sup>
 Is only to be pitied, and not feared;
 Yet, should they know it, time will easily
 Scatter the tempest.

ANTONIO These words should be mine,
 And all the parts you have spoke, if some part of it
 Would not have savored flattery.

DUCHESS Kneel.
 [CARIOLA comes from behind the arras.]

ANTONIO Ha!

DUCHESS Be not amazed; this woman's of my counsel:
 I have heard lawyers say, a contract in a chamber
Per verba de present<sup>6</sup> is absolute marriage. [She and ANTONIO kneel.]
 Bless, heaven, this sacred gordian,<sup>0</sup> which let violence knot
 Never untwine!

ANTONIO And may our sweet affections, like the spheres,
 Be still<sup>0</sup> in motion! constantly

DUCHESS Quickening,<sup>0</sup> and make giving life
 The like soft music!<sup>7</sup>

ANTONIO That we may imitate the loving palms,
 Best emblem of a peaceful marriage, that ne'er
 Bore fruit, divided!

DUCHESS What can the church force more?

ANTONIO That fortune may not know an accident,
 Either of joy or sorrow, to divide
 Our fixed wishes!

DUCHESS HOW can the church bind faster?<sup>0</sup> tighter
 We now are man and wife, and 'tis the church
 That must but echo this. Maid, stand apart.<sup>8</sup>
 I now am blind.

ANTONIO What's your conceit<sup>0</sup> in this? idea

DUCHESS I would have you lead your fortune by the hand
 Unto your marriage bed
 (You speak in me this, for we now are one);
 We'll only lie, and talk together, and plot
 To appease my humorous<sup>0</sup> kindred; and if you please, choleric
 Like the old tale in Alexander and Lodowick,
 Lay a naked sword between us, keep us chaste.<sup>9</sup>
 Oh, let me shroud my blushes in your bosom,

4. The legal formula for marking a bill "paid" or "acquitted."

5. Outside this room, or their embrace.

6. "By words in the present tense" (i.e., not a betrothal or promise for the future). In canon law, the agreement of two parties to consider themselves married is valid with or without priest, ceremony, or witness.

7. Like the supposed music of the spheres.

8. The phrase is addressed to Cariola as the duchess shuts her eyes and rejects all support.

9. Alexander and Lodowick were look-alike friends in an old ballad. For purely virtuous reasons, one slept with the wife of the other, but with the precaution indicated.

Since 'tis the treasury of all my secrets! [Exeunt DUCHESS and ANTONIO.]
 CARIOLA Whether the spirit of greatness or of woman
 Reign most in her, I know not; but it shows
 A fearful madness: I owe her much of pity. [Exit.]

Act 2

SCENE 1. The scene continues

[Enter BOSOLA and CASTRUCCIO.]

BOSOLA YOU say you would fain be taken for an eminent courtier?
 CASTRUCCIO 'Tis the very main of my ambition.
 BOSOLA Let me see: you have a reasonable good face for't already, and your nightcap expresses your ears sufficient largely. I would have you learn to twirl the strings of your band<sup>1</sup> with a good grace, and in a set speech, at th' end of every sentence, to hum three or four times, or blow your nose till it smart again, to recover your memory. When you come to be a president<sup>2</sup> in criminal causes, if you smile upon a prisoner, hang him, but if you frown upon him and threaten him, let him be sure to 'scape the gallows.
 CASTRUCCIO I would be a very merry president.
 BOSOLA DO not sup o' nights; 'twill beget you an admirable wit.
 CASTRUCCIO Rather it would make me have a good stomach<sup>3</sup> to quarrel; for they say, your roaring boys<sup>4</sup> eat meat seldom, and that makes them so valiant. But how shall I know whether the people take me for an eminent fellow?
 BOSOLA I will teach a trick to know it: give out you lie a-dying, and if you hear the common people curse you, be sure you are taken for one of the prime nightcaps.<sup>5</sup>

[Enter an OLD LADY.]

You come from painting now?
 OLD LADY From what?
 BOSOLA Why, from your scurvy face-physic. To behold thee not painted inclines somewhat near a miracle; these in thy face here were deep ruts and foul sloughs the last progress.<sup>6</sup> There was a lady in France that, having had the smallpox, flayed the skin off her face to make it more level; and whereas before she looked like a nutmeg grater, after she resembled an abortive hedgehog.
 OLD LADY DO you call this painting?
 BOSOLA NO, no, but you call it careening of an old morphewed lady, to make her disembogue again: there's rough-cast phrase to your plastic.<sup>7</sup>
 OLD LADY It seems you are well acquainted with my closet.
 BOSOLA One would suspect it for a shop of witchcraft, to find in it the fat of serpents, spawn of snakes, Jews' spittle, and their young children's ordure; and all these for the face. I would sooner eat a dead pigeon taken from

 2. Presiding magistrate.
 3. Disposition.
 4. London town bullies.
 5. Lawyers (who wore a white coif or skullcap; cf. line 4, above).

6. A progress was a formal royal journey of state.
 7. Scraping ("careening") of an old, scaly ("morphewed") ship ("lady") to fit her for the ocean ("making her disembogue") again. All these metaphors are applied to the model ("plastic") of the lady's condition as "rough-cast," a mixture of lime and gravel, is troweled over a base.

the soles of the feet of one sick of the plague than kiss one of you fasting.<sup>8</sup>
 Here are two of you, whose sin of your youth is the very patrimony of the physician; makes him renew his footcloth with the spring, and change his high-prized courtesan with the fall of the leaf.<sup>9</sup> I do wonder you do not loathe yourselves. Observe my meditation now:
 What thing is in this outward form of man
 To be beloved? We account it ominous,
 If nature do produce a colt, or lamb,
 A fawn, or goat, in any limb resembling
 A man, and fly from't as a prodigy:<sup>0</sup>
 Man stands amazed to see his deformity
 In any other creature but himself.
 But in our own flesh, though we bear diseases
 Which have their true names only ta'en from beasts—
 As the most ulcerous wolf and swinish measles<sup>1</sup>—
 Though we are eaten up of lice and worms,
 And though continually we bear about us
 A rotten and dead body, we delight
 To hide it in rich tissue: all our fear,
 Nay, all our terror, is lest our physician
 Should put us in the ground to be made sweet—
 Your wife's gone to Rome: you two couple, and get you
 To the wells at Lucca to recover your aches.<sup>2</sup>

evil omen[Exeunt CASTRUCCIO and OLD LADY.]

I have other work on foot. I observe our duchess
 Is sick a-days: she pukes, her stomach seethes,
 The fins of her eyelids look most teeming blue,
 She wanes i' th' cheek, and waxes fat i' th' flank,
 And contrary to our Italian fashion,
 Wears a loose-bodied gown: there's somewhat in t.
 I have a trick may chance discover it,
 A pretty one; I have bought some apricots,
 The first our spring yields.

[Enter ANTONIO and DELIO, talking apart.]

DELIO And so long since married?

You amaze me.

ANTONIO Let me seal your lips forever:

For, did I think that anything but th' air
 Could carry these words from you, I should wish
 You had no breath at all.

[turning to BOSOLA]

Now, sir, in your contemplation? You are studying to become a great wise fellow?

BOSOLA Oh, sir, the opinion of wisdom is a foul tetter<sup>3</sup> that runs all over a man's body. If simplicity<sup>4</sup> direct us to have no evil, it directs us to a happy

8. Centuries of traditional invective about women's cosmetic practices lie behind this speech. Freshly killed pigeons were applied to the feet of plague victims to draw off the infection; fasting was supposed to cause bad breath.

9. The physician grows rich on those who have outworn their youth; every spring he buys a new harness for his horse and every fall a new mistress for himself.

1. "Wolf": cancer or lupus; "measle": an infection of swine, sometimes confused with human measles.

2. The wells at Lucca are the mineral springs at nearby Montecatini, renowned as a place to "take the cure." Aches are a symptom of syphilis.

3. Skin disease.

4. Foolishness.

being, for the subtlest folly proceeds from the subtlest wisdom.
Let me be simply honest.

ANTONIO I do understand your inside.

BOSOLA DO you so?

ANTONIO Because you would not seem to appear to th' world

Puffed up with your preferment, you continue
This out-of-fashion melancholy. Leave it, leave it.

BOSOLA Give me leave to be honest in any phrase, in any compliment whatsoever. Shall I confess myself to you? I look no higher than I can reach:
they are the gods that must ride on winged horses. A lawyer's mule of a slow pace will both suit my disposition and business; for, mark me, when a man's mind rides faster than his horse can gallop, they quickly both tire.

ANTONIO You would look up to heaven, but I think

The devil, that rules i' th' air, stands in your light.

BOSOLA Oh, sir, you are lord of the ascendant,<sup>5</sup> chief man with the duchess;
a duke was your cousin-german removed.<sup>6</sup> Say you were lineally descended from King Pepin,<sup>7</sup> or he himself, what of this? Search the heads of the greatest rivers in the world, you shall find them but bubbles of water. Some would think the souls of princes were brought forth by some more weighty cause than those of meaner persons: they are deceived, there's the same hand to them; the like passions sway them; the same reason that makes a vicar go to law for a tithe-pig<sup>8</sup> and undo his neighbors, makes them spoil a whole province, and batter down goodly cities with the cannon.

[Enter DUCHESS and LADIES.]

DUCHESS Your arm, Antonio; do I not grow fat?

I am exceeding short-winded. Bosola,
I would have you, sir, provide for me a litter,
Such a one as the Duchess of Florence rode in.

BOSOLA The duchess used one when she was great with child.

DUCHESS I think she did. Come hither, mend my ruff;

Here, when? Thou art such a tedious<sup>0</sup> lady, and clumsy
Thy breath smells of lemon peels;<sup>9</sup> would thou hadst done;
Shall I swoon under thy fingers? I am
So troubled with the mother!<sup>1</sup>

BOSOLA [aside] I fear too much.

DUCHESS I have heard you say that the French courtiers

Wear their hats on 'fore the king.

ANTONIO I have seen it.

DUCHESS In the presence?

ANTONIO Yes.

DUCHESS Why should not we bring up that fashion? 'Tis

Ceremony more than duty that consists

In the removing of a piece of felt.

Be you the example to the rest o' th' court;

Put on your hat first.

ANTONIO YOU must pardon me.

5. In astrology, the predominating influence, controlling destiny.

6. First cousin once removed.

7. Father of Charlemagne, hence source of a great dynasty.

8. A parson was entitled to a tenth ("tithe") of his parishioners' annual profit and was often paid in crops or livestock, but was thought mean if he sued for a petty sum.

9. Lemon peels, chewed to sweeten the breath.

1. Heartburn, but with a second meaning not lost on Bosola.

I have seen, in colder countries than in France,
 Nobles stand bare to th' prince, and the distinction
 Methought showed reverently.

BOSOLA I have a present for your grace.

DUCHESS For me, sir?

BOSOLA Apricots, madam.

DUCHESS O, sir, where are they?
 I have heard of none to-year.

BOSOLA [aside] Good: her color rises.

DUCHESS Indeed, I thank you: they are wondrous fair ones.
 What an unskillful fellow is our gardener!
 We shall have none this month.

BOSOLA Will not your grace pare them?

DUCHESS No. They taste of musk, methinks; indeed they do.

BOSOLA I know not: yet I wish your grace had pared em.

DUCHESS Why?

BOSOLA I forgot to tell you, the knave gardener,
 Only to raise his profit by them the sooner,
 Did ripen them in horse dung.<sup>2</sup>

DUCHESS O, you jest.
 You shall judge: pray taste one.

ANTONIO Indeed, madam,
 I do not love the fruit.

DUCHESS Sir, you are loath
 To rob us of our dainties: 'tis a delicate fruit;
 They say they are restorative.

BOSOLA 'Tis a pretty art,
 This grafting.

DUCHESS 'Tis so; a bettering of nature.

BOSOLA To make a pippin grow upon a crab,<sup>o</sup> crab apple
 A damson on a blackthorn, [aside] How greedily she eats them!
 A whirlwind strike off these bawd farthingales!<sup>3</sup>
 For, but for that and the loose-bodied gown,
 I should have discovered apparently<sup>o</sup> certainly
 The young springaP cutting a caper in her belly. fellenv

DUCHESS I thank you, Bosola. They were right good ones,
 If they do not make me sick.

ANTONIO How now, madam?

DUCHESS This green fruit and my stomach are not friends;
 How they swell me!

BOSOLA [aside] Nay, you are too much swelled already.

DUCHESS Oh, I am in an extreme cold sweat!

BOSOLA I am very sorry.

DUCHESS Lights to my chamber! O good Antonio,
 I fear I am undone!

DELIO Lights there, lights!
 [Exeunt DUCHESS and LADIES. Exit, on the other side, BOSOLA.]

ANTONIO O my most trusty Delio, we are lost!

2. Which grows warm as it decomposes.

3. Early hoopskirts, capable of concealing the figure.

- I fear she's fall'n in labor; and there's left
 No time for her remove.
- 150 DELIO Have you prepared
 Those ladies to attend her? And procured
 That politic<sup>0</sup> safe conveyance for the midwife
 Your duchess plotted?
- ANTONIO I have.
- DELIO Make use, then, of this forced occasion:
- 155 Give out that Bosola hath poisoned her
 With these apricots; that will give some color
 For her keeping close.
- ANTONIO Fie, fie, the physicians
 Will then flock to her.
- DELIO For that you may pretend
 She'll use some prepared antidote of her own,
 160 Lest the physicians should re-poison her.
- ANTONIO I am lost in amazement:<sup>0</sup> I know not what to think on't. confusion
 [Exeunt.]

SCENE 2. The scene continues.

[Enter BOSOLA.]

BOSOLA SO, SO, there's no question but her tetchiness<sup>1</sup> and most vulturous eating of the apricots are apparent signs of breeding.

[Enter an OLD LADY.]

Now?

OLD LADY I am in haste, sir.

5 BOSOLA There was a young waiting woman had a monstrous desire to see the glasshouse<sup>2</sup>—

OLD LADY Nay, pray let me go.

BOSOLA And it was only to know what strange instrument it was should swell up a glass to the fashion of a woman's belly.

10 OLD LADY I will hear no more of the glasshouse. You are still<sup>3</sup> abusing women!

BOSOLA Who, I? No; only by the way now and then mention your frailties.
 The orange tree bears ripe and green fruit and blossoms all together; and some of you give entertainment for pure love, but more for more precious 15 reward. The lusty spring smells well, but drooping autumn tastes well. If we have the same golden showers that rained in the time of Jupiter the thunderer, you have the same Danaes still,<sup>4</sup> to hold up their laps to receive them.
 Didst thou never study the mathematics?

OLD LADY What's that, sir?

20 BOSOLA Why, to know the trick how to make a many lines meet in one center.
 Go, go, give your foster daughters good counsel: tell them that the devil takes delight to hang at a woman's girdle, like a false rusty watch, that she cannot discern how the time passes. [Exit OLD LADY.]

[Enter ANTONIO, DELIO, RODERIGO, and GRISOLAN.]

2.2

1. Irritability.
 2. Where bottles were blown, near the theater in Blackfriars.

3. Always.
 4. Jupiter's success in wooing Danae in a shower of gold traditionally illustrated female venality.

ANTONIO Shut up the courtgates.
 RODERIGO Why, sir? What's the danger?
 ANTONIO Shut up the posterns presently,<sup>5</sup> and call
 All the officers o' th' court.
 GRISOLAN I shall instantly. [Exit.]
 ANTONIO Who keeps the key o' th' park gate?
 RODERIGO Forobosco.
 ANTONIO Let him bring't presently.
[Reenter GRISOLAN with SERVANTS.]
 1 SERVANT O, gentlemen o' the court, the foulest treason!
 BOSOLA [aside] If that these apricots should be poisoned now,
 Without my knowledge!
 1 SERVANT There was taken even now
 A Switzer<sup>0</sup> in the duchess' bedchamber— Swiss guard
 2 SERVANT A Switzer?
 1 SERVANT With a pistol in his great codpiece.<sup>6</sup>
 BOSOLA Ha, ha, ha!
 1 SERVANT The codpiece was the case for't.
 2 SERVANT There was
 A cunning traitor: who would have searched his codpiece?
 1 SERVANT True, if he had kept out of the ladies' chambers.
 And all the molds of his buttons were leaden bullets.
 2 SERVANT O wicked cannibal!
 A firelock<sup>0</sup> in's codpiece! pistol
 1 SERVANT 'Twas a French plot,
 Upon my life.
 2 SERVANT TO see what the devil can do!
 ANTONIO Are all the officers here?
 SERVANTS We are.
 ANTONIO Gentlemen,
 We have lost much plate<sup>7</sup> you know, and but this evening
 Jewels, to the value of four thousand ducats,
 Are missing in the duchess' cabinet.
 Are the gates shut?
 SERVANT Yes.
 ANTONIO 'Tis the duchess' pleasure
 Each officer be locked into his chamber
 Till the sun-rising; and to send the keys
 Of all their chests and of their outward doors
 Into her bedchamber. She is very sick.
 RODERIGO At her pleasure.
 ANTONIO She entreats you take't not ill:
 The innocent shall be the more approved by it.
 BOSOLA Gentlemen o' th' wood-yard, where's your Switzer now?
 1 SERVANT By this hand, 'twas credibly reported by one o' th' black guard.<sup>8</sup>
[Exeunt all except ANTONIO and DELIO.]
 DELIO How fares it with the duchess?

5. At once. "Posterns": outer gates.

6. An outside flap worn on the front of men's trunk hose.

7. Massive gold and silver dishes, a frequent form of wealth in the days before banks.

8. Kitchen scullions. The "wood-yard" is a source of firewood for kitchen and fireplaces.

ANTONIO She's exposed
 Unto the worst of torture, pain, and fear.

DELIO Speak to her all happy comfort.

ANTONIO HOW I do play the fool with mine own danger!
 You are this night, dear friend, to post to Rome;
 My life lies in your service.

DELIO Do not doubt me.

ANTONIO Oh, 'tis far from me, and yet fear presents me
 Somewhat that looks like danger.

DELIO Believe it,
 Tis but the shadow of your fear, no more;
 How superstitiously we mind our evils!
 The throwing down salt, or crossing of a hare,
 Bleeding at nose, the stumbling of a horse,
 Or singing of a cricket, are of power
 To daunt whole man" in us. Sir, fare you well: all courage
 I wish you all the joys of a blessed father:
 And, for my faith, lay this unto your breast,
 Old friends, like old swords, still are trusted best.
[Enter CARIOLA.]

CARIOLA Sir, you are the happy father of a son: [Exit.]
 Your wife commends him to you.

ANTONIO Blessed comfort!
 For heaven's sake tend her well: I'll presently
 Go set a figure for's nativity.<sup>9</sup>

SCENE 3. The scene continues. [Exeunt.]

[Enter BOSOLA, with a dark lantern.]

BOSOLA Sure I did hear a woman shriek: list, ha!
 And the sound came, if I received it right,
 From the duchess' lodgings. There's some stratagem
 In the confining all our courtiers
 To their several<sup>0</sup> wards: I must have part of it; separate
 My intelligence will freeze else.<sup>1</sup> List, again!
 It may be 'twas the melancholy bird,
 Best friend of silence and of solitariness,
 The owl, that screamed so. Ha! Antonio?
[Enter ANTONIO with a candle, his sword drawn.]

ANTONIO I heard some noise. Who's there? What art thou? Speak.

BOSOLA Antonio? Put not your face nor body
 To such a forced expression of fear.
 I am Bosola, your friend.

ANTONIO Bosola!
[aside] This mole does undermine me.—Heard you not
 A noise even now?

BOSOLA From whence?

ANTONIO From the duchess' lodging.

BOSOLA Not I. Did you?

9. Cast his horoscope right away.

2.3

1. All my news will be cold otherwise.

ANTONIO I did, or else I dreamed.
 BOSOLA Let's walk towards it.
 ANTONIO No, it may be 'twas
 But the rising of the wind.
 BOSOLA Very likely.
 Methinks 'tis very cold, and yet you sweat:
 You look wildly.
 ANTONIO I have been setting a figure<sup>2</sup>
 For the duchess' jewels.
 BOSOLA Ah, and how falls your question?
 Do you find it radical?<sup>0</sup> significant
 ANTONIO What's that to you?
 'Tis rather to be questioned what design,
 When all men were commanded to their lodgings,
 Makes you a nightwalker.
 BOSOLA In sooth, I'll tell you:
 Now all the court's asleep, I thought the devil
 Had least to do here; I came to say my prayers;
 And if it do offend you I do so,
 You are a fine courtier.
 ANTONIO [aside] This fellow will undo me.
 You gave the duchess apricots today:
 Pray heaven they were not poisoned!
 BOSOLA Poisoned? A Spanish fig<sup>3</sup>
 For the imputation!
 ANTONIO Traitors are ever confident
 Till they are discovered. There were jewels stolen, too;
 In my conceit,<sup>0</sup> none are to be suspected opinion
 More than yourself.
 BOSOLA You are a false steward.
 ANTONIO Saucy slave, I'll pull thee up by the roots.
 BOSOLA May be the ruin will crush you to pieces.
 ANTONIO You are an impudent snake indeed, sir:
 Are you scarce warm, and do you show your sting?
 You libel well, sir.
 BOSOLA No, sir: copy it out,
 And I will set my hand to't.<sup>4</sup>
 ANTONIO [aside] My nose bleeds.
 One that were superstitious would count
 This ominous, when it merely comes by chance:
 Two letters, that are wrought here for my name,<sup>5</sup>
 Are drowned in blood!
 Mere accident.—For you, sir, I'll take order
 I' th' morn you shall be safe.<sup>0</sup> [aside] 'Tis that must color under guard
 Her lying-in<sup>o</sup>—Sir, this door you pass not: giving birth
 I do not hold it fit that you come near
 The duchess' lodgings, till you have quit<sup>0</sup> yourself. cleared

2. Establishing the loss involved. But Bosola takes the expression astrologically, as if Antonio were casting a horoscope.

3. An obscene gesture, which Bosola doubtless makes onstage.

4. Bosola denies the charge, not by denying malignancy, but by offering to publish it.

5. Embroidered on the handkerchief.

[aside] The great are like the base, nay, they are the same,
 When they seek shameful ways to avoid shame. [Exit.]

BOSOLA Antonio hereabout did drop a paper:
 Some of your help, false friend: [opening his lantern] Oh, here it is.
 What's here? A child's nativity calculated? [reads]
 "The duchess was delivered of a son, 'tween the hours twelve and one in the night, Anno Dom. 1504,"—that's this year—"decimo nono Decem-bris,"<sup>6</sup>—that's this night—"taken according to the meridian of Malfi"—that's our duchess: happy discovery! "The lord of the first house being combust<sup>7</sup> in the ascendant, signifies short life; and Mars being in a human sign, joined to the tail of the Dragon, in the eighth house, doth threaten a violent death.
Caetera non scrutantur."<sup>8</sup>

Why, now 'tis most apparent: this precise<sup>0</sup> fellow officious
 Is the duchess' bawd:<sup>9</sup> I have it to my wish! procurer
 This is a parcel of intelligency
 Our courtiers were cased up for: it needs must follow
 That I must be committed on pretense
 Of poisoning her; which I'll endure, and laugh at.
 If one could find the father now! But that
 Time will discover. Old Castruccio
 I' th' morning posts to Rome: by him I'll send
 A letter that shall make her brothers' galls
 O'erflow their livers. This was a thrifty<sup>0</sup> way. shrewd
 Though lust do mask in ne'er so strange disguise,
 She's oft found witty, but is never wise. [Exit.]

SCENE 4. The palace of the CARDINAL at Rome.

[Enter CARDINAL and JULIA.]

CARDINAL Sit. Thou art my best of wishes. Prithee, tell me
 What trick didst thou invent to come to Rome
 Without thy husband.

JULIA Why, my lord, I told him
 I came to visit an old anchorite<sup>0</sup> hermit
 Here for devotion.

CARDINAL Thou are a witty false one—
 I mean, to him.

JULIA You have prevailed with me
 Beyond my strongest thoughts! I would not now
 Find you inconstant.

CARDINAL Do not put thyself
 To such a voluntary torture, which proceeds
 Out of your own guilt.

JULIA How, my lord?

CARDINAL YOU fear
 My constancy, because you have approved<sup>0</sup> experienced
 Those giddy and wild turnings in yourself.

JULIA Did you e'er find them?

6. December 19.

7. Burnt up; i.e., the ruling planet is close to the sun.

8. "The rest is not examined"—i.e., the horoscope is incomplete. Mars and the Dragon are sinister signs, even separately; fatal together.

CARDINAL                                   Sooth, generally for women;
A man might strive to make glass malleable,
Ere he should make them fixed.

JULIA   So, my lord.

CARDINAL We had need go borrow that fantastic glass
Invented by Galileo the Florentine<sup>1</sup>
To view another spacious world i' th' moon,
And look to find a constant woman there.

JULIA This is very well, my lord.

CARDINAL                                   Why do you weep?
Are tears your justification? The selfsame tears
Will fall into your husband's bosom, lady,
With a loud protestation that you love him
Above the world. Come, I'll love you wisely,
That's jealously, since I am very certain
You cannot make me cuckold.

JULIA   I'll go home
To my husband.

CARDINAL                                   You may thank me, lady,
I have taken you off your melancholy perch,
Bore you upon my fist, and showed you game,
And let you fly at it.<sup>2</sup> I pray thee, kiss me.
When thou wast with thy husband, thou wast watched
Like a tame elephant: still you are to thank me:
Thou hadst only kisses from him and high feeding;
But what delight was that? 'Twas just like one
That hath a little fingering on the lute,
Yet cannot tune it: still you are to thank me.

JULIA You told me of a piteous wound i' th' heart
And a sick liver, when you wooed me first,
And spake like one in physic.<sup>3</sup>

[A knock is heard.]

CARDINAL                                   Who's that?
Rest firm," for my affection to thee,
Lightning moves slow to 't.<sup>o</sup>
[Enter SERVANT.]

*be assured
by-comparison*

SERVANT                                   Madam, a gentleman,
That's come post from Malfi, desires to see you.

CARDINAL Let him enter. I'll withdraw.

[Exit.]

SERVANT                                   He says
Your husband, old Castruccio, is come to Rome,
Most pitifully tired with riding post.<sup>4</sup>

[Exit.]

[Enter DELIO.]

JULIA Signor Delio! [aside]'—'tis one of my old suitors.

DELIO I was bold to come and see you.

JULIA   Sir, you are welcome.

24

1. In 1504, Galileo's telescope was more than one hundred years in the future, but the reference was topical for Webster's audience.

2. The cardinal speaks of himself as a falconer training a bird (Julia).

3. Like a person under a doctor's care.

4. When riding post, one changed horses at regular intervals without stopping to rest oneself.

DELIO Do you lie<sup>o</sup> here? lodge

JULIA Sure, your own experience
Will satisfy you no: our Roman prelates
Do not keep lodging for ladies.

DELIO Very well.
I have brought you no commendations from your husband,
For I know none by him.

JULIA I hear he's come to Rome.

DELIO I never knew man and beast, of a horse and a knight,
So weary of each other: if he had had a good back,
He would have undertook to have borne his horse,
His breech was so pitifully sore.

JULIA Your laughter
Is my pity.

DELIO Lady, I know not whether
You want money, but I have brought you some.

JULIA From my husband?

DELIO No, from mine own allowance.

JULIA I must hear the condition, ere I be bound to take it.

DELIO Look on't, 'tis gold: hath it not a fine color?

JULIA I have a bird more beautiful.

DELIO Try the sound on't.

JULIA A lute string far exceeds it:
It hath no smell, like cassia or civet;
Nor is it physical,<sup>o</sup> though some fond<sup>o</sup> doctors medicinal/foolish
Persuade us see the't in cullises:<sup>o</sup> I'll tell you, broth

[Reenter SERVANT.]

SERVANT Your husband's come,
Hath delivered a letter to the Duke of Calabria
That, to my thinking, hath put him out of his wits. [Exit.]

JULIA Sir, you hear:
Pray, let me know your business and your suit
As briefly as can be.

DELIO With good speed: I would wish you,
At such time as you are nonresident
With your husband, my mistress.

JULIA Sir, I'll go ask my husband if I shall,
And straight return your answer. [Exit.]

DELIO Very fine!
Is this her wit, or honesty,<sup>o</sup> that speaks thus? chastity
I heard one say the duke was highly moved
With a letter sent from Malfi. I do fear
Antonio is betrayed: how fearfully
Shows his ambition now! Unfortunate fortune!
They pass through whirlpools, and deep woes do shun,
Who the event weigh ere the action's done.<sup>5</sup> [Exit.]

5. I.e., who judge of actions before seeing their final consequences.

SCENE 5. The scene continues.

[Enter CARDINAL, and FERDINAND with a letter.]

FERDINAND I have this night digged up a mandrake.<sup>1</sup>

CARDINAL Say you?

FERDINAND And I am grown mad with't.

CARDINAL What's the prodigy?<sup>0</sup> fearful wonder

FERDINAND Read there—A sister damned: she's loose i' th' hilt;<sup>2</sup>

Grown a notorious strumpet.

CARDINAL Speak lower.

FERDINAND Lower?

Rogues do not whisper't now, but seek to publish't

(As servants do the bounty of their lords)

Aloud; and with a covetous searching eye,

To mark who note them. O, confusion seize her!

She hath had most cunning bawds to serve her turn,

And more secure conveyances for lust

Than towns of garrison for service.<sup>0</sup> receiving supplies

CARDINAL Is't possible?

Can this be certain?

FERDINAND Rhubarb, oh, for rhubarb

To purge this choler!<sup>3</sup> Here's the cursed day

To prompt my memory, and here't shall stick

Till of her bleeding heart I make a sponge

To wipe it out.

CARDINAL Why do you make yourself
So wild a tempest?

FERDINAND Would I could be one,

That I might toss her palace 'bout her ears,

Root up her goodly forests, blast her meads,<sup>0</sup>

And lay her general territory as waste

As she hath done her honors. meadows

CARDINAL Shall our blood,

The royal blood of Aragon and Castile,

Be thus attainted?

FERDINAND Apply desperate physic:<sup>0</sup>

We must not now use balsamum,<sup>0</sup> but fire,<sup>0</sup> medicine

The smarting cupping glass<sup>4</sup> for that's the mean

To purge infected blood, such blood as hers.

There is a kind of pity in mine eye,

I'll give it to my handkercher; and now 'tis here,

I'll bequeath this to her bastard. balm/cautery

CARDINAL What to do?

FERDINAND Why, to make soft lint for his mother's wounds,

When I have hewed her to pieces.

CARDINAL Cursed creature!

2.5

1. A fabulous root, violently aphrodisiac but also deadly poison. Both aspects apply to Ferdinand.

2. I.e., promiscuous.

3. Rhubarb, as a laxative, was thought curative of the high pressures of hot rage.

4. By which people were bled.

Unequal nature, to place women's hearts
So far upon the left side!<sup>5</sup>

FERDINAND Foolish men,
That e'er will trust their honor in a bark
Made of so slight weak bulrush as is woman,
Apt every minute to sink it!

CARDINAL Thus ignorance, when it hath purchased honor,
It cannot wield it.

FERDINAND Methinks I see her laughing—
Excellent hyena! Talk to me somewhat, quickly,
Or my imagination will carry me
To see her in the shameful act of sin.

CARDINAL With whom?

FERDINAND Haply<sup>0</sup> with some strong-thighed bargeman,
Or one o' th' wood-yard that can quoit the sledge<sup>0</sup> perhaps
Or toss the bar,<sup>6</sup> or else some lovely squire throw the hammer
That carries coal up to her privy lodgings.

CARDINAL You fly beyond your reason.

FERDINAND Go to, mistress!
Tis not your whore's milk that shall quench my wild fire,
But your whore's blood.

CARDINAL How idly shows this rage, which carries you,
As men conveyed by witches through the air,
On violent whirlwinds! This intemperate noise
Fitly resembles deaf men's shrill discourse,
Who talk aloud,<sup>0</sup> thinking all other men loudly
To have their imperfection.

FERDINAND Have not you
My palsy?

CARDINAL Yes, I can be angry, but Without this rupture: there is not in nature
A thing that makes man so deformed, so beastly,
As doth intemperate anger. Chide yourself.
You have divers men who never yet expressed
Their strong desire of rest but by unrest,
By vexing of themselves. Come, put yourself
In tune.

FERDINAND So; I will only study to seem
The thing I am not. I could kill her now,
In you, or in myself; for I do think
It is some sin in us heaven doth revenge
By her.

CARDINAL Are you stark mad?

FERDINAND I would have their bodies
Burnt in a coal pit with the ventage<sup>0</sup> stopped, chimney
That their cursed smoke might not ascend to heaven;
Or dip the sheets they lie in in pitch or sulphur,

5. The left is the sinister side, associated with bad luck, deceit, and passion.

6. Gross tests of strength,

Wrap them in't, and then light them like a match;
 Or else to boil their bastard to a cullis,<sup>0</sup>
 And give't his lecherous father to renew<sup>0</sup>
 The sin of his back.<sup>7</sup>

*broth
 repair*

CARDINAL I'll leave you.

75 FERDINAND Nay, I have done.
 I am confident, had I been damned in hell,
 And should have heard of this, it would have put me
 Into a cold sweat. In, in; I'll go sleep.
 Till I know who leaps my sister, I'll not stir:
 That known, I'll find scorpions to string my whips,<sup>8</sup>
 so And fix her in a general eclipse.

[Exeunt.]

Act 3

SCENE 1. Amalfi.

[Enter ANTONIO and DELIO.]

ANTONIO Our noble friend, my most beloved Delio!

Oh, you have been a stranger long at court;
 Came you along with the Lord Ferdinand?

DELIO I did, sir. And how fares your noble duchess?

5 ANTONIO Right fortunately well: she's an excellent
 Feeder of pedigrees; since you last saw her,
 She hath had two children more, a son and daughter.

DELIO Methinks 'twas yesterday: let me but wink,
 And not behold your face, which to mine eye
 10 Is somewhat leaner, verily I should dream
 It were within this half-hour.

ANTONIO You have not been in law, friend Delio,
 Nor in prison, nor a suitor at the court,
 Nor begged the reversion of some great man's place,
 15 Nor troubled with an old wife, which doth make
 Your time so insensibly<sup>0</sup> hasten.

imperceptibly

DELIO Pray, sir, tell me,
 Hath not this news arrived yet to the ear
 Of the Lord Cardinal?

ANTONIO I fear it hath:
 The Lord Ferdinand, that's newly come to court,
 Doth bear himself right dangerously.

20 DELIO Pray, why?

ANTONIO He is so quiet that he seems to sleep
 The tempest out, as dormice do in winter.
 Those houses that are haunted are most still
 Till the devil be up.

DELIO What say the common people?

25 ANTONIO The common rabble do directly say
 She is a strumpet.

7. As Atreus did to Thyestes in Greek legend. "The sin of his back": sexual capacity.

8. Tipping the thongs of a whip with "scorpions"

(tips of jagged steel or lead that sting and bite the flesh) is an old metaphor for aggravated punishment.

The Middle Ages (to ca. 1485)

Scepter, from the Sutton Hoo Treasure, ca. 625 c.E.

Discovered in 1939, among other items (jewelry, pottery, fragments of a helmet and shield), in a funeral ship buried in a mound near the coast of East Anglia, the scepter—probably a symbol of royal authority—consists of a massive ceremonial whetstone carved with faces and attached to a ring of twisted bronze wires mounted by an intricately carved stag. The treasure suggests the one laden on Scyld's funeral ship in Beowulf (lines 26–52; pp. 31–32) and the material world imagined throughout the poem; the scepter evokes the "gold standard . . . / high above [the king's] head." THE BRITISH MUSEUM, LONDON, UK/BRIDGEMAN ART LIBRARY.

Annunciation to the Shepherds; the Magi before Herod, ca. 1150

Stories of the Nativity figure prominently both in the mystery plays and in medieval Psalters such as this one. The Latin text on the angels' scrolls is from Luke 2.11, "Natus est nobis hodie salvator qui est Christus Dominus in civitate David" (Unto us is born in the city of David a savior who is Christ the Lord). Herod's scroll gives his instructions to the Magi from Matthew 2.8, "ite et interrogate diligenter de puero" (go and inquire diligently about the child). The caption above each image is in French. THE BRITISH LIBRARY, COTTON NERO C. IV, FOLIO 11.

Noah urging his wife to board the ark, ca. 1290

Noah's trouble getting his wife to board the ark was a popular subject in medieval drama and art (See Chaucer, The Miller's Tale, lines 430-35; p. 200). In this illustration from a Psalter, Noah admonishes his wife with his left hand and grabs her wrist with the right, urging her to come aboard. Concealed, riding piggyback on the wife, a winged devil comes along as a stow-away. Below, he exits through the hull among drowned bodies on the seafloor. Other manuscripts show the serpent plugging the hole with his tail. THE PIERPONT MORGAN LIBRARY/ART RESOURCE, NY.

Plowing, the Luttrell Psalter, ca. 1330

The Psalter made for Sir Geoffrey Luttrell is sumptuously illustrated with idealized depictions of family, servants, workers, animals, and their activities (plowing, sowing, harvesting, feasting, playing) on the lord's estate; it is also elaborately decorated with foliage and grotesques. The Plowman here is a symbolic figure of order like Chaucer's Plowman (p. 183) and Langland's Piers Plowman (p. 271). The image echoes line 6 of the Psalm above, "Si dicebam motus est pes meus, misericordia tua, domine, adiuuabat me" (If I said: My foot is moved: thy mercy, Lord, helped me); "pes" (foot) anticipates the plow foot that moves the soil. THE BRITISH LIBRARY, FOLIO 170R FROM THE LUTTRELL PSALTER, MS ADDITIONAL 42130.

The Wilton Diptych,
Flemish school, 1395—
96

Richard II commissioned this double-panel painting, both pious and political, not long before his deposition. In it he is portrayed as a boy, perhaps ten years old, the age at which he became king. Two English kings, St. Edmund and St. Edward "the Confessor," and John the Baptist, Richard's patron saint, present the young king to the Virgin and Child, who are surrounded by angels. The Christ Child blesses the red-cross standard of St. George (the patron saint of England), about to be given into the kneeling king's open hands. Richard's robe and the angels' sleeves display his personal emblem, a white hart (punning on richehart). NATIONAL GALLERY, LONDON, GREAT BRITAIN/ART RESOURCE, NY.

The Crucifixion, Lapworth Missal, 1398

This late medieval manuscript illumination typically portrays the humanity of Christ: frail, eyes closed, head inclining on his shoulder. At the sides stand the Virgin mother, who swoons in the arms of Mary Magdalene, and St. John the evangelist. The skull signifies Golgotha (place of skulls), the site of the Crucifixion. According to medieval legend, the tree of knowledge had stood on the same site and Adam was buried there: thus the skull is that of Adam, whose original sin is being redeemed by the blood that the angels are collecting. The sun and moon symbolize the New and Old Testaments: as the sun illuminates the moon, the light of the New Testament reveals the hidden truths of the Old. Symbols of the four evangelists appear in the corners of the intricately decorated frame.

CORPUS CHRISTI COLLEGE, UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD, MS 394.

Portrait of Chaucer, ca. 1411

In his poem The Regiment of Princes, Hoccleve, a younger disciple of Chaucer, memorializes "My maistir Chaucer, flour of eloquence, / Mirour of fructuous entendement, / O universel fadir in science!" One manuscript preserves a copy of a small portrait that Hoccleve placed in the margin so "That they that han of him lost thought and mynde / By this peynture may ageyn him fynde." Chaucer holds a rosary in his left hand; attached to his gown, a penknife (formerly used for making and mending quill pens) or pen case functions as a symbol of authorship.

THE BRITISH LIBRARY, MS HARLEY 4866, FOLIO 88.

Manuscript illumination of pilgrims leaving Canterbury, ca. 1420

Chaucer's pilgrims never get to Canterbury, but they do in the prologue to John Lydgate's The Siege of Thebes. In the prologue, Lydgate, a monk of Bury St. Edmund's and an enthusiastic follower of Chaucer, tells how on his own pilgrimage to Canterbury he encounters Chaucer's pilgrims. The Host invites the monk to join the company on their return journey and calls on him to tell the first tale. Lydgate is the middle figure in a monk's cowl, costumed more soberly than Chaucer's Monk (pp. 174–75). The cathedral and walls of Canterbury appear in the background. THE BRITISH LIBRARY, MS BOYAL 18 D II, FOLIO 148.

Three hunting scenes, Le Mireur du Monde, French manuscript, ca. 1475

The medieval nobility regarded the hunt as both a sport and an art—a test of the skill and endurance of men, dogs, and quarry. These scenes of hunters stalking the deer, breaking up the carcass, and pursuing the boar correspond to the Gawain poet's elaborate descriptions of the first two hunts (pp. 137ff., 143ff.). The stylized rhetoric describing the hunts both parallels and contrasts with the stylized exchanges between Gawain and the lady in the interspersed bedroom scenes where she is the hunter and he the quarry. BODLEIAN LIBRARY, UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD, MS Douce 338, FOLIO 60, 56, 78.

The Sixteenth Century (1485–1603)

St. George and the Dragon (London version), Paolo Uccello, ca. 1455–60

A depiction by the Florentine artist Uccello of the legend that was to inspire Edmund Spenser in Book I of The Faerie Queene (p. 370). Already held on a leash by the elegant lady—as if the struggle's outcome were not in doubt—the dragon submits to the knight's lance (thrust through the nose in a gesture that better recalls the domestication of cattle than the thwarting of an enemy). The desolate cave is strangely conjoined with the formal garden and the lady's elegant court dress: the story is imagined as located at once in the wilderness and at the very center of civilization. NATIONAL GALLERY, LONDON, GREAT BRITAIN/ART BE-SOURCE, NY.

Thomas More, Hans Holbein, 1527

Painted on the eve of More's great conflict with Henry VIII over the validity of the king's marriage to Catherine of Aragon, Holbein's portrait emphasizes both the chancellor's importance and his strength of character. More wears the heavy gold chain and rich dress of high office, which he had satirized a decade earlier in Utopia. In all probability, if early biographies of More can be believed, he also wears a hair shirt under the velvet and fur, a hidden, painful reminder of the vulnerable flesh that he secretly mortified. COPYRIGHT THE FRICK COLLECTION, NEW YORK.

Edward VI and the Pope: An Allegory of the Reformation, English school, ca. 1568—71

The dying Henry VIII hands over the mandate for church reform to his young son and heir, Prince Edward. This is a polemical attempt to depict the religious revolution that had a deep impact on English society and literature. The open book, proclaiming the Protestant emphasis on the Word of God in vernacular translation, crushes the pope and the taglines of Catholic corruption that surround him. The Council of Regency (appointed to guide the king, who was only nine when he ascended the throne) is in attendance; to the left, two monks flee the pope's downfall. In the upper right, a painting (or view from the window?) heralds the collapse of the Old Church and the breaking of its "idols." Several places in the painting are intended for inscriptions, but for unknown reasons these were never completed. NATIONAL PORTRAIT GALLERY, LONDON, UK/BRIDGEMAN ART LIBRARY.

The Wife and Daughter of a Chief,
John White, 1585

Accompanying Thomas Hariot's Brief and True Report of the New-found Land of Virginia, John White's watercolors chronicle the most striking images of Algonkian life as seen by the English voyagers. Here, a young girl "of the age of 8 or 10 years" carries a European doll, dressed in full Elizabethan costume, that she has clearly been given as a gift by the strange visitors. The presentation of small gifts was a regular part of English practice, frequently alternating with displays of murderous violence. White's drawing manages to convey both the exoticism and the dignity that Hariot and others perceived in the American natives. THE BRITISH MUSEUM.

Portrait of a Melancholy Young Man, Isaac Oliver; ca. 1590-95

Equally fashionable in attitude and dress, Oliver's young man displays the fascination of the English elite with the "melancholy humour." In addition to the sad expression, the black clothes and crossed arms are conventional markers of melancholy. Men in love, like Sidney's Astrophil (p. 451) and Duke Orsino in Twelfth Night (p. 510), found it particularly glamorous to parade their pensive dispositions. The romance of this "disease" figures in the couple just walking into the labyrinth-garden on the right. THE ROYAL COLLECTION © 2003, HER MAJESTY QUEEN ELIZABETH II.

Captain Thomas Lee, Marcus Gheeraerts the Younger, 1594

Restless, ambitious Thomas Lee was executed in 1601 for participating in the rebellion against the queen led by the earl of Essex, but in 1594 he was in the midst of his bid for the position of chief negotiator between Ireland and the English Crown. His appearance refers both to his military service in Ireland and to his status at home: Lee sports the bare legs and open shirt of a "kerne," or Irish footsoldier, along with the rich brocade and armor of a wealthy English nobleman. Lee, whose hand had been injured in a skirmish, wishes himself compared with the Roman Gaius Mucius Scaevola, who demonstrated to the enemy Etruscans his resolution and indifference to pain by thrusting his right hand into a fire. Scaevola so impressed the Etruscans that their leader, Porsena, sued for peace. Painted in the tree to Lee's right is a quotation from Livy attributed to Scaevola: "Both to act and to suffer with fortitude is a Roman's part" (trans. Karen Hearn, ed. Dynasties). TATE GALLERY, LONDON/ART RESOURCE, NY.

The Life and Death of Sir Henry<sup>1</sup> Linton, anonymous, ca. 1597

A masque of musicians and dancers performs for a dinner party of Unton's friends. Theatrical life in this period, which often included music and dancing, was not restricted to the playhouse; it extended into other social settings, such as this one. Theater here is depicted as incidental entertainment: some guests turn their backs on the pageant; the size of the actors is considerably smaller than that of their patrons, an index of relative social importance. BY COURTESY OF THE NATIONAL PORTRAIT GALLERY, LONDON.

The "Chandos Portrait" of William Shakespeare, anonymous, date unknown

The formal portrait of the playwright that appears in the First Folio edition of his works depicts him stiffly posed in a brocade jacket and a heavily starched collar. Here, in a portrait named after its owner, the duke of Chandos, Shakespeare is presented less formally and more as his friends and colleagues may have known him. The artist is unknown, but some speculate that it may have been Shakespeare's fellow actor Richard Burbage. BY COURTESY OF THE NATIONAL PORTRAIT GALLERY, LONDON.

A Young Man, Nicholas Hilliard, ca. 1600

This tiny painting from a playing card approximately two inches square represents the “other side” of Elizabethan love poetry: passion replaces languor. The image of the lover tormented by the “fire” of his mistress’s eyes or the hellish inner torment of desire was a common one. Though Sidney’s Astrophil lives “in blackest winter night,” he feels “the flames of hottest summer day,” while even disillusioned lovers in Shakespeare’s sonnets do not know how “To shun the heaven that leads men to this hell” (p. 507). The locket held by the young man presumably contains another miniature: a portrait of the beloved.

VICTORIA & ALBERT MUSEUM, LONDON/ART RESOURCE, NY.

Elizabeth I in Procession, attributed to Robert Peake, ca. 1600

Carried on a litter like an image of the Virgin in the religious processions of previous centuries, the gorgeously arrayed Queen Elizabeth is shown here as a time-defying icon of purity and power. When the painting was executed, the queen was sixty-seven years old. Until the end of her life she continued her custom of going on “Progresses” through the realm: surrounded by her courtiers and ladies in waiting, she would venture forth to show herself to her people, many of whom nearly bankrupted themselves to entertain her in style. THE STAPLETON COLLECTION/BRIDGEMAN ART LIBRARY.

Henry Wriothesley, Third Earl of Southampton, John de Critz, 1603

Henry Wriothesley, the third earl of Southampton, was nearly executed for his part in the rebellion against Queen Elizabeth led by his friend the earl of Essex in 1601. Though he was eventually pardoned, Southampton was imprisoned for two years in the Tower of London, where he is here depicted along with his favorite cat. Tradition has it that the cat found its way to him in prison and reached him by coming down the chimney. An early patron of Shakespeare, the wealthy earl may be the "Mr. W. H." (his initials reversed) to whom the first edition of the sonnets is dedicated (p. 497). On the eve of the Essex rebellion, Southampton seems to have instigated a performance of Richard II by Shakespeare's company to put the people of London in mind of deposition. The painting was clearly commissioned after his release, the date of which is painted on the tablet, along with the proud inscription "In Vinculis / Invictus" (Though in chains, unconquered). The Early Seventeenth Century
(1603–1660)

The Expulsion from Paradise, Masaccio, ca. 1427—28

This striking fresco shows an agonized Adam and Eve driven from Eden by a sword-wielding angel. Adam is so overcome he buries his face in his hands; Eve's face is a mask of despair. They do not touch: each seems imprisoned in his or her own pain. Milton's representation of the expulsion at the end of Book 12 of Paradise Lost is very different, and the comparison is instructive (see pp. 848ff.). SCALA/ART RESOURCE, NY.

The Three Graces (detail), The Primavera, Sandro Botticelli, ca. 1481

The Graces are a prominent allusive feature of seventeenth-century poetry and masques. At times they carry the allegorical significance suggested in Botticelli's portrayal of them as extensions of Venus, goddess of love and beauty, and as manifestations of the beauty, joy, and freshness of spring. Milton's "L'Allegro" (p. 697) is couched as a literary hymn honoring Euphrosyne, the Grace who signifies youthful mirth; her sisters are Aglaia, splendor, and Thalia, abundance or pleasure. Their linked hands and postures are said to symbolize the giving and receiving of joy, bounty, and pleasure. ERICH LESSING/ART RESOURCE, NY.

Sacred and Profane Love, Titian, ca. 1515

This image might almost serve as an emblem for the two kinds of love celebrated and often contrasted in seventeenth-century verse. In Titian's Neoplatonic program, the nude figure bearing the torch is the celestial Venus, the principle of universal and eternal beauty and love; the clothed figure is the earthly Venus, who creates the perishable images of beauty in humans, flowers and trees, gold and gems, and works of art. Cupid is placed between them but somewhat closer to the terrestrial Venus. SCALA/ART RESOURCE, NY.

God Creating the Animals, Tintoretto, 1550–52

A remarkable rendering of the scene, with God the Father depicted as an immense figure, exuding power and energy, actively calling forth many varieties of animals. The conception invites comparison with Milton's rendering of the Genesis creation story in Paradise Lost, Book 7 (p. 801). CAMARAPHOTO/ART RESOURCE, NY.

John Donne, anonymous, ca. 1595

This portrait presents Donne in the guise of a melancholy lover fond of self-display; the signs are his broad-brimmed black hat, soulful eyes, sensual lips, delicate hands, and untied but expensive lace collar. Parts of Donne's Songs and Sonnets (pp. 603 ff.) date from this period. Melancholy, supposedly caused by an excess of black bile and often associated with the scholarly and artistic temperament, was identified in Robert Burton's massive and very popular Anatomy of Melancholy as a well-nigh universal attribute of the period. It is the temperament of many literary characters, among them Hamlet, Duke Orsino (in Twelfth Night, p. 510), Jacques in As You Like It, and Milton's  $\Pi$  Pensive (p. 1801). PRIVATE COLLECTION/ BRIDGEMAN ART LIBRARY.

Lady Sidney and Six of Her Children, Marcus Gheeraerts the Younger, ca. 1596

This portrait of Barbara (Gamage) Sidney, wife of Sir Robert Sidney of Penshurst, provides an insight into domestic relations in the period, as well as an illuminating comment on Ben Jonson's poem "To Penshurst" (p. 644). Robert Sidney (brother of Sir Philip Sidney) is absent, serving as governor of the English stronghold in Flushing. Lady Sidney is portrayed as a fruitful, fostering mother. Her hands rest on her two sons—both still in skirts, though the heir wears a sword; the four daughters are arranged in two pairs, the elder of each pair imitating her mother's nurturing gesture. The eldest daughter will become Lady Mary Wroth, author of Urania and the sonnet sequence Pamphilia to Amphilanthus (pp. 652 ff.). REPRODUCED BY KIND PERMISSION OF VLSCOUNT DE L'ISLE, FROM HIS PRIVATE COLLECTION AT PENSURST PLACE.

Lucy, Countess of Bedford, as a Masquer, attributed to John de Critz, ca. 1606

Lucy (Harrington) Russell, countess of Bedford, prominent courtier, favorite of Queen Anne, patron of Donne and Jonson, and frequent planner of and participant in court masques, is shown in masquing costume, for the wedding masque Hymenaei, by Ben Jonson and Inigo Jones. Jonson describes the masquing ladies as "attired richly and alike in the most celestial colors" associated with the rainbow, with elaborate headdresses and shoes, "all full of splendor, sovereignty, and riches." Their masque dances were "fully of subtlety and device."
WOBURN ABBEY, BEDFORDSHIRE, UK/BRIDGEMAN ART LIBRARY.

The Garden of Eden with the Fall of Man, Jan Brueghel the Elder and Peter Paul Rubens, ca. 1615

Possibly foreshadowing Milton's portrayal of Eden in Paradise Lost, the painting presents an idyllic scene with cavorting animals in a lush landscape and a graceful human pair—perhaps just enjoying the garden's fruit, but at least intimating the moment of the Fall as a seductive. Eve hands Adam an apple and a snake looks on. A favorite painter of Charles I, Rubens designed and painted for the king the splendid ceiling of Whitehall, portraying King James in apotheosis, as a supporter of wisdom, justice, concord, and peace. SCALA/ART RESOURCE, NY.

Charles I on Horseback, Sir Anthony Van Dyck, 1637—38

One of Charles I's court painters, knighted and pensioned by the king, Van Dyck produced several portraits of the royal family and their circle at court. This magnificent equestrian portrait of the king in armor on a white horse presents him as hero and warrior, in a pose that looks back to portraits and statues of Roman emperors on horseback. It was painted to be hung at the end of the Long Gallery in St. James Palace. NATIONAL GALLERY, LONDON, UK/ BRIDGEMAN ART LIBRARY, NY.

The Penitent Magdalen, Georges de la Tour, ca. 1638—43

This remarkable image of a young woman in meditative pose, her face lit by candlelight and her hand touching a skull, can serve as an emblem for the extensive meditative literature of the period—the poetry and prose of Donne, Herbert, Vaughan, and Traherne, among others—on such topics as sickness, human mortality, the transience of life and beauty, and the inevitability of death. ## The Restoration and the Eighteenth Century (1660–1785)

Landscape with Apollo and the Muses, Claude Lorrain, 1652

Claude's poetic landscapes inspired many British landscape gardens. In this painting, a river god sprawls by the Castalian spring under Mount Parnassus; the white swans are sacred to Apollo. On the terrace to the left, Apollo plays his lyre, surrounded by the nine Muses, while four poets approach through the woods. At the upper left, below a temple, the fountain of Hippocrene pours forth its inspiring waters. The dreamlike distance of the figures in this mysterious, luminous scene is intended to draw the viewer in. Similarly, in landscape gardens visitors were invited to stroll amid temples, inscriptions, swans, and statues, gradually comprehending the master plan. NATIONAL GALLERY OF SCOTLAND, EDINBURGH, SCOTLAND/BRIDGEIVIAN ART LIBRARY.

Great Fire of London,
Dutch school, 1666

The fire of London, described by Dryden in Annus Mirabilis and by Pepys in his diary, destroyed most of the central city. In the foreground of this panorama, huddled refugees carry their goods away from the city. Under a pall of smoke across the Thames, St. Paul's Cathedral blazes in the center, with London Bridge on the far left and the Tower on the far right. The fire raged for four days, after which a new city eventually rose from the ashes.
MUSEUM OF LONDON, UK/
BRIDGEMAN ART LIBRARY.

Embarkment for Cythera,
Jean Antoine Watteau, 1717

Cythera is one of the names of Venus, and in this painting elegant pilgrims visit an island of love to pay homage to Venus (whose statue is on the far right). Paired off, these lovers pass through a romantic, erotic dream-landscape, related to the visionary landscape of Pope's "Eloisa to Abelard." A ship of love waits on the left to carry the couples away. Are they going or coming to Cythera? In the grip of love, is the prevailing mood one of joy and anticipation, or of melancholy and surfeit? Critics differ; this painting does not reveal all its secrets.

Bristol Docks and Quay, anonymous, early eighteenth century

Bristol, in southwest England, profited enormously from the expansion of the slave trade. From this port, merchants sent trinkets, guns, and rum to West Africa in exchange for slaves, who were transported to North America and the West Indies in exchange for money and sugar. This painting shows a bustling metropolis whose trade makes possible the busy shops at the right and the great houses in the background. BRISTOL CITY MUSEUM AND ART GALLERY, UK/BRIDGEMAN ART LIBRARY.

Gulliver Taking Leave of the Houyhnhnms, Sawrey Gilpin, 1769

In part 4 of Gulliver's Travels (pp. 1069 ff.), Swift cleverly makes use of the eighteenth-century British love of horses. Gulliver's infatuation with the dignity and nobility of the Houyhnhnms reflects the feelings of many hunters mounted for the chase or of gentlemen promenading in the park; some preferred horses to human beings. Commercially, "horse painters" found eager and wealthy buyers, while Sawrey Gilpin tried to elevate horse painting by placing his horses against rich landscapes and in historical settings. PRIVATE COLLECTION/BRIDGEMAN ART LIBRARY.

The Beggar's Opera, act 3, scene 11, William Hogarth, 1729

The highwayman Macheath, in leg irons, stands at the center, flanked by the women between whom he cannot choose. To the left, Lucy kneels before the jailer Lockit; to the right, Polly kneels before her father, Peachum. In the rear, a group of prisoners waits for its cue. But the setting is not so much a prison as the theater; spectators are seated on each side of the stage. Hogarth connects the audience with the actors just as The Beggar's Opera does, suggesting corruption "through all the employments of life." Behind Peachum, John Gay confers with his producer, John Rich. Below them, seated at the far right, the duke of Bolton (note his Star of the Garter) exchanges a rapt gaze with Polly; a satyr points down at him. On opening night, the duke fell in love with the actor who played Polly, Lavinia Fenton. He returned every night, until she became his mistress—and, two decades later, his wife. TATE GALLERY, LONDON/ART RESOURCE, NY.

Garrick between Tragedy and Comedy, Joshua Reynolds, 1762

Sir Joshua Reynolds specialized in portraits that characterized his subjects by alluding to classical literature and art. Here, the great actor David Garrick is torn between Comedy, on the left, and Tragedy, on the right. The picture parodies a well-known image, Hercules between Virtue and Pleasure, and alludes to Guido Reni (Tragedy) and Correggio (Comedy). Exalted Tragedy urges Garrick to follow her, but darling Comedy drags him away.

SOMERSET MAUGHAM THEATRE COLLECTION, LONDON, UK/BRIDGEMAN ART LIBRARY.

A Philosopher Giving That Lecture on the Orrery, in Which a Lamp Is Put in Place of the Sun, Joseph Wright, 1766.

Joseph Wright came from the English Midlands, where an intense interest in science helped spark the industrial revolution. The orrery, a mechanism that represents the movements of the planets around the sun, was one of many devices that taught the public to appreciate the wonders and pleasures of science. In this picture, the philosopher at the center bears a striking resemblance to portraits of Sir Isaac Newton, who had cast light on the solar system. Wright specialized in "candlelight pictures." Strong effects of light and shade play over the faces around the lamp, as if to reflect the literal meaning of enlightenment. GIRAUDON/ART RESOURCE, NY.

The Death of General Wolfe, Benjamin West, 1771

History painting—pictures that represent a famous legend or historical event—was the most prestigious genre of eighteenth-century art. West's painting of Wolfe, who fell on the day that he captured Quebec, revolutionized the genre by dressing the figures in contemporary clothes, not classical togas. Twelve years after his death, Wolfe had become an icon; the composition draws on images of mourners around the dead Christ. The poetic shading is also appropriate to Wolfe. The night before he died, he is supposed to have said of Gray's "Elegy" (p. 1332) that he "would rather have been the author of that piece than beat the French tomorrow"; and in his copy of the poem, he marked one passage: "The paths of glory lead but to the grave." PRIVATE COLLECTION/PHILLIPS, FINE ART AUCTIONEERS, NY/BRIDGEMAN ART LIBRARY.

The Parting of Abelard from Heloise, Angelika Kauffmann, ca. 1778

Angelika Kauffmann, born in Switzerland in 1741, was a child prodigy; at eleven she made a name in Italy for her portraits. From 1766 to 1781 she lived in England, where she was admired as a singer as well as a painter. During the eighteenth century the affair of Abelard and Heloise, which Pope depicted as a struggle between God and Eros, softened into a sentimental love story. Rousseau's novel The New Heloise (1761) helped transform the heroine into a saint of love. In an Age of Sensibility, Kauffmann portrays a youthful and feminized Abelard, not a wounded middle-aged scholar, and pathos, not repentance, marks this tender parting. Illustration for Gray's "Ode on the Death of a Favourite Cat," William Blake, 1798

In 1797, as a birthday gift for his wife, Nancy, the sculptor John Flaxman commissioned Blake to illustrate Gray's poems. These designs, in pen and watercolor, view the art of Gray through Blake's own vision. The charm of Gray's ode depends on picturing Selima both as a cat who tumbles for goldfish and as a "nymph" or "maid" who falls for gold. Blake mixes the two together in a cat and turns the goldfish (or "genii of the stream") into fleeing, finny human forms. Meanwhile, a lurking Fate cuts the thread of Selima's life, reminding us, in this interpretation of Gray, that perverted desires can be deadly. © YALE CENTER FOR BRITISH ART, PAUL MELLON COLLECTION, USA/BRIDGEMAN ART LIBRARY.

BOSOLA Yes, if we could find spectacles to read them.

I do suspect there hath been some sorcery

Used on the duchess.

FERDINAND Sorcery? To what purpose?

BOSOLA To make her dote on some desertless fellow

She shames to acknowledge.

FERDINAND Can your faith give way

To think there's power in potions or in charms,

To make us love whether we will or no?

BOSOLA Most certainly.

FERDINAND Away! These are mere gulleries,<sup>0</sup> horrid things,

deceits

Invented by some cheating mountebanks<sup>4</sup>

To abuse us. Do you think that herbs or charms

Can force the will? Some trials have been made

In this foolish practice, but the ingredients

Were lenitive<sup>0</sup> poisons, such as are of force

slow-working

To make the patient mad; and straight the witch

Swears by equivocation they are in love.

The witchcraft lies in her rank<sup>0</sup> blood. This night

wanton

I will force confession from her. You told me

You had got, within these two days, a false<sup>0</sup> key

unauthorized

Into her bedchamber.

BOSOLA I have.

FERDINAND As I would wish.

BOSOLA What do you intend to do?

FERDINAND Can you guess?

BOSOLA No.

FERDINAND Do not ask, then:

He that can compass<sup>0</sup> me, and know my drifts,<sup>0</sup>

comprehend / purposes

iMay say he hath put a girdle 'bout the world,

And sounded all her quicksands.

BOSOLA I do not Think so.

FERDINAND What do you think, then, pray?

BOSOLA That you

Are your own chronicle too much, and grossly

Flatter yourself.

FERDINAND Give me thy hand; I thank thee:

I ne'er gave pension but to flatterers,

Till I entertained<sup>0</sup> thee. Farewell.

employed

That friend a great man's ruin strongly checks,

Who rails into his belief all his defects.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE 2. The bedchamber of the DUCHESS.

[Enter DUCHESS, ANTONIO, and CARIOLA.]

DUCHESS Bring me the casket hither, and the glass.

You get no lodging here tonight, my lord.

ANTONIO Indeed, I must persuade one.

DUCHESS Very good:

4. A mixture of street entertainer and patent medicine salesman.

I hope in time 'twill grow into a custom,
 That noblemen shall come with cap and knee
 To purchase a night's lodging of their wives.

ANTONIO I must lie here.

DUCHESS Must! You are a lord of misrule.<sup>1</sup>

ANTONIO Indeed, my rule is only in the night.

DUCHESS TO what use will you put me?

ANTONIO We'll sleep together.

DUCHESS Alas, what pleasure can two lovers find in sleep?

CARIOLA My lord, I lie with her often, and I know
 She'll much disquiet you.

ANTONIO See, you are complained of.

CARIOLA For she's the sprawling'st bedfellow.

ANTONIO I shall like her
 The better for that.

CARIOLA Sir, shall I ask you a question?

ANTONIO I pray thee, Cariola.

CARIOLA Wherefore still,<sup>0</sup> when you lie always with my lady,
 Do you rise so early?

ANTONIO Laboring men
 Count the clock oftenest, Cariola,
 Are glad when their task's ended.

DUCHESS I'll stop your mouth. [Kisses him.]

ANTONIO Nay, that's but one; Venus had two soft doves
 To draw her chariot; I must have another— [She kisses him again.]
 When wilt thou marry, Cariola?

CARIOLA Never, my lord.

ANTONIO Oh, fie upon this single life! Forgo it.
 We read how Daphne, for her peevish flight,
 Became a fruitless bay tree; Syrinx turned
 To the pale empty reed; Anaxarete
 Was frozen into marble: whereas those
 Which married, or proved kind unto their friends,
 Were by a gracious influence trans-shaped
 Into the olive, pomegranate, mulberry,
 Became flowers, precious stones, or eminent stars.<sup>2</sup>

CARIOLA This is a vain poetry, but I pray you tell me,
 If there were proposed me, wisdom, riches, and beauty,
 In three several young men, which should I choose?

ANTONIO 'Tis a hard question: this was Paris' case,
 And he was blind in 't, and there was great cause;
 For how was't possible he could judge right,
 Having three amorous goddesses in view,
 And they stark naked? 'Twas a motion<sup>3</sup>
 Were able to benight the apprehension

3.2

1. The mock-monarch of a carnival festival.
 2. The olive was created by Athena; the mulberry gained its color from the blood of Pyramus and Thisbe; the pomegranate seems to have no particular mythological origin. Most of the other stories of ladies being transformed for complying, or not complying, with the solicitations of a god are from Ovid's Metamorphoses.

3. Spectacle. Paris had to choose among Hera, Athena, and Aphrodite, goddesses of regal power, wisdom, and love; his selecting the third led to the Trojan War.

Of the severest counselor of Europe.

Now I look on both your faces so well formed,

It puts me in mind of a question I would ask.

CARIOLA What is't?

ANTONIO I do wonder why hard-favored ladies,

For the most part, keep worse-favored waiting women

To attend them, and cannot endure fair ones.

DUCHESS Oh, that's soon answered.

Did you ever in your life know an ill painter

Desire to have his dwelling next door to the shop

Of an excellent picture-maker? 'Twould disgrace

His face-making, and undo him. I prithee,

When were we so merry?—My hair tangles.

ANTONIO Pray thee, Cariola, let's steal forth the room,

And let her talk to herself: I have divers times

Served her the like, when she hath chafed extremely.

I love to see her angry. Softly, Cariola. [Exeunt ANTONIO and CARIOLA.]

DUCHESS Doth not the color of my hair 'gin to change?

When I wax gray, I shall have all the court

Powder their hair with arras,<sup>4</sup> to be like me.

You have cause to love me; I entered you into my heart

Before you would vouchsafe to call for the keys.

[Enter FERDINAND behind.]

We shall one day have my brothers take you napping;

Methinks his presence, being now in court,

Should make you keep your own bed; but you'll say

Love mixed with fear is sweetest. I'll assure you,

You shall get no more children till my brothers

Consent to be your gossips.<sup>5</sup> Have you lost your tongue?

[She turns and sees FERDINAND.]

'Tis welcome:

For know, whether I am doomed to live or die,

I can do both like a prince.

FERDINAND Die, then, quickly! [Giving her a poniard.]

Virtue, where art thou hid? What hideous thing

Is it that doth eclipse thee?

DUCHESS Pray, sir, hear me.

FERDINAND Or is it true thou art but a bare name,

And no essential<sup>o</sup> thing?

actual

DUCHESS Sir—

FERDINAND Do not speak.

DUCHESS NO, sir: I will plant my soul in mine ears, to hear you.

FERDINAND O most imperfect light of human reason,

That mak'st us so unhappy to foresee

What we can least prevent! Pursue thy wishes,

And glory in them: there's in shame no comfort

But to be past all bounds and sense of shame.

DUCHESS I pray, sir, hear me. I am married.

4. Orris root, used in powdered form to make hair artificially gray.

5. Sponsors in baptism,

FERDINAND So!

DUCHESS Haply,<sup>0</sup> not to your liking; but for that, perhaps
 Alas, your shears do come untimely now
 To clip the bird's wings that's already flown!
 Will you see my husband?

FERDINAND Yes, if I could change
 Eyes with a basilisk.<sup>6</sup>

DUCHESS Sure, you came hither
 By his confederacy.

FERDINAND The howling of a wolf
 Is music to thee, screech owl: prithee, peace.
 Whate'er thou art that hast enjoyed my sister,
 For I am sure thou hear'st me, for thine own sake
 Let me not know thee. I came hither prepared
 To work thy discovery; yet am now persuaded
 It would beget such violent effects
 As would damn us both. I would not for ten millions
 I had beheld thee: therefore use all means
 I never may have knowledge of thy name;
 Enjoy thy lust still, and a wretched life,
 On that condition. And for thee, vile woman,
 If thou do wish thy lecher may grow old
 In thy embracements, I would have thee build
 Such a room for him as our anchorites
 To holier use inhabit. Let not the sun
 Shine on him till he's dead; let dogs and monkeys
 Only converse with him, and such dumb things
 To whom nature denies use to sound his name;
 Do not keep a paraquito,<sup>0</sup> lest she learn it; parrot
 If thou do love him, cut out thine own tongue,
 Lest it bewray<sup>0</sup> him. betray

DUCHESS Why might not I marry?
 I have not gone about in this to create
 Any new world or custom.

FERDINAND Thou art undone;
 And thou hast ta'en that massy sheet of lead
 That hid thy husband's bones, and folded it
 About my heart.

DUCHESS Mine bleeds for't.

FERDINAND Thine? Thy heart?
 What should I name't unless a hollow bullet
 Filled with unquenchable wildfire?

DUCHESS You are in this
 Too strict, and were you not my princely brother,
 I would say, too willful. My reputation
 Is safe.

FERDINAND Dost thou know what reputation is?
 I'll tell thee—to small purpose, since the instruction
 Comes now too late.

6. Monster that was fabled to kill with a glance.

Upon a time, Reputation, Love, and Death
 Would travel o'er the world; and it was concluded
 That they should part, and take three several ways.
 Death told them, they should find him in great battles,
 Or cities plagued with plagues. Love gives them counsel
 To inquire for him 'mongst unambitious shepherds,
 Where dowries were not talked of, and sometimes
 'Mongst quiet kindred that had nothing left
 By their dead parents. "Stay," quoth Reputation,
 "Do not forsake me; for it is my nature,
 If once I part from any man I meet,
 I am never found again." And so for you:
 You have shook hands<sup>6</sup> with Reputation,
 And made him invisible. So, fare you well.
 I will never see you more.

parted

DUCHESS                               Why should only I,
 Of all the other princes of the world,
 Be cased up, like a holy relic? I have youth
 And a little beauty.

FERDINAND                            So you have some virgins
 That are witches. I will never see thee more.

[Exit.][Enter ANTONIO with a pistol, and CARIOLA.]

DUCHESS   YOU saw this apparition?

ANTONIO                                Yes. We are Betrayed. How came he hither? I should turn
 This to thee, for that.

[Pointing the pistol at CARIOLA.]

CARIOLA                               Pray, sir, do; and when
 That you have cleft my heart, you shall read there
 Mine innocence.

DUCHESS                               That gallery gave him entrance.

ANTONIO   I would this terrible thing would come again,
 That, standing on my guard, I might relate
 My warrantable<sup>7</sup> love.

[She shows the poniard.]

  Ha! What means this?

DUCHESS   He left this with me.

ANTONIO                                And it seems did wish
 You would use it on yourself.

DUCHESS                                His action seemed
 To intend so much.

ANTONIO                                This hath a handle to't
 As well as a point: turn it towards him, and
 So fasten the keen edge in his rank gall.
 How now! Who knocks? More earthquakes?

[Knocking within.]

DUCHESS                                As if a mine beneath my feet were ready
 To be blown up.                                [ stand

CARIOLA                                'Tis Bosola.

DUCHESS                                Away!
 O misery! Methinks unjust actions

Should wear these masks and curtains, and not we.

You must instantly part hence: I have fashioned it already. [Exit ANTONIO.]

[Enter BOSOLA.]

BOSOLA The duke your brother is ta'en up in a whirlwind,
Hath took horse, and's rid post to Rome.

DUCHESS So late?

160 BOSOLA He told me, as he mounted into th' saddle,
You were undone.

DUCHESS Indeed, I am very near it.

BOSOLA What's the matter?

DUCHESS Antonio, the master of our household,
Hath dealt so falsely with me in's accounts:

165 My brother stood engaged with me for money
Ta'en up of certain Neapolitan Jews,
And Antonio lets the bonds be forfeit.<sup>8</sup>

BOSOLA Strange!—[aside] This is cunning.

DUCHESS And hereupon

My brother's bills at Naples are protested
Against.<sup>9</sup>—Call up our officers.

170 BOSOLA I shall. [Exit.]

[Reenter ANTONIO.]

DUCHESS The place that you must fly to is Ancona:<sup>1</sup>

Hire a house there; I'll send after you
My treasure and my jewels. Our weak safety
Runs upon ingenious wheels: short syllables

175 Must stand for periods.<sup>2</sup> I must now accuse you
Of such a feigned crime as Tasso calls
Magnanima menzogna, a noble lie,
'Cause it must shield our honors. Hark! They are coming.

[Reenter BOSOLA and OFFICERS.]

ANTONIO Will your grace hear me?

180 DUCHESS I have got well by you; you have yielded me
A million of loss: I am like to inherit
The people's curses for your stewardship.
You had the trick in audit time to be sick,
Till I had signed your quietus;<sup>0</sup> and that cured you receipt

185 Without help of a doctor.—Gentlemen,
I would have this man be an example to you all;
So shall you hold my favor; I pray, let him;<sup>0</sup>
For he's done that, alas, you would not think of,
And, because I intend to be rid of him,

release him

190 I mean not to publish, [to ANTONIO] Use your fortune elsewhere.

ANTONIO I am strongly armed to brook my overthrow;
As commonly men bear with a hard year,
I will not blame the cause on't; but do think

8. I.e., my brother stood security for some money I borrowed from Neapolitan moneylenders; now Antonio has let them call on the duke for payment.

9. I.e., Duke Ferdinand's checks have bounced.

1. On the Adriatic coast of Italy, across the peninsula from Amalfi and well to the north.

2. Full sentences. "Ingenious": delicately balanced, as in clockwork. The allusion to Tasso (next line) is literally accurate (Jerusalem Delivered 2.22) but anachronistic, since Tasso's poem was not published until 1574.

The necessity of my malevolent star
 195 Procures this, not her humor. Oh, the inconstant
 And rotten ground of service! You may see,
 'Tis even like him that in a winter night
 Takes a long slumber o'er a dying fire,
 As loath to part from't; yet parts thence as cold
 As when he first sat down.

200 DUCHESS We do confiscate,
 Towards the satisfying of your accounts,
 All that you have.

ANTONIO I am yours, and 'tis very fit
 All mine should be so.

DUCHESS so, sir, you have your pass.<sup>0</sup> passport

ANTONIO You may see, gentlemen, what 'tis to serve
 205 A prince with body and soul. [Exit.]

BOSOLA Here's an example for extortion: what moisture is drawn out of the sea, when foul weather comes, pours down, and runs into the sea again.

DUCHESS I would know what are your opinions of this Antonio.

SECOND OFFICER He could not abide to see a pig's head gaping: I thought
 210 your grace would find him a Jew.<sup>3</sup>

THIRD OFFICER I would you had been his officer, for your own sake.

FOURTH OFFICER YOU would have had more money.

FIRST OFFICER He stopped his ears with black wool, and to those came to him for money said he was thick of hearing.

215 SECOND OFFICER Some said he was an hermaphrodite, for he could not abide a woman.

FOURTH OFFICER HOW scurvy proud he would look when the treasury was full! Well, let him go!

FIRST OFFICER Yes, and the chippings of the buttery fly after him, to scour
 220 his gold chain!<sup>4</sup>

DUCHESS Leave us. [Exeunt OFFICERS.] What do you think of these?

BOSOLA That these are rogues that in's prosperity, but to have waited on his fortune, could have wished his dirty stirrup riveted through their noses, and followed after's mule, like a bear in a ring; would have prostituted 225 their daughters to his lust; made their firstborn intelligencers;<sup>5</sup> thought none happy but such as were born under his blessed planet, and wore his livery: and do these lice drop off now? Well, never look to have the like again:<sup>6</sup> he hath left a sort of flattering rogues behind him; their doom must follow.
 Princes pay flatterers in their own money: flatterers dissemble their vices, 230 and they dissemble their lies; that's justice. Alas, poor gentleman!

DUCHESS Poor? He hath amply filled his coffers.

BOSOLA Sure, he was too honest. Pluto, the god of riches, when he's sent by Jupiter to any man, he goes limping, to signify that wealth that comes on God's name comes slowly; but when he's sent on the devil's errand, he rides 235 post and comes in by scuttles. Let me show you what a most unvalued<sup>7</sup> jewel you have in a wanton humor thrown away, to bless the man shall<sup>8</sup> find him.

3. Jews were identified by their antipathy to pork, but the assumptions here are deliberately ridiculous.

4. A gold chain was the steward's traditional badge of office. Bread crumbs (the "chippings of the buttery") were used to polish gold and silver plate.

5. Spies.

6. I.e., a servant as good as he was.

7. Invaluable. "By scuttles": in haste.

8. Who shall.

He was an excellent courtier and most faithful; a soldier that thought it as beastly to know his own value too little as devilish to acknowledge it too much. Both his virtue and form deserved a far better fortune: his discourse 240 rather delighted to judge itself than show itself; his breast was filled with all perfection, and yet it seemed a private whispering-room, it made so little noise of't.

DUCHESS But he was basely descended.

BOSOLA Will you make yourself a mercenary herald, rather to examine men's 245 pedigrees than virtues? You shall want<sup>9</sup> him: for know, an honest statesman to a prince is like a cedar planted by a spring; the spring bathes the tree's root, the grateful tree rewards it with his shadow: you have not done so. I would sooner swim to the Bermoothes<sup>1</sup> on two politicians' rotten bladders, tied together with an intelligencer's heartstring, than depend on so change-250 able a prince's favor. Fare thee well, Antonio! Since the malice of the world would needs down with thee, it cannot be said yet that any ill happened unto thee, considering thy fall was accompanied with virtue.

DUCHESS Oh, you render me excellent music!

BOSOLA Say you?

DUCHESS This good one that you speak of is my husband.

255 BOSOLA Do I not dream? Can this ambitious age
 Have so much goodness in't as to prefer
 A man merely for worth, without these shadows
 Of wealth and painted honors? Possible?

DUCHESS I have had three children by him.

BOSOLA Fortunate lady!

260 For you have made your private nuptial bed
 The humble and fair seminary<sup>0</sup> of peace. seedbed

No question but many an unbeneficed scholar<sup>2</sup>
 Shall pray for you for this deed, and rejoice
 That some preferment in the world can yet
 265 Arise from merit. The virgins of your land
 That have no dowries shall hope your example
 Will raise them to rich husbands. Should you want
 Soldiers, 'twould make the very Turks and Moors
 Turn Christians, and serve you for this act.

270 Last, the neglected poets of your time,
 In honor of this trophy of a man,
 Baised by that curious<sup>0</sup> engine, your white hand, exquisite
 Shall thank you, in your grave, for t; and make that
 More reverend than all the cabinets

275 Of living princes.<sup>3</sup> For Antonio,
 His fame shall likewise flow from many a pen,
 When heralds shall want coats to sell to men.<sup>4</sup>

DUCHESS As I taste comfort in this friendly speech,
 So would I find concealment.

280 BOSOLA Oh, the secret of my prince,

9. Miss.

1. The Bermudas, unknown at the time of the action, but very topical a hundred years later, when the play was written.

2. A scholar without an official appointment.

3. She will be more honored in her grave than living princes in their courts. "Cabinets": council chambers.

4. The Heralds' College (an English royal corporation) carried on a brisk trade in coats of arms.

Which I will wear on th' inside of my heart!
 DUCHESS You shall take charge of all my coin and jewels,
 And follow him; for he retires himself
 To Ancona.

BOSOLA So.

DUCHESS Whither, within few days,
 I mean to follow thee.

BOSOLA Let me think:

I would wish your grace to feign a pilgrimage
 To our Lady of Loreto,<sup>5</sup> scarce seven leagues
 From fair Ancona; so may you depart
 Your country with more honor, and your flight
 Will seem a princely progress,<sup>0</sup> retaining state journey
 Your usual train about you.

DUCHESS Sir, your direction
 Shall lead me by the hand.

CARIOLA In my opinion,
 She were better progress to the baths at Lucca,
 Or go visit the Spa in Germany;
 For, if you will believe me, I do not like
 This jesting with religion, this feigned Pilgrimage.

DUCHESS Thou art a superstitious fool.
 Prepare us instantly for our departure.
 Past sorrows, let us moderately lament them;
 For those to come, seek wisely to prevent them.

[Exit DUCHESS, with CARIOLA.]

BOSOLA A politician<sup>0</sup> is the devil's quilted anvil; crafty intriguer
 He fashions all sins on him, and the blows
 Are never heard: he may work in a lady's chamber,
 As here for proof. What rests<sup>0</sup> but I reveal remains
 All to my lord? Oh, this base quality
 Of intelligencer! Why, every quality<sup>0</sup> i' th' world profession
 Prefers<sup>0</sup> but gain or commendation: offers
 Now for this act I am certain to be raised,
 And men that paint weeds to the life are praised. [Exit.]

SCENE 3. Rome.

[Enter CARDINAL, FERDINAND, MALATESTES, PESCARA, SILVIO, DELIO.]

CARDINAL Must we turn soldier, then?

MALATESTES The Emperor,
 Hearing your worth that way, ere you attained
 This reverend garment, joins you in commission
 With the right fortunate soldier the Marquis of Pescara,
 And the famous Lannoy.

5 CARDINAL He that had the honor
 Of taking the French king prisoner?<sup>2</sup>

5. The shrine of the Virgin at Loreto was famous throughout Europe.
 3.3

1. The Spanish emperor, Charles V.
 2. Charles de Lannoy, Belgian by origin, did indeed capture Francis I at Pavia in 1525, about

- MALATESTES                                      The same.
 Here's a plot drawn for a new fortification
 At Naples.   [They talk apart.]
- FERDINAND    This great Count Malatesta, I perceive,
 Hath got employment?
- DELIO                         No employment, my lord;
 A marginal note in the muster book, that he is A voluntary lord.
- FERDINAND                    He's no soldier?
- DELIO    He has worn gunpowder in's hollow tooth for the toothache.<sup>3</sup>
- SILVIO    He comes to the leaguer<sup>0</sup> with a full intent                       siege
 To eat fresh beef and garlic, means to stay
 Till the scent be gone, and straight return to court.
- DELIO    He hath read all the late service<sup>4</sup> as the city chronicle relates it, and keeps two painters going, only to express battles in model.
- SILVIO    Then he'll fight by the book.
- DELIO    By the almanac, I think, to choose good days and shun the critical.
 That's his mistress' scarf.
- SILVIO    Yes, he protests he would do much for that taffeta.
- DELIO    I think he would run away from a battle, to save it from taking<sup>5</sup> prisoner.
- SILVIO    He is horribly afraid gunpowder will spoil the perfume on't.
- DELIO    I saw a Dutchman break his pate once for calling him pot-gun;<sup>6</sup> he made his head have a bore in't like a musket.
- SILVIO    I would he had made a touchhole to't. He is indeed a guarded sumpter cloth,<sup>7</sup> only for the remove of the court.
- [Enter BOSOLA and speaks to FERDINAND and the CARDINAL.]*
- PESCARA    Bosola arrived? What should be the business?
 Some falling out amongst the cardinals.
 These factions amongst great men, they are like
 Foxes; when their heads are divided,
 They carry fire in their tails, and all the country
 About them goes to wrack for't.<sup>8</sup>
- SILVIO                         What's that Bosola?
- DELIO    I knew him in Padua—a fantastical scholar, like such who study to know how many knots were in Hercules' club, of what color Achilles' beard was, or whether Hector were not troubled with the toothache. He hath studied himself half blear-eyed to know the true symmetry of Caesar's nose by a shoeing-horn; and this he did to gain the name of a speculative<sup>9</sup> man.
- PESCARA    Mark Prince Ferdinand:
 A very salamander lives in's eye,
 To mock the eager violence of fire.<sup>1</sup>

two decades after the date of the play's supposed action. "Pescara": also a commander at Pavia.

3. Saltpeter was sometimes used to relieve a toothache. "Leaguer" (next line): gathering of the armies.

4. Recent military operations.

5. Being taken.

6. Poppun.

7. Decorated saddlecloth used only when the court is changing its residence; i.e., he's only for show. "Touchhole": where the match was applied to set off a cannon.

8. Samson once tied some foxes together by the tail and set them afire to burn down the fields of the Philistines (Judges 15).

9. Profound, given to abstruse thoughts. Intense and especially fantastical scholarship was thought to be a cause of melancholy—Bosola's temperament—caused by an imbalance of black bile.

I. The salamander was supposed to be so cold and wet of constitution that it could live in fire.

SILVIO That Cardinal hath made more bad faces with his oppression than ever Michelangelo<sup>2</sup> made good ones: he lifts up's nose, like a foul porpoise before a storm.

PESCARA The Lord Ferdinand laughs.

DELIO Like a deadly cannon that lightens ere it smokes.

PESCARA These are your true pangs of death,
The pangs of life, that struggle with great statesmen.

DELIO In such a deformed silence witches whisper
Their charms.

CARDINAL Doth she make religion her riding hood
To keep her from the sun and tempest?

FERDINAND That,
That damns her. Methinks her fault and beauty,
Blended together, show like leprosy,
The whiter, the fouler. I make it a question
Whether her beggarly brats were ever christened.

CARDINAL I will instantly solicit the state of Ancona
To have them banished.

FERDINAND You are for Loreto?
I shall not be at your ceremony; fare you well.
Write to the Duke of Malfi, my young nephew
She had by her first husband, and acquaint him
With s mother's honesty.

BOSOLA I will.

FERDINAND Antonio!
A slave that only smelled of ink and counters,
And never in's life looked like a gentleman,
But in the audit time. Go, go presently,<sup>0</sup>
Draw me out an hundred and fifty of our horse,<sup>0</sup>
And meet me at the fort-bridge.<sup>3</sup>

*at once cavalry
[Exeunt.]*

SCENE 4. The shrine of Our Lady of Loreto.

[Enter TWO PILGRIMS.]

FIRST PILGRIM I have not seen a goodlier shrine than this;
Yet I have visited many.

SECOND PILGRIM The Cardinal of Aragon
Is this day to resign his cardinal's hat:
His sister duchess likewise is arrived
To pay her vow of pilgrimage. I expect
A noble ceremony.

FIRST PILGRIM No question. They come.

2. Michelangelo Buonarroti (1475-1564), the great Florentine painter and sculptor. Another anachronism,

3. Drawbridge.

all which ceremony, this ditty is sung, to very solemn music, hy divers churchmen.]'

Arms and honors deck thy story,
To thy fame's eternal glory!
Adverse fortune ever fly thee;
No disastrous fate come nigh thee!

I alone will sing thy praises,
Whom to honor virtue raises;
And thy study, that divine is,
Bent to martial discipline is.
Lay aside all those robes lie by thee;
Crown thy arts with arms, they'll beautify thee.

O worthy of worthiest name, adorned in this manner,
Lead bravely thy forces on under war's warlike banner!
Oh, mayst thou prove fortunate in all martial courses!
Guide thou still by skill in arts and forces!
Victory attend thee nigh, whilst fame sings loud thy powers;
Triumphant conquest crown thy head, and blessings pour down showers!

[Exeunt all except the TWO PILGRIMS.]

FIRST PILGRIM Here's a strange turn of state! Who would have thought
So great a lady would have matched herself
Unto so mean a person? Yet the cardinal
Bears himself much too cruel.

SECOND PILGRIM They are banished.

FIRST PILGRIM But I would ask what power hath this state
Of Ancona to determine<sup>2</sup> of a free prince?

SECOND PILGRIM They are a free state, sir, and her brother showed How that the pope, fore-hearing of her looseness,
Hath seized into the protection of the church
The dukedom which she held as dowager.<sup>3</sup>

FIRST PILGRIM But by what justice?

SECOND PILGRIM Sure, I think by none,
Only her brother's instigation.

FIRST PILGRIM What was it with such violence he took Off from her finger?

SECOND PILGRIM 'Twas her wedding ring,
Which he vowed shortly he would sacrifice
To his revenge.

FIRST PILGRIM Alas, Antonio!
If that a man be thrust into a well,
No matter who sets hands to't, his own weight
Will bring him sooner to th' bottom. Come, let's hence.
Fortune makes this conclusion general,
All things do help th' unhappy man to fall.

[Exeunt.]

3.4

1. This song is not very suitable to the scene, and Webster, in the edition of 1623, denied writing it.

2. Pass judgment on.

3. As widow to her first husband, the Duke of Malfi.

SCENE 5. Near Loreto.

[Enter DUCHESS, ANTONIO, CHILDREN, CARIOLA, and SERVANTS.]

DUCHESS Banished Ancona!

ANTONIO Yes, you see what power
Lightens<sup>o</sup> in great men's breath. flashes out

DUCHESS Is all our train
Shrunk to this poor remainder?

ANTONIO These poor men,
Which have got little in your service, vow
To take your fortune, but your wiser buntings,<sup>1</sup>
Now they are fledged, are gone.

DUCHESS They have done wisely.
This puts me in mind of death: physicians thus,
With their hands full of money, use<sup>o</sup> to give o'er are accustomed
Their patients.

ANTONIO Right<sup>o</sup> the fashion of the world: exactly
From decayed fortunes every flatterer shrinks;
Men cease to build where the foundation sinks.

DUCHESS I had a very strange dream tonight.<sup>o</sup> last night

ANTONIO What was't?

DUCHESS Methought I wore my coronet of state,
And on a sudden all the diamonds
Were changed to pearls.

ANTONIO My interpretation
Is, you'll weep shortly, for to me the pearls
Do signify your tears.

DUCHESS The birds that live
I' th' field on the wild benefit of nature
Live happier than we; for they may choose their mates,
And carol their sweet pleasures to the spring.

[Enter BOSOLA with a letter.]

BOSOLA You are happily o'erta'en.

DUCHESS From my brother?

BOSOLA Yes, from the Lord Ferdinand your brother
All love and safety.

DUCHESS Thou dost blanch<sup>o</sup> mischief, whitewash
Wouldst make it white. See, see, like to calm weather
At sea before a tempest, false hearts speak fair
To those they intend most mischief. [reads]
"Send Antonio to me; I want his head in a business."
A politic equivocation!
He doth not want your counsel, but your head;
That is, he cannot sleep till you be dead.
And here's another pitfall that's strewed o'er
With roses: mark it, 'tis a cunning one:
"I stand engaged for your husband for several debts at Naples: let not that trouble him; I had rather have his heart than his money."
And I believe so too.

BOSOLA What do you believe?

3.5

1. Migratory birds. "Take": accept.

DUCHESS That he so much distrusts my husband's love,
 He will by no means believe his heart is with him
 Until he see it: the devil is not cunning
 Enough to circumvent us in riddles.

BOSOLA Will you reject that noble and free league
 Of amity and love which I present you?

DUCHESS Their league is like that of some politic<sup>0</sup> kings, crafty
 Only to make themselves of strength and power
 To be our after-ruin: tell them so.

BOSOLA And what from you?

ANTONIO Thus tell him: I will not come.

BOSOLA And what of this? [Pointing to the letter.]

ANTONIO My brothers have dispersed
 Bloodhounds abroad; which till I hear are muzzled,
 No truce, though hatched with ne'er such politic skill,
 Is safe, that hangs upon our enemies' will.
 I'll not come at<sup>o</sup> them. to

BOSOLA This proclaims your breeding:
 Every small thing draws a base mind to fear,
 As the adamant<sup>0</sup> draws iron. Fare you well, sir; lodestone
 You shall shortly hear from's. [Exit.]

DUCHESS I suspect some ambush;
 Therefore, by all my love I do conjure you
 To take your eldest son, and fly towards Milan.
 Let us not venture all this poor remainder
 In one unlucky bottom.<sup>2</sup>

ANTONIO YOU counsel safely.
 Best of my life, farewell. Since we must part,
 Heaven hath a hand in't, but no otherwise
 Than as some curious artist takes in sunder
 A clock or watch, when it is out of frame,<sup>3</sup>
 To bring't in better order.

DUCHESS I know not which is best,
 To see you dead, or part with you. Farewell, boy:
 Thou art happy that thou hast not understanding
 To know thy misery; for all our wit
 And reading brings us to a truer sense
 Of sorrow. In the eternal church,<sup>0</sup> sir, heavenly society
 I do hope we shall not part thus.

ANTONIO Oh, be of comfort!
 Make patience a noble fortitude,
 And think not how unkindly we are used:
 Man, like to cassia, is proved best being bruised.<sup>4</sup>

DUCHESS Must I, like to a slave-born Bussian,
 Account it praise to suffer tyranny?
 And yet, O heaven, thy heavy hand is in't!
 I have seen my little boy oft scourge his top,<sup>5</sup>
 And compared myself to't: naught made me e'er

2. The metaphor is mercantile: let's not load all our cargo in one ship ("bottom").

3. Not working. "Curious artist": clever craftsman.

4. Cinnamon bark ("cassia") is most aromatic (vir-tuous) when pressed.

5. Children used to make tops spin by whipping them.

Go right but heaven's scourge stick.

ANTONIO Do not weep:
 Heaven fashioned us of nothing, and we strive
 To bring ourselves to nothing. Farewell, Cariola,
 And thy sweet armful. If I do never see thee more,
 Be a good mother to your little ones,
 And save them from the tiger. Fare you well.

DUCHESS Let me look upon you once more, for that speech
 Came from a dying father. Your kiss is colder
 Than that I have seen an holy anchorite<sup>0</sup> hermit
 Give to a dead man's skull.

ANTONIO My heart is turned to a heavy lump of lead,
 With which I sound<sup>6</sup> my danger. Fare you well.
[Exeunt ANTONIO and his son.]

DUCHESS My laurel is all withered.

CARIOLA Look, madam, what a troop of armed men
 Make toward us.

DUCHESS Oh, they are very welcome:
 When Fortune's wheel<sup>7</sup> is overcharged with princes,
 The weight makes it move swift: I would have my ruin
 Be sudden.
[Enter BOSOLA vizarded, °with a guard.] masked
 I am your adventure,<sup>8</sup> am I not?

BOSOLA YOU are. You must see your husband no more.

DUCHESS What devil art thou that counterfeits heaven's thunder?

BOSOLA IS that terrible? I would have you tell me whether
 Is that note worse that frights the silly birds
 Out of the corn,<sup>0</sup> or that which doth allure them grain
 To the nets? You have hearkened to the last too much.

DUCHESS Oh, misery! Like to a rusty o'ercharged cannon,
 Shall I never fly in pieces?—Come, to what prison?

BOSOLA To none.

DUCHESS Whither, then?

BOSOLA To your palace.

DUCHESS I have heard
 That Charon's boat serves to convey all o'er
 The dismal lake,<sup>9</sup> but brings none back again.

BOSOLA Your brothers mean you safety and pity.

DUCHESS Pity!
 With such a pity men preserve alive
 Pheasants and quails, when they are not fat enough
 To be eaten.

BOSOLA These are your children?

DUCHESS Yes.

BOSOLA Can they prattle?

DUCHESS NO.
 But I intend, since they were born accursed,

6. Plumb the depths of.

7. The wheel of fortune is an ancient emblem of mutability; people have their fixed positions on it and rise or fall as it turns.

8. The object of your journey.

9. In classical mythology, Charon transports the souls of the dead across the river Styx to Hades.

Curses shall be their first language.

BOSOLA Fie, madam!

Forget this base, low fellow—

DUCHESS Were I a man,

115 I'd beat that counterfeit face<sup>0</sup> into thy other. mask

BOSOLA One of no birth.<sup>1</sup>

DUCHESS Say that he was born mean,

Man is most happy when's own actions

Be arguments and examples of his virtue.

BOSOLA A barren, beggarly virtue!

120 DUCHESS I prithee, who is greatest? Can you tell?

Sad tales befit my woe: I'll tell you one.

A salmon, as she swam unto the sea,

Met with a dogfish, who encounters her

With this rough language: "Why art thou so bold

125 To mix thyself with our high state of floods,

Being no eminent courtier, but one

That for the calmest and fresh time o' th' year

Dost live in shallow rivers, rank'st thyself

With silly<sup>0</sup> smelts and shrimps? And darest thou

130 Pass by our dog-ship without reverence?"

"Oh!" quoth the salmon, "sister, be at peace:

Thank Jupiter we both have passed the net!

Our value never can be truly known,

Till in the fisher's basket we be shown:

135 I' th' market then my price may be the higher,

Even when I am nearest to the cook and fire."

So to great men the moral may be stretched:

Men oft are valued high, when they're most wretched.

But come, whither you please. I am armed 'gainst misery;

140 Bent to all sways of the oppressor's will:

There's no deep valley but near some great hill.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE 1. Amalfi.

[Enter FERDINAND and BOSOLA.]

FERDINAND How doth our sister duchess bear herself

In her imprisonment?

BOSOLA Nobly. I'll describe her.

She's sad as one long used to't, and she seems

Rather to welcome the end of misery

5 Than shun it; a behavior so noble

As gives a majesty to adversity:

You may discern the shape of loveliness

More perfect in her tears than in her smiles;

She will muse four hours together; and her silence,

10 Methinks, expresseth more than if she spake.

I. Of low rank by birth.

- FERDINAND Her melancholy seems to be fortified
With a strange disdain.
- BOSOLA "Tis so; and this restraint,
Like English mastiffs that grow fierce with tying,
Makes her too passionately apprehend
Those pleasures she's kept from.
- 15 FERDINAND Curse upon her!
I will no longer study in the book
Of another's heart. Inform her what I told you. [Exit.]
[Enter DUCHESS.]
- BOSOLA All comfort to your grace!
- DUCHESS I will have none.
Pray thee, why dost thou wrap thy poisoned pills
- 20 In gold and sugar?
- BOSOLA Your elder brother, the Lord Ferdinand,
Is come to visit you, and sends you word,
'Cause once he rashly made a solemn vow
Never to see you more, he comes i' th' night,
- 25 And prays you gently neither torch nor taper
Shine in your chamber. He will kiss your hand
And reconcile himself, but for his vow
He dares not see you.
- DUCHESS At his pleasure.
Take hence the lights: he's come.
[Enter FERDINAND.]
- FERDINAND Where are you?
- 30 DUCHESS Here, sir.
- FERDINAND This darkness suits you well.
- DUCHESS I would ask your pardon.
- FERDINAND You have it;
For I account it the honorabl'st revenge,
Where I may kill, to pardon. Where are your cubs?
- DUCHESS Whom?
- 35 FERDINAND Call them your children;
For though our national law distinguish bastards
From true legitimate issue, compassionate nature
Makes them all equal.
- DUCHESS DO you visit me for this?
You violate a sacrament o' th' church
Shall make you howl in hell for't.
- 40 FERDINAND It had been well
Could you have lived thus always; for, indeed,
You were too much i' th' light!—but no more—
I come to seal my peace with you. Here's a hand
[Gives her a dead man's hand.]
- To which you have vowed much love; the ring upon t
You gave.
- 45 DUCHESS I affectionately kiss it.
- FERDINAND Pray, do, and bury the print of it in your heart.

4.1

1. Punning on "light," wanton.

- I will leave this ring with you for a lovetoken,
 And the hand as sure as the ring; and do not doubt
 But you shall have the heart, too. When you need a friend,
 50 Send it to him that owed<sup>0</sup> it; you shall see owned
 Whether he can aid you.
- DUCHESS You are very cold;
 I fear you are not well after your travel.
 Ha! Lights! Oh, horrible!
- FERDINAND Let her have lights enough. [Exit.]
- DUCHESS What witchcraft doth he practice, that he hath left
 55 A dead man's hand here?
[Here is discovered, behind a traverse,<sup>2</sup> the artificial figures of Antonio and his children, appearing as if the)' were dead. ]
- BOSOLA Look you, here's the piece from which 'twas ta'en.
 He doth present you this sad spectacle,
 That, now you know directly they are dead,
 Hereafter you may wisely cease to grieve
 60 For that which cannot be recovered.
- DUCHESS There is not between heaven and earth one wish
 I stay for after this: it wastes<sup>3</sup> me more
 Than were't my picture, fashioned out of wax,
 Stuck with a magical needle, and then buried
 65 In some foul dunghill; and yond's an excellent property<sup>4</sup>
 For a tyrant, which I would account mercy.
- BOSOLA What's that?
- DUCHESS If they would bind me to that lifeless trunk
 And let me freeze to death.
- BOSOLA Come, you must live.
- DUCHESS That's the greatest torture souls feel in hell,
 70 In hell: that they must live, and cannot die.
 Portia,<sup>5</sup> I'll new-kindle thy coals again,
 And revive the rare and almost dead example
 Of a loving wife.
- BOSOLA Oh, fie! Despair? Remember
 You are a Christian.
- DUCHESS The church enjoins fasting:
 I'll starve myself to death.
- 75 BOSOLA Leave this vain sorrow.
 Things being at the worst begin to mend: the bee
 When he hath shot his sting into your hand, may then Play with your eyelid.
- DUCHESS Good comfortable fellow,
 Persuade a wretch that's broke upon the wheel<sup>6</sup>
 80 To have all his bones new set; entreat him live
 To be executed again. Who must dispatch me?
 I account this world a tedious theater,

2. Curtain.

3. Consumes, as by secret disease; witches were supposed to be able to "waste" their enemies by making wax images and tormenting them as indicated below.

4. Appropriate act.

5. Portia, the wife of Brutus, committed suicide by swallowing hot coals.

6. Instrument of torture for stretching the body.

For I do play a part in't 'gainst my will.
 BOSOLA Come, be of comfort; I will save your life.
 DUCHESS Indeed,
 I have not leisure to tend so small a business.
 BOSOLA Now, by my life, I pity you.
 DUCHESS Thou art a fool, then,.
 To waste thy pity on a thing so wretched
 As cannot pity itself. I am full of daggers.
 Puff, let me blow these vipers from me.
 [Enter SERVANT.]
 What are you?
 SERVANT One that wishes you long life.
 DUCHESS I would thou wert hanged for the horrible curse
 Thou hast given me. I shall shortly grow one
 Of the miracles of pity. I'll go pray—
 No, I'll go curse.
 BOSOLA Oh, fie!
 DUCHESS I could curse the stars—
 BOSOLA Oh, fearful!
 DUCHESS And those three smiling seasons of the year
 Into a Russian winter,<sup>7</sup> nay, the world
 To its first chaos.
 BOSOLA Look you, the stars shine still.
 DUCHESS Oh, but you must
 Remember, my curse hath a great way to go.
 Plagues, that make lanes through largest families,
 Consume them!
 BOSOLA Fie, lady!
 DUCHESS Let them, like tyrants,
 Never be remembered but for the ill they have done;
 Let all the zealous prayers of mortified
 Churchmen forget them!
 BOSOLA Oh, uncharitable!
 DUCHESS Let Heaven a little while cease crowning martyrs
 To punish them!
 Go, howl them this, and say, I long to bleed:
 It is some mercy when men kill with speed.
[Exeunt DUCHESS and SERVANT.]

[Reenter FERDINAND.]
 FERDINAND Excellent, as I would wish; she's plagued in art:<sup>8</sup> by a cunning device
 These presentations are but framed in wax
 Ry the curious master in that quality,
 Vincentio Lauriola,<sup>8</sup> and she takes them
 For true substantial bodies.
 BOSOLA Why do you do this?
 FERDINAND To bring her to despair.
 BOSOLA 'Faith, end here,

7. A Russian winter would last all year long.

8. The art of wax modeling was common enough, but the name of the artist seems to be imaginary.

And go no farther in your cruelty.
 Send her a penitential garment to put on Next to her delicate skin, and furnish her
 With beads and prayer books.

- FERDINAND                    Damn her! That body of hers,
 120 While that my blood ran pure in't, was more worth
 Than that which thou wouldst comfort, called a soul.
 I will send her masques of common courtesans,
 Have her meat<sup>0</sup> served up by bawds and ruffians,                    food (of any kind)
 And, 'cause she'll needs be mad, I am resolved
 125 To remove forth the common hospital<sup>0</sup>                    asylum.
 All the mad-folk, and place them near her lodging;
 There let them practice together, sing and dance,
 And act their gambols to the full o' th' moon:
 If she can sleep the better for it, let her.
 130 Your work is almost ended.
 BOSOLA    Must I see her again:<sup>1</sup>
 FERDINAND                    Yes.
 BOSOLA                                Never.
 FERDINAND                                You must.
 BOSOLA    Never in mine own shape;
 That's forfeited by my intelligence<sup>0</sup>                    betrayal
 And this last cruel lie. When you send me next,
 The business shall be comfort.
 135 FERDINAND                    Very likely.
 Thy pity is nothing of kin to thee.<sup>9</sup> Antonio
 Lurks about Milan: thou shalt shortly thither
 To feed a fire as great as my revenge,
 Which ne'er will slack till it have spent his fuel.
 140 Intemperate agues' make physicians cruel.                    [Exeunt.]

SCENE 2

[Enter DUCHESS and CARIOLA.]

- DUCHESS    What hideous noise was that?
 CARIOLA                                'Tis the wild consort<sup>0</sup>                    band
 Of madmen, lady, which your tyrant brother
 Hath placed about your lodging. This tyranny,
 I think, was never practiced till this hour.
 5 DUCHESS    Indeed, I thank him. Nothing but noise and folly
 Can keep me in my right wits, whereas reason
 And silence make me stark mad. Sit down;
 Discourse to me some dismal tragedy.
 CARIOLA    Oh, 'twill increase your melancholy.
 DUCHESS                                        Thou art deceived:
 10 To hear of greater grief would lessen mine.
 This is a prison?
 CARIOLA                                Yes, but you shall live
 To shake this durance<sup>0</sup> off.                    imprisonment

9. I.e., pity doesn't suit you very well.

1. Fevers that cannot be controlled.

- DUCHESS                               Thou art a fool:
     The robin redbreast and the nightingale
     Never live long in cages.
- CARIOLA                               Pray, dry your eyes.
     What think you of, madam?
- 15 DUCHESS                               Of nothing:
     When I muse thus, I sleep.
- CARIOLA   Like a madman, with your eyes open?
- DUCHESS   Dost thou think we shall know one another in th' other world?
- CARIOLA   Yes, out of question.
- DUCHESS                               Oh that it were possible we might
- 20     But hold some two days' conference with the dead!
        From them I should learn somewhat, I am sure,
        I never shall know here. I'll tell thee a miracle;
        I am not mad yet, to my cause of sorrow:
        Th' heaven o'er my head seems made of molten brass,
- 25     The earth of flaming sulphur, yet I am not mad.
        I am acquainted with sad misery
        As the tanned galley slave is with his oar;
        Necessity makes me suffer constantly,
        And custom makes it easy. Who do I look like now?
- 30 CARIOLA   Like to your picture in the gallery,
        A deal of life in show, but none in practice;
        Or rather like some reverend monument
        Whose ruins are even pitied.
- DUCHESS                               Very proper.
     And Fortune seems only to have her eyesight
- 35     To behold my tragedy.
        How now! What noise is that?
           [Enter SERVANT.]
- SERVANT                               I am come to tell you
     Your brother hath intended you some sport.
     A great physician, when the pope was sick
     Of a deep melancholy, presented him
- 40     With several sorts of madmen, which wild object
        Being full of change and sport, forced him to laugh,
        And so the imposthume<sup>0</sup> broke. The selfsame cure                               abscess
        The duke intends on you.
- DUCHESS                               Let them come in.
- 45 SERVANT   There's a mad lawyer; and a secular priest;<sup>1</sup>
     A doctor that hath forfeited his wits
     By jealousy; an astrologian
     That in his works said such a day o' the' month
     Should be the day of doom, and, failing of't,
     Ran mad; an English tailor crazed i' th' brain
- 50     With the study of new fashions; a gentleman-usher<sup>0</sup>                               doorkeeper
        Quite beside himself with care to keep in mind
        The number of his lady's salutations
        Or "How do you's" she employed him in each morning;

A farmer, too, an excellent knave in grain,
 Mad 'cause he was hindered transportation:<sup>2</sup>
 And let one broker that's mad loose to these,
 You'd think the devil were among them.
 DUCHESS Sit, Cariola. Let them loose when you please,
 For I am chained to endure all your tyranny.

[Enter MADMEN.]

[Here by a MADMAN this song is sung to a dismal kind of music.]

Oh, let us howl some heavy note,
 Some deadly dogged howl,
 Sounding as from the threatening throat
 Of beasts and fatal fowl!
 As ravens, screech owls, bulls, and bears,
 We'll bell<sup>o</sup> and bawl our parts, cry
 Till irksome noise have cloyed your ears
 And corrosived your hearts.
 At last, whenas our choir wants breath,
 Our bodies being blest,
 We'll sing, like swans, to welcome death,
 And die in love and rest.

FIRST MADMAN Doomsday not come yet? I'll draw it nearer by a perspective,<sup>3</sup> or make a glass that shall set all the world on fire upon an instant. I cannot sleep; my pillow is stuffed with a litter of porcupines.
 SECOND MADMAN Hell is a mere glasshouse, where the devils are continually blowing up women's souls on hollow irons, and the fire never goes out.
 THIRD MADMAN I will lie with every woman in my parish the tenth night; I will tithe them over like haycocks.<sup>4</sup> FOURTH MADMAN Shall my pothecary outgo me because I am a cuckold? I have found out his roguery; he makes alum of his wife's urine, and sells it to puritans that have sore throats with overstraining.<sup>5</sup>
 FIRST MADMAN I have skill in heraldry.
 SECOND MADMAN Hast?
 FIRST MADMAN You do give for your crest a woodcock's" head with the brains picked out on t; you are a very ancient gentleman.
 THIRD MADMAN Greek is turned Turk: we are only to be saved by the Helvetian translation.<sup>7</sup>
 FIRST MADMAN Come on, sir, I will lay the law to you.
 SECOND MADMAN Oh, rather lay a corrosive: the law will eat to the bone.
 THIRD MADMAN He that drinks but to satisfy nature is damned.
 FOURTH MADMAN If I had my glass<sup>8</sup> here, I would show a sight should make all the women here call me mad doctor.
 FIRST MADMAN What's he? A rope maker?
 SECOND MADMAN No, no, no, a snuffling knave that, while he shows the tombs, will have his hand in a wench's placket.
 THIRD MADMAN Woe to the caroché<sup>9</sup> that brought home my wife from the masque at three o'clock in the morning! It had a large featherbed in it.

2. Forbidden to export.

3. Telescope.

4. As a priest takes his tenth ("tithe") of his parishioners' crops. "Haycocks": haystacks.

5. In long prayers and sermons.

6. A proverbially stupid bird.

7. The Geneva Bible, a jibe at English Puritans who used that translation.

8. Looking glass.

9. Carriage. "Placket": slit in a skirt.

- FOURTH MADMAN I have pared the devil's nails forty times, roasted them in raven's eggs, and cured agues with them.
- 100 THIRD MADMAN Get me three hundred milchbats, to make possets' to procure sleep.
- FOURTH MADMAN All the college may throw their caps<sup>2</sup> at me: I have made a soap boiler costive;<sup>3</sup> it was my masterpiece.
- [Here the dance, consisting of eight MADMEN, with music answerable thereunto; after which BOSOLA, like an old man, enters.]
- DUCHESS Is he mad too?
- SERVANT Pray, question him. I'll leave you.
[Exeunt SERVANT and MADMEN.]
- BOSOLA I am come to make thy tomb.
- 105 DUCHESS Ha! My tomb?
Thou speak'st as if I lay upon my deathbed,
Gasping for breath. Dost thou perceive me sick?
- BOSOLA Yes, and the more dangerously, since thy sickness is insensible.<sup>4</sup>
- DUCHESS Thou art not mad, sure. Dost know me?
- 110 BOSOLA Yes.
- DUCHESS Who am I?
- BOSOLA Thou art a box of worm-seed, at best but a salvatory of green mummy.
What's this flesh? A little crudded<sup>5</sup> milk, fantastical puff paste. Our bodies are weaker than those paper prisons boys use to keep flies in, more contemptible, since ours is to preserve earthworms. Didst thou ever see a lark ii5 in a cage? Such is the soul in the body: this world is like her little turf of grass, and the heaven o'er our heads, like her looking glass, only gives us a miserable knowledge of the small compass of our prison.
- DUCHESS Am not I thy duchess?
- 120 BOSOLA Thou art some great woman, sure, for riot<sup>6</sup> begins to sit on thy forehead, clad in gray hairs, twenty years sooner than on a merry milkmaid's. Thou sleep'st worse than if a mouse should be forced to take up her lodging in a cat's ear: a little infant that breeds its teeth,<sup>7</sup> should it lie with thee, would cry out, as if thou wert the more unquiet bedfellow.
- 125 DUCHESS I am Duchess of Malfi still.
- BOSOLA That makes thy sleep so broken:
Glories, like glowworms, afar off shine bright,
But, looked to near, have neither heat nor light.
- DUCHESS Thou art very plain.
- 130 BOSOLA My trade is to flatter the dead, not the living; I am a tombmaker.
- DUCHESS And thou com'st to make my tomb?
- BOSOLA Yes.
- DUCHESS Let me be a little merry. Of what stuff wilt thou make it?
- BOSOLA Nay, resolve<sup>0</sup> me first, of what fashion? inform
- 135 DUCHESS Why, do we grow fantastical in our deathbed? Do we affect fashion in the grave?

1. Sedative drafts, here made of bat's milk.

2. Despair of emulating.

3. Constipated.

4. Imperceptible.

5. Curdled. "Worm-seed" is a matter whose ultimate end is the generation of worms. "A salvatory of green mummy": the substance of mummified bodies was considered medicinal. The living body is a box ("salvatory") of such medicine, only not yet ready for use.

6. Debauchery.

7. A teething infant.

BOSOLA Most ambitiously. Princes' images on their tombs do not lie, as they were wont, seeming to pray up to heaven, but with their hands under their cheeks, as if they died of the toothache. They are not carved with their eyes 140 fixed upon the stars, but as their minds were wholly bent upon the world, the selfsame way they seem to turn their faces.

DUCHESS Let me know fully therefore the effect
 Of this thy dismal preparation,
 This talk fit for a charnel.<sup>8</sup>

BOSOLA NOW I shall.

[Enter EXECUTIONERS, with a coffin, cords, and a hell.]

145 Here is a present from your princely brothers;
 And may it arrive welcome, for it brings
 Last benefit, last sorrow.

DUCHESS Let me see it:
 I have so much obedience in my blood,
 I wish it in their veins to do them good.

150 BOSOLA This is your last presence chamber.<sup>9</sup>

CARIOLA O my sweet lady!

DUCHESS Peace, it affrights not me.

BOSOLA I am the common bellman,
 That usually<sup>0</sup> is sent to condemned persons
 The night before they suffer.

by custom

DUCHESS Even now thou said'st
 Thou wast a tomb-maker.

155 BOSOLA 'Twas to bring you
 By degrees to mortification.<sup>1</sup> Listen, [rings the hell]

Hark, now everything is still
 The screech owl and the whistler<sup>2</sup> shrill
 Call upon our dame aloud,
 160 And bid her quickly don her shroud!
 Much you had of land and rent:
 Your length in clay's now competent.<sup>0</sup>
 A long war disturbed your mind:
 Here your perfect peace is signed.
 165 Of what is't fools make such vain keeping?
 Sin their conception, their birth weeping,
 Their life a general mist of error,
 Their death a hideous storm of terror.
 Strew your hair with powders sweet,
 170 Don clean linen, bathe your feet,
 And (the foul fiend more to check)
 A crucifix let bless your neck:
 'Tis now full tide 'tween night and day;
 End your groan, and come away.

sufficient

8. A storage place for bones reserved from old graves in the digging of new ones.
 9. A noble person's reception room.

1. Repentance, also death and decomposition.
 2. A bird premonitory of death.

- 175 CARIOLA Hence, villains, tyrants, murderers! Alas!
 What will you do with my lady? Call for help.
 DUCHESS To whom? To our next neighbors? They are mad-folks.
 BOSOLA Remove that noise.
 DUCHESS Farewell, Cariola.
 In my last will I have not much to give:
- 180 A many hungry guests have fed upon me;
 Thine will be a poor reversion. inheritance
- CARIOLA I will die with her.
 DUCHESS I pray thee, look thou giv'st my little boy
 Some syrup for his cold, and let the girl
 Say her prayers ere she sleep, [CARIOLA is forced out by the EXECUTIONERS.]
 Now what you please.
 What death?
- 185 BOSOLA Strangling: here are your executioners.
 DUCHESS I forgive them:
 The apoplexy, catarrh, or cough o' th' lungs
 Would do as much as they do.
 BOSOLA Doth not death fright you?
 DUCHESS Who would be afraid on't,
- 190 Knowing to meet such excellent company
 In th' other world?
- BOSOLA Yet, methinks,
 The manner of your death should much afflict you:
 This cord should terrify you.
 DUCHESS Not a whit.
 What would it pleasure me to have my throat cut
- 195 With diamonds? Or to be smothered
 With cassia?<sup>0</sup> Or to be shot to death with pearls? cinnamon
 I know death hath ten thousand several doors
 For men to take their exits, and 'tis found
 They go on such strange geometrical hinges,
- 200 You may open them both ways.—Any way, for heaven sake,
 So I were out of your whispering. Tell my brothers
 That I perceive death, now I am well awake,
 Best gift is they can give or I can take. gladly
 I would fain<sup>o</sup> put off my last woman's fault,
 I'd not be tedious to you.
- 205 EXECUTIONER We are ready.
 DUCHESS Dispose my breath how please you, but my body
 Bestow upon my women, will you?
 EXECUTIONER Yes.
 DUCHESS Pull, and pull strongly, for your able strength
 Must pull down heaven upon me—
- 210 Yet stay; heaven gates are not so high arched
 As princes' palaces; they that enter there
 Must go upon their knees, [kneels] Come, violent death.
 Serve for mandragora<sup>3</sup> to make me sleep!
 Go tell my brothers, when I am laid out,

3. The word is used loosely for a stupefying drug.

They then may feed in quiet. [They strangle her.]
 BOSOLA Where's the waiting woman?
 Fetch her. Some other strangle the children.
[Exeunt EXECUTIONERS, some of whom return with CARIOLA.]
 Look you, there sleeps your mistress.
 CARIOLA Oh, you are damned
 Perpetually for this! My turn is next.
 Is't not so ordered?
 BOSOLA Yes, and I am glad
 You are so well prepared for't.
 CARIOLA You are deceived, sir,
 I am not prepared for't, I will not die;
 I will first come to my answer,<sup>0</sup> and know judicial hearing
 How I have offended.
 BOSOLA Come, dispatch her.
 You kept her counsel; now you shall keep ours.
 CARIOLA I will not die, I must not; I am contracted
 To a young gentleman.
 EXECUTIONER Here's your wedding ring. [showing the noose]
 CARIOLA Let me but speak with the duke; I'll discover<sup>0</sup> reveal
 Treason to his person.
 BOSOLA Delays! Throttle her.
 EXECUTIONER She bites and scratches.
 CARIOLA If you kill me now,
 I am damned; I have not been at confession
 This two years.
 BOSOLA [to EXECUTIONERS] When!
 CARIOLA I am quick with child.
 BOSOLA Why, then,
 Your credit's saved.<sup>4</sup> [They strangle CARIOLA.]
Bear her into th' next room;
 Let this lie still. [Exeunt the EXECUTIONERS with the body of CARIOLA.]
[Enter FERDINAND.]
 FERDINAND Is she dead?
 BOSOLA She is what
 You'd have her. But here begin your pity. [Sfoows the children strangled.]
 Alas, how have these offended?
 FERDINAND The death
 Of young wolves is never to be pitied.
 BOSOLA Fix
 Your eye here.
 FERDINAND Constantly.
 BOSOLA Do you not weep?
 Other sins only speak; murder shrieks out:
 The element of water moistens the earth,
 But blood flies upwards and bedews the heavens.
 FERDINAND Cover her face; mine eyes dazzle: she died young.
 BOSOLA I think not so; her infelicity<sup>0</sup> unhappiness
 Seemed to have years too many.

4. Your reputation will now be safe.

FERDINAND She and I were twins;
 245 And should I die this instant, I had lived
 Her time to a minute.
 BOSOLA It seems she was born first:
 You have bloodily approved<sup>o</sup> the ancient truth, given proof of
 That kindred commonly do worse agree
 Than remote strangers.
 FERDINAND Let me see her face again.
 250 Why didst not thou pity her? What an excellent Honest man mightst thou have been,
 If thou hadst borne her to some sanctuary!
 Or, bold in a good cause, opposed thyself,
 With thy advanced sword above thy head,
 255 Between her innocence and my revenge!
 I bade thee, when I was distracted of my wits,
 Go kill my dearest friend, and thou hast done't.
 For let me but examine well the cause:
 What was the meanness of her match to me?
 260 Only I must confess I had a hope,
 Had she continued widow, to have gained
 An infinite mass of treasure by her death:
 And that was the main cause, her marriage,
 That drew a stream of gall quite through my heart.
 265 For thee, as we observe in tragedies
 That a good actor many times is cursed
 For playing a villain's part, I hate thee for t,
 And, for my sake, say thou hast done much ill well.
 BOSOLA Let me quicken your memory, for I perceive
 270 You are falling into ingratitude: I challenge
 The reward due to my service.
 FERDINAND I'll tell thee
 What I'll give thee.
 BOSOLA DO.
 FERDINAND I'll give thee a pardon
 For this murder.
 BOSOLA Ha!
 FERDINAND Yes, and 'tis
 The largest bounty I can study to do thee.
 275 By what authority didst thou execute
 This bloody sentence?
 BOSOLA By yours.
 FERDINAND Mine! Was I her judge?
 Did any ceremonial form of law
 Doom her to not-being? Did a complete<sup>o</sup> jury qualified
 Deliver her conviction up i' th' court?
 280 Where shalt thou find this judgment registered,
 Unless in hell? See, like a bloody fool,
 Thou'st forfeited thy life, and thou shalt die for't.
 BOSOLA The office of justice is perverted quite
 When one thief hangs another. Who shall dare
 To reveal this?

285 FEKDINAND Oh, I'll tell thee;
 The wolf shall find her grave, and scrape it up,
 Not to devour the corpse, but to discover
 The horrid murder.

BOSOLA You, not I, shall quake for't.

FERDINAND Leave me.

BOSOLA I will first receive my pension.

FERDINAND You are a villain.

290 BOSOLA When your ingratitude
 Is judge, I am so.

FERDINAND Oh, horror!
 That not the fear of Him which binds the devils
 Can prescribe man obedience!
 Never look upon me more.

BOSOLA Why, fare thee well.

295 Your brother and your self are worthy men:
 You have a pair of hearts are rotten graves,
 Rotten, and rotting others; and your vengeance,
 Like two chained bullets, still<sup>0</sup> goes arm in arm. continually
 You may be brothers, for treason, like the plague,

300 Doth take much in a blood.<sup>5</sup> I stand like one
 That long hath ta'en a sweet and golden dream.
 I am angry with myself, now that I wake.

FERDINAND Get thee into some unknown part o' th' world,
 That I may never see thee.

BOSOLA Let me know

305 Wherefore I should be thus neglected. Sir,
 I served your tyranny, and rather strove
 To satisfy yourself than all the world,
 And though I loathed the evil, yet I loved
 You that did counsel it; and rather sought

310 To appear a true servant than an honest man.

FERDINAND I'll go hunt the badger by owl-light:
 'Tis a deed of darkness. [Exit.]

BOSOLA He's much distracted. Off, my painted honor!
 While with vain hopes our faculties we tire,

315 We seem to sweat in ice and freeze in fire.
 What would I do, were this to do again?
 I would not change my peace of conscience
 For all the wealth of Europe.—She stirs; here's life.
 Return, fair soul, from darkness, and lead mine

320 Out of this sensible<sup>0</sup> hell.—She's warm, she breathes. living
 Upon thy pale lips I will melt my heart,
 To store them with fresh color.—Who's there!
 Some cordial<sup>0</sup> drink!—Alas! I dare not call: restorative
 So pity would destroy pity.—Her eye opes,

325 And heaven in it seems to ope, that late was shut,
 To take me up to mercy.

DUCHESS Antonio!

5. Treason and plague run in certain families.

BOSOLA                    Yes, madam, he is living;
 The dead bodies you saw were but feigned statues:
 He's reconciled to your brothers: the pope hath wrought
 The atonement.<sup>0</sup> reconciliation

DUCHESS                  Mercy! [She dies.]

BOSOLA    Oh, she's gone again! There the cords of life broke.
 Oh, sacred innocence, that sweetly sleeps
 On turtles'<sup>6</sup> feathers, whilst a guilty conscience
 Is a black register wherein is writ
 All our good deeds and bad, a perspective<sup>0</sup> telescope
 That shows us hell! That we cannot be suffered<sup>0</sup> allowed
 To do good when we have a mind to it!
 This is manly sorrow:
 These tears, I am very certain, never grew
 In my mother's milk. My estate is sunk
 Below the degree of fear. Where were
 These penitent fountains while she was living?
 Oh, they were frozen up! Here is a sight
 As direful to my soul as is the sword
 Unto a wretch hath slain his father. Come,
 I'll bear thee hence,
 And execute thy last will; that's deliver
 Thy body to the reverend dispose<sup>0</sup> disposition
 Of some good women: that the cruel tyrant
 Shall not deny me. Then I'll post to Milan,
 Where somewhat I will speedily enact Worth my dejection. [Exit with the body.]

Act 5

SCENE 1. A public place in Milan.

[Enter ANTONIO and DELIO.]

ANTONIO    What think you of my hope of reconcilement
 To the Aragonian brethren?

DELIO                    I misdoubt it;
 For though they have sent their letters of safe conduct
 For your repair<sup>0</sup> to Milan, they appear resort
 But nets to entrap you. The Marquis of Pescara,
 Under whom you hold certain land in cheat,<sup>1</sup>
 Much 'gainst his noble nature hath been moved
 To seize those lands, and some of his dependents
 Are at this instant making it their suit
 To be invested in your revenues.<sup>2</sup>
 I cannot think they mean well to your life
 That do deprive you of your means of life,
 Your living.

ANTONIO                YOU are still an heretic<sup>0</sup> skeptic
 To any safety I can shape myself.

6. Turtledoves, emblems of a loving couple.

5.1

1. Escheat, i.e., subject to forfeiture under certain conditions.

2. I.e., to be given your rents.

DELIO Here comes the marquis. I will make myself
 Petitioner for some part of your land,
 To know whither it is flying.

ANTONIO I pray do. [Withdraws.]
[Enter PESCARA.]

DELIO Sir, I have a suit to you.

PESCARA To me?

DELIO An easy one.
 There is the citadel of Saint Bennet,
 With some demesnes,<sup>3</sup> of late in the possession
 Of Antonio Bologna; please you bestow them on me.

PESCARA You are my friend, but this is such a suit,
 Nor fit for me to give, nor you to take.

DELIO NO, sir?

PESCARA I will give you ample reason for't
 Soon in private.—Here's the cardinal's mistress.
[Enter JULIA.]

JULIA My lord, I am grown your poor petitioner,
 And should be an ill beggar, had I not
 A great man's letter here, the cardinal's,
 To court you in my favor. [Gives a letter.]

PESCARA He entreats for you
 The citadel of Saint Bennet, that belonged
 To the banished Bologna.

JULIA Yes.

PESCARA I could not
 Have thought of a friend I could rather pleasure with it;
 'Tis yours.

JULIA Sir, I thank you; and he shall know
 How doubly I am engaged both in your gift,
 And speediness of giving, which makes your grant
 The greater. [Exit.]

ANTONIO [aside] How they fortify themselves
 With my ruin!

DELIO Sir, I am little bound to you.

PESCARA Why?

DELIO Because you denied this suit to me, and gave't
 To such a creature.

PESCARA Do you know what it was?
 It was Antonio's land, not forfeited
 By course of law, but ravished from his throat
 By the cardinal's entreaty. It were not fit
 I should bestow so main<sup>0</sup> a piece of wrong egregious
 Upon my friend; 'tis a gratification
 Only due to a strumpet, for it is injustice.
 Shall I sprinkle the pure blood of innocents
 To make those followers I call my friends
 Look ruddier<sup>4</sup> upon me? I am glad
 This land, ta'en from the owner by such wrong,

3. Associated estates. "Saint Bennet": St. Benedict.

4. More agreeably, literally with a healthier (ruddy) complexion.

Returns again unto so foul an use
 As salary for his lust. Learn, good Delio,
 To ask noble things of me, and you shall find
 I'll be a noble giver.

DELIO YOU instruct me well.

55 ANTONIO [aside] Why, here's a man now would fright impudence
 From sauciest beggars.

PESCARA Prince Ferdinand's come to Milan,
 Sick, as they give out, of an apoplexy,<sup>o</sup>
 But some say 'tis a frenzy.<sup>o</sup> I am going
 To visit him.

stroke
insanity
 [Exit.]

ANTONIO 'Tis a noble old fellow.

60 DELIO What course do you mean to take, Antonio?

ANTONIO This night I mean to venture all my fortune,
 Which is no more than a poor lingering life,
 To the cardinal's worst of malice. I have got Private access to his chamber, and intend

65 To visit him about the mid of night,
 As once his brother did our noble duchess.
 It may be that the sudden apprehension
 Of danger—for I'll go in mine own shape—
 When he shall see it fraught with love and duty,

70 May draw the poison out of him, and work
 A friendly reconciliation. If it fail,
 Yet it shall rid me of this infamous calling,
 For better fall once than be ever falling.

DELIO I'll second you in all danger, and, howe'er,

75 My life keeps rank with yours.

ANTONIO You are still my loved and best friend.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE 2. The scene continues.

[Enter PESCARA and DOCTOR.]

PESCARA Now, doctor, may I visit your patient?

DOCTOR If't please your lordship: but he's instantly<sup>o</sup>
 To take the air here in the gallery
 By my direction.

very shortly

PESCARA Pray thee, what's his disease?

5 DOCTOR A very pestilent disease, my lord,
 They call lycanthropia.

PESCARA What's that?

I need a dictionary to't.

DOCTOR I'll tell you.

In those that are possessed with't there o'erflows
 Such melancholy humor, they imagine
 10 Themselves to be transformed into wolves;
 Steal forth to churchyards in the dead of night,
 And dig dead bodies up: as two nights since
 One met the duke bout midnight in a lane
 Behind Saint Mark's Church, with the leg of a man
 15 Upon his shoulder; and he howled fearfully;

Said he was a wolf, only the difference
 Was, a wolf's skin was hairy on the outside,
 His on the inside; bade them take their swords,
 Rip up his flesh, and try. Straight<sup>0</sup> I was sent for, immediately
 And, having ministered to him, found his grace
 Very well recovered.

PESCARA I'm glad on't.

DOCTOR Yet not without some fear
 Of a relapse. If he grow to his fit again,
 I'll go a nearer way to work with him
 Than ever Paracelsus<sup>1</sup> dreamed of: if They'll give me leave, I'll buffet his madness
 Out of him. Stand aside; he comes.

[Enter FERDINAND, MALATESTES, CARDINAL, and BOSOLA apart.]

FERDINAND Leave me.

MALATESTES Why doth your lordship love this solitariness?

FERDINAND Eagles commonly fly alone: they are crows, daws, and starlings that flock together. Look, what's that follows me?

MALATESTES Nothing, my lord.

FERDINAND Yes.

MALATESTES 'Tis your shadow.

FERDINAND Stay it; let it not haunt me.

MALATESTES Impossible, if you move, and the sun shine.

FERDINAND I will throttle it. [Throws himself on the ground.]

MALATESTES O, my lord, you are angry with nothing.

FERDINAND You are a fool: how is't possible I should catch my shadow, unless
 I fall upon't? When I go to hell, I mean to carry a bribe; for, look you, good gifts evermore make way for the worst persons.

PESCARA Rise, good my lord.

FERDINAND I am studying the art of patience.

PESCARA 'Tis a noble virtue.

FERDINAND To drive six snails before me from this town to Moscow; neither use goad nor whip to them, but let them take their own time—the patient'st man i' th' world match me for an experiment—and I'll crawl after like a sheep-biter.<sup>2</sup>

CARDINAL Force him up. [They raise him.]

FERDINAND Use me well, you were best. What I have done, I have done:
 I'll confess nothing.

DOCTOR Now let me come to him. Are you mad, my lord? Are you out of your princely wits?

FERDINAND What's he?

PESCARA Your doctor.

FERDINAND Let me have his beard sawed off, and his eyebrows filed more civil.

DOCTOR I must do mad tricks with him, for that's the only way on't.<sup>3</sup> I have brought your grace a salamander's skin to keep you from sunburning.

FERDINAND I have cruel sore eyes.

5.2

1. The great Swiss alchemist, famous for his cures by sympathetic magic.

2. A sheepdog.

3. I.e., to cure him.

DOCTOR The white of a cockatrix's<sup>4</sup> egg is present remedy.

FERDINAND Let it be a new-laid one, you were best. Hide me from him: physicians are like kings—they brook no contradiction.

DOCTOR Now he begins to fear me: now let me alone with him.

CARDINAL How now? Put off your gown?

DOCTOR Let me have some forty urinals filled with rosewater: he and I'll go pelt one another with them. Now he begins to fear me. Can you fetch a frisk, sir?<sup>5</sup> Let him go, let him go, upon my peril: I find by his eye he stands in awe of me; I'll make him as tame as a dormouse.

FERDINAND Can you fetch your frisks, sir? I will stamp him into a cullis,<sup>6</sup> flay off his skin, to cover one of the anatomies<sup>7</sup> this rogue hath set i' th' cold yonder in Barber-Surgeons' Hall. Hence, hence! You are all of you like beasts for sacrifice: there's nothing left of you but tongue and belly, flattery and lechery. [Exit.]

PESCARA Doctor, he did not fear you thoroughly.

DOCTOR True;

I was somewhat too forward.

BOSOLA [aside] Mercy upon me,

What a fatal judgment hath fall'n upon this Ferdinand!

PESCARA Knows your grace what accident hath brought

Unto the prince this strange distraction?

CARDINAL [aside] I must feign somewhat.—Thus they say it grew:

You have heard it rumored, for these many years

None of our family dies but there is seen

The shape of an old woman, which is given

By tradition to us to have been murdered

By her nephews for her riches. Such a figure

One night, as the prince sat up late at's book,

Appeared to him; when, crying out for help,

The gentlemen of's chamber found his grace

All on a cold sweat, altered much in face

And language; since which apparition,

He hath grown worse and worse, and I much fear

He cannot live.

BOSOLA Sir, I would speak with you.

PESCARA We'll leave your grace,

Wishing to the sick prince, our noble lord,

All health of mind and body.

CARDINAL You are most welcome.

[Exeunt PESCARA, MALATESTA, and DOCTOR.]

Are you come? So. [Aside] This fellow must not know

By any means I had intelligence<sup>0</sup>

was accessory

In our duchess' death; for, though I counseled it,

The full of all th' engagement seemed to grow

From Ferdinand.—Now, sir, how fares our sister?

I do not think but sorrow makes her look

Like to an oft-dyed garment: she shall now

4. A fabulous, and deadly poisonous, serpent, supposed to be hatched of a cock's egg.

5. Cut a caper, dance a jig.

6. Broth.

7. Anatomical skeletons hung up in the surgeon's college, which Ferdinand proposes to cover with the doctor's flayed skin.

Taste comfort from me. Why do you look so wildly?
 Oh, the fortune of your master here the prince
 Dejects you, but be you of happy comfort:
 If you'll do one thing for me I'll entreat,
 Though he had a cold tombstone o'er his bones,
 I'll make you what you would be.

BOSOLA Anything;
 Give it me in a breath, and let me fly to't:
 They that think long, small expedition win,
 For musing much o' th' end cannot begin.

[Enter JULIA.]

JULIA Sir, will you come in to supper?

CARDINAL I am busy;
 Leave me.

JULIA [aside] What an excellent shape hath that fellow! [Exit.]

CARDINAL 'Tis thus. Antonio lurks here in Milan:
 Inquire him out, and kill him. While he lives,
 Our sister cannot marry, and I have thought
 Of an excellent match for her. Do this, and style me
 Thy advancement.<sup>8</sup>

BOSOLA But by what means shall I find him out?

CARDINAL There is a gentleman called Delio
 Here in the camp, that hath been long approved
 His loyal friend. Set eye upon that fellow;
 Follow him to Mass; maybe Antonio,
 Although he do account religion
 But a school-name,<sup>9</sup> for fashion of the world
 May accompany him; or else go inquire out
 Delio's confessor, and see if you can bribe
 Him to reveal it. There are a thousand ways
 A man might find to trace him; as to know
 What fellows haunt the Jews for taking up
 Great sums of money, for sure he's in want;
 Or else to go to th' picture-makers, and learn
 Who bought her picture lately. Some of these Haply may take.

an idle phrase

BOSOLA Well, I'll not freeze i' th' business:<sup>0</sup>
 I would see that wretched thing, Antonio,
 Above all sights i' th' world.

delay

CARDINAL DO, and be happy. [Exit.]

BOSOLA This fellow doth breed basilisks in's eyes,
 He's nothing else but murder; yet he seems
 Not to have notice of the duchess' death.
 'Tis his cunning; I must follow his example;
 There cannot be a surer way to trace
 Than that of an old fox.

[Reenter JULIA, with a pistol.]

JULIA So, sir, you are well met.

BOSOLA HOW now?

8. Call me your means of promotion.

JULIA Nay, the doors are fast enough.
 Now, sir, I will make you confess your treachery.

BOSOLA Treachery?

JULIA Yes, confess to me
 Which of my women 'twas, you hired to put
 Love-powder into my drink?

BOSOLA Love powder?

JULIA Yes, when I was at Malfi.
 Why should I fall in love with such a face else?<sup>0</sup> otherwise
 I have already suffered for thee so much pain,
 The only remedy to do me good
 Is to kill my longing.

BOSOLA Sure, your pistol holds
 Nothing but perfumes or kissing-comfits.<sup>9</sup>
 Excellent lady! You have a pretty way on't
 To discover<sup>0</sup> your longing. Come, come, I'll disarm you, reveal
 And arm you thus:<sup>1</sup> yet this is wondrous strange.

JULIA Compare thy form and my eyes together, you'll find
 My love no such great miracle. Now you'll say
 I am wanton: this nice<sup>0</sup> modesty in ladies fastidious
 Is but a troublesome familiar<sup>2</sup> that haunts them.

BOSOLA Know you me, I am a blunt soldier.

JULIA The better:
 Sure, there wants<sup>0</sup> fire where there are no lively sparks lacks
 Of roughness.

BOSOLA And I want compliment.<sup>3</sup>

JULIA Why, ignorance
 In courtship cannot make you do amiss,
 If you have a heart to do well.

BOSOLA You are very fair.

JULIA Nay, if you lay beauty to my charge,
 I must plead unguilty.

BOSOLA Your bright eyes
 Carry a quiver of darts in them, sharper
 Than sunbeams.

JULIA You will mar me with commendation,
 Put yourself to the charge of courting me,
 Whereas now I woo you.

BOSOLA [aside] I have it, I will work upon this creature.—
 Let us grow most amorously familiar.
 If the great cardinal now should see me thus,
 Would he not count me a villain?

JULIA No, he might count me a wanton,
 Not lay a scruple of offense on you;
 For if I see and steal a diamond,
 The fault is not i' th' stone, but in me the thief
 That purloins it. I am sudden with you.

9. Candies to sweeten the breath.

1. Disarm (by taking away her pistol); arm (by embracing her).

2. Attendant spirit or demon,

3. I don't have the gift of flattery.

We that are great women of pleasure, use to cut off
 These uncertain wishes and unquiet longings,
 And in an instant join the sweet delight
 And the pretty excuse together. Had you been i' th' street,
 Under my chamber window, even there
 I should have courted you.

BOSOLA Oh, you are an excellent lady!
 JULIA Bid me do somewhat for you presently<sup>0</sup> right away
 To express I love you.

BOSOLA I will, and if you love me,
 Fail not to effect it.
 The cardinal is grown wondrous melancholy;
 Demand the cause, let him not put you off
 With feigned excuse; discover the main ground on t.

JULIA Why would you know this?

BOSOLA I have depended on him,
 And I hear he is fallen in some disgrace
 With the emperor: if he be, like the mice
 That forsake falling houses, I would shift
 To other dependence.

JULIA You shall not need follow the wars;
 I'll be your maintenance.

BOSOLA And I your loyal servant;
 But I cannot leave my calling.

JULIA Not leave
 An ungrateful general for the love of a sweet lady?
 You are like some cannot sleep in featherbeds,
 But must have blocks for their pillows.

BOSOLA Will you do this?

JULIA Cunningly.

BOSOLA Tomorrow I'll expect th' intelligence.

JULIA Tomorrow? Get you into my cabinet,<sup>0</sup> inner chamber
 You shall have it with you. Do not delay me,
 No more than I do you. I am like one
 That is condemned: I have my pardon promised,
 But I would see it sealed. Go, get you in;
 You shall see me wind my tongue about his heart
 Like a skein of silk. [Exit BOSOLA.]

[Reenter CARDINAL.]

CARDINAL Where are you?

[Enter SERVANTS.]

SERVANTS Here.

CARDINAL Let none, upon your lives,
 Have conference with the Prince Ferdinand,
 Unless I know it. [Aside] In this distraction
 He may reveal the murder. [Exeunt SERVANTS.]
 Yond's my lingering consumption:
 I am weary of her, and by any means
 Would be quit of.

JULIA How now, my lord?
 What ails you?

CARDINAL           Nothing.

JULIA                Oh, you are much altered:
           Come, I must be your secretary,<sup>0</sup> and remove                   confidante
           This lead from off your bosom.<sup>4</sup> What's the matter?

CARDINAL    I may not tell you.

JULIA    Are you so far in love with sorrow
           You cannot part with part of it? Or think you
           I cannot love your grace when you are sad
           As well as merry? Or do you suspect
           I, that have been a secret to your heart
           These many winters, cannot be the same
           Unto your tongue?

CARDINAL            Satisfy thy longing—
           The only way to make thee keep my counsel
           Is not to tell thee.

JULIA                Tell your echo this,
           Or flatterers, that like echoes still report
           What they hear though most imperfect, and not me;
           For if that you be true unto yourself,
           I'll know.

CARDINAL    Will you rack<sup>0</sup> me?   torture

JULIA                No, judgment shall
           Draw it from you: it is an equal fault,
           To tell one's secrets unto all or none.

CARDINAL    The first argues folly.

JULIA                But the last, tyranny.

CARDINAL    Very well. Why, imagine I have committed
           Some secret deed which I desire the world
           May never hear of.

JULIA                Therefore may not I know it?
           You have concealed for me as great a sin
           As adultery. Sir, never was occasion
           For perfect trial of my constancy
           Till now: sir, I beseech you—

CARDINAL            You'll repent it.

JULIA    Never.

CARDINAL    It hurries thee to ruin: I'll not tell thee.
           Be well advised, and think what danger 'tis
           To receive a prince's secrets: they that do,
           Had need have their breasts hooped with adamant<sup>0</sup>                   the hardest metal
           To contain them. I pray thee, yet be satisfied;
           Examine thine own frailty; 'tis more easy
           To tie knots than unloose them: 'tis a secret
           That, like a lingering poison, may chance lie
           Spread in thy veins, and kill thee seven year hence.

JULIA    Now you dally with me.

CARDINAL            No more; thou shalt know it.
           By my appointment the great Duchess of Malfi
           And two of her young children, four nights since,

4. Secretaries opened letters addressed to their masters by removing the heavy lead seals.

Were strangled.

JULIA O Heaven! Sir, what have you done?

CARDINAL How now? How settles this? Think you your bosom
Will be a grave dark and obscure enough
For such a secret?

JULIA You have undone yourself, sir.

CARDINAL Why?

JULIA It lies not in me to conceal it.

CARDINAL No?

Come, I will swear you to't upon this book.

JULIA Most religiously.

CARDINAL Kiss it. [She kisses the book.]

Now you shall

Never utter it; thy curiosity

Hath undone thee: thou'rt poisoned with that book.

Because I knew thou couldst not keep my counsel,

I have bound thee to't by death.

[Reenter BOSOLA.]

BOSOLA For pity sake,

Hold!

CARDINAL Ha! Bosola?

JULIA I forgive you

This equal piece of justice you have done;

For I betrayed your counsel to that fellow:

He overheard it; that was the cause I said

It lay not in me to conceal it.

BOSOLA O foolish woman,

Couldst not thou have poisoned him?

JULIA Tis weakness,

Too much to think what should have been done. I go

I know not whither.

[Dies.]

CARDINAL Wherefore com'st thou hither?

BOSOLA That I might find a great man like yourself,

Not out of his wits as the Lord Ferdinand,

To remember my service.

CARDINAL I'll have thee hewed in pieces.

BOSOLA Make not yourself such a promise of that life

Which is not yours to dispose of.

CARDINAL Who placed thee here?

BOSOLA Her lust, as she intended.

CARDINAL Very well.

Now you know me for your fellow murderer.

BOSOLA And wherefore should you lay fair marble colors

Upon your rotten purposes to me?<sup>5</sup>

Unless you imitate some that do plot great treasons,

And when they have done, go hide themselves i' th' graves

Of those were actors in t?

CARDINAL No more; there is

A fortune attends thee.

5. Plaster was often painted to look like marble.

- BOSOLA Shall I go sue to Fortune any longer?
 'Tis the fool's pilgrimage.
- 290 CARDINAL I have honors in store for thee.
- BOSOLA There are a many ways that conduct to seeming Honor, and some of them very dirty ones.
- CARDINAL Throw to the devil
 Thy melancholy; the fire burns well,
 What need we keep a stirring of t, and make
- 305 A greater smother? Thou wilt kill Antonio?
- BOSOLA Yes.
- CARDINAL Take up that body.
- BOSOLA I think I shall
 Shortly grow the common bier for churchyards!
- CARDINAL I will allow thee some dozen of attendants
 To aid thee in the murder.
- 300 BOSOLA Oh, by no means. Physicians that apply horse leeches to any rank swelling use to cut off their tails, that the blood may run through them the faster. Let me have no train<sup>6</sup> when I go to shed blood, lest it make me have a greater when I ride to the gallows.<sup>7</sup>
- CARDINAL Come to me after midnight, to help to remove that body to her 305 own lodging. I'll give out she died of the plague; 'twill breed the less inquiry after her death.
- BOSOLA Where's Castruccio her husband?
- CARDINAL He's rode to Naples to take possession of Antonio's citadel.
- BOSOLA Believe me, you have done a very happy turn.
- 310 CARDINAL Fail not to come. There is the master key of our lodgings, and by that you may conceive what trust I plant in you.
- BOSOLA YOU shall find me ready. [Exit CARDINAL.]
 Oh poor Antonio, though nothing be so needful
 To thy estate as pity, yet I find
- 315 Nothing so dangerous. I must look to my footing;
 In such slippery ice-pavements men had need
 To be frost-nailed well;<sup>8</sup> they may break their necks else;
 The precedent's here afore me. How this man
 Bears up in blood! Seems fearless! Why, 'tis well:
- 320 Security some men call the suburbs of hell,
 Only a dead<sup>9</sup> wall between. Well, good Antonio, bare
 I'll seek thee out, and all my care shall be
 To put thee into safety from the reach
 Of these most cruel biters that have got
- 325 Some of thy blood already. It may be,
 I'll join with thee in a most just revenge:
 The weakest arm is strong enough that strikes
 With the sword of justice. Still methinks the duchess Haunts me. There, there, 'tis nothing but my melancholy.
- 330 O Penitence, let me truly taste thy cup,
 That throws men down only to raise them up! [Exit.]

6. Followers.

7. Criminals, carted through the streets to be hanged at Tyburn, were followed by crowds.

8. To wear hobnailed boots.

SCENE 3. A fortification at Milan.

[Enter ANTONIO and DELIO. Echo from the DUCHESS'grave.]

DELIO Yond's the cardinal's window. This fortification
Grew from the ruins of an ancient abbey;
And to yond side o' th' river lies a wall,
Piece of a cloister, which in my opinion
Gives the best echo that you ever heard,
So hollow and so dismal, and withal<sup>o</sup>
So plain in the distinction of our words,
That many have supposed it is a spirit
That answers.

in addition

ANTONIO I do love these ancient ruins.
We never tread upon them but we set
Our foot upon some reverend history:
And, questionless, here in this open court,
Which now lies naked to the injuries
Of stormy weather, some men lie interred
Loved the church so well, and gave so largely to t,
They thought it should have canopied their bones
Till doomsday; but all things have their end:
Churches and cities, which have diseases like to men,
Must have like death that we have.

ECHO "Like death that we have."

DELIO Now the echo hath caught you.

ANTONIO It groaned, methought, and gave
A very deadly accent.

ECHO "Deadly accent."

DELIO I told you 'twas a pretty one: you may make it
A huntsman, or a falconer, a musician,
Or a thing of sorrow.

ECHO "A thing of sorrow."

ANTONIO Aye, sure, that suits it best.

ECHO "That suits it best."

ANTONIO Tis very like my wife's voice.

ECHO "Aye, wife's voice."

DELIO Come, let's walk further from't. I would not have you
Go to th' cardinal's tonight: do not.

ECHO "Do not."

DELIO Wisdom doth not more moderate wasting sorrow
Than time: take time for't; be mindful of thy safety.

ECHO "Be mindful of thy safety."

ANTONIO Necessity compels me:
Make<sup>o</sup> scrutiny throughout the passes
Of your own life, you'll find it impossible
To fly your fate.

if you make

ECHO "Oh, fly your fate."

DELIO Hark! The dead stones seem to have pity on you,
And give you good counsel.

ANTONIO Echo, I will not talk with thee,

For thou art a dead thing.

ECHO "Thou art a dead thing."

ANTONIO My duchess is asleep now,
And her little ones, I hope sweetly: O heaven,
Shall I never see her more?

ECHO "Never see her more."

ANTONIO I marked<sup>o</sup> not one repetition of the echo attended to
But that, and on the sudden a clear light
Presented me a face folded in sorrow.

DELIO Your fancy merely.

ANTONIO Come, I'll be out of this ague, fever
For to live thus is not indeed to live;
It is a mockery and abuse of life.
I will not henceforth save myself by halves;
Lose all, or nothing.

DELIO Your own virtue save you!
I'll fetch your eldest son, and second you<sup>o</sup> back you up
It may be that the sight of his own blood
Spread in so sweet a figure<sup>o</sup> may beget face
The more compassion.

ANTONIO However, fare you well.
Though in our miseries Fortune have a part,
Yet in our noble sufferings she hath none:
Contempt of pain, that we may call our own. [Exeunt.]

SCENE 4. A room in the CARDINAL'S palace.

[Enter CARDINAL, PESCARA, MALATESTA, RODERIGO, and GRISOLAN.]

CARDINAL You shall not watch tonight by the sick prince;
His grace is very well recovered.

MALATESTA Good my lord, suffer<sup>o</sup> us. allow

CARDINAL Oh, by no means;
The noise and change of object in his eye
Doth more distract him. I pray, all to bed;
And though you hear him in his violent fit,
Do not rise, I entreat you.

PESCARA SO, sir; we shall not.

CARDINAL Nay, I must have you promise upon your honors,
For I was enjoined to t by himself; and he seemed
To urge it sensibly.<sup>o</sup> with strong feeling

PESCARA Let our honors bind
This trifle.

CARDINAL Nor any of your followers.

MALATESTA Neither.

CARDINAL It may be, to make trial of your promise,
When he's asleep, myself will rise and feign
Some of his rnad tricks, and cry out for help,
And feign myself in danger.

MALATESTA If your throat were cutting,
I'd not come at you, now I have protested against it.

CARDINAL Why, I thank you. [Withdraws.]

GRISOLAN 'Twas a foul storm tonight.

RODERIGO The Lord Ferdinand's chamber shook like an osier.<sup>0</sup> a willow wand

MALATESTA 'Twas nothing but pure kindness in the devil,
To rock his own child. [Exeunt all except the CARDINAL.]

CARDINAL The reason why I would not suffer<sup>0</sup> these allow
About my brother is because at midnight
I may with better privacy convey
Julia's body to her own lodging. Oh, my conscience!
I would pray now, but the devil takes away my heart
For having any confidence in prayer.
About this hour I appointed Bosola
To fetch the body: when he hath served my turn,
He dies. [Exit.]

[Enter BOSOLA.]

BOSOLA Ha! 'Twas the cardinal's voice; I heard him name
Bosola and my death. Listen! I hear
One's footing.

[Enter FERDINAND.]

FERDINAND Strangling is a very quiet death.

BOSOLA [aside] Nay, then, I see I must stand upon my guard.

FERDINAND What say to that? Whisper softly; do you agree to't? So; it must be done i' th' dark: the cardinal would not for a thousand pounds the doctor should see it. [Exit.]

BOSOLA My death is plotted; here's the consequence of murder.
We value not desert nor Christian breath,
When we know black deeds must be cured with death.

[Enter ANTONIO and SERVANT.]

SERVANT Here stay, sir, and be confident, I pray:
I'll fetch you a dark lantern. [Exit.]

ANTONIO Could I take him at his prayers,
There were hope of pardon.

BOSOLA Fall right, my sword! [Stabs him.]
I'll not give thee so much leisure as to pray.

ANTONIO Oh, I am gone! Thou hast ended a long suit<sup>1</sup>
In a minute.

BOSOLA What art thou?

ANTONIO A most wretched thing,
That only have thy benefit in death,
To appear myself.

[Reenter SERVANT with a lantern.]

SERVANT Where are you, sir?

ANTONIO Very near my home. Bosola?

SERVANT Oh, misfortune!

BOSOLA Smother thy pity; thou art dead else.<sup>0</sup> Antonio? otherwise
The man I would have saved 'bove mine own life!

5.4

1. Antonio thinks it is the cardinal, to whom he came to address a plea ("suit"), who has stabbed him.

There sits in thy face some great determination
Mixed with some fear.

BOSOLA Thus it lightens<sup>0</sup> into action: ignites
I am come to kill thee.

CARDINAL Ha! Help! Our guard!

BOSOLA Thou art deceived; they are out of thy howling.

CARDINAL Hold; and I will faithfully divide
Revenues with thee.

BOSOLA Thy prayers and proffers
Are both unseasonable.

CARDINAL Raise the watch!
We are betrayed!

BOSOLA I have confined your flight:<sup>0</sup> cut off your escape
I'll suffer your retreat to Julia's chamber,
But no further.

CARDINAL Help! We are betrayed!

[Enter, above, PESCARA, MALATESTA, RODERIGO, and GRISOLAN.]

MALATESTA Listen.

CARDINAL My dukedom for rescue!

RODERIGO Fie upon his counterfeiting!

MALATESTA Why, 'tis not the cardinal.

RODERIGO Yes, yes, 'tis he,
But I'll see him hanged ere I'll go down to him.

CARDINAL Here's a plot upon me. I am assaulted! I am lost,
Unless some rescue.

GRISOLAN He doth this pretty well,
But it will not serve to laugh me out of my honor.

CARDINAL The sword's at my throat!

RODERIGO YOU would not bawl so loud then.

MALATESTA Come, come, let's go to bed. He told us thus much aforehand.

PESCARA He wished you should not come at him; but, believe't,
The accent of the voice sounds not in jest:

I'll down to him, howsoever, and with engines.<sup>0</sup> battering rams
Force ope the doors [Exit above.]

RODERIGO Let's follow him aloof,<sup>0</sup> at a distance
And note how the cardinal will laugh at him.

[Exeunt, above, MALATESTA, RODERIGO, and GRISOLAN.]

BOSOLA There's for you first, [He kills the SERVANT.]
'Cause you shall not unbarricade the door
To let in rescue.

CARDINAL What cause hast thou to pursue my life?

BOSOLA Look there.

CARDINAL Antonio?

BOSOLA Slain by my hand unwittingly.
Pray, and be sudden: when thou killed'st thy sister,
Thou took'st from Justice her most equal balance,
And left her naught but her sword.

CARDINAL Oh, mercy!

BOSOLA Now it seems thy greatness was only outward;
For thou fall'st faster of thyself than calamity
Can drive thee. I'll not waste longer time: there! [Stafos him.]

CARDINAL Thou hast hurt me.

BOSOLA Again! [Stabs him again.]

CARDINAL Shall I die like a leveret,<sup>1</sup>

Without any resistance? Help, help, help!

I am slain!

[Enter FERDINAND.]

FERDINAND Th' alarum? Give me a fresh horse;

Rally the vaunt-guard, or the day is lost.

Yield, yield! I give you the honor of arms,

Shake my sword over you; will you yield?<sup>2</sup>

CARDINAL Help me; I am your brother!

FERDINAND The devil!

My brother fight upon the adverse party?

[He wounds the CARDINAL, and, in the scuffle, gives BOSOLA his death wound.]

There flies your ransom.

CARDINAL O justice!

I suffer now for what hath former<sup>0</sup> been: earlier

Sorrow is held the eldest child of sin.

FERDINAND Now you're brave fellows. Caesar's fortune was harder than Pompey's; Caesar died in the arms of prosperity, Pompey at the feet of disgrace.

You both died in the field. The pain's nothing: pain many times is taken away with the apprehension of greater, as the toothache with the sight of a barber that comes to pull it out: there's philosophy for you.

BOSOLA Now my revenge is perfect. Sink, thou main cause

[He kills FERDINAND.]

Of my undoing! The last part of my life

Hath done me best service.

FERDINAND Give me some wet hay; I am broken-winded.<sup>3</sup> I do account this world but a dog kennel: I will vault credit and affect high pleasures<sup>4</sup> beyond death.

BOSOLA He seems to come to himself, now he's so near the bottom.

FERDINAND My sister, O my sister! There's the cause on't.

Whether we fall by ambition, blood, or lust,

Like diamonds we are cut with our own dust. [Dies.]

CARDINAL Thou hast thy payment, too.

BOSOLA Yes, I hold my weary soul in my teeth.

'Tis ready to part from me. I do glory

That thou, which stood'st like a huge pyramid

Begun upon a large and ample base,

Shalt end in a little point, a kind of nothing.

[Enter, below, PESCARA, MALATESTA, RODERIGO, and GRISOLAN.]

PESCARA How now, my lord?

MALATESTA O sad disaster!

RODERIGO How comes this?

BOSOLA Revenge for the Duchess of Malfi murdered

ELIZABETH CARY

1585?—1639

Elizabeth (Tanfield) Cary was the first Englishwoman to write and publish a drama, The Tragedy of Mariam (1613); it was probably composed between 1602 and 1609 and invites comparison with Webster's Duchess of Malfi, performed in 1613. Both plays have as protagonists forceful queens who insist on preserving the integrity of their own emotional lives in regard to marriage and who otherwise flout gender expectations; both queens are murdered by violently jealous men who then go mad. Cary's play, however, was not intended for the stage: it is a Senecan closet drama, a genre that dramatizes the clash of ideological positions. Mariam explores issues important in Cary's own life and controverted in the Jacobean state: the claims of conscience, the analogy of domestic and state tyranny, the power of kings and husbands, the rights and duties of wives and subjects, the justifications for resistance to tyrants, and the possibility and power of passive resistance.

The major source for Cary's life is a memoir by one of her daughters written about 1655. Though conceived as an exemplary biography or saint's life, it shows Cary continually caught between pressures to conform and submit and an inner imperative to resist and challenge authority. Daughter of a successful lawyer and judge, Sir Lawrence Tanfield, and of a mother descended from the country gentry, she grew up in Oxfordshire as a precocious only child, reading omnivorously, learning languages, translating Seneca's epistles and Ortelius's geography, and writing verses. The memoir claims that she learned, chiefly on her own, French, Spanish, Italian, Latin, and Hebrew (though her tutor John Davies of Hereford probably helped); that she often read all night, bribing the servants for candles her mother refused; and that at age twelve she regaled her father with arguments against Calvin's Institutes. In 1602, at age seventeen, she married Sir Henry Cary, a successful courtier who was at length appointed privy councillor (1618), Viscount Falkland in the Scottish peerage (1620), and lord deputy of Ireland (1622).

The memoir portrays Elizabeth struggling to conform her own inclinations and "strong will" to the will of her "very absolute" husband. She bore eleven children between 1609 and 1624 and nursed all but one; she read continually in history, poetry, moral philosophy, and the Church Fathers; and in 1626, now back in England, she converted openly to Catholicism—a move that left her isolated, attacked, cast off by husband and family, and in acute financial distress. (A covert profession would have caused no trouble in the court of the Catholic queen, Henrietta Maria, but an open avowal was especially threatening to her husband as governor of Ireland.) Ultimately, she brought six of her children to Catholicism, spiriting two sons abroad in the dead of night to receive a Jesuit education and leading four daughters to join a Benedictine convent at Cambray. Her eldest son, Lucius, celebrated in Ben Jonson's Cary-Morison ode (p. 1439), became the center of a noted intellectual circle at his estate, Great Tew.

Most of Cary's other writing did not survive, apparently: the memoir attributes to her a verse "Life of Tamurlane," several saints' lives in verse, an answer to a controversial Protestant tract by her son Lucius, and translations of the works of Cardinal Perron and other French divines; she and her tutor Davies also refer to an earlier tragedy set in Sicily. We do have her epitaph on Buckingham (ca. 1628), several trenchant letters to Charles I and others seeking redress after her husband cast her off, and a translation (1630) of Cardinal Perron's answer to a treatise by King James. Also, she is probably (but not certainly) the author of a remarkable History of the Life, Reign, and Death of Edward II (ca. 1627—28); if so, she was the first Englishwoman to write a full-scale history.

The Tragedy of Mariam, the Fair Queen of Jewry Cary supplied an Argument to the play, but the modern reader may be better served by a succinct summary of the historical situation and the play. Observing the unity of time, Cary brings the pressure of antecedent events and incorporates materials from other parts of the Herod story (drawn chiefly from Josephus's Antiquities) to heighten dramatic tension. In 39 B.C.E., before the play begins, Herod the Great, with the aid of Rome, has supplanted Hircanus, the hereditary king and priest in Israel, divorced his first wife, Doris, and married Hircanus's granddaughter, the singularly beautiful Mariam. To secure his throne he arranged a drowning accident to remove the new high priest, Mariam's brother Aristobolus, and had old Hircanus executed. Called to Rome to answer accusations leveled by Alexandra, the mother of Mariam and Aristobolus, Herod left orders with his uncle Josephus, who is also the husband of his sister Salome, to kill Mariam in the event of his death so no other man could possess her. When he returned, Herod had Josephus killed for telling Mariam about the decree for her death, taking that as evidence supporting Salome's false charge that the two were lovers. He then married Salome to Constabarus, who, unknown to Herod, had hidden away the sons of Babas, who were under sentence of death for their opposition to Herod. Soon Herod was again in Rome, in danger of death as a partisan of the defeated and recently deceased Marc Antony. Before departing, he had left with his officer Sohemus another order for Mariam to be killed in the event of his death; but Sohemus, like Josephus before him, revealed the decree to her.

The play begins as a rumor comes of Herod's death, causing a sense of liberation and new beginnings under the joint rule of Mariam and her mother, Alexandra, in the minority of Mariam's son. Mariam is at first torn between grief and joy but is relieved that the tyrant who murdered her kin and decreed her death will not return. Pheroras, Herod's brother, who had been under command to marry an infant, now marries his true love, Graphina. The sons of Babas now come out of hiding to serve the state, and Constabarus is no longer in peril for having concealed them. Sohemus will not suffer for his decision to let Mariam live in defiance of Herod's command. Even those who regret Herod's death benefit from it: his sister Salome, who had first plotted to have her second husband, Constabarus, killed by Herod so she might marry a new lover, now determines upon divorce instead—scandalous for a woman in Israel but hardly so wicked as murder.

At Herod's unexpected return, all these hopeful new beginnings are crushed. Babas's sons are executed. Sohemus is accused by Salome of adultery with Mariam and is executed for that (and for revealing Herod's instructions). Mariam refuses Herod's sexual advances and berates him for murdering her kin. Salome engineers a plot by which Mariam's servant offers (supposedly from her) a cup of poison to Herod and then goads Herod to command her death. A messenger recounts the details of Mariam's noble death, and Herod runs mad with grief and remorse, persuaded at last of her innocence and inestimable worth.

In the scenes presented here, Mariam is warned, and herself recognizes, that she brings death on herself by refusing to live by the accepted female triad of virtues: she is chaste but manifestly not silent or obedient. She challenges patriarchal control within the institution of marriage, claiming a wife's right to her own speech—public and private—as well as to the integrity of her own emotional life and self-definition.

SCENE 3

[ON THE DUTIES OF A WIFE]

[MARIAM. SOHEMUS.]

MARIAM Sohemus, tell me what the news may be
That makes your eyes so full, your cheeks so blue?

SOHEMUS I know not now how to call them. Ill for me
Tis sure they are: not so, I hope, for you.
Herod—

MARIAM Oh, what of Herod?

SOHEMUS Herod lives.

[MARIAM] HOW! Lives? What, in some cave or forest hid?

SOHEMUS Nay, back returned with honor. Caesar gives Him greater grace than e'er Anthonius did.

MARIAM Foretell the ruin of my family,
Tell me that I shall see our city burned:
Tell me I shall a death disgraceful die,
But tell me not that Herod is returned.

SOHEMUS Be not impatient, madam, be but mild,
His love to you again will soon be bred.

MARIAM I will not to his love be reconciled,
With solemn vows I have forsworn his bed.

SOHEMUS But you must break those vows.

MARIAM I'll rather break
The heart of Mariam. Cursed is my fate:
But speak no more to me, in vain ye speak<sup>0</sup> advise me
To live with him I so profoundly hate.

SOHEMUS Great queen, you must to me your pardon give,
Sohemus cannot now your will obey:
If your command should me to silence drive,
It were not to obey, but to betray.
Reject and slight my speeches, mock my faith,
Scorn my observance,<sup>0</sup> call my counsel naught: dutiful service
Though you regard not what Sohemus saith,
Yet will I ever freely speak my thought.
I fear ere long I shall fair Mariam see
In woeful state, and by herself undone:
Yet for your issue's sake<sup>1</sup> more temp'rate be,
The heart by affability is won.

MARIAM And must I to my prison turn again?
Oh, now I see I was an hypocrite:
I did this morning for his death complain,
And yet do mourn, because he lives, ere night.
When I his death believed, compassion wrought,
And was the stickler<sup>0</sup> 'twixt my heart and him: mediator

1. Mariam's sons by Herod, Alexander and Aristobulus.

But now that curtain's drawn from off my thought,
 Hate doth appear again with visage grim:
 And paints the face of Herod in my heart,
 In horrid colors with detested look:
 Then fear would come, but scorn doth play her part,
 And saith that scorn with fear can never brook.<sup>0</sup> put up with
 I know I could enchain him with a smile:
 And lead him captive with a gentle word,
 I scorn my look should ever man beguile,
 Or other speech than meaning<sup>0</sup> to afford. what I mean
 Else Salome in vain might spend her wind,
 In vain might Herod's mother whet her tongue:
 In vain had they complotted and combined,
 For I could overthrow them all ere long.
 Oh, what a shelter is mine innocence,
 To shield me from the pangs of inward grief:
 Gainst all mishaps it is my fair defense,
 And to my sorrows yields a large relief.
 To be commandress of the triple earth,<sup>2</sup>
 And sit in safety from a fall secure:
 To have all nations celebrate my birth,
 I would not that my spirit were impure.
 Let my distressed state unpitied be,
 Mine innocence is hope enough for me. [Exit.]
 SOHEMUS Poor guiltless queen! Oh, that my wish might place
 A little temper<sup>0</sup> now about thy heart: moderation
 Unbridled speech is Mariam's worst disgrace,<sup>0</sup> fault
 And will endanger her without desert.<sup>0</sup> her deserving it
 I am in greater hazard. O'er my head,
 The fatal axe doth hang unsteadily:
 My disobedience once discovered
 Will shake it down: Sohemus so shall die.
 For when the king shall find, we thought his death
 Had been as certain as we see his life:
 And marks withal I slighted so his breath,<sup>0</sup> command
 As to preserve alive his matchless wife—
 Nay more, to give to Alexander's hand<sup>0</sup> Mariam's son
 The regal dignity; the sovereign power,
 How I had yielded up at her command,
 The strength of all the city, David's Tower<sup>4</sup>—
 What more than common death may I expect,
 Since I too well do know his cruelty?
 'Twere death a word of Herod's to neglect;
 What then to do directly contrary?
 Yet, life, I quit thee with a willing spirit,
 And think thou could'st not better be employed:

a king's fortunes.

4. A fort Herod built by the western wall of Jerusalem; it was named David's Tower later, by the crusaders.

85 I forfeit thee for her that more doth merit,
 Ten such<sup>0</sup> were better dead than she destroyed. such as I
 But fare thee well, chaste queen, well may I see
 The darkness palpable, and rivers part:<sup>5</sup>
 The sun stand still, nay more, retorted be,<sup>6</sup>
 90 But never woman with so pure a heart.
 Thine eyes' grave majesty keeps all in awe,
 And cuts the wings of every loose desire:
 Thy brow is table to the modest law;<sup>7</sup>
 Yet though we dare not love, we may admire.<sup>8</sup>
 95 And if I die, it shall my soul content,
 My breath in Mariam's service shall be spent.

CHORUS Tis not enough for one that is a wife
 To keep her spotless from an act of ill:
 But from suspicion she should free her life,
 And bare<sup>0</sup> herself of power as well as will. stri-p
 Tis not so glorious for her to be free,
 As by her proper<sup>0</sup> self restrained to be. own

When she hath spacious ground to walk upon,
 Why on the ridge should she desire to go?
 105 It is no glory to forbear alone<sup>0</sup> only
 Those things that may her honor overthrow.
 But 'tis thankworthy if she will not take
 All lawful liberties for honor's sake.

That wife her hand against her fame doth rear,
 no That more than to her lord alone will give
 A private word to any second ear,
 And though she may with reputation live,
 Yet though most chaste, she doth her glory blot,
 And wounds her honor, though she kills it not.<sup>9</sup>

us When to their husbands they themselves do bind,
 Do they not wholly give themselves away?
 Or give they but their body, not their mind,
 Reserving that, though best, for others' prey?
 No sure, their thoughts no more can be their own,
 120 And therefore should to none but one be known.

Then she usurps upon another's right,
 That seeks to be by public language graced:
 And though her thoughts reflect with purest light,
 Her mind if not peculiar<sup>0</sup> is not chaste. exclusive

5. Darkness was one of the ten plagues called down on Israel by Moses; "rivers part" refers to the parting of the Red Sea that enabled the Israelites to escape from Pharaoh (Exodus 14.21–22).

6. Joshua commanded the sun to stand still (Joshua 10.12–14); Sohemus imagines it traveling backward.

7. Sohemus describes Mariam's brow as a tablet ("table") on which the law of modesty is engraved.

8. Cf. the speech in which Antonio speaks of the Duchess of Malfi (p. 1466).

9. I.e., the wife that gives a private word to any besides her husband may not lose her reputation but blots it.

For in a wife it is no worse to find,

A common<sup>0</sup> body than a common mind.

shared, public

And every mind, though free from thought of ill,

That out of glory<sup>0</sup> seeks a worth to show,

desire of praise

When any's ears but one therewith they fill,<sup>1</sup>

Doth in a sort her pureness overthrow.

Now Mariam had (but that to this she bent)<sup>2</sup>

Been free from fear, as well as innocent.

[MARIAM'S FATE]

MARIAM Am I the Mariam that presumed so much,

And deemed my face must needs preserve my breath?

Aye, I it was that thought my beauty such,

As it alone could countermand my death.

Now death will teach me: he can pale as well

A cheek of roses as a cheek less bright,

And dim an eye whose shine doth most excel,

As soon as one that casts a meaner light.

Had not myself against myself conspired,

No plot, no adversary from without

Could Herod's love from Mariam have retired,

Or from his heart have thrust my semblance out.

The wanton queen that never loved for love,

False Cleopatra, wholly set on gain,

With all her sleights did prove,<sup>0</sup> yet vainly prove,

For her the love of Herod to obtain.

Yet her allurements, all her courtly guile,

Her smiles, her favors, and her smooth deceit

Could not my face from Herod's mind exile,

But were with him of less than little weight.

That face and person that in Asia late<sup>0</sup>

For beauty's goddess, Paphos' queen,<sup>0</sup> was ta'en:

Venus

That face that did captive<sup>0</sup> great Julius' fate,

That very face that was Anthonius' bane,<sup>0</sup>

That face that to be Egypt's pride was born,

That face that all the world esteemed so rare:<sup>1</sup>

Did Herod hate, despise, neglect, and scorn,

When with the same, he Mariam's did compare.

This made that I improvidently wrought,<sup>2</sup>

And on the wager even my life did pawn:

Because I thought, and yet but truly thought,

That Herod's love could not from me be drawn.

2. Except that she talked too freely to others.

1. The Egyptian queen Cleopatra was the beauty who captivated both Julius Caesar and Mark Antony (lines 23-24).

2. I.e., this caused me to act recklessly.

But now, though out of time,<sup>0</sup> I plainly see
 It could be drawn, though never drawn from me,
 Had I but with humility been graced,
 As well as fair I might have proved me wise:
 But I did think because I knew me chaste,
 One virtue for a woman might suffice.
 That mind for glory of our sex might stand,
 Wherein humility and chastity
 Doth march with equal paces hand in hand.
 But one, if single seen, who setteth by?<sup>0</sup>
 And I had singly one, but 'tis my joy,
 That I was ever innocent, though sour:
 And therefore can they but my life destroy,
 My soul is free from adversary's power.
 You princes great in power, and high in birth,
 Be great and high, I envy not your hap.<sup>0</sup>
 Your birth must be from dust, your power on earth;
 In heav'n shall Mariam sit in Sara's lap.<sup>3</sup>

The Gender Wars

What are women good for? By the English Renaissance, men had been debating this question for centuries. Misogynists argued the case for woman's supposed natural inferiority and proper subordination to man on several grounds: the imperfections of the female body, mind, and spirit; women's disposition to frivolity, vanity, shrewishness, extravagance, and sexual voracity; and especially the claim that in the Garden of Eden, Eve caused Adam (and all humankind) to fall from innocence. The Wife of Bath's Prologue offers an amusing compendium of arguments pro and con that were already hoary by Chaucer's time. Some defenses of women, among them "Eve's Apology" in Aemilia Lanyer's Salve Deus Rex Judaeorum (p. 1317), earnestly challenge these stereotypes. More often, men composed prose tracts on both sides of the "woman question" in a spirit of witty rhetorical gamesmanship.

Joseph Swetnam (ca. 1570?—1621) prompted such an exchange of tracts by publishing his Arraignment of Lewd, Idle, Froward, and Unconstant Women in 1615, under the pseudonym Tom Tel-troth. His other book, The School of the Noble and Worthy Science of Defence (1617), indicates that he was a fencing master, and both books testify to his admitted lack of formal education. Swetnam's rambling but lively attack on women cobbles together proverbs, lore, rowdy jokes, invective, and anecdotes, as well as often inexact or misattributed paraphrases of what various authorities had to say about women, evidently derived from anthologies and commonplace books. The latter were printed versions of the personal notebooks into which many readers were accustomed to copy, under various headings depending on interest and use, quotations and citations from their reading. The Arraignment touched off a pamphlet war between the years 1615 and 1620, including four reissues of Swetnam's book and at least eight rejoinders or related works. Two of the answers bear women's allegorical names, Esther Sowernam (a satiric play on Swe[e]tnam) and Constantia Munda ("a steadfast world"); they may or may not have been actually written by women. Other works include a stage play, Swetnam the Woman-Hater Arraigned by Women (1620), and two satires on cross-dressing (which are included on Norton Literature Online). But the first response (1617), and the only one of these tracts published under the author's own name, was A Muzzle for Melastomus (Black Mouth) by the nineteen-year-old Rachel Speght (ca. 1597—?). Speght was the first Englishwoman to claim the role of polemicist and critic of gender ideology. Her tract defending women was published by, and perhaps solicited by, Swetnam's bookseller, Thomas Archer.

A Muzzle employs the railing attacks and witty ripostes expected in such a controversy. But most of Speght's treatise undertakes a serious argument, reinterpreting controversial biblical texts to yield a more equitable concept of gender. Speght's father, a Calvinist clergyman and an author himself, evidently provided her with some classical education—very rare for seventeenth-century women of any class. In her writings she both claims and displays a knowledge of Latin, some training in logic and rhetoric, and some familiarity with a range of learned authorities. In 1621 she published a long meditative poem, Mortality's Memorandum, occasioned by her mother's death. She prefaced it with an address to the reader reaffirming her authorship of A Muzzle and with a three-hundred-line autobiographical poem, "A Dream," which reworks medieval dream visions such as The Romance of the Rose to portray allegorically the obstacles she encountered and the rapturous delight she experienced in her pursuit of learning (For the text of "A Dream," go to Norton Literature Online). She also gives that experience a more general application by putting a vigorous defense of women's education in the mouth of the character Truth.

JOSEPH SWETNAM

*From The Arraignment of Lewd, Idle, Froward<sup>1</sup> and Unconstant Women: Or the Vanity of Them,
Choose You Whether*

*Neither to the best, nor yet to the worst;
but to the common sort of women.*

Musing with myself being idle, and having little ease to pass the time withal, and I being in a great choler<sup>2</sup> against some women, I mean more than one, and so in the rough of my fury, taking [I took] my pen in hand to beguile the time withal. Indeed, I might have employed myself to better use, than in such an idle business.

To the Reader. Read it, if you please, and like as you list: neither to the wisest clerk,<sup>3</sup> nor yet to the starkest fool, but unto the ordinary sort of giddy-headed young men, I send this greeting.

If thou mean to see the bearbaiting<sup>4</sup> of women, then trudge to this bear garden apace, and get in betimes,<sup>5</sup> and view every room where thou mayest best sit, for thy own pleasure, profit, and heart's ease, and bear with my rudeness if I chance to offend thee. But before I do open this trunk full of torments against women, I think it were not amiss . . . to drive all the women out of my hearing, for doubt lest this little spark kindle into such a flame, and raise so many stinging hornets humming about my ears, that all the wit I have will not quench the one, nor quiet the other. For I fear me I have set down more than they will like of, and yet a great deal less than they deserve: and for better proof, I refer myself to the judgment of men which have more experience than myself. For I esteem little of the malice of women, for men will be persuaded by reason, but women must be answered with silence, for I know women will bark more at me than Cerberus the two-headed dog did at Hercules, when he came into Hell to fetch out the fair Proserpina.<sup>6</sup>

1. Unruly, stubbornly willful.

2. Anger. Choler was one of the four humors, this one supposedly the source of anger and irascibility.

3. Scholar; originally, a clergyman (cleric).

4. Popular sport in medieval and early modern England in which a bear, chained to a post by his neck or one leg, was attacked by several dogs. The Paris Garden in Southwark was the largest and most popular bear garden in London.

5. In good time.

6. Swetnam has confused several classical myths. Cerberus, the monster guarding the entrance to Hades, was said to have three (not two) heads, and Mercury (Hermes), not Hercules, was sent by Jove to release Proserpina. But the twelfth labor of Hercules was to bring Cerberus from Hades to the upper world.

Chapter I. This first chapter shows to what use women were made. It also shows that most of them degenerate from the use they were framed unto, by leading a proud, lazy, and idle life, to the great hindrance of their poor husbands.

Moses describes a woman thus: at the first beginning (says he) a woman was made to be a helper unto man,<sup>7</sup> and so they are indeed: for she helps to spend and consume that which man painfully gets. He also says that they were made of the rib of a man,<sup>8</sup> and that their froward nature shows; for a rib is a crooked thing, good for nothing else, and women are crooked by nature, for small occasion will cause them to be angry.

Again, in a manner, she was no sooner made, but straightway her mind was set upon mischief, for by her aspiring mind and wanton will she quickly procured man's fall, and therefore ever since they are and have been a woe unto man, and follow the line of their first leader.<sup>9</sup>

For I pray you let us consider the times past, with the time present. First, that of David and Solomon, if they had occasion so many hundred years ago to exclaim so bitterly against women, for the one of them said, that it was better to be a doorkeeper, and better dwell in a den among lions, than to be in the house with a froward and wicked woman. And the other said, that the climbing up of a sandy hill to an aged man was nothing so wearisome as to be troubled with a froward woman.<sup>1</sup> . . . If a woman hold an opinion, no man can draw her from it; tell her of her fault, she will not believe that she is in any fault; give her good counsel, but she will not take it. If you do but look after another woman, then she will be jealous, the more thou lovest her, the more she will disdain thee, and if thou threaten her, then she will be angry, flatter her, and then she will be proud, and if thou forbear her, it makes her bold, and if thou chasten her, then she will turn into a serpent. At a word, a woman will never forget an injury, nor give thanks for a good turn. What wise man then will exchange gold for dross, pleasure for pain, a quiet life, for wrangling brawls, from the which married men are never free.

« * if

And what of all this? Why nothing, but to tell thee that a woman is better lost than found, better forsaken than taken. Saint Paul says, that they which marry, do well, but he also says, that they which marry not, do better,<sup>2</sup> and he no doubt was well advised what he spoke. Then, if thou be wise, keep thy head out of the halter and take heed before thou have cause to curse thy hard pennyworth,<sup>3</sup> or wish the priest speechless which knit the knot.

The philosophers which lived in the old time, their opinions were so hard of marriage that they never delighted therein, for one of them being asked why he married not? he answered, that it was too soon. And afterwards when he was old, he was asked the same question, and he said then that it was too late.

7. Genesis 2.18: "And the Lord God said. It is not good that the man should be alone; I will make him an help meet for him."

8. Genesis 2.21-22.

9. I.e., Eve.

1. Swetnam evidently relies on his imperfect memory or on careless notes. The comparisons he paraphrases are not from Solomon or David but from the biblical Apocrypha, attributed in the Book of Ecclesiasticus to Jesus Son of Sirach: "I had rather dwell with a lion and a dragon, than to keep house with a wicked woman. . . . As the climbing up a sandy way is to the feet of the aged, so is a wife full of words to a quiet man."

2. 1 Corinthians 7.38: "So then he that giveth her [his virgin] in marriage doeth well; but he that giveth her not in marriage doeth better." Swetnam takes the quote out of context.

3. Something, in this case a wife, that is worth only a penny.

If thou marriest a woman of evil report, her discredits will be a spot in thy brow; thou canst not go in the street with her without mocks, nor among thy neighbors without frumps.<sup>4</sup> And commonly the fairest women are soonest enticed to yield unto vanity. He that has a fair wife and a whetstone, everyone will be whetting thereon.<sup>5</sup> And a castle is hard to keep when it is assaulted by many, and fair women are commonly caught at. He that marries a fair woman, everyone will wish his death to enjoy her. And if thou be never so rich, and yet but a clown<sup>6</sup> in condition, then will thy fair wife have her credit to please her fancy, for a diamond has not his grace but in gold, no more has a fair woman her full commendations but in the ornament of her bravery,<sup>7</sup> by which means there are divers women whose beauty has brought their husbands into great poverty and discredit by their pride and whoredom. A fair woman commonly will go like a peacock, and her husband must go like a woodcock.<sup>8</sup> baiter of women, or metamorphosed Misogunes,<sup>3</sup> Joseph Swetnam.*

From standing water, which soon putrifies, can no good fish be expected, for it produces no other creatures but those that are venomous or noisome, as snakes, and such like. Semblably,<sup>4</sup> no better stream can we look should issue from your idle corrupt brain than that whereto the rough of your fury (to use your own words) has moved you to open the sluice. In which excrement of your roving cognitions you have used such irregularities touching concordance,<sup>5</sup> and observed so disordered a method, as I doubt not to tell you, that a very accidence scholar would have quite put you down<sup>6</sup> in both. You appear herein not unlike that painter who, seriously endeavoring to portray Cupid's bow, forgot the string.<sup>7</sup> For you, being greedy to botch up your mingle mangle invective against women, have not therein observed, in many places, so much as a grammar sense.<sup>8</sup> But the emptiest barrel makes the loudest sound, and so we will account of you.

Many propositions have you framed, which, as you think, make much against women, but if one would make a logical assumption, the conclusion would be flat against your own sex. Your dealing wants so much discretion that I doubt whether to bestow so good a name as the dunce upon you: but minority<sup>9</sup> bids me keep within my bounds. And therefore I only say unto you that your corrupt heart and railing tongue have made you a fit scribe for the Devil.

In that you have termed your virulent foam The Bearhaiting of Women, you have plainly displayed your own disposition to be cynical, in that there appears no other dog or bull to bait them, but yourself. Good had it been for you to have put on that muzzle which Saint James would have all Christians to wear: "Speak not evil one of another,"<sup>1</sup> and then you had not seemed so like the serpent Porphirus, as now you do; which, though full of deadly poison, yet being toothless, hurts none so much as himself.<sup>2</sup> For you having gone beyond the limits not of humanity alone but of Christianity, have done greater harm unto your own soul than unto women, as may plainly appear. First, in dishonoring of God by palpable blasphemy, wresting and perverting every place of Scripture that you have alleged, which by the testimony of Saint Peter, is to the destruction of them that do so.<sup>3</sup> Secondly, it appears by your disparaging of, and opprobrious speeches against, that excellent work of God's hands, which in his great love he perfected for the comfort of man. Thirdly, and lastly, by this your hodgepodge of heathenish sentences, similes, and examples, you have set forth yourself in your right colors unto the view of the world, and I doubt not but the judicious will account of you according to your demerit. As for the vulgar sort, which have no more learning than you have showed in your book, it is likely they will applaud you for your pains.

Then it is said, "Their eyes were opened,"<sup>4</sup> the eyes of their mind and conscience, and then perceived they themselves naked, that is, not only bereft of their integrity which they originally had, but felt the rebellion and disobedience of their members in the disordered motions of their now corrupt nature, which made them for shame to cover their nakedness. Then, and not before, it is said that they saw it, as if sin were imperfect, and unable to bring a deprivation of a blessing received, or death on all mankind, till man, in whom lay the active power of generation, had transgressed. The offense therefore of Adam and Eve is by Saint Augustine thus distinguished, "the man sinned against God and himself, the woman against God, herself, and her husband."<sup>5</sup> Yet in her giving of the fruit to eat she had no malicious intent toward him, but did therein show a desire to make her husband partaker of that happiness which she thought by their eating they should both have enjoyed. This her giving Adam of that sauce wherewith Satan had served her, whose sourness before he had eaten she did not perceive, was that which made her sin to exceed his. Wherefore, that she might not of him who ought to honor her be abhorred, the first promise that was made in Paradise God made to woman, that by her seed should the serpent's head be broken.<sup>6</sup> Whereupon Adam calls her Hevah, life,<sup>7</sup> that as the woman had been an occasion of sin, so should woman bring forth the Savior from sin, which was in the fullness of time accomplished . . . so that by Eve's blessed seed (as Saint Paul affirms) it is brought to pass, "that male and female are all one in Christ Jesus."<sup>8</sup>

The efficient cause of woman's creation was Jehovah the Eternal, the truth of which is manifest in Moses his narration of the six days works, where he says, "God created them male and female."<sup>9</sup> And David, exhorting all the earth to sing unto the Lord, meaning, by a metonymy,<sup>1</sup> earth, all creatures that live on the earth of which nation or sex soever, gives this reason, "For the Lord hath made us."<sup>2</sup> That work, then, cannot choose but be good, yea very good, which is wrought by so excellent a workman as the Lord, for he being a glorious creator, must needs effect a worthy creature. . . .

Secondly, the material cause, or matter whereof woman was made, was of a refined mold, if I may so speak. For man was created of the dust of the earth, but woman was made of a part of man, after that he was a living soul. Yet was she not produced from Adam's foot, to be his too low inferior, nor from his head to be his superior, but from his side, near his heart, to be his equal. That where he is lord she may be lady: and therefore said God concerning man and woman jointly, "Let them rule over the fish of the sea, and over the fowls of the heaven, and over every beast that moves upon the earth."<sup>3</sup> By which words he makes their authority equal, and all creatures to be in subjection unto them both. . . .

Thirdly, the formal cause, fashion, and proportion of a woman was excellent. For she was neither like the beasts of the earth, fowls of the air, fishes of the sea, or any other inferior creature, but man was the only object which she did resemble. For as God gave man a lofty countenance, that he might look up toward heaven, so did he likewise give unto woman. And as the temperature<sup>4</sup> of man's body is excellent, so is woman's. . . . And (that more is) in the image of God were they both created; yea and to be brief, all the parts of their bodies, both external and internal, were correspondent and meet each for other.

Fourthly and lastly, the final cause or end, for which woman was made, was to glorify God, and to be a collateral companion for man to glorify God, in using her body and all the parts, powers, and faculties thereof, as instruments for his honor.

Forms of Inquiry

The problem of knowledge—what we know, how we know, what areas of knowledge most demand attention, what methods are useful in studying those areas—came to be of pressing concern to seventeenth-century thinkers and writers. Experimental scientists produced treatises explaining their discoveries: Galileo on astronomy, William Gilbert on magnetism, William Harvey on the circulation of the blood. But many more authors investigated areas of learning in the study rather than the laboratory, offering programs for new modes of inquiry; explorations of nature and human nature; examinations of human psychology, social behavior, and personal religion; reports of antiquarian discoveries; and analyses of the social and political order. Although Latin remained important for international scholarly discourse, many writers on such subjects were now choosing to write essays and treatises in English.

The works included here represent very different forms of inquiry, registering each author's personal vision of the world in his own distinctive style. Francis Bacon produced brief, often aphoristic essays on matters of practical morality, social behavior, and politics, adopting the voice of accumulated public wisdom, and writing from the perspective of a man of affairs eager to make his way in the murky world of Jacobean court culture. In longer treatises he proposed programs for radically expanding human knowledge by a systematic program of scientific analysis and experiment, and he also devised a fictional scientific Utopia. Richard Burton's massive, digressive treatise on melancholy analyzes in a loose, galloping style all aspects of a psychological malady Burton thought universal to humankind. In a period of fierce religious strife, Sir Thomas Browne offered a description of his personal religious views, constructing himself in intimate but elegant prose as a tolerant, self-aware exponent of the inclusivity for which the Church of England strove. Thomas Hobbes, in a forthright, analytic style, developed a comprehensive theory of human nature based on matter and sense impressions; that theory in turn led to his theory of the commonwealth as necessarily founded upon absolute sovereignty.

In these and other writings of the period we see English prose developing remarkable stylistic range: sometimes epigrammatic, sometimes homely and vulgar, sometimes witty and boldly imagistic, sometimes learnedly allusive, sometimes ornately Latinate. In terms of syntax, whereas sixteenth-century prose typically employs long sentences with complex patterns of subordination and parallelism, early-seventeenth-century prose often features broken rhythms, more irregular phrasing, and more loosely organized sentences.

SIR FRANCIS BACON

1561-1626

As a literary figure Sir Francis Bacon played a central role in the development of the English essay and also inaugurated the genre of the scientific Utopia in his New Atlantis (1627). But he was even more important to the intellectual and cultural history of the earlier seventeenth century for his treatises on reforming and promoting learning through experiment and induction. His life span closely overlapped that of Donne and Jonson, but unlike them he came from a noble family close to the centers of government and power. During Elizabeth's reign he studied law and entered Parliament. But it was under James I that his political fortunes took off: he was knighted in 1603, became attorney general in 1613, lord chancellor (the highest judicial post) and Baron Verulam in 1618, and Viscount St. Albans in 1621. That same year, however, he was convicted on twenty-three counts of corruption and accepting bribes, and was fined, imprisoned, and forced from office. Bacon admitted the truth of the charges (though they were in part politically motivated), merely observing that everyone took bribes and that bribery never influenced his judgment. He later commented: "I was the justest judge that was in England these fifty years, but it was the justest censure in Parliament that was these 200 years."

As an essayist Bacon stands at almost the opposite pole from his great French predecessor Michel de Montaigne (1533—1592), who proposed to learn about humankind by an intensive analysis of his own body and mind and of his sensations, emotions, attitudes, and ideas. Bacon's essays are instead on topics "Civil and Moral." Montaigne's are tentative in structure; witty, expansive, and reflective in style; intimate^caridid^and affable in tone; and he speaks constantly in the first person. By contrast, Bacon adopts an aphoristic structure and a curt, often disjunctive style, as well as a tone of cool objectivity and weighty sententiousness; he seldom uses "I," but instead presents himself as a mouthpiece for society's accumulated practical wisdom. The ten short pieces of the first edition of his essays (1597) are little more than collections of maxims placed in sequence; the thirty-eight of the second edition (1612) are longer and looser; the fifty-eight of the final edition (1625) are still longer, are smoother in texture, use more figurative language, and are more unified. In that last edition, more than half of the essays deal with public life, and many of the others—even on such topics as truth, marriage, and love—are written from the vantage point of a man of affairs rather than that of a profound moralist. They evoke an atmosphere of expediency and self-interest but also voice precepts of moral wisdom and public virtue, offering a penetrating insight into the interests, problems, and thinking of the Jacobean ruling class.

Early in his life Bacon declared, "I have taken all knowledge to be my province." Whereas Donne, in the First Anniversary, saw human history as a process of inevitable degeneration and decay, Bacon saw it as progressive and believed that his new "scientific" method would lead humankind to a better future. He attempted a survey of the entire field of learning in The Advancement of Learning (1605), analyzing the principal obstacles to that advancement (rhetoric prompting the study of words rather than things, medieval scholasticism that ignores nature and promotes a barren rationalism, and pseudosciences such as astrology and alchemy); then he set forth what remains to be investigated. His Novum Organum (1620), written in Latin, urged induction—combining empirical investigation with carefully limited and tested generalizations—as the right method of investigating nature: the title challenged Aristotle's Organon, still the basis of university education, with its heavy reliance on deduction. Novum Organum includes a trenchant analysis of four kinds of "Idols"—psychological dispositions and intellectual habits that hold humankind back in its quest for truth and cause it to cling obstinately to the past. But despite his emphasis on experiment, Bacon generally ignored the major scientific discoveries of his age, by Galileo, Harvey, Gilbert and others; his true role was as a herald of the modern age. Despite his critique of rhetoric, he used the rich resources of figurative language—and of Utopian fiction in The New Atlantis—to urge a new faith in experiment and science. The thrust of his method was to segregate theology and science as "two truths," freeing science to go its own way unhampered by the old dogmas and creeds and unrestrained by the morality they supported. He is a primary creator of the myth of science as a pathway to Utopia; late in the century the Boyal Society honored him as a prophet.

Of Truth

"What is truth?" said jesting Pilate; and would not stay for an answer.<sup>2</sup> Certainly there be that delight in giddiness,<sup>3</sup> and count it a bondage to fix a belief; affecting free will in thinking, as well as in acting. And though the sects of philosophers of that kind be gone, yet there remain certain discoursing wits,<sup>4</sup> which are of the same veins, though there be not so much blood in them as was in those of the ancients. But it is not only the difficulty and labor which men take in finding out of truth; nor again, that when it is found, it imposeth upon<sup>5</sup> men's thoughts, that doth bring lies in favor; but a natural though corrupt love of the lie itself. One of the later school of the Grecians examineth the matter, and is at a stand<sup>6</sup> to think what should be in it, that men should love lies, where neither they make for pleasure, as with poets, nor for advantage, as with the merchant, but for the lie's sake. But I cannot tell: this same truth is a naked and open daylight, that doth not show the masques and mummeries and triumphs of the world half so stately and daintily as candlelights. Truth may perhaps come to the price of a pearl, that showeth best by day, but it will not rise to the price of a diamond or carbuncle,<sup>7</sup> that showeth best in varied lights. A mixture of a lie doth ever add pleasure. Doth any man doubt that if there were taken out of men's minds vain opinions, flattering hopes, false valuations, imaginations as one would, and the like, but it would leave the minds of a number of men poor shrunken things, full of melancholy and indisposition, and unpleasing to themselves? One of the fathers, in great severity, called poesy vinum daemonum,<sup>8</sup> because it filleth the imagination, and yet it is but with the shadow of a lie. But it is not the lie that passeth through the mind, but the lie that sinketh in, and settleth in it, that doth the hurt, such as we spake of before. But howsoever these things are thus in men's depraved judgments and affections, yet truth, which only doth judge itself, teacheth that the inquiry of truth, which is the lovemaking or wooing of it, the knowledge of truth, which is the presence of it, and the belief of truth, which is the enjoying of it, is the sovereign good of human nature. The first creature<sup>9</sup> of God, in the works of the days, was the light of the sense; the last was the light of reason; and his sabbath work ever since is the illumination of his Spirit. First he breathed light upon the face of the matter, or chaos; then he breathed light into the face of man; and still he breatheth and inspireth light into the face of his chosen. The poet that beautified the sect that was otherwise inferior to the rest<sup>1</sup> saith yet excellently well: "It is a pleasure to stand upon the shore, and to see ships tossed upon the sea; a pleasure to stand in the window of a castle, and to see a battle, and the adventures thereof below; but no pleasure is comparable to the standing upon the vantage ground of truth" (a hill not to be commanded,<sup>2</sup> and where the air is always clear and serene), "and to see the errors, and wanderings, and mists, and tempests, in the vale below": so always that this prospect<sup>3</sup> be with pity, and not with swelling or pride. Certainly, it is heaven upon earth to have a man's mind move in charity, rest in providence, and turn upon the poles of truth.

To pass from theological and philosophical truth to the truth of civil business, it will be acknowledged even by those that practice it not, that clear and round<sup>4</sup> dealing is the honor of man's nature, and that mixture of falsehood is like alloy in coin of gold and silver, which may make the metal work the better, but it embaseth<sup>5</sup> it. For these winding and crooked courses are the goings of the serpent; which goeth basely upon the belly, and not upon the feet. There is no vice that doth so cover a man with shame as to be found false and perfidious. And therefore Montaigne saith prettily, when he inquired the reason why the word of the lie should be such a disgrace, and such an odious charge, saith he, "If it be well weighed, to say that a man lieth is as much to say as that he is brave towards God and a coward towards men."<sup>6</sup> For a lie faces God, and shrinks from man. Surely the wickedness of falsehood and breach of faith cannot possibly be so highly expressed, as in that it shall be the last peal to call the judgments of God upon the generations of men, it being foretold that when Christ cometh, he shall not "find faith upon the earth."<sup>7</sup>

Of Marriage and Single Life

He that hath wife and children hath given hostages to fortune; for they are impediments to great enterprises, either of virtue or mischief. Certainly the best works, and of greatest merit for the public, have proceeded from the unmarried or childless men, which both in affection and means have married and endowed the public. Yet it were great reason that those that have children should have greatest care of future times, unto which they know they must transmit their dearest pledges. Some there are who, though they lead a single life, yet their thoughts do end with themselves, and account future times impertinences.<sup>1</sup> Nay, there are some other that account wife and children but as bills of charges. Nay more, there are some foolish rich covetous men that take a pride in having no children, because they may be thought so much the richer. For perhaps they have heard some talk, "Such an one is a great rich man," and another except to it, "Yea, but he hath a great charge of children"; as if it were an abatement to his riches. But the most ordinary cause of a single life is liberty, especially in certain self-pleasing and humorous<sup>2</sup> minds, which are so sensible of every restraint, as they will go near to think their girdles and garters to be bonds and shackles. Unmarried men are best friends, best masters, best servants, but not always best subjects, for they are light to run away, and almost all fugitives are of that condition. A single life doth well with churchmen, for charity will hardly water the ground where it must first fill a pool. It is indifferent for judges and magistrates, for if they be facile<sup>3</sup> and corrupt, you shall have a servant five times worse than a wife. For soldiers, I find the generals commonly in their hortatives<sup>4</sup> put men in mind of their wives and children; and I think the despising of marriage amongst the Turks maketh the vulgar soldier more base. Certainly wife and children are a kind of discipline of humanity; and single men, though they be many times more charitable, because their means are less exhaust,<sup>5</sup> yet, on the other side, they are more cruel and hardhearted (good to make severe inquisitors), because their tenderness is not so oft called upon. Grave natures, led by custom, and therefore constant, are commonly loving husbands, as was said of Ulysses, Vetulam suam praetulit immortalitati.<sup>6</sup> Chaste women are often proud and froward,<sup>7</sup> as presuming upon the merit of their chastity. It is one of the best bonds, both of chastity and obedience, in the wife if she think her husband wise, which she will never do if she find him jealous. Wives are young men's mistresses, companions for middle age, and old men's nurses; so as a man may have a quarrel<sup>8</sup> to marry when he will. But yet he was reputed one of the wise men that made answer to the question when a man should marry: "A young man not yet, an elder man not at all."<sup>9</sup> It is often seen that bad husbands have very good wives; whether it be that it raiseth the price of their husbands' kindness when it comes, or that the wives take a pride in their patience. But this never fails, if the bad husbands were of their own choosing, against their friends' consent; for then they will be sure to make good their own folly.

Of Great Place

Men in great place are thrice servants: servants of the sovereign or state, servants of fame, and servants of business. So as they have no freedom, neither in their persons, nor in their actions, nor in their times. It is a strange desire, to seek power and to lose liberty, or to seek power over others and to lose power over a man's self. The rising unto place is laborious, and by pains men come to greater pains; and it is sometimes base, and by indignities men come to dignities. The standing is slippery, and the regress is either a downfall or at least an eclipse, which is a melancholy thing: Cum non sis quifueris, non esse cur velis vivere.<sup>1</sup> Nay, retire men cannot when they would, neither will they when it were reason; but are impatient of privateness, even in age and sickness, which require the shadow;<sup>2</sup> like old townsmen, that will be still sitting at their street door, though thereby they offer age to scorn. Certainly great persons had need to borrow other men's opinions to think themselves happy; for if they judge by their own feeling, they cannot find it; but if they think with themselves what other men think of them, and that other men would fain be as they are, then they are happy, as it were by report; when perhaps they find the contrary within. For they are the first that find their own griefs, though they be the last that find their own faults. Certainly men in great fortunes are strangers to themselves, and while they are in the puzzle of business they have no time to tend their health, either of body or mind. IHi mors gravis incubat, qui notus nimis omnibus, ignotus moritur sibi.<sup>3</sup> In place there is license to do good and evil, whereof the latter is a curse; for in evil the best condition is not to will, the second not to can.<sup>4</sup> But power to do good is the true and lawful end of aspiring; for good thoughts (though God accept them) yet towards men are little better than good dreams, except they be put in act; and that cannot be without power and place, as the vantage and commanding ground. Merit and good works is the end of man's motion, and conscience<sup>5</sup> of the same is the accomplishment of man's rest; for if a man can be partaker of God's theater,<sup>6</sup> he shall likewise be partaker of God's rest. Et conversus Deus, ut aspiceret opera quae fecerunt manus suae, vidit quod omnia essent bona nimis;<sup>7</sup> and then the Sabbath.

In the discharge of thy place set before thee the best examples, for imitation is a globe<sup>8</sup> of precepts. And after a time set before thee thine own example; and examine thyself strictly, whether thou didst not best at first. Neglect not also the examples of those that have carried themselves ill in the same place; not to set off thyself by taxing<sup>9</sup> their memory, but to direct thyself what to avoid. Reform, therefore, without bravery, or scandal<sup>1</sup> of former times and persons; but yet set it down to thyself, as well to create good precedents as to follow them. Reduce things to the first institution,<sup>2</sup> and observe wherein and how they have degenerate; but yet ask counsel of both times; of the ancient time what is best, and of the latter time what is fittest. Seek to make thy course regular, that men may know beforehand what they may expect; but be not too positive and peremptory, and express thyself well when thou digressest from thy rule. Preserve the right of thy place, but stir not questions of jurisdiction; and rather assume thy right in silence and de facto,<sup>3</sup> than voice it with claims and challenges. Preserve likewise the rights of inferior places, and think it more honor to direct in chief than to be busy in all. Embrace and invite helps and advices touching the execution of thy place, and do not drive away such as bring thee information as meddlers, but accept of them in good part. The vices of authority are chiefly four: delays, corruption, roughness, and facility.<sup>4</sup> For delays, give easy access, keep times appointed, go through with that which is in hand, and interlace not business<sup>5</sup> but of necessity. For corruption, do not only bind thine own hands or thy servants' hands from taking, but bind the hands of suitors also from offering. For integrity used doth the one; but integrity professed, and with a manifest detestation of bribery, doth the other. And avoid not only the fault, but the suspicion. Whosoever is found variable and changeth manifestly, without manifest cause, giveth suspicion of corruption.

Therefore, always when thou changest thine opinion or course, profess it plainly and declare it, together with the reasons that move thee to change; and do not think to steal it.<sup>6</sup> A servant or a favorite, if he be inward,<sup>7</sup> and no other apparent cause of esteem, is commonly thought but a byway to close<sup>8</sup> corruption. For roughness, it is a needless cause of discontent; severity breedeth fear, but roughness breedeth hate. Even reproofs from authority ought to be grave, and not taunting. As for facility, it is worse than bribery; for bribes come but now and then, but if importunity or idle respects<sup>9</sup> lead a man, he shall never be without. As Solomon saith, "To respect persons is not good, for such a man will transgress for a piece of bread."<sup>1</sup>

It is most true that was anciently spoken, "A place showeth the man"; and it showeth some to the better and some to the worse. Omnium consensu capax imperii, nisi imperasset,<sup>2</sup> saith Tacitus of Galba; but of Vespasian he saith, Solus imperantium Vespasianus mutatus in melius.<sup>3</sup> though the one was meant of sufficiency, the other of manners and affection. It is an assured sign of a worthy and generous spirit, whom honor amends.<sup>4</sup> For honor is, or should be, the place of virtue; and as in nature things move violently to their place and calmly in their place, so virtue in ambition is violent, in authority settled and calm. All rising to great place is by a winding stair; and if there be factions, it is good to side a man's self<sup>5</sup> whilst he is in the rising, and to balance himself when he is placed. Use the memory of thy predecessor fairly and tenderly; for if thou dost not, it is a debt will sure be paid when thou art gone. If thou have colleagues, respect them, and rather call them when they look not for it, than exclude them when they have reason to look to be called. Be not too sensible<sup>6</sup> or too remembering of thy place in conversation and private answers to suitors; but let it rather be said, "When he sits in place he is another man."

Of Superstition<sup>1</sup>

It were better to have no opinion of God at all than such an opinion as is unworthy of him. For the one is unbelief, the other is contumely:<sup>2</sup> and certainly superstition is the reproach of the deity. Plutarch saith well to that purpose: "Surely" (saith he) "I had rather a great deal men should say there was no such man at all as Plutarch, than that they should say that there was one Plutarch that would eat his children as soon as they were born"—as the poets speak of Saturn.<sup>3</sup> And as the contumely is greater towards God, so the danger is greater towards men. Atheism leaves a man to sense, to philosophy, to natural piety, to laws, to reputation, all which may be guides to an outward moral virtue, though religion were not. But superstition dismounts all these, and erecteth an absolute monarchy in the minds of men. Therefore atheism did never perturb states, for it makes men wary of themselves as looking no further;<sup>4</sup> and we see the times inclined to atheism (as the time of Augustus Caesar) were civil times. But superstition hath been the confusion of many states, and bringeth in a new primum mobile, that ravisheth all the spheres of government.<sup>5</sup> The master of superstition is the people, and in all superstition wise men follow fools, and arguments are fitted to practice in a reversed order. It was gravely said by some of the prelates in the council of Trent, where the doctrine of the schoolmen bare great sway, that the schoolmen were like astronomers, which did feign eccentrics and epicycles and such engines of orbs to save the phenomena, though they knew there were no such things;<sup>6</sup> and in like manner that the schoolmen had framed a number of subtle and intricate axioms and theorems to save the practice of the church.

The causes of superstition are: pleasing and sensual rites and ceremonies; excess of outward and pharisaical holiness;<sup>7</sup> overgreat reverence of traditions, which cannot but load the church; the stratagems of prelates for their own ambition and lucre; the favoring too much of good intentions, which openeth the gate to conceits<sup>8</sup> and novelties; the taking an aim at divine matters by human, which cannot but breed mixture of imaginations; and lastly barbarous times, especially joined with calamities and disasters. Superstition without a veil is a deformed thing, for as it addeth deformity to an ape to be so like a man, so the similitude of superstition to religion makes it the more deformed. And as wholesome meat corrupteth to little worms, so good forms and orders corrupt into a number of petty observances. There is a superstition in avoiding superstition, when men think to do best if they go furthest from the superstition formerly received; therefore care would be had that (as it fareth in ill purgings) the good be not taken away with the bad, which commonly is done when the people is the reformer.<sup>9</sup>

Of Plantations<sup>1</sup>

Plantations are amongst ancient, primitive, and heroical works. When the world was young it beget more children; but now it is old it begets fewer: for I may justly account new plantations to be the children of former kingdoms.

4. I.e., not looking beyond their own personal lifetimes. The rule of Augustus Caesar (following) was marked by general peace and civil quiet (i.e., civilized). In this period of Roman history, many members of the elite no longer believed in the pagan gods, though they participated in the forms of state religion.

5. The prime mover (primum mobile) was supposed to control the motions of the other heavenly spheres; superstition is a second (and contrary) mover.

6. "Save the phenomena" means "explain appearances," as did the elaborate theories of pre-Copernican astronomers (epicycles, trepidation, and such concepts). So with the Scholastic philosophers ("schoolmen").

7. The Pharisees were the strict party among the Jews of Christ's time; they taught precise observance of the letter of Mosaic law.

9. The final sentence is directed against Puritan reformers, who loathed ceremonies, traditions, liturgy, and images, which they considered "superstitions."

1. The planting of colonies had been a standard topic of political theory since Plato, with attention focused on such matters as the choice of site, the best mix of population, and the treatment of indigenous peoples. Sir Thomas More considered the matter in his Utopia, and it took on increased practical importance in the narratives of English explorers such as Sir Walter Raleigh, and especially in the early 17th century, with the establishment of the first permanent English settlements in the New World. Bacon's essay largely avoids the most acute moral issues English colonization was pos-

I like a plantation in a pure soil; that is, where people are not displaced to the end to plant in others. For else it is rather an extirpation than a plantation. Planting of countries is like planting of woods; for you must make account to leese<sup>2</sup> almost twenty years profit, and expect your recompense in the end. For the principal thing that hath been the destruction of most plantations hath been the base and hasty drawing of profit in the first years. It is true, speedy profit is not to be neglected, as far as may stand<sup>3</sup> with the good of the plantation, but no further. It is a shameful and unblessed thing to take the scum of people, and wicked condemned men, to be the people with whom you plant; and not only so, but it spoileth the plantation, for they will ever live like rogues, and not fall to work, but be lazy, and do mischief, and spend victuals, and be quickly weary, and then certify over<sup>4</sup> to their country, to the discredit of the plantation. The people wherewith you plant ought to be gardeners, plowmen, laborers, smiths, carpenters, joiners,<sup>5</sup> fishermen, fowlers, with some few apothecaries, surgeons, cooks, and bakers.

In a country of plantation, first look about what kind of victual the country yields of itself to hand, as chestnuts, walnuts, pineapples, olives, dates, plums, cherries, wild honey, and the like, and make use of them. Then consider what victual or esculent<sup>6</sup> things there are which grow speedily and within the year, as parsnips, carrots, turnips, onions, radish, artichokes of Jerusalem,<sup>7</sup> maize, and the like. For wheat, barley, and oats, they ask<sup>8</sup> too much labor; but with peas and beans you may begin, both because they ask less labor and because they serve for meat<sup>9</sup> as well as for bread. And of rice likewise cometh a great increase, and it is a kind of meat. Above all, there ought to be brought store of biscuit, oatmeal, flour, meal, and the like in the beginning, till bread may be had. For beasts or birds, take chiefly such as are least subject to diseases, and multiply fastest, as swine, goats, cocks, hens, turkeys, geese, house doves, and the like. The victual in plantations ought to be expended almost as in a besieged town; that is, with certain<sup>1</sup> allowance. And let the main part of the ground employed to gardens or corn be to<sup>2</sup> a common stock, and to be laid in and stored up and then delivered out in proportion; besides some spots of ground that any particular person will manure<sup>3</sup> for his own private. Consider likewise what commodities the soil where the plantation is doth naturally yield, that they may some way help to defray the charge of the plantation (so it be not, as was said, to the untimely prejudice of the main business), as it hath fared with tobacco in Virginia. Wood commonly aboundeth but too much, and therefore timber is fit to be one. If there be iron ore and streams whereupon to set the mills, iron is a brave commodity, where wood aboundeth.<sup>4</sup> Making of bay-salt, if the climate be proper for it, would be put in experience.<sup>5</sup> Growing silk likewise, if any be, is a likely commodity. Pitch and tar, where store of firs and pines are, will not fail; so drugs and sweet woods, where they are, cannot but yield great profit. Soap ashes likewise, and other things that may be thought of. But moil<sup>6</sup> not too much underground, for the hope of mines is very uncertain, and useth to make the planters lazy in other things.

For government, let it be in the hands of one, assisted with some counsel; and let them have commission to exercise martial laws, with some limitation. And above all, let men make that profit of being in the wilderness, as they have God always, and his service, before their eyes. Let not the government of the plantation depend upon too many counselors and undertakers<sup>7</sup> in the country that planteth, but upon a temperate number; and let those be rather noblemen and gentlemen than merchants, for they look ever to the present gain. Let there be freedoms from custom<sup>8</sup> till the plantation be of strength; and not only freedom from custom, but freedom to carry their commodities where they may make their best of them, except there be some special cause of caution. Cram not in people by sending too fast, company after company, but rather harken how they waste,<sup>9</sup> and send supplies proportionably, but so as the number may live well in the plantation, and not by surcharge<sup>1</sup> be in penury.

It hath been a great endangering to the health of some plantations, that they have built along the sea and rivers, in marish<sup>2</sup> and unwholesome grounds. Therefore, though you begin there, to avoid carriage and other like commodities,<sup>3</sup> yet build still rather upwards from the streams than along. It concerneth likewise the health of the plantation that they have good store of salt with them, that they may use it in their victuals when it shall be necessary. If you plant where savages are, do not only entertain them with trifles and jingles, but use them justly and graciously, with sufficient guard nevertheless; and do not win their favor by helping them to invade their enemies, but for their defense it is not amiss. And send oft of them over to the country that plants, that they may see a better condition than their own, and commend it when they return. When the plantation grows to strength, then it is time to plant with women as well as with men, that the plantation may spread into generations and not be ever pieced from without. It is the sinfullest thing in the world to forsake or destitute a plantation once in forwardness; for besides the dishonor it is the guiltiness of blood of many commiserable<sup>4</sup> persons.

Of Negotiating

It is generally better to deal by speech than by letter, and by the mediation of a third than by a man's self. Letters are good when a man would draw an answer by letter back again, or when it may serve for a man's justification afterwards to produce his own letter, or where it may be danger to be interrupted or heard by pieces. To deal in person is good when a man's face breedeth regard, as commonly with inferiors, or in tender<sup>1</sup> cases, where a man's eye upon the countenance of him with whom he speaketh may give him a direction how far to go; and generally, where a man will reserve to himself liberty either to disavow or to expound. In choice of instruments, it is better to choose men of a plainer sort, that are like to do that that is committed to them, and to report back again faithfully the success,<sup>2</sup> than those that are cunning to contrive out of other men's business somewhat to grace themselves, and will help the matter in report for satisfaction sake. Use also such persons as affect<sup>3</sup> the business wherein they are employed, for that quickeneth much; and such as are fit for the matter, as bold men for expostulation, fair-spoken men for persuasion, crafty men for inquiry and observation, froward and absurd men for business that doth not well bear out itself.<sup>4</sup> Use also such as have been lucky, and prevailed before in things wherein you have employed them; for that breeds confidence, and they will strive to maintain their prescription.<sup>5</sup> It is better to sound a person with whom one deals afar off, than to fall upon the point at first, except you mean to surprise him by some short question. It is better dealing with men in appetite,<sup>6</sup> than with those that are where they would be. If a man deal with another upon conditions, the start or first performance is all, which a man cannot reasonably demand,<sup>7</sup> except either the nature of the thing be such which must go before, or else a man can persuade the other party that he shall still need him in some other thing, or else that he be counted the honestest man. All practice is to discover or to work.<sup>8</sup> Men discover themselves in trust, in passion, at unawares, and of necessity, when they would have somewhat done and cannot find an apt pretext. If you would work any man, you must either know his nature and fashions, and so lead him; or his ends, and so persuade him; or his weakness and disadvantages, and so awe him; or those that have interest in him, and so govern him. In dealing with cunning persons, we must ever consider their ends, to interpret their speeches; and it is good to say little to them, and that which they least look for. In all negotiations of difficulty, a man may not look to sow and reap at once, but must prepare business, and so ripen it by degrees.

Of Masques and Triumphs<sup>1</sup>

These things are but toys to come amongst such serious observations; but yet, since princes will have such things, it is better they should be graced with elegancy, than daubed with cost. Dancing to song is a thing of great state and pleasure. I understand it that the song be in choir, placed aloft, and accompanied with some broken music,<sup>2</sup> and the ditty fitted to the device. Acting in song, especially in dialogues, hath an extreme good grace; I say acting, not dancing (for that is a mean and vulgar thing);<sup>3</sup> and the voices of the dialogue would be strong and manly (a bass and tenor, no treble), and the ditty high and tragical, not nice or dainty. Several choirs, placed one over against another, and taking the voices by catches anthem-wise, give great pleasure. Turning dances into figure<sup>4</sup> is a childish curiosity; and, generally, let it be noted, that those things which I here set down are such as to naturally take the sense, and not respect petty wonderments. It is true, the alterations of scenes, so it be quietly and without noise, are things of great beauty and pleasure for they feed and relieve the eye before it be full of the same object. Let the scenes abound with light, specially colored and varied; and let the masquers, or any other that are to come down from the scene,<sup>5</sup> have some motions upon the scene itself before their coming down; for it draws the eye strangely, and makes it with great pleasure to desire to see that it cannot perfectly discern. Let the songs be loud and cheerful, and not chirpings or pulings; let the music, likewise, be sharp and loud, and well placed. The colors that show best by candlelight<sup>6</sup> are white, carnation, and a kind of seawater green; and oes or spangs,<sup>7</sup> as they are of no great cost, so they are of most glory. As for rich embroidery, it is lost and not discerned. Let the suits of the masquers be graceful, and such as become the person when the vizors are off; not after examples of known attires, Turks, soldiers, mariners, and the like. Let antimasques<sup>8</sup> not be long; they have been commonly of fools, satyrs, baboons, wild men, antics, beasts, sprites, witches, Ethiopes, pigmies, turquets,<sup>9</sup> nymphs, rustics, Cupids, statues moving, and the like. As for angels, it is not comical enough to put them in antimasques; and anything that is hideous, as devils, giants, is, on the other side, as unfit; but, chiefly, let the music of them be recreative, and with some strange changes. Some sweet odors suddenly coming forth, without any drops falling, are, in such a company as there is steam and heat, things of great pleasure and refreshment. Double masques, one of men, another of ladies, addeth state and variety; but all is nothing, except the room be kept clear and neat.

For jousts, and tourneys, and barriers,<sup>1</sup> the glories of them are chiefly in the chariots, wherein the challengers make their entry; especially if they be drawn with strange beasts, as lions, bears, camels, and the like; or in the devices of their entrance, or in the bravery of their liveries, or in the goodly furniture of their horses and armor. But enough of these toys.

Their chief use for delight is in privateness<sup>1</sup> and retiring; for ornament, is in discourse; and for ability, is in the judgment and disposition of business. For expert men<sup>2</sup> can execute, and perhaps judge of particulars, one by one; but the general counsels, and the plots and marshaling of affairs, come best from those that are learned. To spend too much time in studies is sloth; to use them too much for ornament is affectation; to make judgment wholly by their rules is the humor<sup>3</sup> of a scholar. ### From The Advancement of Learning

[THE ABUSES OF LANGUAGE]<sup>1</sup>

Martin Luther, conducted (no doubt) by an higher providence, but in discourse of reason finding what a province he had undertaken against the bishop of Rome<sup>2</sup> and the degenerate traditions of the church, and finding his own solitude being no ways aided by the opinions of his own time, was enforced to awake all antiquity and to call former times to his succor to make a party against the present time, so that the ancient authors both in divinity and in humanity which had long time slept in libraries began generally to be read and revolved.<sup>3</sup> This by consequence did draw on a necessity of a more exquisite travail in the languages original wherein those authors did write,<sup>4</sup> for the better understanding of those authors and the better advantage of pressing and applying their words. And thereof grew again a delight in their manner of style and phrase, and an admiration of that kind of writing, which was much furthered and precipitated by the enmity and opposition that the propounders of those (primitive but seeming new) opinions had against the schoolmen, who were generally of the contrary part, and whose writings were altogether in a differing style and form, taking liberty to coin and frame new terms of art to express their own sense and to avoid circuit of speech, without regard to the pureness, pleasantness, and (as I may call it) lawfulness of the phrase or word.<sup>5</sup> And

2. Science. "Moral" (following): i.e., moral philosophy.

3. "Studies culminate in manners" (Ovid, Heroides). "Stond" (following): stoppage.

4. Gallstone and kidneys.

5. "Dividers of cuminsseed," i.e., hairsplitters. "Schoolmen": Scholastic philosophers.

6. Discuss a subject thoroughly.

7. Cure, prescription.

1. Among the "three distempers of learning" that Bacon proposes to cure in this work, the most important involves "vain imaginations, vain alterations, and vain affectations"; to help explain these he offers a concise history of changes in the language of learned discourse since the Reformation.

2. The pope. "Province": task.

3. Considered. Luther (1483-1546) indeed looked back to the original languages of the Bible and to ancient authors in "divinity" (chiefly Augustine), but he was not involved in the efforts of the humanists (including Erasmus and Sir Thomas More) to revive the classical languages and authors.

4. Classical Greek and Latin, and biblical Hebrew. "Exquisite travail": careful work.

5. The Scholastic philosophers ("schoolmen") used the living Latin of the Middle Ages, wrenching the language yet further from classical norms in applying it to subtle philosophical matters; the humanists denounced the Scholastics' Latin as again, because the greatest labor then was with the people (of whom the Pharisees were wont to say, Execrabilis ista turba, quae non novit legem,<sup>6</sup>) for the winning and persuading of them there grew of necessity in chief price and request<sup>7</sup> eloquence and variety of discourse, as the fittest and forciblest access into the capacity of the vulgar sort. So that these four causes concurring (the admiration of ancient authors, the hate of the schoolmen, the exact study of languages, and the efficacy of preaching) did bring in an affectionate study of eloquence and copy<sup>8</sup> of speech, which then began to flourish. This grew speedily to an excess, for men began to hunt more after words than matter, and more after the choiceness of the phrase, and the round and clean composition of the sentence, and the sweet falling of the clauses, and the varying and illustration of their works with tropes and figures<sup>9</sup> than after the weight of matter, worth of subject, soundness of argument, life of invention, or depth of judgment. Then grew the flowing and watery vein of Osorius, the Portugal bishop, to be in price. Then did Sturmius spend such infinite and curious pains upon Cicero the orator and Hermogenes the rhetorician, besides his own books of periods and imitation and the like.' Then did Carr of Cambridge and Ascham with their lectures and writings almost deify Cicero and Demosthenes, and allure all young men that were studious unto that delicate and polished kind of learning.<sup>2</sup> Then did Erasmus take occasion to make the scoffing echo, Decern annos consumpsi in legendo Cicerone, and the echo answered in Greek, one, Asine Then grew the learning of the schoolmen to be utterly despised as barbarous. In sum, the whole inclination and bent of those times was rather towards copy than weight.

Here therefore is the first distemper of learning, when men study words and not matter, whereof though I have represented an example of late times, yet it hath been and will be secundum maius et minus<sup>4</sup> in all time. And how is it possible but this should have an operation to discredit learning, even with vulgar capacities, when they see learned men's works like the first letter of a patent or limned<sup>5</sup> book, which though it hath large flourishes, yet it is but a letter? It seems to me that Pygmalion's frenzy<sup>6</sup> is a good emblem or portraiture of this vanity, for words are but the images of matter, and except they have life of reason and invention, to fall in love with them is all one as to fall in love with a picture.

But yet notwithstanding, it is a thing not hastily to be condemned to clothe and adorn the obscurity even of philosophy itself with sensible and plausible elocation. For hereof we have great examples in Xenophon, Cicero, Seneca, Plutarch, and of Plato also in some degree; and hereof likewise there is great use, for surely to the severe inquisition of truth and the deep progress into barbarous and sought instead to imitate classical models, especially Cicero.

6. "This people who knoweth not the law are cursed" (John 7.49).

7. Worth and demand.

8. Copiousness. "Affectionate": affected.

9. Figurative language.

1. Jeronimo Osorio (1506-1580) wrote a history of Portuguese conquests in a flowing style that caused him to be known as "the Portuguese Cicero." His contemporary, Johann Sturm, edited texts of Cicero and the Greek rhetorician Hermogenes; his "book of periods" was a rhetorical handbook.

2. Nicholas Carr was professor of Greek at Cambridge; Roger Ascham was tutor to Queen Elizabeth and author of The Schoolmaster. Both admired the rhetorical polish of the Roman orator Cicero and the Greek orator Demosthenes.

3. "I spent ten years in reading Cicero." Echo answers, "Ass!" The joke is in the Colloquies of Erasmus.

4. More or less, depending on circumstances.

5. Illuminated, i.e., illustrated, as with elaborate initial capitals. Royal grants ("patents") were also engrossed with fancy initial letters.

6. Pygmalion's "frenzy" (delirium) was to fall in love with a statue he had carved of a beautiful woman.

philosophy it is some hindrance, because it is too early satisfactory to the mind of man, and quencheth the desire of further search before we come to a just period; but then if a man be to have any use of such knowledge in civil occasions of conference, counsel, persuasion, discourse, or the like, then shall he find it prepared to his hands in those authors which write in that manner. But the excess of this is so justly contemptible that as Hercules, when he saw the image of Adonis, Venus' minion, in a temple, said in disdain, Nil sacri es;<sup>7</sup> so there is none of Hercules' followers in learning, that is, the more severe and laborious sort of inquirers into truth,<sup>8</sup> but will despise those delicacies and affectations as indeed capable of no divineness.

There are and can be only two ways of searching into and discovering truth. The one flies from the senses and particulars to the most general axioms, and from these principles, the truth of which it takes for settled and immovable, proceeds to judgment and to the discovery of middle axioms.<sup>2</sup> And this way is now in fashion. The other derives from the senses and particulars, rising by a gradual and unbroken ascent, so that it arrives at the most general axioms last of all.<sup>3</sup> This is the true way, but as yet untried.

22

Both ways set out from the senses and particulars, and rest in the highest generalities, but the difference between them is infinite. For the one just glances at experiment and particulars in passing, the other dwells duly and orderly among them. The one, again, begins at once by establishing certain abstract and useless generalities, the other rises by gradual steps to that which is prior and better known in the order of nature.

38

The idols and false notions which are now in possession of the human understanding and have taken deep root therein, not only so beset men's minds that truth can hardly find entrance, but even after entrance is obtained, they will again in the very instauration<sup>4</sup> of the sciences meet and trouble us, unless

7. "You're nothing holy." Adonis was the lover ("minion") of Venus, deified after his death while boar hunting.

8. Hercules early in life was offered a choice between a life of ignoble ease and sensory delights and one of strenuous virtue. He chose the latter, and so do his followers in learning.

1. Novum Organum, or "The New Instrument of Learning," was written not in English but in Latin, for an international scholarly audience. Nonetheless it requires our attention here, as it is the keystone of Bacon's vast project to reform the structure of human learning from the ground up. His reform called for careful observation of all aspects of nature and controlled experiment, but the first part of the book analyzes the stumbling blocks in the way—among them, famously, the various "idols," or delusive images of truth that lead people away from the exact knowledge of science.

2. The deductive method, associated with Aristotle and the Scholastic philosophers.

4. Renovation, renewal.

men being forewarned of the danger fortify themselves as far as may be against their assaults.

41

The Idols of the Tribe have their foundation in human nature itself, and in the tribe or race of men. For it is a false assertion that the sense of man is the measure of things. On the contrary, all perceptions as well of the sense as of the mind are according to the measure of the individual and not according to the measure of the universe. And the human understanding is like a false mirror, which, receiving rays irregularly, distorts and discolors the nature of things by mingling its own nature with it.

42

The Idols of the Cave are the idols of the individual man. For everyone (besides the errors common to human nature in general) has a cave or den of his own, which refracts and discolors the light of nature, owing either to his own proper and peculiar nature, or to his education and conversation with others, or to the reading of books, and the authority of those whom he esteems and admires; or to the difference of impressions, accordingly as they take place in a mind preoccupied and predisposed or in a mind indifferent and settled, or the like. So that the spirit of man (according as it is meted out to different individuals) is in fact a thing variable and full of perturbation, and governed as it were by chance. Whence it was well observed by Heraclitus<sup>5</sup> that men look for sciences in their own lesser worlds, and not in the greater or common world.

43

There are also idols formed by the intercourse and association of men with each other, which I call Idols of the Marketplace, on account of the commerce and consort of men there. For it is by discourse that men associate, and words are imposed according to the apprehension of the vulgar. And therefore the fit and unfit choice of words wonderfully obstructs the understanding. Nor do the definitions or explanations wherewith in some things learned men are wont to guard and defend themselves, by any means set the matter right. But words plainly force and overrule the understanding, and throw all into confusion, and lead men away into numberless empty controversies and idle fancies.

44

Lastly, there are idols which have immigrated into men's minds from the various dogmas of philosophies, and also from wrong laws of demonstration. These I call Idols of the Theater, because in my judgment all the received systems are but so many stage plays, representing worlds of their own creation after an unreal and scenic fashion. Nor is it only of the systems now in vogue or only of the ancient sects and philosophies that I speak; for many more plays of the same kind may yet be composed and in like artificial manner set forth, seeing that errors the most widely different have nevertheless causes for the most part alike. Neither again do I mean this only of entire systems, but also of the many principles and axioms in science, which by tradition, credulity, and negligence have come to be received.

59

But the Idols of the Marketplace are the most troublesome of all: idols which have crept into the understanding through the alliances of words and names. For men believe that their reason governs words; but it is also true that words react on the understanding; and this it is that has rendered philosophy and the sciences sophistical and inactive. Now words, being commonly framed and applied according to the capacity of the vulgar, follow those lines of division which are most obvious to the vulgar understanding. And whenever an understanding of greater acuteness or a more diligent observation would alter those lines to suit the true divisions of nature, words stand in the way and resist the change. Whence it comes to pass that the high and formal discussions of learned men end oftentimes in disputes about words and names; with which (according to the use<sup>6</sup> and wisdom of the mathematicians) it would be more prudent to begin, and so by means of definitions reduce them to order. Yet even definitions cannot cure this evil in dealing with natural and material things; since the definitions themselves consist of words, and those words beget others;<sup>7</sup> so that it is necessary to recur to individual instances, and those in due series and order; as I shall say presently when I come to the method and scheme for the formation of notions and axioms.

60

The idols imposed by words on the understanding are of two kinds. They are either names of things which do not exist (for as there are things left unnamed through lack of observation, so likewise are there names which result from fantastic suppositions and to which nothing in reality corresponds), or they are names of things which exist, but yet confused and ill-defined, and hastily and irregularly derived from realities. Of the former kind are Fortune, the Prime Mover, Planetary Orbits, Element of Fire, and like fictions which owe their origin to false and idle theories.<sup>8</sup> And this class of idols is more easily expelled, because to get rid of them it is only necessary that all theories should be steadily rejected and dismissed as obsolete.<sup>9</sup>

But the other class, which springs out of a faulty and unskillful abstraction, is intricate and deeply rooted. Let us take for example such a word as humid-, and see how far the several things which the word is used to signify agree with

6. Custom.

7. Bacon's mistrust of words helped to prompt the Royal Society (founded in 1645) to cultivate a plain, stripped prose style for purposes of scientific communication.

8. The "Prime Mover" was a transparent sphere on the outside of the universe, supposed to move all the other spheres; the "Element of Fire" was an area of pure, invisible fire, supposed to exist above the atmosphere. By "Planetary Orbits" Bacon may be referring to the old notion of crystalline spheres in which the planets were supposed to be set. Obviously, these concepts could be based on no observation.

9. Bacon does not mean "theories" in the inclusive modern sense, but "abstractions loosely invoked to explain particular facts."

each other; and we shall find the word humid to be nothing else than a mark loosely and confusedly applied to denote a variety of actions which will not bear to be reduced to any constant meaning. For it both signifies that which easily spreads itself round any other body; and that which in itself is indeterminate and cannot solidize; and that which readily yields in every direction; and that which easily divides and scatters itself; and that which easily unites and collects itself; and that which readily flows and is put in motion; and that which readily clings to another body and wets it; and that which is easily reduced to a liquid, or being solid easily melts. Accordingly when you come to apply the word—if you take it in one sense, flame is humid; if in another, air is not humid; if in another, fine dust is humid; if in another, glass is humid. So that it is easy to see that the notion is taken by abstraction only from water and common and ordinary liquids, without any due verification.

There are however in words certain degrees of distortion and error. One of the least faulty kinds is that of names of substances, especially of lowest species and well-deduced (for the notion of chalk and of mud is good, of earth bad); a more faulty kind is that of actions, as to generate, to corrupt, to alter; the most faulty is of qualities (except such as are the immediate objects of the sense), as heavy, light, rare, dense, and the like. Yet in all these cases some notions are of necessity a little better than others, in proportion to the greater variety of subjects that fall within the range of the human sense.

62

Idols of the Theater, or of systems, are many, and there can be and perhaps will be yet many more. For were it not that now for many ages men's minds have been busied with religion and theology; and were it not that civil governments, especially monarchies, have been averse to such novelties, even in matters speculative, so that men labor therein to the peril and harming of their fortunes, not only unrewarded, but exposed also to contempt and envy; doubtless there would have arisen many other philosophical sects like to those which in great variety flourished once among the Greeks. For as on the phenomena of the heavens many hypotheses may be constructed, so likewise (and more also) many various dogmas may be set up and established on the phenomena of philosophy. And in the plays of this philosophical theater you may observe the same thing which is found in the theater of the poets, that stories invented for the stage are more compact and elegant, and more as one would wish them to be, than true stories out of history.

In general, however, there is taken for the material of philosophy either a great deal out of a few things, or a very little out of many things; so that on both sides philosophy is based on too narrow a foundation of experiment and natural history, and decides on the authority of too few cases. For the rational school of philosophers snatches from experience a variety of common instances, neither duly ascertained nor diligently examined and weighed, and leaves all the rest to meditation and agitation of wit.<sup>1</sup>

There is also another class of philosophers, who having bestowed much diligent and careful labor on a few experiments, have thence made bold to educate and construct systems; wresting all other facts in a strange fashion to conformity therewith.

1. Bacon's enthusiasm for experiment at times led him to denigrate the value of reason, but what he chiefly opposes here is the excessive concern with logic he finds in the Scholastic philosophers.

And there is yet a third class, consisting of those who out of faith and veneration mix their philosophy with theology and traditions; among whom the vanity of some has gone so far aside as to seek the origin of sciences among spirits and genii. So that this parent stock of errors—this false philosophy is of three kinds: the sophistical, the empirical, and the superstitious.

s s s

So much concerning the several classes of idols, and their equipage: all of which must be renounced and put away with a fixed and solemn determination, and the understanding thoroughly freed and cleansed; the entrance into the kingdom of man, founded on the sciences, being not much other than the entrance into the kingdom of heaven, whereinto none may enter except as a little child.

[SOLOMON'S HOUSE]

We came at our day and hour, and I was chosen by my fellows for the private access.<sup>2</sup> We found him in a fair chamber, richly hanged, and carpeted under foot, without any degrees to the state.<sup>3</sup> He was set upon a low throne richly adorned, and a rich cloth of state over his head, of blue satin embroidered. He was alone, save that he had two pages of honor, on either hand one, finely attired in white. His undergarments were the like that we saw him wear in the chariot;<sup>4</sup> but instead of his gown, he had on him a mantle with a cape of the same fine black, fastened about him. When we came in, as we were taught, we bowed low at our first entrance, and when we were come near his chair, he stood up, holding forth his hand ungloved and in posture of blessing; and we every one of us stooped down, and kissed the hem of his tippet.<sup>5</sup> That done, the rest departed, and I remained. Then he warned the pages forth of the room, and caused me to sit down beside him, and spake to me thus in the Spanish tongue:

"God bless thee, my son; I will give thee the greatest jewel I have. For I will impart unto thee, for the love of God and men, a relation of the true state of

1. Thomas More's Utopia (1516) set a fashion for accounts of imaginary communities with more or less ideal forms of government. Bacon's imaginary community has at its center an account of a research establishment, Solomon's House, that could exist in any society; indeed a version of it was established in England in 1662 as the Royal Society. Bacon's title alludes to the legendary island and ideal commonwealth in the Atlantic Ocean described by Plato in Critias; in the 17th century it was sometimes located in the New World. Bacon places his island, Bensalem, in the Pacific, roughly where the Solomon Islands had been discovered in Solomon's House. Son, to make you know the true state of Solomon's House, I will keep this order. First, I will set forth unto you the end of our foundation. Secondly, the preparations and instruments we have for our works. Thirdly, the several employments and functions whereto our fellows are assigned. And fourthly, the ordinances and rites which we observe.

"The end of our foundation is the knowledge of causes, and secret motions of things; and the enlarging of the bounds of human empire, to the effecting of all things possible.

"The preparations and instruments are these. We have large and deep caves of several depths: the deepest are sunk six hundred fathom; and some of them are digged and made under great hills and mountains; so that if you reckon together the depth of the hill and the depth of the cave, they are, some of them, above three miles deep. For we find that the depth of a hill, and the depth of a cave from the flat, is the same thing; both remote alike from the sun and heaven's beams, and from the open air. These caves we call the Lower Region, and we use them for all coagulations, indurations,<sup>6</sup> refrigerations, and conservations of bodies. We use them likewise for the imitation of natural mines, and the producing also of new artificial metals, by compositions and materials which we use, and lay there for many years. We use them also sometimes (which may seem strange) for curing of some diseases, and for prolongation of life in some hermits that choose to live there, well accommodated of<sup>7</sup> all things necessary, and indeed live very long; by whom also we learn many things.

"We have burials in several earths, where we put divers cements,<sup>8</sup> as the Chinese do their porcelain. But we have them in greater variety, and some of them more fine. We have also great variety of composts and soils, for the making of the earth fruitful.

"We have high towers, the highest about half a mile in height, and some of them likewise set upon high mountains, so that the vantage of the hill, with the tower, is in the highest of them three miles at least. And these places we call the Upper Region, accounting the air between the high places and the low as a Middle Region. We use these towers, according to their several heights and situations, for insolation,<sup>9</sup> refrigeration, conservation, and for the view of divers meteors—as winds, rain, snow, hail; and some of the fiery meteors' also. And upon them, in some places, are dwellings of hermits, whom we visit sometimes, and instruct what to observe.

"We have great lakes, both salt and fresh, whereof we have use for the fish and fowl. We use them also for burials of some natural bodies, for we find a difference in things buried in earth, or in air below the earth, and things buried in water. We have also pools, of which some do strain fresh water out of salt, and others by art do turn fresh water into salt. We have also some rocks in the midst of the sea, and some bays upon the shore, for some works wherein is required the air and vapor of the sea. We have likewise violent streams and cataracts, which serve us for many motions; and likewise engines for multiplying and enforcing<sup>2</sup> of winds to set also on going divers motions.

"We have also a number of artificial wells and fountains, made in imitation of the natural sources and baths, as tinted upon<sup>3</sup> vitriol, sulphur, steel, brass, lead, niter, and other minerals; and again, we have little wells for infusions of many things, where the waters take the virtue<sup>4</sup> quicker and better than in vessels or basins. And amongst them we have a water which we call Water of Paradise, being by that we do to it, made very sovereign<sup>5</sup> for health and prolongation of life.

"We have also great and spacious houses, where we imitate and demonstrate meteors—as snow, hail, rain, some artificial rains of bodies and not of water, thunders, lightnings; also generations of bodies in air—as frogs, flies, and divers others.

"We have also certain chambers, which we call Chambers of Health, where we qualify<sup>6</sup> the air as we think good and proper for the cure of divers diseases and preservation of health.

"We have also fair and large baths, of several mixtures, for the cure of diseases and the restoring of man's body from arefaction;<sup>7</sup> and others for the confirming of it in strength of sinews, vital parts, and the very juice and substance of the body.

"We have also large and various orchards and gardens, wherein we do not so much respect beauty as variety of ground and soil, proper for divers trees and herbs, and some very spacious, where trees and berries are set, whereof we make divers kinds of drinks, besides the vineyards. In these we practice likewise all conclusions* of grafting and inoculating, as well of wild trees as fruit trees, which produceth many effects. And we make (by art) in the same orchards and gardens trees and flowers to come earlier or later than their seasons, and to come up and bear more speedily than by their natural course they do. We make them also by art greater much than their nature; and their fruit greater and sweeter, and of differing taste, smell, color, and figure, from their nature. And many of them we so order as they become of medicinal use.

"We have also means to make divers plants rise by mixtures of earths without seeds, and likewise to make divers new plants, differing from the vulgar,<sup>9</sup> and to make one tree or plant turn into another.

"We have also parks and enclosures of all sorts of beasts and birds; which we use not only for view or rareness, but likewise for dissections and trials,<sup>1</sup> that thereby we may take light what may be wrought upon the body of man. Wherein we find many strange effects: as continuing life in them, though divers parts, which you account vital, be perished and taken forth; resuscitating of some that seem dead in appearance; and the like. We try also all poisons and other medicines upon them, as well of chirurgery<sup>2</sup> as physic. By art likewise, we make them greater or taller than their kind is, and contrariwise dwarf them and stay their growth; we make them more fruitful and bearing than their kind is, and contrariwise barren and not generative. Also, we make them differ in color, shape, activity, many ways. We find means to make commixtures and copulations of different kinds, which have produced many new kinds,<sup>3</sup> and them not barren, as the general opinion is. We make a number of kinds of serpents, worms, fishes, flies, of putrefaction, whereof some are advanced (in effect) to be perfect creatures, like beasts or birds, and have sexes, and do propagate. Neither do we this by chance, but we know beforehand of what matter and commixture what kind of those creatures will arise.

"We have also particular pools where we make trials upon fishes, as we have said before of beasts and birds.

"We have also places for breed and generation of those kinds of worms and flies which are of special use; such as are with you your silkworms and bees."<sup>4</sup>

"For the several employments and offices of our fellows, we have twelve that sail into foreign countries under the names of other nations (for our own we conceal), who bring us the books and abstracts and patterns of experiments of all other parts. These we call Merchants of Light.

"We have three that collect the experiments which are in all books. These we call Depredators.

"We have three that collect the experiments of all mechanical arts, and also of liberal sciences, and also of practices which are not brought into arts. These we call Mystery-men.

"We have three that try new experiments, such as themselves think good. These we call Pioneers or Miners.

"We have three that draw the experiments of the former four into titles and tables, to give the better light for the drawing of observations and axioms out of them. These we call Compilers.

"We have three that bend themselves, looking into the experiments of their fellows, and cast about how to draw out of them things of use and practice for man's life and knowledge, as well for works as for plain demonstration of causes, means of natural divinations, and the easy and clear discovery of the virtues and parts of bodies. These we call Dowry-men or Benefactors.

"Then after divers meetings and consults of our whole number, to consider of the former labors and collections, we have three that take care out of them to direct new experiments, of a higher light, more penetrating into nature than the former. These we call Lamps.

"We have three others that do execute the experiments so directed, and report them. These we call Inoculators.

"Lastly, we have three that raise the former discoveries by experiments into greater observations, axioms, and aphorisms. These we call Interpreters of Nature.

"We have also, as you must think, novices and apprentices, that the succession of the former employed men do not fail; besides a great number of servants and attendants, men and women. And this we do also: we have consultations, which of the inventions and experiences which we have discovered shall be published, and which not; and take all an oath of secrecy for the concealing of those which we think fit to keep secret; though some of those we do reveal sometimes to the State, and some not.<sup>5</sup>

"For our ordinances and rites, we have two very long and fair galleries: in one of these we place patterns and samples of all manner of the more rare and excellent inventions; in the other we place the statues of all principal inventors. There we have the statue of your Columbus, that discovered the West Indies;

also the inventor of ships; your monk that was the inventor of ordnance and of gunpowder;<sup>6</sup> the inventor of music; the inventor of letters; the inventor of printing; the inventor of observations of astronomy; the inventor of works in metal; the inventor of glass; the inventor of silk of the worm; the inventor of wine; the inventor of corn and bread; the inventor of sugars; and all these by more certain tradition than you have. Then we have divers inventors of our own, of excellent works, which since you have not seen, it were too long to make descriptions of them; and besides, in the right understanding of those descriptions you might easily err. For upon every invention of value we erect a statue to the inventor, and give him a liberal and honorable reward. These statutes are some of brass, some of marble and touchstone,<sup>7</sup> some of cedar and other special woods gilt and adorned; some of iron, some of silver, some of gold.

"We have certain hymns and services, which we say daily, of laud and thanks to God for his marvelous works; and forms of prayer, imploring his aid and blessing for the illumination of our labors, and the turning of them into good and holy uses.

"Lastly, we have circuits or visits of divers principal cities of the kingdom; where, as it cometh to pass, we do publish such new profitable inventions as we think good. And we do also declare natural divinations of diseases, plagues, swarms of hurtful creatures, scarcity, tempests, earthquakes, great inundations, comets, temperature of the year, and divers other things; and we give counsel thereupon, what the people shall do for the prevention and remedy of them."

And when he had said this he stood up; and I, as I had been taught, kneeled down; and he laid his right hand upon my head, and said, "God bless thee, my son, and God bless this relation which I have made. I give thee leave to publish it, for the good of other nations; for we here are in God's bosom, a land unknown." And so he left me; having assigned a value of about two thousand ducats for a bounty to me and my fellows. For they give great largesses, where they come, upon all occasions.

ROBERT BURTON

1577-1640

Robert Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy assumes, unlike Bacon, that knowledge of psychology, not science, is humankind's greatest need. His enormous, baggy, delightful treatise analyzes in encyclopedic detail that ubiquitous Jacobean malady, melancholy, supposedly caused, according to contemporary humor theory, by an excess of black bile. It was responsible, according to Burton and others, for the wild passions and despair of lovers, the agonies and ecstasies of religious devotees, the frenzies of madmen, and the studious abstraction of scholars such as Shakespeare's Hamlet or

Milton's II Penseroso. But for Burton melancholy is more than a particular temperament or disease: it encompasses all the folly and madness intrinsic to the fallen human condition and so afflicts the whole world—necessarily including Burton himself.

Burton was a scholar and cleric who lived in Christ Church College, Oxford, all his life: he never married, never traveled, never sought success in the world, but lived, as he says of himself in his preface, "a silent, sedentary, solitary, private life," researching his great book in the Bodleian Library and reading omnivorously in other topics. First published in 1621, the Anatomy went through five editions during the author's life, each one much augmented over the last. In his preface Burton creates a persona for himself, Democritus Junior, who proposes to complete the supposedly lost book on melancholy and madness by the Greek "laughing philosopher" Democritus. As Democritus Junior he promises not only to laugh but also to scoff, satirize, and lament.

The title term "anatomy" invites expectations of a clear, logical, ordered treatment of a medical subject after the manner of Vesalius, expectations also evoked by Donne in his Anatomy of the World. Burton's subtitle promises an analysis of "all the kinds, causes, symptoms, prognostics, and several cures" of melancholy, and a division into three parts—the Causes and Effects, the Cures, and the two principal kinds, Love Melancholy and Religious Melancholy—as well as various "sections, members, and subsections." But instead of such clarity and rigidity of structure, the categories collapse into each other. Since melancholy is universal, Burton finds warrant to be all-inclusive and digressive, to take us in picaresque disorder from one subject to the next, moving readily from the inner landscape to the world outside. The work contains a utopia, a treatise on climatology, and discourses on geography and meteorology, as well as case studies of various sufferers from melancholy: a man who thought he was glass; a man who thought he was butter; maids, nuns, and widows who suffer sexual deprivation; etc. Also, Burton cites every authority who wrote about any aspect of melancholy, from classical times to his present, but in no special order and without privileging even citations from Scripture. Such randomness and their own contradictions undercut the authorities, collapsing them all into the idiosyncratic style of Burton/Democritus Junior. Burton's prose style of long, loose sentences, with their pell-mell momentum as of thoughts rushing beyond the author's control, suggests a disorderly world not at all amenable to Baconian logic and science. Burton concludes by offering the pragmatic advice "Be not idle" as the only remedy against melancholy. His book, were we to read it all, would keep us from idleness for a good long time.

From Democritus<sup>2</sup> Junior to the Reader

Gentle Reader, I presume thou wilt be very inquisitive to know what antic or personate<sup>3</sup> actor this is, that so insolently intrudes upon this common theater to the world's view, arrogating another man's name; whence he is, why he doth it, and what he hath to say. Although, as he said,<sup>4</sup> Primum si noluero,

Burton's full title plays wittily with the term while pointing to the massive scope of his work: The Anatomy of Melancholy. What it is, with all the kinds, causes, symptoms, prognostics, Or several cures of it. In three Partitions, uith their several sections, members, & subsections. Philosophically, medicinally, historically opened & cut up.

known as a founder of atomism and as the "laughing philosopher," and explains why he constructs himself as his son and intellectual heir.

4. Burton's marginal note (not reprinted here) identifies the following passage as from Seneca's satire on the death of Claudius Caesar: "In the first place, if I don't want to answer, I won't; who will make me?" Here, as often elsewhere, Burton provides his own translation or paraphrase just before or after the Latin quotes that he sprinkles in liberally as they occur to him; in such cases no trans-

If I be urged, I will as readily reply as that Egyptian in Plutarch,<sup>5</sup> when a curious fellow would needs know what he had in his basket, Qium vides velatam, quid inquiris in rem absconditam? It was therefore covered, because he should not know what was in it. Seek not after that which is hid; if the contents please thee, "and be for thy use, suppose the Man in the Moon, or whom thou wilt, to be the author"; I would not willingly be known. Yet in some sort to give thee satisfaction, which is more than I need, I will show a reason, both of this usurped name, title, and subject. And first of the name of Democritus; lest any man by reason of it should be deceived, expecting a pasquil,<sup>6</sup> a satire, some ridiculous treatise (as I myself should have done), some prodigious tenet, or paradox of the earth's motion, of infinite worlds, in infinito vacuo, exfortuita atomorum collisione, in an infinite waste, so caused by an accidental collision of motes in the sun, all which Democritus held, Epicurus and their master Leucippus<sup>7</sup> of old maintained, and are lately revived by Copernicus, Brunus,<sup>8</sup> and some others. Besides, it hath been always an ordinary custom, as Gellius observes, "for later writers and impostors to broach many absurd and insolent fictions under the name of so noble a philosopher as Democritus, to get themselves credit, and by that means the more to be respected," as artificers usually do, Novo qui marmori ascribunt Praxitelen suo.<sup>9</sup> 'Tis not so with me.

Joys, wand'rings, are the sum of my report.

My intent is no otherwise to use his name, than Mercurius Gallobelgicus, Mercurius Britannicus, use the name of Mercury, Democritus Christianus, etc.; although there be some other circumstances for which I have masked myself under this vizard, and some peculiar respects which I cannot so well express, until I have set down a brief character of this our Democritus, what he was, with an epitome of his life.

Democritus, as he is described by Hippocrates and Laertius, was a little wearish<sup>1</sup> old man, very melancholy by nature, averse from company in his latter days, and much given to solitariness, a famous philosopher in his age, coaevus<sup>2</sup> with Socrates, wholly addicted to his studies at the last, and to a private life:

writ many excellent works, a great divine, according to the divinity of those times, an expert physician, a politician, an excellent mathematician, as Diacosmus and the rest of his works do witness. He was much delighted with the studies of husbandry, saith Columella, and often I find him cited by Constantinus and others treating of that subject. He knew the natures, differences of all beasts, plants, fishes, birds; and, as some say, could understand the tunes and voices of them. In a word, he was omnifariam doctus, a general scholar, a great student; and to the intent he might better contemplate, I find it related by some, that he put out his eyes, and was in his old age voluntarily blind, yet saw more than all Greece besides, and writ of every subject, Nihil in toto opificio naturae, de quo non scripsit.<sup>3</sup> A man of an excellent wit, profound conceit; and to attain knowledge the better in his younger years he traveled to Egypt and Athens, to confer with learned men, "admired of some, despised of others." After a wandering life, he settled at Abdera, a town in Thrace, and was sent for thither to be their lawmaker, recorder, or town clerk as some will; or as others, he was there bred and born. Howsoever it was, there he lived at last in a garden in the suburbs, wholly betaking himself to his studies and a private life, "saving that sometimes he would walk down to the haven,"<sup>4</sup> and laugh heartily at such variety of ridiculous objects, which there he saw." Such a one was Democritus.

But in the meantime, how doth this concern me, or upon what reference do I usurp his habit? I confess, indeed, that to compare myself unto him for aught I have yet said, were both impudency and arrogancy. I do not presume to make any parallel, antistat mihi millihus trecentis, parvus sum, nullus sum, altum nec spiro, nec spero.<sup>5</sup> Yet thus much I will say of myself, and that I hope without all suspicion of pride, or self-conceit, I have lived a silent, sedentary, solitary, private life, mihi et musis<sup>6</sup> in the university, as long almost as Xenocrates in Athens, ad senectam fere<sup>7</sup> to learn wisdom as he did, penned up most part in my study. For I have been brought up a student in the most flourishing college of Europe, augustissimo collegio,<sup>8</sup> and can brag with Jovius, almost, in ea luce domicilii Vaticani, totius orhis celeherrimi, per 37 annos multa opportunque didici,<sup>9</sup> for thirty years I have continued (having the use of as good libraries as ever he had) a scholar, and would be therefore loath, either by living as a drone to be an unprofitable or unworthy member of so learned and noble a society, or to write that which should be anyway dishonorable to such a royal and ample foundation. Something I have done, though by my profession a divine, yet turbine raptus ingenii, as he<sup>1</sup> said, out of a running wit, an unconstant, unsettled mind, I had a great desire (not able to attain to a superficial skill in any) to have some smattering in all, to be aliquis in omnibus, nidlus in singidis,<sup>2</sup> which Plato commends, out of him Lipsius approves and furthers, "as fit to be imprinted in all curious wits, not to be a slave of one science, or dwell altogether in one subject, as most do, but to rove abroad, centum puer artium"<sup>3</sup> to have an oar in every man's boat, to taste of every dish,

This roving humor (though not with like success) I have ever had, and like a ranging spaniel, that barks at every bird he sees, leaving his game, I have followed all, saving that which I should, and may justly complain, and truly, qui ubique est, nusquam est,<sup>4</sup> which Gesner did in modesty, that I have read many books, but to little purpose, for want of good method; I have confusedly tumbled over divers authors in our libraries, with small profit for want of art, order, memory, judgment. I never traveled but in map or card, in which my unconfined thoughts have freely expatiated, as having ever been especially delighted with the study of cosmography. Saturn was lord of my geniture, culminating, etc., and Mars principal significator of manners, in partile conjunction with mine ascendant; both fortunate in their houses, etc.<sup>5</sup> I am not poor, I am not rich; nihil est, nihil deest, I have little, I want nothing: all my treasure is in Minerva's<sup>6</sup> tower. Greater preferment as I could never get, so am I not in debt for it, I have a competency (laus Deo)<sup>7</sup> from my noble and munificent patrons, though I live still a collegiate student, as Democritus in his garden, and lead a monastic life, ipse mihi theatrum,<sup>8</sup> sequestered from those tumults and troubles of the world, et tanquam in specula positus (as he<sup>9</sup> said), in some high place above you all, like Stoicus sapiens, omnia saecula praeterita praesentiaque videns, uno velut intuitu I hear and see what is done abroad, how others run, ride, turmoil, and macerate themselves in court and country, far from those wrangling lawsuits, aulae vanitatem, fori ambitionem, ridere mecum soleo,<sup>2</sup> I laugh at all; "only secure lest my suit go amiss, my ships perish," corn and cattle miscarry, trade decay, "I have no wife nor children good or bad to provide for." I hear new news every day, and those ordinary rumors of war, plagues, fires, inundations, thefts, murders, massacres, meteors, comets, spectrums, prodigies, apparitions, of towns taken, cities besieged in France, Germany, Turkey, Persia, Poland, etc., daily musters and preparations, and suchlike, which these tempestuous times afford, battles fought, so many men slain, monomachies,<sup>3</sup> shipwrecks, piracies, and sea fights, peace, leagues, stratagems, and fresh alarms. A vast confusion of vows, wishes, actions, edicts, petitions, lawsuits, pleas; laws, proclamations, complaints, grievances are daily brought to our ears. New books every day, pamphlets, corantos,<sup>4</sup> stories, whole catalogues of volumes of all sorts, new paradoxes, opinions, schisms, heresies, controversies in philosophy, religion, etc. Now come tidings of weddings, masquings, mummeries, entertainments, jubilees, embassies, tilts and tournaments, trophies, triumphs, revels, sports, plays: then again, as in a new shifted scene, treasons, cheating tricks, robberies, enormous villainies in all kinds, funerals, burials, deaths of princes, new discoveries, expeditions: now comical, then tragical matters. From Love Melancholy

PART 3. SECTION 2, MEMBER 1, SUBSECTION 2: HOW LOVE TYRANNIZETH OVER MEN. LOVE, OR HEROICAL MELANCHOLY, HIS DEFINITION, PART AFFECTED.

Tis a happy state this<sup>1</sup> indeed, when the fountain is blessed (saith Solomon, Proverbs v. 18), "and he rejoiceth with the wife of his youth, and she is to him as the loving hind and pleasant roe,<sup>2</sup> and he delights in her continually." But this love of ours is immoderate, inordinate, and not to be comprehended in any bounds. It will not contain itself within the union of marriage or apply to one object, but is a wandering, extravagant, a domineering, a boundless, an irrefragable,<sup>3</sup> a destructive passion; sometimes this burning lust rageth after marriage, and then it is properly called jealousy; sometimes before, and then it is called heroical melancholy; it extends sometimes to corrivals, etc., begets rapes, incests, murders: Marcus Antoninus compressit Faustinae sororem, Caracalla Juliam novercam, Nero matrem, Caligula sorores, Cinyras Myrrham filiam,<sup>4</sup> etc. But it is confined within no terms of blood, years, sex, or whatsoever else. Some furiously rage before they come to discretion or age. Quartailla in Petronius<sup>5</sup> never remembered she was a maid; and the Wife of Bath in Chaucer cracks,

Since I was twelve years old, believe,
Husbands at kirk-door had I five.<sup>6</sup>

Aretine's Lucretia sold her maidenhead a thousand times before she was twenty-four years old, plus millies vendideram virginitatem, etc., neque te celaho, non deerant qui ut integram amhirent.<sup>7</sup> Rahab, that harlot, began to be a professed quean at ten years of age, and was but fifteen when she hid the

Generally women begin pubescere as they call it, or catulire as Julius Pollux cites, lib. 2, cap. 3 Onomast. out of Aristophanes, at fourteen years old, then they do offer themselves, and some plainly rage. Leo Afer<sup>8</sup> saith that in Africa a man shall scarce find a maid at fourteen years of age, they are so forward, and many amongst us after they come into the teens do not live without husbands, but linger.<sup>9</sup> What pranks in this kind the middle age have played is not to be recorded, si mihi sint centum linguae, sint oraque centum,<sup>1</sup> no tongue can sufficiently declare, every story is full of men and women's insatiable lust, Neros, Heliogabali, Bonosi,<sup>2</sup> etc. Coelius Aufilenum, et Quintius Aufilenam depereunt,<sup>3</sup> etc. They neigh after other men's wives (as Jeremy, cap. v.8 complaineth) like fed horses, or range like town bulls, raptores virginum et viduarum,<sup>4</sup> as many of our great ones do. Solomon's wisdom was extinguished in this fire of lust, Samson's strength enervated, piety in Lot's daughters quite forgot, gravity of priesthood in Eli's sons, reverend old age in the elders that would violate Susanna, filial duty in Absalom to his stepmother, brotherly love in Amnon towards his sister.<sup>5</sup> Human, divine laws, precepts, exhortations, fear of God and men, fair, foul means, fame, fortunes, shame, disgrace, honor cannot oppose, stave off, or withstand the fury of it, omnia vincit amor,<sup>6</sup> etc. No cord nor cable can so forcibly draw, or hold so fast, as love can do with a twined thread. Quid castvum in terris intentatumque reliquit?*<sup>8</sup>

What breach of vows and oaths, fury, dotage, madness might I reckon up! Yet this is more tolerable in youth, and such as are still in their hot blood; but for an old fool to dote, to see an old lecher, what more odious, what can be more absurd? And yet what so common? Who so furious? Amare ea aetate si occiperint, multo insaniunt acrius.<sup>9</sup> Some dote then more than ever they did in their youth. How many decrepit, hoary, harsh, writhen, bursten-bellied, crooked, toothless, bald, blear-eyed, impotent, rotten old men shall you see flickering still in every place? One gets him a young wife, another a courtesan, and when he can scarce lift his leg over a sill and hath one foot already in Charon's boat,<sup>1</sup> when he hath the trembling in his joints, the gout in his feet, a perpetual rheum in his head, a continue cough, "his sight fails him, thick of hearing, his breath stinks,"<sup>2</sup> all his moisture is dried up and gone, may not spit from him, a very child again, that cannot dress himself or cut his own meat, yet he will be dreaming of and honing after wenches; what can be more unseemly? Worse it is in women than in men; when she is aetate declivis, diu vidua, mater olim, parum decore matrimonium sequi videtur, an old widow, a mother so long since (in Pliny's opinion),<sup>3</sup> she doth very unseemly seek to marry; yet whilst she is so old, a crone, a beldam, she can neither see nor hear, go nor stand, a mere carcass, a witch, and scarce feel, she caterwauls and must have a stallion, a champion, she must and will marry again, and betroth herself to some young man that hates to look on her but for her goods, abhors the sight of her, to the prejudice of her good name, her own undoing, grief of friends, and ruin of her children.

But to enlarge or illustrate this power and effects of love is to set a candle in the sun. It rageth with all sorts and conditions of men, yet is most evident among such as are young and lusty, in the flower of their years, nobly descended, high fed, such as live idly and at ease; and for that cause (which our divines call burning lust) this ferinus insanus amor, this mad and beastly passion, as I have said, is named by our physicians heroical love, and a more honorable title put upon it, amor nohilis as Savonarola<sup>4</sup> styles it, because noble men and women make a common practice of it and are so ordinarily affected with it. Avicenna,<sup>5</sup> lib. 3, fen. 1, tract. 4, cap. 23, calleth this passion Ilishi and defines it to be "a disease or melancholy vexation or anguish of mind, in which a man continually meditates of the beauty, gesture, manners of his mistress, and troubles himself about it"; "desiring" (as Savonarola adds) "with all intentions and eagerness of mind to compass or enjoy her; as commonly hunters trouble themselves about their sports, the covetous about their gold and goods, so is he tormented still about his mistress." Arnoldus Villanovanus<sup>6</sup> in his book of heroical love defines it "a continual cogitation of that which he desires, with a confidence or hope of compassing it"; which definition his commentator cavils at. For continual cogitation is not the genus but a symptom of love; we continually think of that which we hate and abhor, as well as that which we love; and many things we covet and desire without all hope of attaining. Carolus a Lorme in his Questions makes a doubt an amor sit morbus, whether this heroical love be a disease: Julius Pollux, Onomast. lib. 6, cap. 44, determines it. They that are in love are likewise sick; lascivus, salax, lasciviens, et qui in venerem furit, vere est aegrotus.<sup>7</sup> Arnoldus will have it improperly so called, and a malady rather of the body than mind. Tully,<sup>8</sup> in his Tusculans, defines it a furious disease of the mind; Plato, madness itself; Ficinus, his commentator, cap. 12, a species of madness, "for many have run mad for women" (I Esdras iv.26); but Rhasis,<sup>9</sup> "a melancholy passion"; and most physicians make it a species or kind of melancholy (as will appear by the symptoms), and treat of it apart; whom I mean to imitate, and to discuss it in all his kinds, to examine his several causes, to show his symptoms, indications, prognostics, effects, that so it may be with more facility cured.

The part affected in the meantime, as Arnoldus supposeth, "is the former part of the head for want of moisture," which his commentator rejects. Langius, Med. epist. lib. 1, cap. 24, will have this passion sited in the liver, and to keep residence in the heart, "to proceed first from the eyes so carried by our spirits, and kindled with imagination in the liver and heart"; cogit amare iecur,<sup>1</sup> as the saying is. Medium ferit per hepar, as Cupid in Anacreon. For some such cause belike, Homer feigns Titius' liver (who was enamored of Latona) to be still gnawed by two vultures day and night in hell, "for that young men's bowels thus enamored are so continually tormented by love."<sup>2</sup> Gordonius, cap. 2, part. 2, "will have the testicles an immediate subject or cause, the liver an antecedent." Fracastorius agrees in this with Gordonius,<sup>3</sup> inde primitus imaginatio venerea, erectio, etc.; titillatissimam partem vocat, ita ut nisi extruso semine gestiens voluptas non cessat, nec assidua veneris recordatio, addit Guastavinus, Comment., 4 sect., prob. 27 Arist.<sup>4</sup> But properly it is a passion of the brain, as all other melancholy, by reason of corrupt imagination, and so doth Jason Pratensis, cap. 19, De morb. cerebri (who writes copiously of this erotic love), place and reckon it amongst the affections of the brain. Melanchthon, De anima, confutes those that make the liver a part affected, and Guianerius, tract. 15, cap. 13 et 17, though many put all the affections in the heart, refers it to the brain. Ficinus, cap. 7, In Convivium Platonis, "will have the blood to be the part affected." Jo. Freitagius, cap. 14, Noct. med., supposeth all four affected, heart, liver, brain, blood; but the major part concur upon the brain, 'tis imaginatio laesa,<sup>5</sup> and both imagination and reason are misaffected; because of his corrupt judgment and continual meditation of that which he desires, he may truly be said to be melancholy. If it be violent, or his disease inveterate, as I have determined in the precedent partitions, both imagination and reason are misaffected, first one, then the other.

SIR THOMAS BROWNE

1605-1682

Sir Thomas Browne presents his best-known work, Religio Medici (A Doctor's Beligion), as "the true Anatomy of myself." This work is not, as we might expect from the title, a spiritual autobiography relating, like many in the period, an angst-filled story of conversion or an account of providential experiences. Nor does Browne report the facts of his life: that he was born into the family of a cloth merchant, attended Winchester School and Pembroke College, Oxford, studied at the best medical schools (Montpelier, Padua, Leiden), practiced medicine in Yorkshire and Norwich, married in 1641, and fathered twelve children. Instead, this work is an exercise in delighted self-analysis and self-portrayal, outlining Browne's own sometimes eccentric views on a wide variety of topics pertaining to religious doctrine and practice. For this purpose Browne constructs an engaging persona: the genial, speculative doctor who finds nothing human foreign to him and so is the very personification of charity and inclusiveness: he can readily participate in the customs of others in food, drink, or religion (even in certain Roman Catholic practices) but yet value his own.

In this two-part treatise divided into short numbered paragraphs, Browne voices his fondness for Anglo-Catholic ritual but also his belief in Calvinist predestination; he denounces religious persecution but thinks many religious martyrs not particularly admirable; he believes in witches but is skeptical of latter-day miracles. His love of mystery and wonder (in sharp contrast to Bacon) leads him to revel in metaphor and take positive joy in accepting things contrary to reason: "I love to lose myself in a mystery, to pursue my reason to an O altitudo!" According to his preface, he wrote the work around 1636 for himself only and circulated it in manuscript to a few friends but then was forced by a pirated edition (1642) to print a correct version (1643). Yet his decision to publish just as the king and Parliament took to the battlefield in the civil war was hardly fortuitous, and the treatise has political resonance. Describing himself as one who sympathizes with and has himself held several erroneous or heretical views, Browne disparages dogmatism and holds up to gentle irony those who claim exclusive possession of the path to salvation. At the same time, he deplores schism and is ready to conform his mind to the teachings and practices of the Church of England. His self-analysis comments on the wider world of church and state, posing his example of tolerant inclusiveness against reforming Puritans eager to rid the church of its errors.

Browne wrote Pseudodoxia Epidemica, or Vidgar Errors (1646), in a Baconian vein, analyzing the causes of popular errors in a wide variety of fields. Hydriotaphia, or Urn-Burial (1658), shows Browne as a passionate antiquarian, prompted to study and comment on the funeral customs of various peoples by the discovery near Norwich of funeral urns that were thought (erroneously) to be of Roman origin. That work culminates in a sonorous meditation on mortality and the futility of all such commemorations, given the inevitable obliteration of all human fame. It was published with an even more curious work, The Garden of Cyrus, named after the Persian emperor who supposedly made the famous Hanging Gardens of Babylon. This work displays Browne the naturalist recounting the history of horticulture, and also the mystical and Neoplatonic Browne who finds quincunxes (shapes with five members or parts) everywhere in nature. Browne was a favorite prose stylist of many later writers, among them Samuel Taylor Coleridge, Charles Lamb, Thomas De Quincey, and Herman Melville: polysyllabic and Latinate, his prose mixes wit and sumptuous rhetoric, often rising to a resonant poetry.

From Part 1

1. For my religion, though there be several circumstances that might persuade the world I have none at all—as the general scandal of my profes-

1. The Religion of a Doctor. Browne avoids any conflict between science and religion by a forthright "fideism"—entirely separating reason from faith and thereby exempting faith from any critique by reason, or any support from it. This was also the stance of some contemporary Roman Catholic skeptics, notably Montaigne and Pierre Charron.

sion,<sup>2</sup> the natural course of my studies, the indifferency<sup>3</sup> of my behavior and discourse in matters of religion, neither violently defending one, nor with that common ardor and contention opposing another—yet in despite hereof I dare without usurpation assume the honorable style of a Christian. Not that I merely owe this title to the font,<sup>4</sup> my education, or clime wherein I was born, as being bred up either to confirm those principles my parents instilled into my unwary understanding, or by a general consent proceed in the religion of my country; but having in my riper years and confirmed judgment seen and examined all, I find myself obliged by the principles of grace and the law of mine own reason to embrace no other name but this. Neither doth herein my zeal so far make me forget the general charity I owe unto humanity, as rather to hate than pity Turks, infidels, and (what is worse) Jews;<sup>5</sup> rather contenting myself to enjoy that happy style than maligning those who refuse so glorious a title.

2. But because the name of a Christian is become too general to express our faith—there being a geography of religions as well as lands, and every clime distinguished not only by their laws and limits, but circumscribed by their doctrines and rules of faith—to be particular, I am of that reformed new-cast religion wherein I mislike nothing but the name;<sup>6</sup> of the same belief our Savior taught, the apostles disseminated, the Fathers authorized, and the martyrs confirmed; but by the sinister ends of princes, the ambition and avarice of prelates, and the fatal corruption of times, so decayed, impaired, and fallen from its native beauty that it required the careful and charitable hands of these times to restore it to its primitive integrity. Now the accidental occasion whereon, the slender means whereby, the low and abject condition of the person by whom so good a work was set on foot,<sup>7</sup> which in our adversaries beget contempt and scorn, fills me with wonder, and is the very same objection the insolent pagans first cast at Christ and his disciples.

3. Yet have I not so shaken hands with those desperate resolutions—who had rather venture at large their decayed bottom<sup>8</sup> than bring her in to be new trimmed in the dock, who had rather promiscuously retain all than abridge any, and obstinately be what they are than what they have been—as to stand in diameter<sup>9</sup> and sword's point with them. We have reformed from them, not against them; for, omitting those impropriations and terms of scurrility betwixt us, which only difference<sup>1</sup> our affections and not our cause, there is between us one common name and appellation, one faith and necessary body of principles common to us both; and therefore I am not scrupulous to converse and live with them, to enter their churches in defect of ours, and either pray with them or for them. I could never perceive any rational consequence from those many texts which prohibit the children of Israel to pollute themselves with the temples of the heathens; we being all Christians, and not divided by such detested impieties as might profane our prayers or the place wherein we make them; or that a resolved conscience may not adore her Maker anywhere, especially in places devoted to his service; where, if their devotions offend him, mine may please him, if theirs profane it, mine may hallow it. Holy water and crucifix, dangerous to the common people, deceive not my judgment nor abuse my devotion at all. I am, I confess, naturally inclined to that which misguided zeal terms superstition.<sup>2</sup> My common conversation I do acknowledge austere, my behavior full of rigor, sometimes not without morosity; yet at my devotion I love to use the civility of my knee, my hat, and hand, with all those outward and sensible motions which may express or promote my invisible devotion. I should violate my own arm rather than a church, nor willingly deface the memory of saint or martyr. At the sight of a cross or crucifix I can dispense with my hat, but scarce with the thought and memory of my Savior. I cannot laugh at, but rather pity, the fruitless journeys of pilgrims, or condemn the miserable condition of friars; for though misplaced in circumstance, there is somewhat in it of devotion. I could never hear the Ave-Maria bell without an elevation,<sup>3</sup> or think it a sufficient warrant, because they erred in one circumstance, for me to err in all—that is, in silence and dumb contempt. Whilst, therefore, they directed their devotions to her, I offered mine to God, and rectified the errors of their prayers by rightly ordering mine own. At a solemn procession I have wept abundantly while my consorts,<sup>4</sup> blind with opposition and prejudice, have fallen into an excess of scorn and laughter. There are questionless, both in Greek, Roman, and African churches, solemnities and ceremonies whereof the wiser zeals do make a Christian use; and stand condemned by us, not as evil in themselves, but as allurements and baits of superstition to those vulgar heads that look askint on the face of truth, and those unstable judgments that cannot consist<sup>5</sup> in the narrow point and center of virtue without a reel or stagger to the circumference.

4. As there were many reformers, so likewise many reformations; every country proceeding in a particular way and method, according as their national interest together with their constitution and clime inclined them: some angrily and with extremity, others calmly and with mediocrity,<sup>6</sup> not rending but easily dividing the community, and leaving an honest possibility of a reconciliation; which, though peaceable spirits do desire, and may conceive that revolution of time and the mercies of God may effect, yet that judgment that shall consider the present antipathies between the two extremes, their contrarieties in condition, affection, and opinion, may with the same hopes expect an union in the poles of heaven.

5. But—to difference myself nearer, and draw into a lesser circle—there is no church whose every part so squares unto my conscience, whose articles, constitutions, and customs seem so consonant unto reason, and as it were framed to my particular devotion, as this whereof I hold my belief: the Church of England, to whose faith I am a sworn subject, and therefore in a double obligation subscribe unto her articles and endeavor to observe her constitutions. Whatsoever is beyond, as points indifferent, I observe according to the rules of my private reason or the humor and fashion of my devotion; neither believing this because Luther affirmed it nor disapproving that because Calvin hath disavouched it. I condemn not all things in the council of Trent nor approve all in the synod of Dort.<sup>7</sup> In brief, where the Scripture is silent, the church is my text; where that speaks, 'tis but my comment; where there is a joint silence of both, I borrow not the rules of my religion from Rome or Geneva,<sup>8</sup> but the dictates of my own reason. It is an unjust scandal of our adversaries and a gross error in ourselves to compute the nativity of our religion from Henry the Eighth, who, though he rejected the Pope, refused not the faith of Rome, and effected no more than what his own predecessors desired and essayed in ages past, and was conceived the state of Venice would have attempted in our days.<sup>9</sup> It is as uncharitable a point in us to fall upon those popular scurrilities and opprobrious scoffs of the bishop of Rome, to whom as a temporal prince we owe the duty of good language. I confess there is cause of passion between us. By his sentence I stand excommunicated: "heretic" is the best language he affords me; yet can no ear witness I ever returned to him the name of "antichrist," "man of sin," or "whore of Babylon."<sup>1</sup> It is the method of charity to suffer without reaction. Those usual satires and invectives of the pulpit may perchance produce a good effect on the vulgar, whose ears are opener to rhetoric than logic; yet do they in no wise confirm the faith of wiser believers, who know that a good cause needs not to be patroned by a passion, but can sustain itself upon a temperate dispute.

6. I could never divide myself from any man upon the difference of an opinion, or be angry with his judgment for not agreeing with me in that from which perhaps within a few days I should dissent myself. I have no genius to disputes in religion, and have often thought it wisdom to decline them, especially upon a disadvantage, or when the cause of truth might suffer in the weakness of my patronage. Where we desire to be informed, 'tis good to contest with men above ourselves; but to confirm and establish our opinions, 'tis best to argue with judgments below our own, that the frequent spoils and victories over their reasons may settle in ourselves an esteem and confirmed opinion of our own. Every man is not a proper champion for truth, nor fit to take up the gauntlet in the cause of verity. Many, from the ignorance of these maxims and an inconsiderate zeal unto truth, have too rashly charged the troops of error, and remain as trophies unto the enemies of truth. A man may be in as just possession of truth as of a city, and yet be forced to surrender. 'Tis therefore far better to enjoy her with peace than to hazard her on a battle. If therefore there rise any doubts in my way, I do forget them or at least defer them till my better settled judgment and more manly reason be able to resolve them; for I perceive every man's own reason is his best Oedipus,<sup>2</sup> and will upon a reasonable truce find a way to loose those bonds wherewith the subtleties of error have enchained our more flexible and tender judgments. In philosophy, where truth seems double-faced, there is no man more paradoxical than myself, but in divinity I love to keep the road; and, though not in an implicit, yet an humble faith, follow the great wheel of the church, by which I move, not reserving any proper poles or motion from the epicycle of my own brain.<sup>3</sup>

By this means I leave no gap for heresies, schisms, or errors, of which at present I hope I shall not injure truth to say I have no taint or tincture. I must confess my greener studies have been polluted with two or three—not any begotten in the latter centuries, but old and obsolete, such as could never have been revived but by such extravagant and irregular heads as mine. For indeed heresies perish not with their authors, but like the river Arethusa, though they lose their currents in one place, they rise up again in another.<sup>4</sup> One general council is not able to extirpate one singular heresy. It may be canceled for the present, but revolution of time and the like aspects from heaven will restore it, when it will flourish till it be condemned again; for as though there were a metempsychosis, and the soul of one man passed into another, opinions do find after certain revolutions men and minds like those that first begat them. To see ourselves again we need not look for Plato's year.<sup>5</sup> Every man is not only himself; there have been many Diogenes and as many Timons,<sup>6</sup> though but few of that name. Men are lived over again; the world is now as it was in ages past. There was none then but there hath been someone since that parallels him, and is as it were his revived self.

9. As for those wingy mysteries in divinity and airy subtleties in religion, which have unhinged the brains of better heads, they never stretched the pia mater<sup>7</sup> of mine. Methinks there be not impossibilities enough in religion for an active faith. The deepest mysteries ours contains have not only been illustrated but maintained by syllogism and the rule of reason. I love to lose myself in a mystery, to pursue my reason to an O altitudo!<sup>8</sup> 'Tis my solitary recreation to pose my apprehension with those involved enigmas and riddles of the Trinity, with Incarnation and Resurrection. I can answer all the objections of Satan and my rebellious reason with that odd resolution I learned of Tertullian, Certum est quia impossibile est.<sup>9</sup> I desire to exercise my faith in the difficultest points, for to credit ordinary and visible objects is not faith but persuasion. Some believe the better for seeing Christ his sepulcher, and when they have seen the Red Sea doubt not of the miracle. Now, contrarily, I bless myself and am thankful that I lived not in the days of miracles, that I never saw Christ nor his disciples. I would not have been one of those Israelites that passed the Red Sea, nor one of Christ's patients on whom he wrought his wonders: then had my faith been thrust upon me, nor should I enjoy that greater blessing pronounced to all that believe and saw not. 'Tis an easy and necessary belief to credit what our eye and sense hath examined. I believe he was dead, buried, and rose again; and desire to see him in his glory rather than to contemplate him in his cenotaph or sepulcher. Nor is this much to believe. As we have reason, we owe this faith unto history; they only had the advantage of a bold and noble faith who lived before his coming, who upon obscure prophecies and mystical types<sup>1</sup> could raise a belief and expect apparent impossibilities.

i 5. * * * I could never content my contemplation with those general pieces of wonder, the flux and reflux of the sea, the increase of Nile, the conversion of the needle to the north; and have studied to match and parallel those in the more obvious and neglected pieces of nature, which without further travel I can do in the cosmography of myself. We carry with us the wonders we seek without us: there is all Africa and her prodigies<sup>2</sup> in us. We are that bold and adventurous piece of nature which he that studies wisely learns in a compendium what others labor at in a divided piece and endless volume.

16. Thus are there two books from whence I collect my divinity: besides that written one of God, another of his servant nature, that universal and public manuscript that lies expanded unto the eyes of all. Those that never saw him in the one have discovered him in the other. This was the scripture and theology of the heathens: the natural motion of the sun made them more admire him than its supernatural station<sup>3</sup> did the children of Israel; the ordinary effects of nature wrought more admiration in them than in the other all his miracles. Surely the heathens knew better how to join and read these mystical letters than we Christians, who cast a more careless eye on these common hieroglyphics, and disdain to suck divinity from the flowers of nature. Nor do I so forget God as to adore the name of nature; which I define not, with the schools, the principle of motion and rest, but that straight and regular line, that settled and constant course the wisdom of God hath ordained the actions of his creatures according to their several kinds. To make a revolution every day is the nature of the sun, because that necessary course which God hath ordained it, from which it cannot swerve but by a faculty<sup>4</sup> from that voice which first did give it motion. Now this course of nature God seldom alters or perverts, but like an excellent artist hath so contrived his work that with the selfsame instrument, without a new creation, he may effect his obscurest designs. Thus he sweetened the water with a wood;<sup>5</sup> preserved the creatures in the Ark, which the blast of his mouth might have as easily created: for God is like a skillful geometrician, who when more easily and with one stroke of his compass he might describe or divide a right line, had yet rather do this in a circle or longer way according to the constituted and forelaid principles of his art. Yet this rule of his he doth sometimes pervert, to acquaint the world with his prerogative, lest the arrogancy of our reason should question his power and conclude he could not. And thus I call the effects of nature the works of God, whose hand and instrument she only is; and therefore to ascribe his actions unto her is to devolve the honor of the principal agent upon the instrument: which if with reason we may do, then let our hammers rise up and boast they have built our houses, and our pens receive the honor of our writings. I hold there is a general beauty in the works of God, and therefore no deformity in any kind or species of creature whatsoever. I cannot tell by what logic we call a toad, a bear, or an elephant ugly; they being created in those outward shapes and figures which best express the actions of their inward forms, and having passed that general visitation of God, who saw that all that he had made was good<sup>6</sup>—that is, conformable to his will, which abhors deformity and is the rule of order and beauty. There is therefore no deformity but in monstrosity; wherein notwithstanding there is a kind of beauty, nature so ingeniously contriving the irregular parts as they become sometimes more remarkable than the principal fabric. To speak yet more narrowly, there was never anything ugly or misshapen but the chaos; wherein notwithstanding (to speak strictly) there was no deformity because no form, nor was it yet impregnate by the voice of God. Now, nature is not at variance with art nor art with nature, they both being the servants of his providence: art is the perfection of nature. Were the world now as it was the sixth day, there were yet a chaos: nature hath made one world and art another. In brief, all things are artificial, for nature is the art of God.

34. These<sup>7</sup> are certainly the magisterial and masterpieces of the Creator; the flower or (as we may say) the best part of nothing; actually existing what we are but in hopes and probability. We are only that amphibious piece between a corporal and spiritual essence; that middle form that links those two together, and makes good the method of God and nature, that jumps not from extremes but unites the incompatible distances by some middle and participating natures. That we are the breath and similitude of God it is indisputable and upon record of holy Scripture; but to call ourselves a microcosm or little world I thought it only a pleasant trope of rhetoric<sup>8</sup> till my nearer judgment and second thoughts told me there was a real truth therein. For first we are a rude mass and in the rank of creatures which only are and have a dull kind of being not yet privileged with life or preferred to sense or reason. Next we live the life of plants, the life of animals, the life of men, and at last the life of spirits; running on, in one mysterious nature, those five kinds of existences which comprehend the creatures not only of the world but of the universe. Thus is man that great and true amphibium whose nature is disposed to live not only like other creatures in divers elements but in divided and distinguished worlds. For though there be but one world to sense, there are two to reason; the one visible, the other invisible, whereof Moses seems to have left no description, and of the other<sup>9</sup> so obscurely that some parts thereof are yet in controversy: and truly for the first chapters of Genesis I must confess a great deal of obscurity. Though divines have, to the power of human reason, endeavored to make all go in a literal meaning, yet those allegorical interpretations are also probable, and perhaps the mystical method of Moses bred up in the hieroglyphical schools of the Egyptians.<sup>1</sup>

59. Again, I am confident and fully persuaded, yet dare not take my oath of my salvation. I am as it were sure, and do believe without all doubt, that there is such a city as Constantinople; yet for me to take my oath thereon were a kind of perjury, because I hold no infallible warrant from my own sense to confirm me in the certainty thereof. And truly, though many pretend an absolute certainty of their salvation, yet when an humble soul shall contemplate her own unworthiness she shall meet with many doubts and suddenly find how little we stand in need of the precept of St. Paul, Work out your salvation with fear and trembling.<sup>2</sup> That which is the cause of my election I hold to be the cause of my salvation, which was the mercy and beneplacit<sup>3</sup> of God before I was or the foundation of the world. Before Abraham was, I am, is the saying of Christ;<sup>4</sup> yet is it true in some sense if I say it of myself, for I was not only before myself but Adam, that is, in the idea of God and the decree of that synod held from all eternity. And in this sense, I say, the world was before the creation and at an end before it had a beginning; and thus was I dead before I was alive. Though my grave be England, my dying place was Paradise, and Eve miscarried of me before she conceived of Cain.

1. Now for that other virtue of charity,<sup>5</sup> without which faith is mere notion, and of no existence, I have ever endeavored to nourish the merciful disposition and humane inclination I borrowed from my parents, and regulate it to the written and prescribed laws of charity; and if I hold the true anatomy of myself,<sup>6</sup> I am delineated and naturally framed to such a piece of virtue. For I am of a constitution so general that it comforts and sympathizeth with all things; I have no antipathy, or rather idiosyncrasy, in diet, humor, air, anything. I wonder not at the French for their dishes of frogs, snails, and toadstools, nor at the Jews for locusts and grasshoppers; but being amongst them, make them my common viands, and I find they agree with my stomach as well as theirs. I could digest a salad gathered in a churchyard as well as in a garden. I cannot start at the presence of a serpent, scorpion, lizard, or salamander, at the sight of a toad or viper I find in me no desire to take up a stone to destroy them. I feel not in myself those common antipathies that I can discover in others: those national repugnances do not touch me, nor do I behold with prejudice the French, Italian, Spaniard, or Dutch; but where I find their actions in balance with my countrymen's, I honor, love and embrace them in the same degree. I was born in the eighth climate,<sup>7</sup> but seem for to be framed and constellated unto all. I am no plant that will not prosper out of a garden. All places, all airs make unto me one country; I am in England everywhere and under any meridian. I have been shipwrecked,<sup>8</sup> yet am not enemy with the sea or winds; I can study, play, or sleep in a tempest. In brief, I am averse from nothing; my conscience would give me the lie if I should say I absolutely detest or hate any essence but the devil, or so at least abhor anything but that we might come to composition.<sup>9</sup> If there be any among those common objects of hatred I do contemn and laugh at, it is that great enemy of reason, virtue, and religion, the multitude—that numerous piece of monstrosity which, taken asunder, seem men and the reasonable creatures of God, but confused together make but one great beast, and a monstrosity more prodigious than Hydra.<sup>1</sup> It is no breach of charity to call these fools; it is the style all holy writers have afforded them, set down by Solomon in canonical Scripture<sup>2</sup> and a point of our faith to believe so. Neither in the name of multitude do I only include the base and minor sort of people; there is a rabble even amongst the gentry, a sort of plebeian heads whose fancy moves with the same wheel as these; men in the same level with mechanics, though their fortunes do somewhat gild their infirmities, and their purses compound for their follies.<sup>3</sup> But as in casting account, three or four men together come short in account of one man placed by himself below them, so neither are a troop of these ignorant dorados<sup>4</sup> of that true esteem and value as many a forlorn person whose condition doth place him below their feet. Let us speak like politicians, there is a nobility without heraldry, a natural dignity whereby one man is ranked with another, another filed before him, according to the quality of his desert, and preeminence of his good parts. Though the corruption of these times and the bias of present practice wheel another way, thus it was in the first and primitive commonwealths, and is yet in the integrity and cradle of well-ordered polities, till corruption getteth ground, ruder desires laboring after that which wiser considerations contemn, everyone having a liberty to amass and heap up riches, and they a license or faculty to do or purchase anything.

Now since these dead bones have already outlasted the living ones of Methuselah,<sup>2</sup> and in a yard under ground, and thin walls of clay, outworn all the strong and specious buildings above it, and quietly rested under the drums and trappings of three conquests;<sup>3</sup> what prince can promise such diuturnity unto his relics, or might not gladly say,

Time, which antiquates antiquities, and hath an art to make dust of all things, hath yet spared these minor monuments. * * *

Circles and right lines limit and close all bodies, and the mortal right-lined circle must conclude and shut up all.<sup>5</sup> There is no antidote against the opium of time, which temporally considereth all things: our fathers find their graves in our short memories, and sadly tell us how we may be buried in our survivors. Gravestones tell truth scarce forty years.<sup>6</sup> Generations pass while some trees stand, and old families last not three oaks. our names, to be studied by antiquaries, who we were, and have new names given us like many of the mummies, are cold consolations unto the students of perpetuity, even by everlasting languages.

To be content that times to come should only know there was such a man, not caring whether they knew more of him, was a frigid ambition in Cardan;<sup>8</sup> disparaging his horoscopol inclination and judgment of himself. Who cares to subsist like Hippocrates' patients, or Achilles' horses in Homer, under naked nominations, without deserts and noble acts,<sup>9</sup> which are the balsam in our memories, the entelechia<sup>1</sup> and soul of our subsistences? To be nameless in worthy deeds exceeds<sup>2</sup> an infamous history. The Canaanitish woman lives more happily without a name than Herodias with one. And who had not rather have been the good thief than Pilate?<sup>3</sup>

But the iniquity of oblivion blindly scattereth her poppy,<sup>4</sup> and deals with the memory of men without distinction to merit of perpetuity. Who can but pity the founder of the pyramids? Herostratus lives that burnt the temple of Diana; he is almost lost that built it.<sup>5</sup> Time hath spared the epitaph of Adrian's horse,<sup>6</sup> confounded that of himself. In vain we compute our felicities by the advantage of our good names, since bad have equal durations, and Thersites is like to live as long as Agamemnon.<sup>7</sup> Who knows whether the best of men be known, or whether there be not more remarkable persons forgot than any that stand remembered in the known account of time? Without the favor of the everlasting register,<sup>8</sup> the first man had been as unknown as the last, and Methusalem's long life had been his only chronicle.

Oblivion is not to be hired: the greater part must be content to be as though they had not been, to be found in the register of God, not in the record of man. Twenty-seven names make up the first story, and the recorded names ever since contain not one living century.<sup>9</sup> The number of the dead long exceedeth all that shall live. The night of time far surpasseth the day, and who knows when was the equinox? Every hour adds unto that current arithmetic, which scarce stands one moment. And since death must be the Lucina<sup>1</sup> of life, and even pagans could doubt whether thus to live were to die; since our longest sun sets at right descensions, and makes but winter arches,<sup>2</sup> and therefore it cannot be long before we lie down in darkness, and have our light in ashes;<sup>3</sup> since the brother of death daily haunts us with dying mementos, and time that grows old itself bids us hope no long duration; diuturnity<sup>4</sup> is a dream and folly of expectation.

Darkness and light divide the course of time, and oblivion shares with memory a great part even of our living beings; we slightly remember our felicities, and the smartest strokes of affliction leave but short smart upon us. Sense endureth no extremities, and sorrows destroy us or themselves. To weep into stones are fables.<sup>5</sup> Afflictions induce callosities;<sup>6</sup> miseries are slippery, or fall like snow upon us, which notwithstanding is no unhappy stupidity. To be ignorant of evils to come, and forgetful of evils past, is a merciful provision in nature, whereby we digest the mixture of our few and evil days, and, our delivered senses not relapsing into cutting remembrances, our sorrows are not kept raw by the edge of repetitions. A great part of antiquity contented their hopes of subsistency with a transmigration of their souls: a good way to continue their memories, while, having the advantage of plural successions, they could not but act something remarkable in such variety of beings, and enjoying the fame of their passed selves, make accumulation of glory unto their last durations. Others, rather than be lost in the uncomfortable night of nothing, were content to recede into the common being, and make one particle of the public soul of all things, which was no more than to return into their unknown and divine original again. Egyptian ingenuity was more unsatisfied, contriving their bodies in sweet consistencies,<sup>7</sup> to attend the return of their souls. But all was vanity, feeding the wind, and folly. The Egyptian mummies, which Cambyses or time hath spared, avarice now consumeth. Mummy is become merchandise, Mizraim cures wounds, and Pharaoh is sold for balsams.<sup>8</sup>

In vain do individuals hope for immortality, or any patent<sup>9</sup> from oblivion, in preservations below the moon; men have been deceived even in their flatteries above the sun, and studied conceits to perpetuate their names in heaven. The various cosmography of that part hath already varied the names of contrived constellations: Nimrod is lost in Orion, and Osiris in the Dog Star.<sup>1</sup> While we look for incorruption in the heavens, we find they are but like the earth, durable in their main bodies, alterable in their parts: whereof beside comets and new stars, perspectives<sup>2</sup> begin to tell tales, and the spots that wander about the sun, with Phaethon's favor,<sup>3</sup> would make clear conviction.

There is nothing strictly immortal but immortality. Whatever hath no beginning may be confident of no end; all others have a dependent being and within the reach of destruction; which is the peculiar<sup>4</sup> of that necessary essence that cannot destroy itself; and the highest strain of omnipotency, to be so powerfully constituted as not to suffer even from the power of itself. But the sufficiency of Christian immortality frustrates all earthly glory, and the quality of either state after death makes a folly of posthumous memory. God, who can only<sup>5</sup> destroy our souls, and hath assured our resurrection, either of our bodies or names hath directly promised no duration. Wherein there is so much of chance that the boldest expectants have found unhappy frustration; and to hold long subsistence seems but a scape<sup>6</sup> in oblivion. But man is a noble animal, splendid in ashes and pompous in the grave, solemnizing natiuities and deaths with equal luster, nor omitting ceremonies of bravery<sup>7</sup> in the infamy of his nature.

Life is a pure flame, and we live by an invisible sun within us. A small fire sufficeth for life, great flames seemed too little after death, while men vainly affected precious pyres, and to burn like Sardanapalus;<sup>8</sup> but the wisdom of funeral laws found the folly of prodigal blazes, and reduced undoing fires unto the rule of sober obsequies, wherein few could be so mean as not to provide wood, pitch, a mourner, and an urn.

Five languages secured not the epitaph of Gordianus.<sup>9</sup> The man of God<sup>1</sup> lives longer without a tomb than any by one, invisibly interred by angels, and adjudged to obscurity, though not without some marks directing human discovery. Enoch and Elias, without either tomb or burial, in an anomalous state of being, are the great examples of perpetuity, in their long and living memory, in strict account being still on this side death, and having a late part yet to act upon this stage of earth.<sup>2</sup> If in the decretory term of the world<sup>3</sup> we shall not all die but be changed, according to received translation, the last day will make but few graves; at least quick resurrections will anticipate lasting sepulchers; some graves will be opened before they be quite closed, and Lazarus be no wonder.<sup>4</sup> When many that feared to die shall groan that they can die but once, the dismal state is the second and living death, when life puts despair on the damned; when men shall wish the coverings of mountains, not of monuments, and annihilations shall be courted.<sup>5</sup>

While some have studied monuments, others have studiously declined them; and some have been so vainly boisterous that they durst not acknowledge their graves, wherein Alaricus seems most subtle, who had a river turned to hide his bones at the bottom.<sup>6</sup> Even Sulla,<sup>7</sup> that thought himself safe in his urn, could not prevent revenging tongues, and stones thrown at his monument. Happy are they whom privacy makes innocent, who deal so with men in this world that they are not afraid to meet them in the next; who, when they die, make no commotion among the dead, and are not touched with that poetical taunt of Isaiah.<sup>8</sup>

Pyramids, arches, obelisks were but the irregularities of vainglory, and wild enormities of ancient magnanimity. But the most magnanimous resolution rests in the Christian religion, which trampleth upon pride, and sits on the neck of ambition, humbly pursuing that infallible perpetuity unto which all others must diminish their diameters, and be poorly seen in angles of contingency.<sup>9</sup>

Pious spirits who passed their days in raptures of futurity made little more of this world than the world that was before it, while they lay obscure in the chaos of preordination and night of their forebeings. And if any have been so happy as truly to understand Christian annihilation, ecstasy, exolution,<sup>1</sup> liquefaction, transformation, the kiss of the spouse, gustation of God, and ingression into the divine shadow, they have already had an handsome anticipation of heaven; the glory of the world is surely over, and the earth in ashes unto them.

To "subsist in lasting monuments, to live in their productions, to exist in their names and predicament of chimeras,<sup>2</sup> was large satisfaction unto old expectations, and made one part of their Elysiums.<sup>3</sup> But all this is nothing in the metaphysics of true belief. To live indeed is to be again ourselves, which being not only an hope but an evidence in noble believers, 'tis all one to lie in St. Innocent's churchyard, as in the sands of Egypt:<sup>4</sup> ready to be anything, in the ecstasy of being ever, and as content with six foot as the moles of Adrianus.<sup>5</sup>

THOMAS HOBBS

1588-1679

The English civil war and its aftermath raised fundamental questions about the nature and legitimacy of state power. In 1651 Thomas Hobbes attempted to answer those questions in his ambitious masterwork of political theory, Leviathan. A gifted mathematician, Hobbes believed in working rigorously from clearly defined first principles to conclusions, so he grounded his political vision upon a comprehensive philosophy of nature and of knowledge. Hobbes held that everything in the universe is composed only of matter; spirit does not exist. All knowledge is gained through sensory impressions, which are nothing but matter in motion. What we call the self is, for Hobbes, simply a tissue of sensory impressions—clear and immediate in the presence of the objects that evoke them, vague and less vivid in their absence. As a result, an iron determinism of cause and effect governs everything in the universe, including human action.

Human beings, Hobbes thought, seek self-preservation as a primary goal, and power as a means to secure that goal. His politics spring directly from these premises. Because all humans are roughly equal, physically and mentally, they possess equal hopes of attaining goods, as well as equal fears of danger from others. In the state of nature, before the foundation of some sovereign power to keep them all in awe, everyone is continually at war with everyone else, and life, in Hobbes's memorable phrase, is "solitary, poor, nasty, brutish, and short." To escape this ghastly strife, humans covenant with one another to establish a sovereign government over ail of them. That sovereign power—which need not be a king but is always indivisible—incorporates the wills and individuality of them all, so that the people no longer have wills, rights, or liberties apart from the sovereign's will. The sovereign's virtually absolute dominion over his subjects extends to the right to pronounce on all matters of religion and doctrine. The four parts of Hobbes's long treatise deal, respectively, with the nature of human beings, the creation of the state, the proper subordination of the church to state sovereignty, and what Hobbes labels the "kingdom of darkness," the Roman Catholic Church.

In Hobbes's system, the founding political covenant, once made, cannot be revoked. Revolution against or resistance to the sovereign for any reason is absurd, since no tyranny can be so evil as the state of war that the sovereign power prevents. Yet if the sovereign should be overthrown, the individual ruler has no further claim, and the people, for their safety, must accept the new sovereign power unconditionally. Hobbes's materialism and secularism scandalized Puritans. The Puritans also rejected its argument for an absolutism that cannot be modified or qualified, even on religious grounds. Other versions of covenant theory, for instance Milton's Tenure of Kings and Magistrates, insisted that the power transferred by the people to the sovereign could be limited or revoked. Nor did royalists find much reassurance in Hobbes's political theory. Hobbes was generally associated with the royalist cause, as a tutor to the Cavendish family and as an exile in Paris from 1640 to 1651, where he tutored the future Charles II. Yet his argument made no real distinction between a legitimate monarch and a successful usurper, like Oliver Cromwell; moreover, Hobbes's virtual exclusion of God from politics made many supporters of the king as uncomfortable as it did the Puritans. After the Restoration, Hobbes was widely suspected of atheism, and publication of many of his books, including a history of the civil war entitled Behemoth, was prohibited until after his death. Undeterred, Hobbes continued to write on a variety of psychological, political, and mathematical topics, completing a translation of Homer's Iliad and Odyssey at the age of eighty-six.

Hobbes's political theory did not fit easily into the established patterns of English thought partly because his perspective was essentially cosmopolitan. Educated at Oxford as a classicist, Hobbes traveled widely in Europe between 1610 and 1660 as a companion and tutor of noblemen, often remaining abroad for years at a time. During these lengthy sojourns he became acquainted with many of the leading intellectuals and scientists on the Continent, including Galileo, Descartes, and the prominent French mathematician Pierre Gassendi, who argued that the universe was governed entirely by mechanical principles. The most important political philosophers for Hobbes were also Continental figures: the Italian Niccolo Machiavelli, who saw human beings as naturally competitive and power hungry, and Jean Bodin, a French theorist of indivisible, absolute monarchy. One English writer who did influence Hobbes profoundly was Francis Bacon, whose amanuensis Hobbes had been in Bacon's last years. Ironically, Hobbes was not invited to join the Royal Society, established after the Restoration on Baconian principles, because his religious views were suspect and because he had quarreled with several of the society's founders. Yet Hobbes is truly Bacon's heir, sharing Bacon's utter lack of sentimentality and a memorably astringent prose style.

[THE ARTIFICIAL MAN]

Nature (the art whereby God hath made and governs the world) is by the art of man, as in many other things, so in this also imitated, that it can make an artificial<sup>2</sup> animal. For seeing life is but a motion of limbs, the beginning whereof is in some principal part within, why may we not say that all automata (engines that move themselves by springs and wheels as doth a watch) have an artificial life?<sup>3</sup> For what is the heart but a spring; and the nerves but so many strings; and the joints but so many wheels, giving motion to the whole body such as was intended by the artificer? Art goes yet further, imitating that rational and most excellent work of nature, man. For by art is created that great Leviathan called a Commonwealth or State (in Latin, Civitas), which is but an artificial man, though of greater stature and strength than the natural, for whose protection and defense it was intended; and in which the sovereignty is an artificial soul, as giving life and motion to the whole body; the magistrates and other officers of judicature and execution, artificial joints; reward and punishment (by which, fastened to the seat of the sovereignty, every joint and member is moved to perform his duty) are the nerves, that do the same in the body natural; the wealth and riches of all the particular members are the strength; salus populi (the people's safety) its business; counselors, by whom all things needful for it to know are suggested unto it, are the memory; equity and laws an artificial reason and will; concord, health; sedition, sickness; and civil war, death. Lastly, the pacts and covenants by which the parts of this body politic were at first made, set together, and united, resemble that Fiat or the "let us make man," pronounced by God in the creation.<sup>4</sup>

CHAPTER 1. OF SENSE

Concerning the thoughts of man, I will consider them first singly and afterwards in train or dependence upon one another. Singly, they are every one a representation or appearance of some quality or other accident of a body without us, which is commonly called an object. Which object worketh on the eyes, ears, and other parts of man's body, and by diversity of working produceth diversity of appearances.

The original of them all is that which we call sense. (For there is no conception in a man's mind which hath not at first, totally or by parts, been begotten upon the organs of sense.)<sup>5</sup> The rest are derived from that original.

1. The title refers to the primordial sea creature Leviathan, described in Job 41 as the prime evidence of and analogue to God's power, beyond all human measure and comprehension. Hobbes takes him as figure for the sovereign power in the state. Leviathan was also sometimes taken as a figure for Satan, on the basis of Job 41.34: "he is a king over all the children of pride."

2. Made by art.

3. Hobbes's definition of life as motion collapses the distinction between the life of humans and the life of machines or institutions.

4. Genesis 1.26.

5. This view of the mind as a blank sheet written on by physical experience will influence the philosophy of John Locke and David Hume.

To know the natural cause of sense is not very necessary to the business now in hand, and I have elsewhere written of the same at large. Nevertheless, to fill each part of my present method, I will briefly deliver the same in this place.

The cause of sense is the external body or object which presseth the organ proper to each sense, either immediately as in the taste and touch, or mediately, as in seeing, hearing, and smelling; which pressure, by the mediation of nerves and other strings and membranes of the body continued inwards to the brain and heart, causeth there a resistance or counterpressure or endeavor of the heart to deliver itself;<sup>6</sup> which endeavor, because outward, seemeth to be some matter without. And this seeming or fancy is that which men call sense; and consisteth, as to the eye, in a light or color figured; to the ear, in a sound; to the nostril in an odor; to the tongue and palate in a savor; and to the rest of the body in heat, cold, hardness, softness, and such other qualities as we discern by feeling. All which qualities called "sensible"<sup>7</sup> are, in the object that causeth them, but so many several motions of the matter by which it presseth our organs diversely. Neither, in us that are pressed, are they anything else but diverse motions; for motion produceth nothing but motion. But their appearance to us is fancy, the same waking, that dreaming. And as pressing, rubbing, or striking the eye makes us fancy a light; and pressing the ear produceth a din; so do the bodies also we see or hear produce the same by their strong though unobserved actions. For if those colors and sounds were in the bodies or objects that cause them, they could not be severed from them, as by glasses<sup>8</sup> and in echoes by reflection we see they are; where we know the thing we see is in one place, the appearance in another. And though at some certain distance the real and very object seem invested with the fancy it begets in us, yet still the object is one thing, the image or fancy is another. So that sense in all cases is nothing else but original fancy, caused (as I have said) by the pressure, that is by the motion, of external things upon our eyes, ears, and other organs thereunto ordained.

But the philosophy schools<sup>9</sup> through all the universities of Christendom, grounded upon certain texts of Aristotle, teach another doctrine, and say for the cause of vision, that the thing seen sendeth forth on every side a visible species—in English, a visible show, apparition, or aspect, or a being seen—the receiving whereof into the eye is seeing. And for the cause of hearing, that the thing heard sendeth forth an audible species, that is an audible aspect or audible being seen, which entering at the ear maketh hearing. Nay for the cause of understanding also they say the thing understood sendeth forth intelligible species, that is an intelligible being seen, which coming into the understanding makes us understand. I say not this as disapproving the use of universities, but because I am to speak hereafter of their office in a commonwealth, I must let you see on all occasions by the way what things would be amended in them; amongst which the frequency of insignificant speech<sup>1</sup> is one.

CHAPTER 13. OF THE NATURAL CONDITION OF MANKIND AS CONCERNING THEIR FELICITY AND MISERY

Nature hath made men so equal in the faculties of body and mind as that, though there be found one man sometimes manifestly stronger in body or of quicker mind than another, yet when all is reckoned together, the difference between man and man is not so considerable as that one man can thereupon claim to himself any benefit, to which another may not pretend as well as he. For as to the strength of body, the weakest has strength enough to kill the strongest, either by secret machination, or by confederacy<sup>2</sup> with others that are in the same danger with himself.

And as to the faculties of the mind—setting aside the arts grounded upon words, and especially that skill of proceeding upon general and infallible rules, called science; which very few have, and but in few things; as being not a native faculty, born with us; nor attained, as prudence, while we look after somewhat else—I find yet a greater equality amongst men than that of strength. For prudence is but experience, which equal time equally bestows on all men, in those things they equally apply themselves unto. That which may perhaps make such equality incredible is but a vain conceit of one's own wisdom, which almost all men think they have in a greater degree than the vulgar—that is, than all men but themselves and a few others, whom by fame, or for concurring with themselves, they approve. For such is the nature of men, that howsoever they may acknowledge many others to be more witty, or more eloquent, or more learned, yet they will hardly believe there be many so wise as themselves; for they see their own wit at hand, and other men's at a distance. But this proveth rather that men are in that point equal, than unequal. For there is not ordinarily a greater sign of the equal distribution of anything than that every man is contented with his share.

From this equality of ability ariseth equality of hope in the attaining of our ends. And therefore if any two men desire the same thing, which nevertheless they cannot both enjoy, they become enemies; and in the way to their end (which is principally their own conservation, and sometimes their delectation<sup>3</sup> only) endeavor to destroy or subdue one another. And from hence it comes to pass, that where an invader hath no more to fear than another man's single power, if one plant, sow, build, or possess a convenient seat, others may probably be expected to come prepared with forces united, to dispossess and deprive him, not only of the fruit of his labor, but also of his life or liberty. And the invader again is in the like danger of another.

And from this diffidence<sup>4</sup> of one another, there is no way for any man to secure himself so reasonable as anticipation; that is, by force or wiles to master the persons of all men he can, so long, till he see no other power great enough to endanger him; and this is no more than his own conservation requireth, and is generally allowed. Also because there be some, that taking pleasure in contemplating their own power in the acts of conquest, which they pursue farther than their security requires; if others that otherwise would be glad to be at ease within modest bounds, should not by invasion increase their power, they would not be able long time, by standing only on their defense, to subsist. And by consequence, such augmentation of dominion over men being necessary to a man's conservation, it ought to be allowed him.

2. Alliance.

3. Pleasure.

4. Lack of faith, mistrust.

Again, men have no pleasure, but on the contrary a great deal of grief, in keeping company, where there is no power able to overawe them all. For every man looketh that his companion should value him at the same rate he sets upon himself; and upon all signs of contempt, or undervaluing, naturally endeavors, as far as he dares (which amongst them that have no common power to keep them in quiet, is far enough to make them destroy each other), to extort a greater value from his contemners<sup>5</sup> by damage, and from others by the example.

So that in the nature of man, we find three principal causes of quarrel. First, competition; secondly, diffidence; thirdly, glory.

The first maketh men invade for gain; the second, for safety; and the third, for reputation. The first use violence to make themselves masters of other men's persons, wives, children, and cattle; the second, to defend them; the third, for trifles, as a word, a smile, a different opinion, and any other sign of undervalue, either direct in their persons, or by reflection in their kindred, their friends, their nation, their profession, or their name.

Hereby it is manifest that during the time men live without a common power to keep them all in awe, they are in that condition which is called war; and such a war as is of every man against every man. For war consisteth not in battle only, or the act of fighting, but in a tract of time wherein the will to contend by battle is sufficiently known; and therefore the notion of time is to be considered in the nature of war, as it is in the nature of weather. For as the nature of foul weather lieth not in a shower or two of rain, but in an inclination thereto of many days together; so the nature of war consisteth not in actual fighting, but in the known disposition thereto, during all the time there is no assurance to the contrary. All other time is peace.

Whatsoever therefore is consequent to a time of war, where every man is enemy to every man, the same is consequent to the time wherein men live without other security than what their own strength and their own invention shall furnish them withal. In such condition there is no place for industry, because the fruit thereof is uncertain, and consequently no culture of the earth; no navigation, nor use of the commodities that may be imported by sea; no commodious building; no instruments of moving, and removing, such things as require much force; no knowledge of the face of the earth; no account of time; no arts; no letters; no society; and, which is worst of all, continual fear, and danger of violent death; and the life of man, solitary, poor, nasty, brutish, and short.

It may seem strange to some man that has not well weighed these things, that nature should thus dissociate and render men apt to invade and destroy one another; and he may therefore, not trusting to this inference, made from the passions, desire perhaps to have the same confirmed by experience. Let him therefore consider with himself, when taking a journey, he arms himself and seeks to go well accompanied; when going to sleep, he locks his doors; when even in his house he locks his chests; and this when he knows there be laws, and public officers, armed, to revenge all injuries shall be done him; what opinion he has of his fellow subjects, when he rides armed; of his fellow citizens, when he locks his doors; and of his children and servants, when he locks his chests. Does he not there as much accuse mankind by his actions, as I do by my words? But neither of us accuse man's nature in it. The desires and other passions of man are in themselves no sin. No more are the actions that proceed from those passions, till they know a law that forbids them, which, till laws be made, they cannot know; nor can any law be made, till they have agreed upon the person that shall make it.

It may peradventure be thought there was never such a time nor condition of war as this; and I believe it was never generally so, over all the world; but there are many places where they live so now. For the savage people in many places of America, except the government of small families, the concord whereof dependeth on natural lust, have no government at all and live at this day in that brutish manner as I said before. Howsoever, it may be perceived what manner of life there would be, where there were no common power to fear, by the manner of life which men that have formerly lived under a peaceful government use to degenerate into in a civil war.<sup>6</sup>

But though there had never been any time wherein particular men were in a condition of war one against another, yet in all times, kings and persons of sovereign authority, because of their independency, are in continual jealousies, and in the state and posture of gladiators; having their weapons pointing, and their eyes fixed on one another; that is, their forts, garrisons, and guns upon the frontiers of their kingdoms, and continual spies upon their neighbors, which is a posture of war. But because they uphold thereby the industry of their subjects, there does not follow from it that misery which accompanies the liberty of particular men.

To this war of every man against every man, this also is consequent: that nothing can be unjust. The notions of right and wrong, justice and injustice, have there no place. Where there is no common power, there is no law; where no law, no injustice. Force and fraud are in war the two cardinal virtues. Justice and injustice are none of the faculties neither of the body nor mind. If they were, they might be in a man that were alone in the world, as well as his senses and passions. They are qualities that relate to men in society, not in solitude. It is consequent also to the same condition that there be no propriety,<sup>7</sup> no dominion, no mine and thine distinct; but only that to be every man's, that he can get; and for so long as he can keep it. And thus much for the ill condition which man by mere nature is actually placed in; though with a possibility to come out of it, consisting partly in the passions, partly in his reason.

The passions that incline men to peace are fear of death, desire of such things as are necessary' to commodious living, and a hope by their industry to obtain them. And reason suggesteth convenient articles of peace, upon which men may be drawn to agreement. These articles are they which otherwise are called the Laws of Nature, whereof I shall speak more particularly in the two following chapters.

FROM CHAPTER 14. OF THE FIRST AND SECOND NATURAL LAWS

The Right of Nature, which writers commonly call ius naturale, is the liberty each man hath to use his own power as he will himself for the preservation of his own nature, that is to say, of his own life; and consequently of doing anything which in his own judgment and reason he shall conceive to be the aptest means thereunto.

By Liberty is understood, according to the proper signification of the word,

6. Hobbes is thinking of the recent civil wars in England, and perhaps also of the Greek civil wars described by Thucydides (whom he translated).

7. Property.

the absence of external impediments, which impediments may oft take away part of a man's power to do what he would, but cannot hinder him from using the power left him according as his judgment and reason shall dictate to him.

A Law of Nature (lex naturalis) is a precept or general rule found out by reason, by which a man is forbidden to do that which is destructive of his life or taketh away the means of preserving the same; and to omit that by which he thinketh it may be best preserved. For though they that speak of this subject use to confound<sup>8</sup> Ius and Lex, Right and Law, yet they ought to be distinguished, because Right consisteth in liberty to do or to forbear, whereas Law determineth and bindeth to one of them: so that Law and Right differ as much as obligation and liberty, which in one and the same matter are inconsistent.

And because the condition of man (as hath been declared in the precedent chapter) is a condition of war of every one against every one, in which case every one is governed by his own reason, and there is nothing he can make use of that may not be a help unto him in preserving his life against his enemies: it followeth that in such a condition every man has a right to every thing, even to one another's body. And therefore as long as this natural right of every man to every thing endureth, there can be no security to any man (how strong or wise soever he be) of living out the time which nature ordinarily alloweth men to live. And consequently it is a precept or general rule of reason, That every man ought to endeavor peace, as far as he has hope of obtaining it; and when he cannot obtain it, that he may seek and use all helps and advantages of war. The first branch of which rule containeth the first and fundamental law of nature, which is to seek peace and follow it. The second, the sum of the right of nature, which is, b)> all means we can to defend ourselves.

From this fundamental law of nature, by which men are commanded to endeavor peace, is derived this second law: *That a man be willing, when others are so too, as far-forth as<sup>9</sup> for peace and defense of himself he shall think it necessary, to lay down this right to all things, and be contented with so much liberty against other men as he would allow other men against himself. For as long as any man holdeth this right of doing anything he liketh, so long are all men in the condition of war. But if other men will not lay down their right, as well as he, then there is no reason for anyone to divest himself of his. For that were to expose himself to prey (which no man is bound to) rather than to dispose himself to peace. This is that law of the Gospel: Whatsoever you require that others should do to you, that do ye to them.<sup>1</sup>*

FROM CHAPTER 15. OF OTHER LAWS OF NATURE

From that law of nature by which we are obliged to transfer to another such rights as, being retained, hinder the peace of mankind, there followeth a third, which is this: That men perform their covenants made:<sup>2</sup> without which, covenants are in vain, and but empty words; and, the right of all men to all things remaining, we are still in the condition of war.

And in this law of nature consisteth the fountain and original of Justice. For where no covenant hath preceded, there hath no right been transferred,

2. Though the terms are general, Hobbes refers in this chapter especially to the covenants men make with each other when they transfer power to the sovereign. Milton makes very different use of covenant theory to justify the rebellion and regicide in The Tenure of Kings and Magistrates.

and every man has right to every thing; and consequently no action can be unjust. But when a covenant is made, then to break it is unjust; and the definition of injustice is no other than the not performance of covenant. And whatsoever is not unjust is just. * * *

For the question is not of promises mutual where there is no security of performance on either side, as when there is no civil power erected over the parties promising; for such promises are no covenants. But either where one of the parties has performed already, or where there is a power to make him perform: there is the question whether it be against reason, that is against the benefit of the other, to perform or not. And I say it is not against reason.<sup>3</sup> For the manifestation whereof, we are to consider: first, that when a man doth a thing which (notwithstanding anything can be foreseen and reckoned on) tendeth to his own destruction, howsoever<sup>4</sup> some accident, which he could not expect, arriving may turn it to his benefit; yet such events do not make it reasonably or wisely done. Secondly, that in a condition of war, wherein every man to every man, for want of a common power to keep them all in awe, is an enemy, there is no man can hope by his own strength or wit to defend himself from destruction without the help of confederates; where everyone expects the same defense by the confederation that anyone else does. And therefore he which declares he thinks it reason to deceive those that help him can in reason expect no other means of safety than what can be had from his own single power. He therefore that breaketh his covenant, and consequently declareth that he thinks he may with reason do so, cannot be received into any society that unite themselves for peace and defense, but by the error of them that receive him; nor when he is received be retained in it without seeing the danger of their error; which errors a man cannot reasonably reckon upon as the means of his security. And therefore if he be left or cast out of society, he perisheth; and if he live in society, it is by the errors of other men, which he could not foresee nor reckon upon; and consequently against the reason of his preservation; and so as all men that contribute not to his destruction forbear him only out of ignorance of what is good for themselves.

As for the instance of gaining the secure and perpetual felicity of heaven by any way, it is frivolous: there being but one way imaginable, and that is not breaking, but keeping of covenant.

And for the other instance of attaining sovereignty by rebellion, it is manifest that though the event follow, yet because it cannot reasonably be expected, but rather the contrary; and because by gaining it so others are taught to gain the same in like manner, the attempt thereof is against reason. Justice therefore, that is to say, keeping of covenant, is a rule of reason, by which we are forbidden to do anything destructive to our life, and consequently a law of nature.

From Part 2: Of Commonwealth

CHAPTER 17. OF THE CAUSES, GENERATION, AND DEFINITION OF A COMMONWEALTH

The final cause, end, or design of men, who naturally love liberty and dominion over others, in the introduction of that restraint upon themselves in which

4. Even though.

we see them live in commonwealths, is the foresight of their own preservation and of a more contented life thereby—that is to say, of getting themselves out from their miserable condition of war which is necessarily consequent, as has been shown (Chapter 13), to the natural passions of men when there is no visible power to keep them in awe and tie them by fear of punishment to the performance of their covenants and observation of those laws of nature set down in the fourteenth and fifteenth chapters.

For the laws of nature—as justice, equity, modesty, mercy, and, in sum, doing to others as we would be done to—of themselves, without the terror of some power to cause them to be observed, are contrary to our natural passions, that carry us to partiality,<sup>5</sup> pride, revenge, and the like. And covenants without the sword are but words, and of no strength to secure a man at all. Therefore, notwithstanding the laws of nature (which everyone has then kept when he had the will to keep them, when he can do it safely), if there be no power erected, or not great enough for our security, every man will—and may lawfully—rely on his own strength and art for caution<sup>6</sup> against all other men. And in all places where men have lived by small families, to rob and spoil one another has been a trade, and so far from being reputed against the law of nature that the greater spoils they gained, the greater was their honor; and men observed no other laws therein but the laws of honor—that is to abstain from cruelty, leaving to men their lives and instruments of husbandry. And as small families did then, so now do cities and kingdoms, which are but greater families, for their own security enlarge their dominions upon all pretenses of danger and fear of invasion or assistance that may be given to invaders, and endeavor as much as they can to subdue or weaken their neighbors by open force and secret arts, for want of other caution, justly; and are remembered for it in after ages with honor.

Nor is it the joining together of a small number of men that gives them this security, because in small numbers small additions on the one side or the other make the advantage of strength so great as is sufficient to carry the victory, and therefore gives encouragement to an invasion. The multitude sufficient to confide in for our security is not determined by any certain number but by comparison with the enemy we fear, and is then sufficient when the odds of the enemy is not of so visible and conspicuous moment to determine the event<sup>7</sup> of war as to move him to attempt.

And be there never so great a multitude, yet if their actions be directed according to their particular judgments and particular appetites, they can expect thereby no defense nor protection, neither against a common enemy nor against the injuries of one another. For being distracted in opinion<sup>8</sup> concerning the best use and application of their strength, they do not help but hinder one another, and reduce their strength by mutual opposition to nothing; whereby they are easily not only subdued by a very few that agree together, but also, when there is no common enemy, they make war upon each other for their particular interest. For if we could suppose a great multitude of men to consent in the observation of justice and other laws of nature without a common power to keep them all in awe, we might as well suppose all mankind to do the same, then there neither would be, nor need to be, any civil government or commonwealth at all, because there would be peace without subjection.

5. Favoritism, to oneself or another.

6. Precaution, defense.

7. Outcome.

8. I.e., by opinions.

Nor is it enough for the security which men desire should last all the time of their life that they be governed and directed by one judgment for a limited time, as in one battle or one war. For though they obtain a victory by their unanimous endeavor against a foreign enemy, yet afterwards, when either they have no common enemy or he that by one part is held for an enemy is by another part held for a friend, they must needs, by the difference of their interests, dissolve and fall again into a war among themselves.

It is true that certain living creatures, as bees and ants, live sociably one with another—which are therefore by Aristotle numbered among political creatures—and have no other direction than their particular judgments and appetites, nor speech whereby one of them can signify to another what he thinks expedient for the common benefit; and therefore some man may perhaps desire to know why mankind cannot do the same. To which I answer:

First, that men are continually in competition for honor and dignity, which these creatures are not; and consequently among men there arises on that ground envy and hatred and finally war, but among these not so.

Secondly, that among these creatures the common good differs not from the private; and being by nature inclined to their private, they procure thereby the common benefit. But man, whose joy consists in comparing himself with other men, can relish nothing but what is eminent.

Thirdly, that these creatures—having not, as man, the use of reason—do not see nor think they see any fault in the administration of their common business; whereas among men there are very many that think themselves wiser and abler to govern the public better than the rest, and these strive to reform and innovate, one this way, another that way, and thereby bring it into distraction and civil war.

Fourthly, that these creatures, though they have some use of voice in making known to one another their desires and other affections, yet they want that art of words by which some men can represent to others that which is good in the likeness of evil, and evil in the likeness of good, and augment or diminish this apparent greatness of good and evil, discontenting men and troubling their peace at their pleasure.

Fifthly, irrational creatures cannot distinguish between injury and damage, and therefore, as long as they be at ease, they are not offended with their fellows; whereas man is then most troublesome when he is most at ease, for then it is that he loves to show his wisdom and control the actions of them that govern the commonwealth.

Lastly, the agreement of these creatures is natural, that of men is by covenant only, which is artificial, and therefore it is no wonder if there be somewhat else required besides covenant to make their agreement constant and lasting, which is a common power to keep them in awe and to direct their actions to the common benefit.

The only way to erect such a common power as may be able to defend them from the invasion of foreigners and the injuries of one another, and thereby to secure them in such sort as that by their own industry and by the fruits of the earth they may nourish themselves and live contentedly, is to confer all their power and strength upon one man, or upon one assembly of men that may reduce all their wills, by plurality of voices, into one will, which is as much as to say, to appoint one man or assembly of men to bear their person, and everyone to own and acknowledge himself to be the author of whatsoever he that so bears their person shall act or cause to be acted in those things which concern the common peace and safety, and therein to submit their wills everyone to his will, and their judgments to his judgment. This is more than consent or concord; it is a real unity of them all in one and the same person, made by covenant of every man with every man, in such manner as if every man should say to every man, "I authorize and give up my right of governing myself to this man, or to this assembly of men, on the condition that you give up your right to him and authorize all his actions in like manner." This done, the multitude so united in one person is called a commonwealth, in Latin civitas. This is the generation of that great Leviathan (or rather, to speak more reverently, of that mortal god) to whom we owe, under the immortal God, our peace and defense. For by this authority, given him by every particular man in the commonwealth, he has the use of so much power and strength conferred on him that, by terror thereof, he is enabled to form the wills of them all to peace at home and mutual aid against their enemies abroad. And in him consists the essence of the commonwealth, which, to define it, is one person, of whose acts a great multitude, by mutual covenants one with another, have made themselves everyone the aijihor, to the end he may use the strength and means of them all asjhe'shall think expedient for their peace and common defense. And he that carries this person is called sovereign and said to have sovereign power; and everyone besides, his subject.

1593-1633

Unlike the learned and witty style of the work of his friend John Donne, George Herbert's style in his volume of religious poetry, The Temple, is deceptively simple and graceful. But it is also marked by self-irony, a remarkable intellectual and emotional range, and a highly conscious artistry that is evident in the poems' tight construction, exact diction, perfect control of tone, and enormously varied stanzaic forms and rhythmic patterns. These poems reflect Herbert's struggle to define his relationship to God through biblical metaphors invested with the tensions of relationships familiar in his own society: king and subject, lord and courtier, master and servant, father and child, bridegroom and bride, friends of unequal status. None of Herbert's secular English poems survives, so his reputation rests on this single volume, published posthumously. The Temple contains a long prefatory poem, "The Church-Porch," and a long concluding poem, "Church Militant," which together enclose a collection of 177 short lyrics entitled The Church, among which are sonnets, songs, hymns, laments, meditative poems, dialogue poems, acrostic poems, emblematic poems, and more. Herbert's own description of the collection is apt: "a picture of the many spiritual conflicts that have passed between God and my soul." Izaak Walton reports that Herbert gave the manuscript to his friend Nicholas Farrar, head of a quasi-monastic community at Little Gidding, with instructions to publish it if he thought it would "turn to the advantage of any dejected poor soul" and otherwise to burn it. Fortunately, Farrar chose to publish, and The Temple became the major influence on the religious lyric poets of the Caroline age: Henry Vaughan, Richard Crashaw, Thomas Traherne, and even Edward Taylor, the American colonial poet.

The fifth son of an eminent Welsh family, Herbert (and his nine siblings) had an upbringing carefully monitored by his mother, Magdalen Herbert, patron and friend of Donne and several other scholars and poets. Herbert was educated at Westminster School and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he subsequently held a fellowship and wrote Latin poetry: elegies on the death of Prince Henry (1612), witty epigrams, poems on Christ's Passion and death, and poems defending the rites of the English church. In 1620 he was appointed "public orator," the official spokesman and correspondent for the university. This was a step toward a career at court or in public service, as was his election as the member of Parliament from Montgomery in 1624. But that route was closed off by the death of influential patrons and the change of monarchs. Like Donne, Herbert hesitated for some years before being ordained, but in 1630 he took up pastoral duties in the small country parish at Bemerton in Wiltshire. Whereas Donne preached to monarchs and statesmen, Herbert ministered to a few cottagers, and none of his sermons survive. His small book on the duties of his new life, A Priest to the Temple; or, The Country Parson, testifies to the earnestness and joy, but also to the aristocratic uneasiness, with which he embraced that role. In chronic bad health, he lived only three more years—performing pastoral duties assiduously, writing and revising his poems, playing music, and listening to the organ and choir at nearby Salisbury Cathedral.

Herbert locates himself in the church through many poems that treat church liturgy, architecture, and art—e.g., "Church Monuments" and "The Windows"—but his primary emphasis is always on the soul's inner architecture. Unlike Donne's poems, Herbert's poems do not voice anxious fears about his salvation or about his desperate sins and helplessness; his anxieties center rather on his relationship with Christ, most often represented as that of friend with friend. Many poems register the speaker's distress over the vacillations and regressions in this relationship, over his lack of "fruition" in God's service, and over the instability in his own nature, purposes, and temperament. In several dialogic poems the speaker's difficulties and anxieties are alleviated or resolved by the voice of a divine friend heard within or recalled through a Scripture text (as in "The Collar"). In poem after poem he has to come to terms with the fact that his relationship with Christ is always radically unequal, that Christ must both initiate it and enable his own response. Herbert struggles constantly with the paradox that, as the works of a Christian poet, his poems ought to give fit praise to God but cannot possibly do so—an issue explored in "The Altar," the two "Jordan" poems, "Easter," "The Forerunners," and many more.

His recourse is to develop a biblical poetics that renounces conventional poetic styles—"fiction and false hair"—to depend instead on God's "art" wrought in his own soul and displayed in the language, metaphors, and symbolism of the Bible. He makes scant use of Donnean learned imagery, but his scriptural allusions carry profound significances. A biblical metaphor provides the unifying motif for the volume: the New Testament temple in the human heart (1 Corinthians 3.16). Another recurring biblical metaphor represents the Christian as plant or tree or flower in God's garden, needing pruning, rain, and nurture. Herbert was profoundly influenced by the genre of the emblem, which typically associated mysterious but meaningful pictures and mottoes with explanatory text. Shaped poems like "The Altar" or "Easter Wings" present image and picture at once; others, like "The Windows," resemble emblem commentary. Other poems allude to typological symbolism, which reads persons and events in the Old Testament as types or foreshadowings of Christ, the fulfillment or antitype. Often, as in "The Bunch of Grapes," Herbert locates both type and antitype in the speaker's soul.

       About some land which he had dearly bought
       Long since on earth, to take possession.

10    I straight" returned, and knowing his great birth,                   atonce
       Sought him accordingly in great resorts—
       In cities, theaters, gardens, parks, and courts:
       At length I heard a ragged noise and mirth

          Of thieves and murderers; there I him espied,
       Who straight, "Your suit is granted," said, and died.

1. The title of Herbert's volume sets his poems in relation to David's psalms for the Temple at Jerusalem; his are "psalms" for the New Testament temple in the heart. All of the following poems come from this volume, published in 1633.

2. A variety of emblem poem. Emblems customarily have three parts; a picture, a motto, and a poem. This land collapses picture and poem into one, presenting the emblem image by its very shape. Shaped poems have been used by authors from Hellenistic times to Dylan Thomas.

3. A reference to Exodus 20.25, in which the Lord enjoins Moses to build an altar of uncut stones, not touched by any tool, and also to Psalm 51.17: "a broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise."

4. A reference to Luke 19.40: "I tell you that, if these should hold their peace, the stones would immediately cry out." Herbert's poems obtain much of their resonance from their biblical echoes.

1. Literally, "buying back." In this beautifully concise sonnet Herbert figures God as a landlord, himself as a discontented tenant.

2. I.e., to ask him for a new lease, with a smaller rent; the figure points to the New Testament supplanting the Old.

Easter<sup>1</sup>

Rise, heart, thy lord is risen. Sing his praise
 Without delays,
 Who takes thee by the hand, that thou likewise
 With him may'st rise;
 5 That, as his death calcined<sup>0</sup> thee to dust, burned, to powder
 His life may make thee gold, and, much more, just.

Awake, my lute, and struggle for thy part
 With all thy art.
 The cross taught all wood to resound his name
 10 Who bore the same.
 His stretched sinews taught all strings what key
 Is best to celebrate this most high day.

Consort, both heart and lute, and twist<sup>2</sup> a song
 Pleasant and long;
 15 Or, since all music is but three parts vied<sup>3</sup>
 And multiplied,
 Oh let thy blessed spirit bear a part,
 And make up our defects with his sweet art.

The Song

I got me flowers to straw<sup>0</sup> thy way,<sup>4</sup> strew
 20 I got me boughs off many a tree;
 But thou wast up by break of day
 And brought'st thy sweets along with thee.

The sun arising in the east,
 Though he give light and th' east perfume,
 25 If they should offer to contest
 With thy arising, they presume.

Can there be any day but this,
 Though many suns to shine endeavor?
 We count three hundred, but we miss:<sup>o</sup> misunderstand
 30 There is but one, and that one ever.

]. The first three stanzas work out the poetics of writing hymns; then comes the hymn itself.

2. Weave. "Consort": harmonize.

3. Increased by repetition. Harmony is based on the triad, the chord.

4. Evokes the scene of Christ's entry into Jerusalem (Matthew 21.8).

Easter Wings<sup>1</sup>

Lord, who createdst man in wealth and store,<sup>0</sup> abundance
 Though foolishly he lost the same,
 Decaying more and more
 Till he became
 5 Most poor:
 With thee
 O let me rise
 As larks, harmoniously,
 And sing this day thy victories:
 10 Then shall the fall further the flight in me.<sup>2</sup>

My tender age in sorrow did begin:
 And still with sicknesses and shame
 Thou didst so punish sin,
 That I became 15 Most thin.
 With thee
 Let me combine,
 And feel this day thy victory;
 For, if I imp<sup>3</sup> my wing on thine,
 20 Affliction shall advance the flight in me.

Affliction (1)<sup>1</sup>

When first thou didst entice to thee my heart,
 I thought the service brave:<sup>0</sup> splendid
 So many joys I writ down for my part,
 Besides what I might have
 5 Out of my stock of natural delights,
 Augmented with thy gracious benefits.

I looked on thy furniture so fine,
 And made it fine to me;
 Thy glorious household stuff did me entwine,
 10 And 'tice<sup>0</sup> me unto thee. entice

Such stars I counted mine: both heaven and earth
 Paid me my wages in a world of mirth.

What pleasures could I want,<sup>0</sup> whose king I served, lack
 Where joys my fellows were?
 15 Thus argued into hopes, my thoughts reserved
 No place for grief or fear;

1. Another emblem poem whose shape presents the emblem picture; the lines, increasing and decreasing, imitate flight, and also the spiritual experience of falling and rising. Early editions printed the poem with the lines running vertically, making the wing shape more apparent.

2. Refers to the "Fortunate Fall," which brought humankind so great a redeemer.

3. In falconry, to insert feathers in a bird's wing.
1. Herbert sometimes used the same title for several poems, thereby associating them; editors distinguish them by adding numbers.

Therefore my sudden soul caught at the place,
And made her youth and fierceness seek thy face.

At first thou gav'st me milk and sweetnesses;
20 I had my wish and way:
My days were strawed<sup>0</sup> with flowers and happiness; strewn
There was no month but May.
But with my years sorrow did twist and grow,
And made a party unawares<sup>0</sup> for woe. unwittingly

25 My flesh began unto<sup>o</sup> my soul in pain, started complaining to Sicknesses cleave<sup>0</sup> my bones; penetrate
Consuming agues<sup>0</sup> dwell in every vein, fevers with convulsions
And tune my breath to groans.
Sorrow was all my soul; I scarce believed,
30 Till grief did tell me roundly, that I lived.

When I got health, thou took'st away my life,
And more; for my friends die:
My mirth and edge was lost: a blunted knife
Was of more use than I.
35 Thus thin and lean without a fence or friend,
I was blown through with every storm and wind.

Whereas my birth and spirit rather took
The way that takes the town,
Thou didst betray me to a lingering book,
40 And wrap me in a gown.<sup>0</sup> priest's garb
I was entangled in the world of strife,
Before I had the power to change my life.

Yet, for I threatened oft the siege to raise,
Not simpering all mine age,
45 Thou often didst with academic praise
Melt and dissolve my rage.
I took thy sweetened pill, till I came where
I could not go away, nor persevere.

Yet lest perchance I should too happy be 50 In my unhappiness,
Turning my purge<sup>0</sup> to food, thou throwest me laxative
Into more sicknesses.
Thus doth thy power cross-bias me,<sup>o</sup> not making turn me from my aim
Thine own gift good, yet me from my ways taking.

55 Now I am here, what thou wilt do with me
None of my books will show:
I read, and sigh, and wish I were a tree,
For sure then I should grow
To fruit or shade; at least, some bird would trust
60 Her household to me, and I should be just.

Yet, though thou troublest me, I must be meek;
     In weakness must be stout.
 Well, I will change the service, and go seek
     Some other master out.
 65 Ah, my dear God! though I am clean forgot,
 Let me not love thee, if I love thee not.

Prayer (1)<sup>1</sup>

Prayer, the church's banquet; angels' age,
     God's breath in man returning to his birth;
 The soul in paraphrase,<sup>2</sup> heart in pilgrimage;
     The Christian plummet,<sup>3</sup> sounding heaven and earth;
 5 Engine against th' Almighty, sinner's tower,
     Reversed thunder, Christ-side-piercing spear,
 The six-days' world transposing<sup>4</sup> in an hour;
     A kind of tune which all things hear and fear:
 Softness and peace and joy and love and bliss;
 10 Exalted manna,<sup>5</sup> gladness of the best;
     Heaven in ordinary,<sup>6</sup> man well dressed,
 The milky way, the bird of paradise,
 Church bells beyond the stars heard, the soul's blood,
 The land of spices; something understood.

Jordan (1)<sup>1</sup>

Who says that fictions only and false hair
 Recome a verse? Is there in truth no beauty?
 Is all good structure in a winding stair?
 May no lines pass, except they do their duty<sup>0</sup>      pay reverence
 5 Not to a true, but painted chair?<sup>2</sup>
 Is it no verse, except enchanted groves
 And sudden arbors shadow coarse-spun lines?<sup>3</sup>
 Must purling<sup>0</sup> streams refresh a lover's loves?      rippling
 10 Must all be veiled,<sup>4</sup> while he that reads, divines,
     Catching the sense at two removes?

1. This extraordinary sonnet is a series of epithets without a main verb, defining prayer by metaphor.

2. Clarifying by expansion.

3. A weight used to measure ("sound") the depth of water.

4. A musical term indicating sounds produced at another pitch from the original.

5. The food God supplied to the Israelites in the wilderness.

6. I.e., everyday heaven.

1. The river Jordan, which the Israelites crossed to enter the Promised Land, was also taken as a symbol for baptism.

2. It was the custom for men to bow before a throne, whether it was occupied or not (see Donne, "Satire 3," lines 47-48, p. 1286), but to require bowing before a throne in a painting would be ridiculous.

3. "Sudden," i.e., that appear unexpectedly (an artificial effect much sought after in landscape gardening). "Shadow": shade.

4. As in allegory.

Shepherds<sup>5</sup> are honest people: let them sing;
 Riddle who list,<sup>6</sup> for me, and pull for prime:<sup>6</sup> wishes
 I envy no man's nightingale or spring;
 Nor let them punish me with loss of rhyme,
 15 Who plainly say, My God, My King.<sup>7</sup>

Church Monuments<sup>1</sup>

While that my soul repairs to her devotion,
 Here I entomb my flesh, that it betimes<sup>0</sup> while time remains
 May take acquaintance of this heap of dust
 To which the blast of death's incessant motion,
 5 Fed with the exhalation of our crimes,
 Drives all at last. Therefore I gladly trust

My body to this school, that it may learn
 To spell his elements and find his birth
 Written in dusty heraldry and lines<sup>0</sup> engraving, genealogy
 10 Which dissolution sure doth best discern,
 Comparing dust with dust and earth with earth.<sup>2</sup>
 These laugh at jet and marble,<sup>3</sup> put for signs

To sever the good fellowship of dust
 And spoil the meeting. What shall point out them<sup>4</sup>
 15 When they shall bow and kneel and fall down flat
 To kiss those heaps which now they have in trust?
 Dear flesh, while I do pray, learn here thy stem
 And true descent, that, when thou shalt grow fat

And wanton in thy cravings, thou mayest know
 20 That flesh is but the glass<sup>0</sup> which holds the dust hourglass
 That measures all our time, which also shall
 Be crumbled into dust. Mark here below
 How tame these ashes are, how free from lust,
 That thou mayest fit thyself against thy fall.

The Windows<sup>1</sup>

Lord, how can man preach thy eternal word?
 He is a brittle, crazy<sup>0</sup> glass, flawed, distorting
 Yet in thy temple thou dost him afford
 This glorious and transcendent place,
 5 To be a window through thy grace.

5. Conventional pastoral poets.

6. To draw a lucky card in the game of primero. "For me": as far as I am concerned.

7. Echoes Psalm 145.1: "my God, O king."

1. The earlier, manuscript version of the poem does not divide it into stanzas.

2. Alludes to Genesis 3.19: "for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."

3. Jet (black basalt) and marble are used for tomb monuments. "These": i.e., dust and earth.

4. The inhabitants of the tombs.

1. From his little parish at Bemerton, Herbert used to walk twice a week across Salisbury Plain to the great cathedral, where he delighted not only in the music but in the stained-glass windows. This poem explores how the preacher himself may become such a window.

But when thou dost anneal in glass<sup>2</sup> thy story,
 Making thy life to shine within
 The holy preachers, then the light and glory
 More reverend grows, and more doth win,
 Which else shows wat'rish, bleak, and thin.

Doctrine and life, colors and light, in one
 When they combine and mingle, bring
 A strong regard and awe; but speech alone
 Doth vanish like a flaring thing,
 And in the ear, not conscience, ring.

Denial

When my devotions could not pierce
 Thy silent ears,
 Then was my heart broken, as was my verse;
 My breast was full of fears
 And disorder;<sup>1</sup>

My bent thoughts, like a brittle bow,
 Did fly asunder:
 Each took his way; some would to pleasures go,
 Some to the wars and thunder
 Of alarms.

As good go anywhere, they say,
 As to benumb
 Both knees and heart in crying night and day,
Come, come, my God, O come!
 But no hearing.

O that thou shouldst give dust a tongue
 To cry to thee,
 And then not hear it crying! All day long
 My heart was in my knee,
 But no hearing.

Therefore my soul lay out of sight,
 Untuned, unstrung;
 My feeble spirit, unable to look right,
 Like a nipped<sup>0</sup> blossom, hung Discontented.

frostbitten

O cheer and tune my heartless breast;
 Defer no time,
 That so thy favors granting my request,
 They and my mind may chime,<sup>0</sup>
 And mend my rhyme.

ring together, agree

2. To burn colors into glass.

1. Unrhymed, as are the concluding lines of each stanza except the last.

Virtue

Sweet day, so cool, so calm, so bright,
 The bridal of the earth and sky:
 The dew shall weep thy fall tonight,
 For thou must die.

5 Sweet rose, whose hue, angry and brave,<sup>1</sup>
 Bids the rash gazer wipe his eye:
 Thy root is ever in its grave,
 And thou must die.

Sweet spring, full of sweet days and roses,
 10 A box where sweets<sup>0</sup> compacted lie; perfumes
 My music shows ye have your closes,<sup>2</sup>
 And all must die.

Only a sweet and virtuous soul,
 Like seasoned timber, never gives;
 15 But though the whole world turn to coal,<sup>3</sup>
 Then chiefly lives.

Man

My God, I heard this day
 That none doth build a stately habitation,
 But he that means to dwell therein.
 What house more stately hath there been,
 5 Or can be, than is man? to<sup>1</sup> whose creation
 All things are in decay.

For man is every thing
 And more; he is a tree, yet bears more<sup>2</sup> fruit;
 A beast, yet is or should be more;
 10 Reason and speech we only bring.<sup>3</sup>
 Parrots may thank us, if they are not mute:
 They go upon the score.<sup>4</sup>

Man is all symmetry,
 Full of proportions, one limb to another,
 15 And all to all the world besides;<sup>5</sup>
 Each part may call the farthest, brother;
 For head with foot hath private amity,
 And both with moons and tides.

1. Splendid. "Angry": having the hue of anger, red.
 2. Concluding cadences in music. This poem has often been set to music.

3. Will be reduced to a cinder at the Last Judgment.

1. Compared to.

2. A textual variant is "no."

3. Man has a vegetable, an animal, and a spiritual nature; he is the only creature that speaks and reasons.

4. Parrots are indebted to us for speech.

5. The notion of man as microcosm, whose parts all correspond to features of the great world. Cf. Donne, Holy Sonnet 5, p. 1295, and Browne, Religio Medici, p. 1587.

Nothing hath got so far
 But man hath caught and kept it as his prey.
 His eyes dismount<sup>0</sup> the highest star: bring dawn to earth
 He is in little all the sphere.<sup>0</sup> the universe
 Herbs gladly cure our flesh; because that they Find their acquaintance there.

For us the winds do blow,
 The earth doth rest, heav'n move, and fountains flow;
 Nothing we see but means our good,
 As our delight, or as our treasure.
 The whole is either our cupboard of food,
 Or cabinet of pleasure.

The stars have us to bed;
 Night draws the curtain which the sun withdraws,
 Music and light attend our head.
 All things unto our flesh are kind<sup>0</sup> akin
 In their descent and being; to our mind
 In their ascent and cause.

Each thing is full of duty.
 Waters united are our navigation,
 Distinguished,<sup>0</sup> our habitation; separated
 Below, our drink; above, our meat;<sup>6</sup>
 Both are our cleanliness. Hath one such beauty?
 Then how are all things neat!

More servants wait on man
 Than he'll take notice of; in every path,
 He treads down that<sup>7</sup> which doth befriend him,
 When sickness makes him pale and wan.
 O mighty love! Man is one world, and hath
 Another to attend him.

Since then, my God, thou hast
 So brave<sup>0</sup> a palace built, O, dwell in it, splendid
 That it may dwell with thee at last!
 Till then, afford us so much wit,
 That, as the world serves us, we may serve thee,
 And both thy servants be.

Jordan (2)<sup>1</sup>

When first my lines of heavenly joys made mention,
 Such was their luster, they did so excel,
 That I sought out quaint words and trim invention;
 My thoughts began to burnish,<sup>0</sup> sprout, and swell, burgeon

6. Oceans are valuable for navigation; the earth was created by dividing waters from waters (Genesis 1.6–7); on earth water is drink; from above it provides rain to grow our food ("meat").

7. The herb that will cure him when he's sick.
 1. Cf. "Jordan (1)" (p. 1611), and Sidney, Astro-phil and Stella 1 (p. 975).

5 Curling with metaphors a plain intention,
Decking the sense, as if it were to sell.<sup>0</sup> for sale

Thousands of notions in my brain did run,
Offering their service, if I were not sped:<sup>0</sup> su-pplied, satisfied
I often blotted what I had begun;

10 This was not quick<sup>0</sup> enough, and that was dead. lively
Nothing could seem too rich to clothe the sun,
Much less those joys which trample on his head.<sup>2</sup>

As flames do work and wind when they ascend,
So did I weave myself into the sense;

15 But while I bustled, I might hear a friend
Whisper, "How wide<sup>3</sup> is all this long pretense!
There is in love a sweetness ready penned:
Copy out only that, and save expense."

Time

Meeting with Time, "Slack thing," said I,<sup>1</sup>

"Thy scythe is dull; whet it for shame."

"No marvel, sir," he did reply,

"If it at length deserve some blame;

5 But where one man would have me grind it,
Twenty for one too sharp do find it."

"Perhaps some such of old did pass,

Who above all things loved this life;

To whom thy scythe a hatchet was,

10 Which now is but a pruning knife.<sup>2</sup>
Christ's coming hath made man thy debtor,
Since by thy cutting he grows better.

"And in his blessing thou art blessed,

For where thou only wert before

is An executioner at best,
Thou art a gardener now, and more,
An usher to convey our souls
Beyond the utmost stars and poles.

"And this is that makes life so long,

20 While it detains us from our God.
Ev'n pleasures here increase the wrong,
And length of days lengthens the rod.<sup>0</sup> used for blows
Who wants<sup>0</sup> the place where God doth dwell lacks
Partakes already half of hell.

2. The "joys which trample on" the sun's head are heavenly joys (line 1).

3. Irrelevant, wide of the mark.

1. Herbert's speaker reports his dialogue with

Time.

2. A hatchet kills, a pruning knife improves growing things.

25 "Of what strange length must that needs be,
 Which ev'n eternity excludes!"—
 Thus far Time heard me patiently,
 Then chafing said, "This man deludes:
 What do I here before his door?"
 30 He doth not crave less time, but more."

The Bunch of Grapes<sup>1</sup>

Joy, I did lock thee up;<sup>o</sup> but some bad man hold you fast
 Hath let thee out again,
 And now methinks I am where I began
 Sev'n years ago: one vogue<sup>o</sup> and vein, tendency
 5 One air of thoughts usurps my brain.
 I did towards Canaan draw, but now I am
 Brought back to the Red Sea, the sea of shame.<sup>2</sup>

For as the Jews of old by God's command
 Traveled, and saw no town,
 10 So now each Christian hath his journeys spanned;
 Their story pens and sets us down.<sup>3</sup>
 A single deed is small renown.
 God's works are wide, and let in future times;
 His ancient justice overflows our crimes.

15 Then have we too our guardian fires and clouds;
 Our Scripture-dew<sup>o</sup> drops fast; manna
 We have our sands and serpents, tents and shrouds;<sup>o</sup> temporary shelters
 Alas! our murmurings come not last.
 But where's the cluster? where's the taste
 20 Of mine inheritance? Lord, if I must borrow,
 Let me as well take up their joy as sorrow.

But can he want<sup>o</sup> the grape who hath the wine? lack
 I have their fruit and more.
 Blessed be God, who prospered Noah's vine<sup>4</sup>
 25 And made it bring forth grapes good store.
 But much more him I must adore
 Who of the Law's sour juice<sup>5</sup> sweet wine did make,
 Even God himself being pressed for my sake.

1. When the children of Israel almost lost hope in the wilderness, God inspired Moses to send forth scouts, who returned to report that Canaan was a land of milk and honey. They brought back a bunch of grapes so big they had to carry it between them on a pole (Numbers 13.23).

2. The Red Sea's color suggests blushing for shame. Because the Israelites complained about their long ordeal in the wilderness after leaving Egypt, God drove them back toward the Red Sea.

3. The wandering of the Israelites in the wilderness toward the land of Canaan was taken to be a type (prefiguration) of the Christian's trials on the path of salvation. "Spanned": measured out.

4. Noah's vine (Genesis 9) was taken as a type of the earth replenished by God after the Flood.

5. The severe rules of the Old Testament as contrasted with the sweeter and more liberal covenant of the New Testament, which Christ's crucifixion established.

The Pilgrimage

I traveled on, seeing the hill where lay
 My expectation.
 A long it was and weary way.
 The gloomy cave of desperation
 I left on th' one, and on the other side
 The rock of pride.<sup>1</sup>

And so I came to fancy's meadow, strowed<sup>0</sup> strewn
 With many a flower;
 Fain<sup>o</sup> would I here have made abode, gladly
 But I was quickened by my hour.<sup>2</sup>
 So to care's copse<sup>o</sup> I came, and there got through thicket of trees
 With much ado.

That led me to the wild of passion, which
 Some call the wold<sup>0</sup>— treeless plain, moor
 A wasted place but sometimes rich.
 Here I was robbed of all my gold
 Save one good angel,<sup>3</sup> which a friend had tied
 Close to my side.

At length I got unto the gladsome hill
 Where lay my hope,
 Where lay my heart; and, climbing still,
 When I had gained the brow and top,
 A lake of brackish waters on the ground
 Was all I found.

With that abashed, and struck with many a sting
 Of swarming fears,
 I fell, and cried, "Alas, my king!
 Can both the way and end be tears?"
 Yet taking heart I rose, and then perceived
 I was deceived:

My hill was further; so I flung away,
 Yet heard a cry,
 Just as I went: None goes that way
And lives: "If that be all," said I,
 "After so foul a journey, death is fair,
 And but a chair."<sup>4</sup>

1. The rock and cave allude to Scylla and Charybdis, perils faced by Odysseus and often allegorized. The spiritual pilgrimage through allegorical perils was a frequent literary motif: cf. Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress and Vaughan's "Regeneration" (p. 1627).

2. Short span of life.

3. A golden coin as well as (punningly) a guardian angel.

4. "Chair" implies rest and relaxation but also a conveyance (a sedan chair).

The Holdfast<sup>1</sup>

I threatened to observe the strict decree
 Of my dear God with all my power and might.
 But I was told by one, it could not be;
 Yet I might trust in God to be my light.

5 Then will I trust, said I, in him alone.
 Nay, ev'n to trust in him, was also his;
 We must confess, that nothing is our own.
 Then I confess that he my succor is.

But to have naught is ours, not to confess
 10 That we have naught. I stood amazed at this,
 Much troubled, till I heard a friend express,
 That all things were more ours by being his.
 What Adam had, and forfeited for all,
 Christ keepeth now, who cannot fail or fall.

The Collar<sup>1</sup>

I struck the board<sup>2</sup> and cried, "No more;
 I will abroad!
 What? Shall I ever sigh and pine?
 My lines and life are free, free as the road,
 5 Loose as the wind, as large as store.
 Shall I be still in suit?<sup>3</sup>
 Have I no harvest but a thorn
 To let me blood, and not restore
 What I have lost with cordial<sup>0</sup> fruit? restorative to the heart
 10 Sure there was wine
 Before my sighs did dry it; there was corn<sup>0</sup> grain
 Before my tears did drown it.
 Is the year only lost to me?
 Have I no bays<sup>4</sup> to crown it,
 15 No flowers, no garlands gay? All blasted?
 All wasted?
 Not so, my heart; but there is fruit,
 And thou hast hands.
 Recover all thy sigh-blown age
 20 On double pleasures: leave thy cold dispute
 Of what is fit and not. Forsake thy cage,
 Thy rope of sands,

1. Alludes to Psalm 73.27 in the Book of Common Prayer: "It is good for me to hold me fast by God." The poem dramatizes the entire reliance on grace—and the abnegation of any human capacity to cooperate with it or claim any merit—that was a cornerstone of Calvinist theology.

1. The emblematic title suggests a clerical collar that has become a slave's collar; also, punningly, the speaker's choler (anger) and, perhaps, the caller that he at last hears.

2. Table, with an allusion to the Communion table.

3. Always in attendance, waiting on someone for a favor.

4. The poet's laurel wreath, a symbol of recognized accomplishment.

Which petty thoughts have made, and made to thee
 Good cable,<sup>5</sup> to enforce and draw,
 And be thy law,
 While thou didst wink and wouldst not see.
 Away! Take heed;
 I will abroad.
 Call in thy death's-head<sup>6</sup> there; tie up thy fears.
 He that forbears
 To suit and serve his need,
 Deserves his load."
 But as I raved and grew more fierce and wild
 At every word,
 Methoughts I heard one calling, Child!<sup>7</sup>
 And I replied, My Lord.

The Pulley<sup>1</sup>

When God at first made man,
 Having a glass of blessings standing by,
 "Let us," said he, "pour on him all we can:
 Let the world's riches, which dispersed lie,
 Contract into a span."

So strength first made a way;
 Then beauty flowed, then wisdom, honor, pleasure.
 When almost all was out, God made a stay,
 Perceiving that, alone of all his treasure,
 Rest<sup>0</sup> in the bottom lay.

repose

"For if I should," said He,
 "Bestow this jewel also on my creature,
 He would adore my gifts instead of me,
 And rest in Nature, not the God of Nature;
 So both should losers be.

"Yet let him keep the rest,<sup>2</sup>
 But keep them with repining restlessness:
 Let him be rich and weary, that at least,
 If goodness lead him not, yet weariness
 May toss him to my breast."

5. Christian restrictions on behavior, which the "petty thoughts" of the docile believer have made into strong bonds.

6. Skull, emblem of human mortality, and often used as an object for meditation.

7. The call "Child!" reminds the speaker of Paul's words (Romans 8.14—17) that Christians are not in "bondage again to fear" but are children of God, "and if children, then heirs."

1. The poem inverts the legend of Pandora's box, which released all manner of evils when opened but left Hope trapped inside.

2. "Rest" has two senses here: "remainder" and "repose."

The Flower

How fresh, O Lord, how sweet and clean
 Are thy returns! even as the flowers in spring,
 To which, besides their own demesne,<sup>0</sup> domain, demeanor
 The late-past frosts tributes of pleasure bring.
 Grief melts away
 Like snow in May,
 As if there were no such cold thing.

Who would have thought my shriveled heart
 Could have recovered greenness? It was gone
 Quite underground; as flowers depart
 To see their mother-root, when they have blown,<sup>0</sup> bloomed
 Where they together
 All the hard weather,
 Dead to the world, keep house unknown.

These are thy wonders, Lord of power,
 Killing and quickening, bringing down to hell
 And up to heaven in an hour,
 Making a chiming of a passing-bell.<sup>1</sup>
 We say amiss
 This or that is:
 Thy word is all, if we could spell.<sup>0</sup> read

O that I once past changing were,
 Fast in thy Paradise, where no flower can wither!
 Many a spring I shoot up fair,
 25 Offering<sup>0</sup> at heaven, growing and groaning thither; aiming
 Nor doth my flower
 Want a spring shower,<sup>0</sup> tears of contrition
 My sins and I joining together.

But while I grow in a straight line,
 30 Still upwards bent,<sup>0</sup> as if heaven were mine own, directed
 Thy anger comes, and I decline:
 What frost to that? What pole is not the zone
 Where all things burn,
 When thou dost turn,
 35 And the least frown of thine is shown?<sup>2</sup>

And now in age I bud again,
 After so many deaths I live and write;
 I once more smell the dew and rain,
 And relish versing. O my only light,
 40 It cannot be
 That I am he
 On whom thy tempests fell all night.

1. The "passing-bell," intended to mark the death of a parishioner, is tolled in a monotone; a "chiming" bell offers pleasant variety.

2. I.e., compared with God's wrath, what polar chill would not seem like the heat of the equator?

These are thy wonders, Lord of love,
 To make us see we are but flowers that glide;<sup>0</sup>
 45 Which when we once can find and prove,<sup>0</sup> slip silently away
 Thou hast a garden for us where to bide; ex-perience
 Who would be more,
 Swelling through store,
 Forfeit their Paradise by their pride.

The Forerunners

The harbingers are come: see, see their mark;
 White is their color,<sup>1</sup> and behold my head.
 But must they have my brain? Must they dispark<sup>0</sup> turn out
 Those sparkling notions which therein were bred?
 5 Must dullness turn me to a clod?
 Yet have they left me "Thou art still my God."<sup>2</sup>

Good men ye be to leave me my best room,
 Even all my heart and what is lodged there:
 I pass not,<sup>0</sup> I, what of the rest become, care not 10 So "Thou art still my God" be out of fear.
 He will be pleased with that ditty;
 And if I please Him, I write fine and witty.

Farewell, sweet phrases, lovely metaphors:
 But will ye leave me thus? When ye before
 15 Of stews<sup>0</sup> and brothels only knew the doors, whorehouses
 Then did I wash you with my tears, and more,
 Brought you to church well-dressed and clad:
 My God must have my best, even all I had.

Lovely enchanting language, sugarcane,
 20 Honey of roses, whither wilt thou fly?
 Hath some fond lover ticed<sup>0</sup> thee to thy bane?<sup>0</sup> enticed / poison
 And wilt thou leave the church and love a sty?
 Fie! thou wilt soil thy 'broidered coat,
 And hurt thyself and him that sings the note.

25 Let foolish lovers, if they will love dung,
 With canvas, not with arras,<sup>0</sup> clothe their shame: fine cloth
 Let Folly speak in her own native tongue.
 True Beauty dwells on high; ours is a flame
 But borrowed thence to light us thither:
 30 Beauty and beauteous words should go together.

Yet, if you go, I pass not;<sup>0</sup> take your way. I don't care
 For "Thou art still my God" is all that ye
 Perhaps with more embellishment can say.

1. Harbingers rode ahead of a royal traveling party to requisition lodgings, marking the doors with chalk.

2. Echoes Psalm 31.14: "But I trusted in thee, O Lord: I said, Thou art my God."

Go, birds of spring; let winter have his fee;<sup>o</sup> due
 35 Let a bleak paleness chalk the door,
 So all within be livelier than before.

Discipline

Throw away thy rod,
 Throw away thy wrath:
     O my God,
 Take the gentle path.

5 For my heart's desire
 Unto thine is bent:
     I aspire
 To a full consent.

Not a word or look
 I affect<sup>o</sup> to own,
     But by book,<sup>1</sup> wish, pretend
 And thy book alone.

Though I fail, I weep:
 Though I halt<sup>o</sup> in pace, limp
     Yet I creep
 To the throne of grace.

Then let wrath remove;
 Love will do the deed:
     For with love
 Stony hearts will bleed.

Love is swift of foot;
 Love's a man of war,<sup>2</sup>
     And can shoot,
 And can hit from far.

25 Who can 'scape his bow?
 That which wrought on thee,
     Brought thee low,
 Needs must work on me.

Throw away thy rod;
 30 Though man frailties hath,
     Thou art God:
 Throw away thy wrath.

1. I.e., like an actor who follows his playbook.

2. The jubilant song sung by Moses in Exodus 15 calls the Lord "a man of war," but Herbert also alludes to Cupid, another divine bowman.

Death

Death, thou wast once an uncouth, hideous thing,
 Nothing but bones,
 The sad effect of sadder groans:
 Thy mouth was open, but thou couldst not sing.

For we considered thee as at some six
 Or ten years hence,
 After the loss of life and sense,
 Flesh being turned to dust and bones to sticks.

We looked on this side of thee, shooting short,
 Where we did find
 The shells of fledge-souls left behind-
 Dry dust, which sheds no tears, but may extort.<sup>1</sup>

But since our Savior's death did put some blood
 Into thy face,
 Thou art grown fair and full of grace,
 Much in request, much sought for as a good.

For we do now behold thee gay and glad
 As at doomsday,
 When souls shall wear their new array,
 And all thy bones with beauty shall be clad.

Therefore we can go die as sleep, and trust
 Half that we have
 Unto an honest faithful grave,
 Making our pillows either down or dust.

Love (3)

Love bade me welcome: yet my soul drew back,
 Guilty of dust and sin.
 But quick-eyed Love, observing me grow slack<sup>0</sup>
 From my first entrance in,
 5 Drew nearer to me, sweetly questioning
 If I lacked anything.<sup>1</sup>

hesitant

"A guest," I answered, "worthy to be here":
 Love said, "You shall be he."
 "I, the unkind, ungrateful? Ah, my dear,
 10 I cannot look on thee."
 Love took my hand, and smiling did reply,
 "Who made the eyes but I?"

1. Souls that have left the body and gone to heaven are like fledgling chicks that have left the shell behind; that corpse ("dry dust") sheds no tears but may draw ("extort") tears from the survivors.

1. The first question of tavern waiters to an entering customer would be "What d'ye lack?" (i.e., want).

"Truth, Lord; but I have marred them; let my shame Go where it doth deserve."
 15 "And know you not," says Love, "who bore the blame?"
 "My dear, then I will serve."
 "You must sit down," says Love, "and taste my meat."
 So I did sit and eat.<sup>2</sup>

2. In addition to the sacrament of Communion, the reference is especially to the banquet in heaven, when the Lord "shall gird himself, and make them to sit down to meat, and will come forth and serve them" (Luke 12.37).

HENRY VAUGHAN 1621-1695

Born to a family with deep roots in Wales, Henry Vaughan was educated at Oxford and the Inns of Court but returned to his native county of Breconshire at the outbreak of the civil war and spent the rest of his life there. He served as secretary to the Welsh circuit courts until 1645; briefly fought for King Charles at Chester, just over the border with England; and in his later years took up the practice of medicine without much formal study. In a volume of verse published in 1651, Olor Iscanus (The Swan of Usk), he drew attention to his heritage by terming himself "the Silurist": the Silures were an ancient tribe from southeast Wales. Some features of Vaughan's poetry derive from the rich Welsh-language poetic tradition: the frequency of assonance, consonance, and alliteration; the multiplication of comparisons and similes (dyfalu); and the sensitivity to nature, especially the countryside around the Usk River.

Some of Vaughan's poetry is secular—Poems with the Tenth Satire of Juvenal, Englised (1646), Olor Iscanus (1651), and a late-published collection of earlier verse, Thalia Rediviva (1678). Vaughan's modern reputation, though, rests almost entirely on his religious poetry. In 1650 Vaughan published his major collection of religious verse, Silex Scintillans (The Flashing Flint); it was republished in 1655 with a second book added. A conversion experience may have prompted Vaughan's turn to religious themes: the title of the book is explicated by the emblem of a flintlike heart struck by a bolt of lightning from the hand of God.

In the preface to Silex Scintillans Vaughan places himself among the many "pious converts" gained by George Herbert's holy life and verse. While his secular poetry recalls Ben Jonson's, the religious poetry overtly and consciously models itself on Herbert's. Some twenty-six poems appropriate their titles from The Temple, several owe their metrical form to Herbert, and many begin by quoting one of Herbert's lines (compare Vaughan's "Unprofitableness" with Herbert's "The Flower"). Yet no one with an ear for poetry will mistake Vaughan's long, loose poetic lines for Herbert's artful precision. Vaughan's religious sensibility too differs markedly from Herbert's. Unable to locate himself in a national Church of England, which was now dismantled by war, he wanders unaccompanied through a landscape at once biblical, emblematic, and contemporary, mourning lost innocence. One unifying motif of the poems in Silex Scintillans is pilgrimage, though the arrival at the destination is typically deferred. Vaughan seems unable to experience Christ as a friend or supporter in present trials, as Herbert so often does; instead, he longs for a full relationship with the divine yet to come, at the Last Day. Despite his restless solitude, however, Vaughan finds vestiges of the divine everywhere. "I saw eternity the other night," he begins his most famous poem, "The World," situating the "ring of pure and endless light" in a specific, quotidian moment of illumination. Eternity hovers tantalizingly over the human world of strife, pain, and exploitation, apparently entirely detached from that world but in fact accessible to God's elect, who soar from earthly shadows into the light. Vaughan's twin brother, Thomas, introduced him to Hermetic philosophy, an esoteric brand of Neoplatonism that found occult correspondences between the visible world of matter and the invisible world of spirits. The influence of this philosophical system, so congenial to Vaughan's sensibility, is most apparent in the poem "Cock Crowing."

FROM POEMS

A Song to Amoret<sup>1</sup>

If I were dead, and in my place,
 Some fresher youth designed,
 To warm thee with new fires, and grace
 Those arms I left behind;

5 Were he as faithful as the sun,
 That's wedded to the sphere;<sup>2</sup>
 His blood as chaste, and temperate run,
 As April's mildest tear;

Or were he rich, and with his heaps,
 10 And spacious share of Earth,
 Could make divine affection cheap,
 And court<sup>0</sup> his golden birth: pay court to

For all these arts I'd not believe,
 (No though he should be thine)
 15 The mighty amonist<sup>0</sup> could give lover
 So rich a heart as mine.

Fortune and beauty thou mightst find,
 And greater men than I:
 But my true resolved mind,
 20 They never shall come nigh.

For I not for an hour did love,
 Or for a day desire,
 But with my soul had from above,
 This endless holy fire.

1646

1. This poem comes from Vaughan's first collection, all on worldly themes and many on love. Amoret has sometimes been identified with Vaughan's first wife, but on no secure ground. Amoret (formed from amor, love) is a traditional name for a poet's beloved from classical literature; note

Spenser's use of the name in Faerie Queene 3, and the variation on it in his sonnet sequence Amoretti.
 2. In the Ptolemaic scheme, each of the planets (including the sun, which was regarded as a planet) occupied one of the spheres revolving around the earth.

FROM SILEX SCINTILLANS

A ward, and still in bonds,<sup>2</sup> one day
     I stole abroad;
 It was high spring, and all the way
     Primrosed<sup>3</sup> and hung with shade;
 5     Yet was it frost within,
     And surly winds
 Blasted my infant buds, and sin
     Like clouds eclipsed my mind.

Stormed thus, I straight perceived my spring
 10     Mere stage and show,
 My walk a monstrous, mountained thing,
     Roughcast with rocks and snow;
     And as a pilgrim's eye,
     Far from relief,
 15     Measures the melancholy sky,
     Then drops and rains for grief,

So sighed I upwards still; at last
     'Twixt steps and falls
 I reached the pinnacle, where placed 20     I found a pair of scales;
     I took them up and laid
     In th' one, late pains;
 The other smoke and pleasures weighed,
     But proved the heavier grains.<sup>4</sup>

25     With that, some cried, "Away!" Straight<sup>0</sup> I     immediately
     Obeyed, and led
 Full east, a fair, fresh field could spy;
     Some called it Jacob's bed,<sup>5</sup>
     A virgin soil which no
 30     Rude feet ere trod,
 Where, since he stepped there, only go
     Prophets and friends of God.

Here I reposed; but scarce well set,
     A grove descried<sup>0</sup>     perceived
 35     Of stately height, whose branches met

1. The poem allegorizes in rather precise Calvinist terms the experience of God's grace calling the elect and distinguishing between the regenerate and the unregenerate.

2. He begins as one in the Pauline "spirit of bondage" to fear because of sin and as one still in his minority ("wardship") under the Old Testament law. This contrasts with the "spirit of adoption" whereby we are children of God: "And if children then heirs; heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ" (Romans 8.14-17).

3. Alluding to the adage that the "primrose path" leads to perdition.

4. He climbs Mount Sinai (tries to live by the Old Testament law) but finds his sins and follies far outweigh that effort.

5. Jacob slept in an open field, where he had a vision of a ladder leading to heaven (Genesis 28.11-19); that place, Bethel, was taken as a type or figure for the church. Vaughan's poem "Jacobs Pillow, and Pillar" works out this allegory.

And mixed on every side;
 I entered, and once in,
     Amazed to see't,
 Found all was changed, and a new spring<sup>6</sup>
 40 Did all my senses greet.

The unthrift sun shot vital gold,
     A thousand pieces,
 And heaven its azure did unfold,
     Checkered with snowy fleeces;
 45 The air was all in spice,
     And every bush
 A garland wore; thus fed my eyes,
     But all the ear lay hush.<sup>o</sup> quiet

Only a little fountain<sup>7</sup> lent
 50 Some use for ears,
 And on the dumb shades language spent
     The music of her tears;
     I drew her near, and found
     The cistern full
 55 Of divers stones, some bright and round,
     Others ill-shaped and dull.<sup>8</sup>

The first, pray mark, as quick as light
     Danced through the flood;
 But the last, more heavy than the night,
 60 Nailed to the center stood.
     I wondered much, but tired
     At last with thought,
 My restless eye that still desired
     As strange an object brought:

65 It was a bank of flowers, where I descried,
     Though 'twas midday,
 Some fast asleep, others broad-eyed
     And taking in the ray;
     Here musing long, I heard
 70 A rushing wind
 Which still increased, but whence it stirred
     Nowhere I could not find.

I turned me round, and to each shade
     Dispatched an eye
 75 To see if any leaf had made
     Least motion or reply;
     But while I listening sought

6. Imagery in the following lines—spring, perfumes, flowers—alludes to the Song of Solomon in which the bride is traditionally allegorized as the church or the beloved soul.

7. In the Song of Solomon 4.15 the "fountain of waters, a well of living waters" was traditionally allegorized as Christ.

8. Alludes to 1 Peter 2.5, which refers to the faithful as "lively stones." The different sorts of stones and flowers here suggest the elect and the reprobate.

My mind to ease
 Ry knowing where 'twas, or where not,
80 It whispered, "Where I please."<sup>9</sup>

"Lord," then said I, "on me one breath,
 And let me die before my death!"

"Arise O North, and come thou South wind, and blow upon my garden, that the spices
85 thereof may flow out."<sup>1</sup>

The Retreat

Happy those early days! when I
 Shined in my angel infancy.
 Before I understood this place
 Appointed for my second race,<sup>1</sup>
5 Or taught my soul to fancy aught<sup>0</sup> anything
 But a white, celestial thought;
 When yet I had not walked above
 A mile or two from my first love,
 And looking back, at that short space,
10 Could see a glimpse of His bright face;
 When on some gilded cloud or flower
 My gazing soul would dwell an hour,
 And in those weaker glories spy
 Some shadows of eternity;
15 Before I taught my tongue to wound
 My conscience with a sinful sound,
 Or had the black art to dispense
 A several<sup>0</sup> sin to every sense, different
 But felt through all this fleshly dress
20 Bright shoots of everlastingness.
 O, how I long to travel back,
 And tread again that ancient track!
 That I might once more reach that plain
 Where first I left my glorious train,
25 From whence th' enlightened spirit sees
 That shady city of palm trees.<sup>2</sup>
 But, ah! my soul with too much stay<sup>0</sup> delay
 Is drunk, and staggers in the way.
 Some men a forward motion love;

9. John 3.8: "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth, so is every one that is born of the Spirit."

1. Vaughan identifies this verse as Canticles (Song of Solomon) 5.17; it is properly 4.16.

1. The poem alludes throughout to the Platonic doctrine of preexistence, in conjunction with Christ's words (Mark 10.15): "Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he shall not enter therein." Comparisons are often made to Wordsworth's Immortality ode.

2. The New Jerusalem, the Heavenly City (for its identification with Jericho, the "city of Palm Trees," Deuteronomy 34.3).

But I by backward steps would move,
 And when this dust falls to the urn,
 In that state I came, return.

1650

Silence, and Stealth of Days!

Silence, and stealth of days! 'tis now
 Since thou art gone<sup>1</sup>
 Twelve hundred hours, and not a brow<sup>2</sup>
 But clouds hang on.
 5 As he that in some cave's thick damp,
 Locked from the light,
 Fixeth a solitary lamp
 To brave the night,
 And walking from his sun, when past
 10 That glimmering ray,
 Cuts through the heavy mists in haste
 Back to his day,<sup>3</sup>
 So o'er fled minutes I retreat
 Unto that hour
 15 Which showed thee last, but did defeat
 Thy light and power;
 I search and rack my soul to see
 Those beams again,
 But nothing but the snuff<sup>4</sup> to me
 20 Appeareth plain,
 That dark and dead sleeps in its known
 And common urn;
 But those<sup>5</sup> fled to their maker's throne,
 There shine and burn.
 25 O could I track them! but souls must Track one the other,
 And now the spirit, not the dust,
 Must be thy brother.
 Yet I have one pearl,<sup>6</sup> by whose light
 30 All things I see,
 And in the heart of earth and night,
 Find heaven and thee.

1650

1. As indicated in lines 27—28, the poem is on the loss of Vaughan's brother—not his twin brother, Thomas, the Hermetic philosopher, who did not die until 1666, but his younger brother, William, who died in July 1648.

2. Mountain ridge, or forehead.

3. The miner fixes his lamp halfway down the dark shaft, ventures a little beyond it, but then beats a hasty retreat.

4. The burned wick of the lamp or candle.

5. The reference is back to "beams."

6. Probably the Bible. The reference is to Matthew 13.45—46, to the merchant who sold all he had to buy a pearl of great price, there likened to the Kingdom of Heaven.

Corruption

Sure it was so. Man in those early days
 Was not all stone and earth;
 He shined a little, and by those weak rays
 Had some glimpse of his birth.
 5 He saw heaven o'er his head, and knew from whence
 He came, condemned, hither;
 And, as first love draws strongest, so from hence
 His mind sure progressed thither.
 Things here were strange unto him: sweat and till,
 10 All was a thorn or weed:<sup>1</sup>
 Nor did those last, but (like himself) died still
 As soon as they did seed.
 They seemed to quarrel with him, for that act
 That felled him foiled them all:
 15 He drew the curse upon the world, and cracked
 The whole frame with his fall.<sup>2</sup>
 This made him long for home, as loath to stay
 With murmurers and foes;
 He sighed for Eden, and would often say,
 20 "Ah! what bright days were those!"
 Nor was heaven cold unto him; for each day
 The valley or the mountain
 Afforded visits, and still Paradise lay
 In some green shade or fountain.
 25 Angels lay lieger<sup>3</sup> here; each bush and cell,
 Each oak and highway knew them;
 Walk but the fields, or sit down at some well,
 And he was sure to view them.
 Almighty Love! where art thou now? Mad man
 30 Sits down and freezeth on;
 He raves, and swears to stir nor fire, nor fan,
 But bids the thread<sup>0</sup> be spun. thread of Fate
 I see, thy curtains are close-drawn; thy bow<sup>4</sup>
 Looks dim, too, in the cloud;
 35 Sin triumphs still, and man is sunk below
 The center, and his shroud.
 All's in deep sleep and night: thick darkness lies
 And hatcheth o'er thy people—
 But hark! what trumpet's that? what angel cries,
 40 "Arise! thrust in thy sickle"<sup>5</sup>

1650

1. God's curse on Adam for eating the forbidden fruit included a curse on the earth: "Thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee" (Genesis 3. 18).

2. Cf. Donne, An Anatomy of the World, lines 199-200 (p. 1289).

3. As resident ambassadors (from heaven).

4. The rainbow, God's covenant with Noah after the Flood (Genesis 9.13).

5. Alludes to Revelation 14.15: "And another angel came out of the temple, crying with a loud voice to him that sat on the cloud, 'Thrust in thy sickle, and reap, for the harvest of the earth is now.'"

Unprofitableness

How rich, O Lord! how fresh thy visits are!<sup>1</sup>
 Twas but just now my bleak leaves hopeless hung,
     Sullied with dust and mud;
 Each snarling blast shot through me, and did share<sup>0</sup>      shear off
 5 Their youth and beauty; cold showers nipped and wrung
     Their spiciness and blood.
 But since thou didst in one sweet glance survey
 Their sad decays, I flourish, and once more
     Breathe all perfumes and spice;
 10 I smell a dew like myrrh, and all the day
 Wear in my bosom a full sun; such store
     Hath one beam from thy eyes.
 But, ah, my God! what fruit hast thou of this?
 What one poor leaf did ever I let<sup>2</sup> fall
 15 To wait upon thy wreath?
 Thus thou all day a thankless weed dost dress,
 And when th' hast done, a stench or fog is all
     The odor I bequeath.

1650

The World

I saw eternity the other night,
 Like a great ring of pure and endless light,
     All calm as it was bright;
 And round beneath it, Time, in hours, days, years,
 5 Driven by the spheres,<sup>1</sup>
 Like a vast shadow moved, in which the world
     And all her train were hurled.
 The doting lover in his quaintest<sup>0</sup> strain      most ingenious
     Did there complain;
 10 Near him, his lute, his fancy, and his flights,<sup>0</sup>      caprices
     Wit's sour delights,
 With gloves and knots,<sup>0</sup> the silly snares of pleasure,      love knots
     Yet his dear treasure,
 All scattered lay, while he his eyes did pour
 15 Upon a flower.

The darksome statesman hung with weights and woe
 Like a thick midnight fog moved there so slow
     He did nor stay nor go;
 Condemning thoughts, like sad eclipses, scowl
 20 Upon his soul,
 And clouds of crying witnesses<sup>2</sup> without

1. Cf. Herbert's "The Flower" (p. 1621).

2. The original printed text reads "yet," emended here.

1. The concentric spheres of Ptolemaic astronomy.

2. In Hebrews 12, the "clouds of witnesses" testified to God's truth in past times. Here, these champions of faith accuse one whose actions deny God.

- Pursued him with one shout.
 Yet digged the mole,<sup>3</sup> and, lest his ways be found,
 Worked underground,
 25 Where he did clutch his prey. But one did see
 That policy:<sup>0</sup> strategy
 Churches and altars fed him; perjuries
 Were gnats and flies;
 It rained about him blood and tears; but he 30 Drank them as free.<sup>4</sup>
- The fearful miser on a heap of rust
 Sat pining all his life there, did scarce trust
 His own hands with the dust;
 Yet would not place<sup>0</sup> one piece above, but lives invest
 35 In fear of thieves.
 Thousands there were as frantic as himself,
 And hugged each one his pelf:
 The downright epicure placed heaven in sense, the senses
 And scorned pretense;
 40 While others, slipped into a wide excess,
 Said little less;
 The weaker sort slight, trivial wares enslave,
 Who think them brave<sup>0</sup> fine, showy
 And poor, despised Truth sat counting by<sup>0</sup> recording
 45 Their victory.
- Yet some, who all this while did weep and sing,
 And sing and weep, soared up into the ring;
 But most would use no wing.
 "O fools!" said I, "thus to prefer dark night
 50 Before true light!
 To live in grots and caves, and hate the day
 Because it shows the way,
 The way which from this dead and dark abode
 Leads up to God,
 55 A way where you might tread the sun and be
 More bright than he!"
 But as I did their madness so discuss,
 One whispered thus:
 "This ring the bridegroom did for none provide,
 60 But for his bride."<sup>5</sup>

John Chap. 2. ver. 16, 17

All that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world.

And the world passeth away, and the lusts thereof,
 but he that doth the will of God abideth forever.

3. I.e., the "darksome statesman" (line 16).

4. I.e., as freely as they rained.

5. Alludes to Revelation 19.7–9, the marriage of the Lamb and his Bride, allegorized as Christ and the church or Christ and the regenerate soul: "Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb."

They Are All Gone into the World of Light!

They are all gone into the world of light!
 And I alone sit ling'ring here;
 Their very memory is fair and bright,
 And my sad thoughts doth clear.

5 It glows and glitters in my cloudy breast
 Like stars upon some gloomy grove,
 Or those faint beams in which this hill is dressed
 After the sun's remove.

I see them walking in an air of glory,
 10 Whose light doth trample on my days;
 My days, which are at best but dull and hoary,<sup>0</sup> gray with age
 Mere glimmering and decays.

O holy hope, and high humility,
 High as the heavens above!
 15 These are your walks, and you have showed them me
 To kindle my cold love.

Dear, beauteous death! the jewel of the just,
 Shining nowhere but in the dark;
 What mysteries do lie beyond thy dust,
 20 Could man outlook that mark!<sup>0</sup> boundary

He that hath found some fledged bird's nest may know
 At first sight if the bird be flown;
 But what fair well<sup>0</sup> or grove he sings in now, spring
 That is to him unknown.

25 And yet, as angels in some brighter dreams
 Call to the soul when man doth sleep,
 So some strange thoughts transcend our wonted<sup>0</sup> themes, accustomed
 And into glory peep.

If a star were confined into a tomb,
 30 Her captive flames must needs burn there;
 But when the hand that locked her up gives room,
 She'll shine through all the sphere.

O Father of eternal life, and all
 Created glories under thee!
 35 Resume thy spirit from this world of thrall<sup>0</sup> slaver<sup>1</sup>
 Into true liberty!

Either disperse these mists, which blot and fill
 My perspective<sup>1</sup> still as they pass,

I. Literally, telescope, but more freely, distant vision.

Or else remove me hence unto that hill
 40 Where I shall need no glass.

Cock-Crowing<sup>1</sup>

Father of lights! what sunny seed,<sup>2</sup>
 What glance of day hast thou confined
 Into this bird? To all the breed
 This busy ray thou hast assigned;
 5 Their magnetism works all night,
 And dreams of Paradise and light.

Their eyes watch for the morning hue,
 Their little grain expelling night
 So shines and sings, as if it knew
 10 The path unto the house of light.
 It seems their candle, howe'r done,
 Was tinned<sup>3</sup> and lighted at the sun. kindled

If such a tincture,<sup>1</sup> such a touch,
 So firm a longing can impower,
 15 Shall thy own image<sup>4</sup> think it much
 To watch for thy appearing hour?
 If a mere blast so fill the sail,
 Shall not the breath of God<sup>5</sup> prevail?

O thou immortal light and heat!
 20 Whose hand so shines through all this frame,<sup>0</sup> universe
 That by the beauty of the seat,
 We plainly see, who made the same.
 Seeing thy seed abides in me,
 Dwell thou in it, and I in thee.

25 To sleep without thee, is to die;
 Yea, 'tis a death partakes of hell:
 For where thou dost not close the eye
 It never opens, I can tell.

1. The poem calls upon the Hermetic notion of sympathetic attraction between earthly and heavenly bodies, e.g., the cock whose crowing announces the sun's rising because it bears within itself a "seed" of the sun. Vaughan finds here an analogy for the attraction the soul has for its Maker.

2. The opening lines recall a passage from Henry's brother, the Hermetic philosopher Thomas Vaughan: "For she [the Anima or Soul] is guided in her operations by a spiritual metaphysical grain, a seed or glance of light . . . descending from the Father of lights." That term for God is from James

1.17. "Seed," "glance," "ray," and "grain" in line 8 are almost synonymous Hermetic terms for the bit of the sun implanted in the cock. "Magnetism" (line 5) refers to the attraction between the cock's "seed" and its source, the sun.

3. Alchemical term for a spiritual principle whose quality may be infused into material things.

4. Alludes to Genesis 1.27: "So God created man in his own image."

5. Alludes to Genesis 2.7: "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul."

30 In such a dark, Egyptian border,
The shades of death dwell and disorder.<sup>6</sup>

If joys, and hopes, and earnest throes,
And hearts, whose pulse beats still for light
Are given to birds; who, but thee, knows
A love-sick soul's exalted flight?
35 Can souls be tracked by any eye
But his, who gave them wings to fly?

Only this veil<sup>7</sup> which thou hast broke,
And must be broken yet in me,
This veil, I say, is all the cloak
40 And cloud which shadows thee from me.
This veil thy full-eyed love denies,
And only gleams and fractions spies.

O take it off! Make no delay,
But brush me with thy light, that I
45 May shine unto a perfect day,
And warm me at thy glorious eye!
O take it off! or till it flee,
Though with no lily,<sup>8</sup> stay with me!

The Night

John 3.2<sup>1</sup>

Through that pure virgin-shrine,
That sacred veil drawn o'er thy glorious noon,
That men might look and live as glowworms shine
And face the moon,
5 Wise Nicodemus saw such light
As made him know his God by night.

Most blest believer he!
Who in that land of darkness and blind eyes
Thy long-expected healing wings<sup>2</sup> could see,
10 When thou didst rise,
And what can never more be done,
Did at midnight speak with the Sun!

O who will tell me where
He found thee at that dead and silent hour?

6. Alludes to Exodus 10.21. Moses bringing down the plague of "darkness over the land of Egypt, even darkness which may be felt."

7. Echoes Hebrews 10.20: "By a new and living way, which he [Christ] hath consecrated for us, through the veil, that is to say, his flesh."

8. Echoes Song of Solomon 2.16: "My beloved is mine, and I am his: he feedeth among the lilies."

1. John 3.1—2 describes how a Pharisee named Nicodemus came to Jesus by night and said, "Rabbi, we know that thou art a teacher come from God."

2. Echoes Malachi 4.2: "The Sun of righteousness [shall] arise with healing in his wings."

- 15 What hallowed solitary ground did bear
 So rare a flower,
 Within whose sacred leaves did lie
 The fullness of the Deity?
- No mercy seat of gold,
 20 No dead and dusty cherub nor carved stone,<sup>3</sup>
 But his own living works did my Lord hold
 And lodge alone;
 Where trees and herbs did watch and peep
 And wonder while the Jews did sleep.
- 25 Dear night! this world's defeat,<sup>4</sup>
 The stop to busy fools; care's check and curb;
 The day of spirits; my soul's calm retreat
 Which none disturb!
 Christ's progress and his prayer time;
 30 The hours to which high heaven doth chime;
- God's silent, searching flight,
 When my Lord's head is filled with dew, and all
 His locks are wet with the clear drops of night;
 His still, soft call;<sup>5</sup>
 35 His knocking time; the soul's dumb watch,
 When spirits their fair kindred catch.
- Were all my loud, evil days
 Calm and unhaunted as is thy dark tent,
 Whose peace but by some angel's wing or voice
 40 Is seldom rent,
 Then I in heaven all the long year
 Would keep, and never wander here.
- But living where the sun
 Doth all things wake, and where all mix and tire
 45 Themselves and others, I consent and run
 To every mire,
 And by this world's ill-guiding light
 Err more than I can do by night.
- There is in God (some say)
 50 A deep but dazzling darkness,<sup>6</sup> as men here
 Say it is late and dusky, because they See not all clear.

3. God commanded the Israelites to cover the Ark of the Covenant with "a mercy seat of pure gold . . . and . . . two cherubims of gold, of beaten work . . . in the two ends of the mercy seat" (Exodus 25.17-18).

4. The style of this stanza and the next imitates Herbert's "Prayer (1)" (p. 1611).

5. Echoes Song of Solomon 5.2: "I sleep, but my heart waketh: it is the voice of my beloved that knocketh, saying, Open to me, my sister, my love, my dove, my undefiled: for my head is filled with dew, and my locks with the drops of the night." For the allegory see "The World," note 5.

6. Dionysius the Areopagite (ca. 5th century) deals with concepts of divine darkness, which Nicholas of Cusa later developed, referring to the "Darkness where truly dwells . . . the one who is beyond all" and "the superessential Darkness which is hidden by all the light that is in existing things."

Oh for that night, where I in him
Might live invisible and dim!

The Waterfall<sup>1</sup>

With what deep murmurs through time's silent stealth
Doth thy transparent, cool, and watery wealth
    Here flowing fall,
    And chide, and call,
As if his liquid, loose retinue stayed
Ling'ring, and were of this steep place afraid,
    The common pass
    Where, clear as glass,
    All must descend,
    Not to an end,
But quickened by this steep and rocky grave,
Rise to a longer course more bright and brave.<sup>0</sup>      resplendent

Dear stream! dear bank! where often I
Have sat and pleased my pensive eye—
Why, since each drop of thy quick<sup>0</sup> store      living
Runs thither whence it flowed before,
Should poor souls fear a shade or night,
Who came, sure, from a sea of light?
Or since those drops are all sent back
So sure to thee that none doth lack,
Why should frail flesh doubt any more
That what God takes he'll not restore?
O useful element and clear!
My sacred wash and cleanser here,
My first consigner<sup>0</sup> unto those      in baptism
Fountains of life where the Lamb goes!<sup>2</sup>
What sublime truths and wholesome themes
Lodge in thy mystical deep streams!
Such as dull man can never find
Unless that Spirit lead his mind
Which first upon thy face did move
And hatched all with his quickening love.<sup>3</sup>
As this loud brook's incessant fall
In streaming rings restagnates<sup>0</sup> all      makes still again
Which reach by course the bank, and then
Are no more seen, just so pass men.
Oh my invisible estate,

1. The water, with its startling descent in a waterfall but ultimate circularity to its source, is for Vaughan an emblem of death and restoration of the soul to its source.

2. Echoes Revelation 7.17: "For the Lamb . . .

shall lead them unto living fountains of waters."

3. Alludes to Genesis 1.2: "And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters." The Latin Vulgate version, incubabant, is closer to Vaughan's "hatched" than to "moved."

My glorious liberty,<sup>4</sup> still late!
 Thou art the channel my soul seeks,
 40 Not this with cataracts and creeks.

1655

4. Alludes to Romans 8.21, promising deliverance "from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God."

RICHARD CRASHAW
 ca. 1613-1649

Steps to the Temple (1646, 1648), the name of Richard Crashaw's collection of sacred poetry, clearly acknowledges George Herbert's primacy among devotional poets. Yet Crashaw is hardly Herbert's slavish disciple. Indeed, he differs greatly from Herbert and from every other English religious poet of the period. A Roman Catholic convert, Crashaw was profoundly influenced by the Counter-Reformation, which reacted against Protestant austerity by linking heightened spirituality to vivid bodily experiences. He is the only major English poet in the tradition of the Continental baroque, a movement in literature and visual art that developed out of the Counter-Reformation. Baroque style is exuberant, sensuous, and elaborately ornamented, and it deliberately strains decorum, challenging formal restraints and generic limitations. Crashaw's favorite subjects are typical of baroque art: the infant Jesus surrounded by angels and cherubs; the crucified Savior, streaming blood; the sorrowful Virgin; the tearfully penitent Mary Magdalen; saintly martyrs wracked with ecstasy and pain. Although some have pronounced his images grotesque, Crashaw is alone among English poets in rendering the experience of rapture and religious ecstasy.

The son of a Puritan divine noted for hatred of popery, Crashaw was educated at Pembroke College, Cambridge, where he became an adherent of Laudian Anglicanism. In 1636 he was elected a fellow of Peterhouse, another Cambridge college. By 1639 he had become a priest of the Church of England, curate of Little St. Mary's, and a college lecturer. A contemporary wrote that his sermons "ravished more like poems," but apparently none survive. Crashaw called Peterhouse his "little contentful kingdom": his friends included the poet Abraham Cowley and George Herbert's literary executor Nicholas Ferrar, the founder of the Anglican monastic community Little Gidding. In 1643 the Puritans occupied Cambridge, violently disrupting Crashaw's life there. He fled to Paris and to the English court in exile, becoming a Roman Catholic in 1645. He was saved from destitution by obtaining various minor posts through the queen's influence, the last one at Loreto—thought to be Jesus' house at Nazareth, miraculously transported to Italy.

Crashaw's Latin epigrams, published as Epigrammatum Sacrorum Liber (1634), were much influenced by Jesuit epigram style and are among the best by an Englishman. In their Latin and later English versions, they are characterized by puns, paradoxes, and sometimes bizarre metaphors, as in the epigram on Luke 11. In 1646 Crashaw published, with the first version of Steps to the Temple, a book of secular poems, The Delights of the Mtses, some of them in the restrained style of Ben Jonson. But the masterpiece of this book is "Music's Duel," a much-elaborated version of a poem by the Jesuit Favianus Strada about a contest between a nightingale and a lutenist, between melody and harmony. Crashaw imitates music by means of liquid vowels, gliding syntax, onomatopoeia, and the complex blending of sounds. Beyond that, he renders the ecstasy of the listening experience by collapsing one sense into another (synesthesia), creating an effect of continual metamorphosis.

Crashaw constantly revised his religious poems, usually making them longer. His posthumous volume, Carmen Deo Nostro (1652), includes emblems he may have executed himself, among them the padlocked heart prefixed to a poem urging the Countess of Denbigh to convert to Catholicism. Especially notable are the final versions of several hymns, ranging from the witty praise of St. Theresa in "The Flaming Heart" to the meltingly sweet "In the Holy Nativity."

FROM THE DELIGHTS OF THE MUSES

Music's Duel<sup>1</sup>

Now westward Sol<sup>0</sup> had spent the richest beams the sun
 Of noon's high glory, when hard by<sup>o</sup> the streams close to
 Of Tiber, on the scene of a green plat,
 Under protection of an oak, there sat
 5 A sweet lute's-master: in whose gentle airs
 He lost the day's heat, and his own hot cares.
 Close in the covert of the leaves there stood
 A nightingale, come from the neighboring wood:
 (The sweet inhabitant of each glad tree,
 10 Their Muse, their Siren,<sup>2</sup> harmless Siren she)
 There stood she listening, and did entertain
 The music's soft report: and mold the same
 In her own murmurs, that whatever mood
 His curious<sup>o</sup> fingers lent, her voice made good: skillful
 15 The man perceived his rival, and her art,
 Disposed to give the light-foot lady sport
 Awakes his lute, and 'gainst the fight to come
 Informs it, in a sweet praeludium<sup>o</sup> prelude, introduction
 Of closer strains, and ere the war begin,
 20 He lightly skirmishes on every string
 Charged with a flying touch: and straightway she Carves out her dainty voice as readily,
 Into a thousand sweet distinguished tones,
 And reckons up in soft divisions,<sup>o</sup> rapid melodic passages
 25 Quick volumes of wild notes; to let him know
 By that shrill taste, she could do something too.
 His nimble hands instinct then taught each string
 A cap'ring cheerfulness; and made them sing
 To their own dance; now negligently rash
 30 He throws his arm, and with a long drawn dash

1. Based on a much shorter Latin poem by the Jesuit Famianus Strada (1617), which also relates a contest between a nightingale and a lutenist, as a version of the contest between nature and art. Crashaw's poem also represents the contest of two kinds of music, melody (monody) and harmony (polyphony). The poem is especially remarkable for synesthesia, the blending of sensory images into one another, and sometimes the representation of one sense in the imagery of another.

2. The irresistible singing of sirens lures men to their death.

Blends all together; then distinctly trips
 From this to that; then quick returning skips
 And snatches this again, and pauses there.
 She measures every measure, everywhere
 35 Meets art with art; sometimes as if in doubt
 Not perfect yet, and fearing to be out° at a loss
 Trails her plain ditty<sup>3</sup> in one long-spun note
 " Through the sleek passage of her open throat:
 A clear unwrinkled song, then doth she point it
 40 With tender accents, and severely joint it
 By short diminutives, that being reared
 In controverting warbles evenly shared,
 With her sweet self she wrangles; he amazed
 That from so small a channel should be raised
 45 The torrent of a voice, whose melody
 Could melt into such sweet variety,
 Strains higher yet; that tickled with rare art
 The tattling<sup>0</sup> strings (each breathing in his part) prattling
 Most kindly do fall out;° the grumbling bass naturally quarrel
 50 In surly groans disdains the treble's grace.
 The high-perched treble chirps at this, and chides,
 Until his finger (moderator) hides
 And closes the sweet quarrel, rousing all
 Hoarse, shrill, at once; as when the trumpets call
 55 Hot Mars to th'harvest of death's field, and woo
 Men's hearts into their hands; this lesson too
 She gives him back; her supple breast thrills out
 Sharp airs, and staggers in a warbling doubt
 Of dallying sweetness, hovers o'er her skill,
 60 And folds in waved notes with a trembling bill,
 The pliant series of her slippery song.
 Then starts she suddenly into a throng
 Of short thick sobs, whose thundering volleys float,
 And roll themselves over her lubric° throat smooth
 65 In panting murmurs, stilled<sup>0</sup> out of her breast, distilled
 That ever-bubbling spring; the sugared nest
 Of her delicious soul, that there does lie
 Bathing in streams of liquid melody;
 Music's best seed-plot, whence in ripened airs
 70 A golden-headed harvest fairly rears
 His honey-dropping tops, plowed by her breath
 Which there reciprocally laboreth
 In that sweet soil. It seems a holy choir
 Founded to th'name of great Apollo's<sup>4</sup> lyre.
 75 Whose silver roof rings with the sprightly notes
 Of sweet-lipped angel-imps, that swill their throats
 In cream of morning Helicon,<sup>5</sup> and then
 Prefer<sup>0</sup> soft anthems to the ears of men, offer
 To woo them from their beds, still murmuring

3. Simple melody, without divisions.

4. God of music and poetry, father of the Muses.

5. Mountain in Greece, home of the Muses; sometimes, the fountains there.

- 50 That men can sleep while they their matins sing:
 (Most divine service) whose so early lay<sup>o</sup>
 Prevents<sup>o</sup> the eyelids of the blushing day. song
 There might you hear her kindle her soft voice,
 In the close murmur of a sparkling noise, comes before
- 85 And lay the groundwork of her hopeful song,
 Still keeping in the forward stream, so long
 Till a sweet whirlwind (striving to get out)
 Heaves her soft bosom, wanders round about,
 And makes a pretty earthquake in her breast,
- 90 Till the fledged notes at length forsake their nest;
 Fluttering in wanton shoals, and to the sky
 Winged with their own wild echoes prattling fly.
 She opes the floodgate, and lets loose a tide
 Of streaming sweetness, which in state doth ride
- 95 On the waved back of every swelling strain,
 Rising and falling in a pompous train.
 And while she thus discharges a shrill peal
 Of flashing airs, she qualifies<sup>o</sup> their zeal moderates
 With the cool epode<sup>o</sup> of a graver note, lyric
- 100 Thus high, thus low, as if her silver throat
 Would reach the brazen voice of war's hoarse bird;<sup>o</sup> the raven
 Her little soul is ravished: and so poured
 Into loose ecstasies, that she is placed
 Above herself, music's enthusiast.<sup>6</sup>
- 105 Shame now and anger mixed a double stain
 In the musician's face; yet once again,
 Mistress, I come; now reach a strain, my lute,
 Above her mock, or be forever mute.
 Or tune a song of victory to me,
- 110 Or to thyself sing thine own obsequy;<sup>o</sup> funeral song
 So said, his hands sprightly as fire he flings,
 And with a quavering coyness tastes the strings.
 The sweet-lipped sisters<sup>o</sup> musically frightened, the Muses
 Singing their fears are fearfully delighted.
- 115 Trembling as when Apollo's golden hairs
 Are fanned and frizzled, in the wanton airs
 Of his own breath; which married to his lyre
 Doth tune the spheres, and make heaven's self look higher.
 From this to that, from that to this he flies,
- 120 Feels music's pulse in all her arteries,
 Caught in a net which there Apollo spreads,
 His fingers struggle with the vocal threads,
 Following those little rills,<sup>7</sup> he sinks into
 A Sea of Helicon;<sup>8</sup> his hand does go
- 125 Those parts of sweetness, which with nectar drop,
 Softer than that which pants in Hebe's<sup>9</sup> cup.
 The humorous<sup>o</sup> strings expound his learned touch capricious
 By various glosses; now they seem to grutch<sup>o</sup> grumble

Literally, one inspired by a god.
 Small streams; also, passages of liquid notes.
 Resort of Apollo and the Muses.

9. Greek goddess of youth and cupbearer to the gods.

And murmur in a buzzing din, then jingle
 130 In shrill tongued accents: striving to be single.
 Every smooth turn, every delicious stroke
 Gives life to some new grace; thus doth h'invoke
 Sweetness by all her names; thus, bravely<sup>0</sup> thus splendidly
 (Fraught with a fury so harmonious)
 135 The lute's light genius now does proudly rise,
 Heaved on the surges of swollen rhapsodies.
 Whose flourish, meteor-like, doth curl the air
 With flash of high-borne fancies; here and there
 Dancing in lofty measures, and anon
 140 Creeps on the soft touch of a tender tone:
 Whose trembling murmurs melting in wild airs
 Runs to and fro, complaining his sweet cares
 Because those precious mysteries that dwell,
 In music's ravished soul he dare not tell,
 145 But whisper to the world: thus do they vary
 Each string his note, as if they meant to carry
 Their master's blest soul (snatched out at his ears
 By a strong ecstasy) through all the spheres
 Of music's heaven; and seat it there on high
 150 In th'empyreum<sup>0</sup> of pure harmony. highest heaven
 At length (after so long, so loud a strife
 Of all the strings, still breathing the best life
 Of blest variety attending on
 His finger's fairest revolution
 155 In many a sweet rise, many as sweet a fall)
 A full-mouthed diapason<sup>1</sup> swallows all.
 This done, he lists what she would say to this,
 And she although her breath's late exercise
 Had dealt too roughly with her tender throat,
 160 Yet summons all her sweet powers for a note
 Alas! in vain! for while, sweet soul, she tries
 To measure all those wild diversities
 Of chatt'ring strings, by the small size of one
 Poor simple voice, raised in a natural tone,
 165 She fails, and failing grieves, and grieving dies.
 She dies; and leaves her life the victor's prize,
 Falling upon his lute; o fit to have
 (That lived so sweetly) dead, so sweet a grave!

1. A grand burst of harmony.

This foot hath got a mouth and lips
 To pay the sweet sum of thy kisses;
 15 To pay thy tears, an eye that weeps
 Instead of tears such gems as this is.

The difference only this appears
 (Nor can the change offend),
 The debt is paid in ruby-tears
 20 Which thou in pearls didst lend.

Luke 11. [27]<sup>1</sup>
 Blessed be the paps which Thou hast sucked

Suppose he had been tabled at thy teats,
 Thy hunger feels not what he eats:
 He'll have his teat e're long (a bloody one)<sup>2</sup>
 The Mother then must suck the Son.

FROM CARMEN DEO NOSTRO

In the Holy Nativity of Our Lord God: A Hymn Sung as by the Shepherds<sup>1</sup>

CHORUS Come we shepherds whose blest sight
 Hath met love's noon in nature's night;
 Come lift we up our loftier song,
 And wake the sun that lies too long.

5 To all our world of well-stol'n joy
 He<sup>0</sup> slept, and dreamt of no such thing, the sun
 While we found out heaven's fairer eye,
 And kissed the cradle of our King.
 Tell him he rises now too late
 10 To show us aught worth looking at.

1. The verse identifies the addressee: "And it came to pass, as he [Jesus] spake these things, a certain woman of the company lifted up her voice, and said unto him, 'Blessed is the womb that bare thee, and the paps which thou hast sucked.' "

2. The wound in Christ's side, making his breast (the fountain of all graces) bloody.

1. See Luke 2.8-20. The poem's form, the interweaving of chorus and alternating soloists, is structurally comparable to an oratorio, an Italian musical form that Crashaw may well have known from his sojourns on the Continent. Its form invites comparison with Dryden's "Alexander's Feast"; and its subject with Milton's "On the Morning of Christ's Nativity" (p. 1789). The last version of this poem (1652), printed here, differs considerably from the first version (1646).

Tell him we now can show him more
 Than he e'er showed to mortal sight;
 Than he himself e'er saw before,
 Which to be seen needs not his light.
 Tell him, Tityrus, where th' hast been;
 Tell him, Thyrsis,<sup>2</sup> what th' hast seen.

TITYRUS Gloomy night embraced the place
 Where the noble infant lay.
 The babe looked up and showed his face:
 In spite of darkness, it was day.
 It was thy day, sweet!<sup>0</sup> and did rise,
 Not from the east, but from thine eyes.
 CHORUS It was thy day, sweet, etc.

THYRSIS Winter chid aloud, and sent
 The angry north to wage his wars;
 The north forgot his fierce intent,
 And left perfumes instead of scars.
 By those sweet eyes' persuasive powers,
 Where he meant frost, he scattered flowers.
 CHORUS By those sweet eyes', etc.

BOTH We saw thee in thy balmy<sup>0</sup> nest, eastern, perfumed
 Young dawn of our eternal day!
 We saw thine eyes break from their east
 And chase the trembling shades away.
 We saw thee; and we blessed the sight.
 We saw thee by thine own sweet light.

TITYRUS Poor world (said I), what wilt thou do
 To entertain this starry stranger?
 Is this the best thou canst bestow,
 A cold, and not too cleanly, manger?
 Contend, ye powers of heaven and earth,
 To fit a bed for this huge birth.
 CHORUS Contend, ye powers, etc.

THYRSIS Proud world (said I), cease your contest,
 And let the Mighty Babe alone.
 The phoenix builds the phoenix' nest;<sup>3</sup>
 Love's architecture is his own.
 The Babe whose birth embraves<sup>0</sup> this morn makes splendid
 Made his own bed ere he was born.
 CHORUS The Babe whose, etc.

2. Tityrus and Thyrsis are typical names for shepherds in classical pastoral poetry; Crashaw here identifies such pastoral figures with the biblical shepherds from the hillsides around Bethlehem.

3. The phoenix is the legendary bird of ancient Egypt, often taken as a symbol for Christ. Only one phoenix existed at any one time; after it had lived five hundred years, it was consumed in flame and a new phoenix rose from the ashes. Christ as Son of God took part in the making of the world long before his incarnation.

TITYRUS I saw the curl'd drops, soft and slow,
 Come hovering o'er the place's head,
 Offering their whitest sheets of snow
 To furnish the fair Infant's bed:
 55 Forbear (said I), be not too bold;
 Your fleece is white, but 'tis too cold.
 CHORUS Forbear (said I), etc.

THYRSIS I saw the obsequious seraphims<sup>4</sup>
 Their rosy fleece of fire bestow,
 60 For well they now can spare their wings
 Since heaven itself lies here below.
 Well done (said I), but are you sure
 Your down so warm will pass for pure?
 CHORUS Well done (said I), etc.

65 TITYRUS NO, no; your King's not yet to seek
 Where to repose his royal head;
 See, see; how soon his new-bloomed cheek
 Twixt mother's breasts is gone to bed.
 Sweet choice (said we), no way but so
 70 Not to lie cold, yet sleep in snow.
 CHORUS Sweet choice (said we), etc.

BOTH We saw thee in thy balmy nest,
 Bright dawn of our eternal day!
 We saw thine eyes break from their east
 75 And chase the trembling shades away.
 We saw thee; and we blessed the sight.
 We saw thee, by thine own sweet light.
 CHORUS We saw thee, etc.

FULL CHORUS

80 Welcome, all wonders in one sight!
 Eternity shut in a span.
 Summer in winter. Day in night.
 Heaven in earth, and God in man.
 Great little one! whose all-embracing birth
 Lifts earth to heaven, stoops heaven to earth.

85 Welcome! though not to gold nor silk,
 To more than Caesar's birthright is;
 Two sister seas of virgin milk,
 With many a rarely tempered kiss
 That breathes at once both maid<sup>o</sup> and mother, virgin
 90 Warms in the one, cools in the other.

Welcome! though not to those gay flies<sup>5</sup>
 Gilded i' th' beams of earthly kings—

4. The highest order of angels, associated with fire because of their ardent love of God.

5. Courtiers, stigmatized in three compressed lines as ephemeral, worldly, and hypocritical.

T O T H E
 Noblest & best of Ladies, the Countess of Denbigh.

Persuading her to Resolution in Religion,
 & to render herself without further delay into the Communion of the Catholic Church.<sup>2</sup>

What heaven-entreated heart is this,
 Stands trembling at the gate of bliss,
 Holds fast the door, yet dares not venture
 Fairly to open it, and enter?
 5 Whose definition is a doubt
 'Twixt life and death, 'twixt in and out.
 Say, lingering fair! why comes the birth
 Of your brave soul so slowly forth?
 Plead your pretenses (O you strong
 10 In weakness!) why you choose so long
 In labor of your self to lie,
 Not daring quite to live nor die.
 Ah, linger not, loved soul! A slow
 And late consent was<sup>o</sup> a long no; would be 15 Who grants at last, long time tried
 And did his best to have denied.
 What magic bolts, what mystic bars,
 Maintain the will in these strange wars!
 What fatal<sup>o</sup> yet fantastic bands fateful
 20 Keep the free heart from its own hands!
 So when the year takes cold, we see
 Poor waters their own prisoners be;
 Fettered and locked up fast they lie
 In a sad self-captivity.
 25 Th' astonished nymphs their flood's strange fate deplore,
 To see themselves their own severer shore.
 Thou that alone canst thaw this cold,
 And fetch the heart from its stronghold,
 Almighty Love! end this long war,
 30 And of a meteor make a star.<sup>3</sup>
 O fix this fair indefinite;
 And 'mongst thy shafts of sovereign<sup>o</sup> light supreme, effectual
 Choose out that sure decisive dart
 Which has the key of this close heart,

2. Susan, Countess of Denbigh, had been widowed in 1643, when her husband was killed fighting for the king. She went to Paris into exile with Queen Henrietta Maria in 1644 and, along with some other ladies attached to the court of that Roman Catholic queen, was herself attracted to that religion. Crashaw himself was a new convert; here he engages in a poetic version of the pressure often exerted by both Catholic priests and Anglican clergy on influential court ladies. As usual, he calls upon the imagery of erotic persuasion to urge her conversion.

3. Meteors were sublunary and therefore irregular and transient; stars, located above the moon, were regular, fixed, and permanent.

- 35 Knows all the corners of't, and can control
 The self-shut cabinet of an unsearched soul.
 O let it be at last love's hour!
 Raise this tall trophy of thy power;
 Come once the conquering way, not to confute,
- 40 But kill this rebel-word, irresolute,
 That so, in spite of all this peevish strength
 Of weakness, she may write, resolved at length.
 Unfold at length, unfold, fair flower,
 And use the season of love's shower.
- 45 Meet his well-meaning wounds, wise heart,
 And haste to drink the wholesome dart,
 That healing shaft which heaven till now
 Hath in love's quiver hid for you.
 O dart of love! arrow of light!
- 50 O happy you, if it hit right;
 It must not fall in vain, it must
 Not mark the dry, regardless dust.
 Fair one, it is your fate, and brings
 Eternal worlds upon its wings.
- 55 Meet it with wide-spread arms, and see
 Its seat your soul's just center be.
 Disband dull fears; give faith the day.
 To save your life, kill your delay.
 It is love's siege, and sure to be
- 60 Your triumph, though his victory.
 'Tis cowardice that keeps this field,
 And want of courage not to yield.
 Yield, then, O yield, that love may win
 The fort at last, and let life in.
- 65 Yield quickly, lest perhaps you prove
 Death's prey before the prize of love.
 This fort of your fair self, if't be not won,
 He is repulsed indeed; but you are undone.

The Flaming Heart St. Teresa of Avila, a sixteenth-century Spanish mystic and founder of an ascetic order of barefoot Carmelite nuns, was one of the great figures of the Catholic Reformation. Her autobiography, popular throughout Europe and translated into English in 1642 as The Flaming Heart, describes not only her practical problems in establishing her order but also a series of ecstatic trances and visitations that represent union with the divine in sensual, indeed erotic, imagery. The great Italian sculptor and architect Pietro Bernini portrayed a famous mystical experience described in Teresa's autobiography in a stunning baroque statue still in the church of Santa Maria della Vittoria, in Rome. It shows the saint in an attitude of ecstatic, swooning abandonment while a juvenile seraph stands over her, about to plunge a golden arrow into her heart. Crashaw may or may not have seen this statue while Bernini was at work on it (it was installed only after Crashaw's death), but his poem addresses a painter who produced a picture of this episode conceived much as Bernini presented it.

FLAMING HEART
UPON THE BOOK AND
Picture of the seraphical saint

T E R E S A ,
(AS SHE IS USUALLY Expressed with aSERAPHIM beside her.)<sup>1</sup>

Well-meaning readers! you that come as friends,
And catch the precious name this piece pretends,<sup>0</sup> putsforivard
Make not too much haste to admire
That fair-cheeked fallacy of fire.
5 That is a seraphim, they say,
And this the great Teresia.
Readers, be ruled by me, and make
Here a well-placed and wise mistake:
You must transpose the picture quite 10 And spell<sup>0</sup> it wrong to read<sup>0</sup> it right; read/understand
Read him for her and her for him,
And call the saint the seraphim.
Painter, what didst thou understand,
To put her dart into his hand!
15 See, even the years and size of him
Shows this the mother seraphim.
This is the mistress-flame; and duteous he,
Her happy fireworks here comes down to see.
O most poor-spirited of men!
20 Had thy cold pencil kissed her pen<sup>2</sup>
Thou couldst not so unkindly err
To show us this faint shade for her.
Why, man, this speaks pure mortal frame,
And mocks with female frost love's manly flame.
25 One would suspect thou meant'st to paint
Some weak, inferior, woman saint.
Rut had thy pale-faced purple took
Fire from the burning cheeks of that bright book,
Thou wouldst on her have heaped up all
30 That could be found seraphical:
Whate'er this youth of fire wears fair,
Rosy fingers, radiant hair,
Glowing cheek and glistering wings,

1. "Seraphim" is in fact the plural form of "seraph." This highest order of angels was thought to burn continuously in the fire of divine love.

2. I.e., if you'd only been properly inspired by her book.

All those fair and flagrant<sup>0</sup> things, burning
 35 But before all, that fiery dart
 Had filled the hand of this great heart.
 Do then as equal right requires,
 Since his the blushes be, and hers the fires,
 Resume and rectify thy rude design,
 40 Undress thy seraphim into mine.
 Redeem this injury of thy art,
 Give him the veil, give her the dart.
 Give him the veil, that he may cover
 The red cheeks<sup>0</sup> of a rivaled lover, blushes
 45 Ashamed that our world now can show
 Nests of new seraphims here below.<sup>3</sup>
 Give her the dart, for it is she (Fair youth) shoots both thy shaft and thee.
 Say, all ye wise and well-pierced hearts
 50 That live and die amidst her darts,<sup>0</sup> i.e., her writings
 What is't your tasteful spirits do prove<sup>0</sup> experience
 In that rare life of her and love?
 Say and bear witness. Sends she not
 A seraphim at every shot?
 55 What magazines of immortal arms there shine!
 Heaven's great artillery in each love-spun line.
 Give then the dart to her who gives the flame,
 Give him the veil who kindly takes the shame.
 But if it be the frequent fate
 60 Of worst faults to be fortunate;
 If all's prescription,<sup>4</sup> and proud wrong
 Harkens not to an humble song,
 For all the gallantry of him,
 Give me the suffering seraphim.<sup>5</sup>
 65 His be the bravery<sup>0</sup> of all those bright things, splendor
 The glowing cheeks, the glistering wings,
 The rosy hand, the radiant dart;
 Leave her alone the Flaming Heart.
 Leave her that, and thou shalt leave her
 70 Not one loose shaft, but love's whole quiver.
 For in love's field was never found
 A nobler weapon than a wound.
 Love's passives are his activ'st part,
 The wounded is the wounding heart.
 75 O heart! the equal poise of love's both parts,
 Big alike with wounds and darts,
 Live in these conquering leaves,<sup>6</sup> live all the same;
 And walk through all tongues one triumphant flame.
 Live here, great heart; and love and die and kill,
 so And bleed and wound; and yield and conquer still.
 Let this immortal life, where'er it comes,
 Walk in a crowd of loves and martyrdoms.

3. Teresa burns on earth in love, as seraphim do in heaven.

4. I.e., settled beforehand, by the decision of the artist.

5. If Teresa can't be transformed into the angel, Crashaw prefers her as the "suffering" lover.

6. I.e., the leaves of St. Teresa's book.

Let mystic deaths wait on't, and wise souls be
 The love-slain witnesses of this life of thee.
 85 O sweet incendiary! show here thy art,
 Upon this carcass of a hard, cold heart;<sup>0</sup> Crashaw's heart
 Let all thy scattered shafts of light, that play
 Among the leaves of thy large books of day,<sup>7</sup>
 Combined against this breast, at once break in
 - 90 And take away from me myself and sin!
 This gracious robbery shall thy bounty be,
 And my best fortunes such fair spoils of me.<sup>8</sup>
 O thou undaunted daughter of desires!
 By all thy dower of lights and fires;
 95 By all the eagle in thee, all the dove;<sup>9</sup>
 By all thy lives and deaths of love;
 By thy large drafts of intellectual day,
 And by thy thirsts of love more large than they;
 By all thy brim-filled bowls of fierce desire,
 100 By thy last morning's draft of liquid fire;
 By the full kingdom of that final kiss
 That seized thy parting soul, and sealed thee His;
 By all the heavens thou hast in Him,
 Fair sister of the seraphim,
 105 By all of Him we have in thee,
 Leave nothing of myself in me!
 Let me so read thy life that I
 Unto all life of mine may die!

1652

7. Books filled with intellectual and spiritual light.

8. I.e., my best fortune will be to be despoiled in this way.

9. The eagle suggests wisdom and power, for its lofty flight and ability to look into the sun's eye; the dove suggests mercy and gentleness. Cf. Donne's "The Canonization," line 22 (p. 1268).

ROBERT HERRICK

1591-1674

Robert Herrick was the most devoted of the Sons of Ben, though his epigrams and lyrics (like Jonson's) also show the direct influence of classical poets: Horace, Anacreon, Catullus, Tibullus, Ovid, and Martial. Born in London the son of a goldsmith and apprenticed for some years in that craft, Herrick took B.A. and M.A. degrees at Cambridge and consorted in the early 1620s with Jonson and his "tribe," who met regularly at the Apollo Room. After his ordination in 1623, he apparently served as chaplain to various noblemen and in that role joined Buckingham's failed military expedition to rescue French Protestants at Bhe in 1627. In 1630 he was installed as the vicar of Dean Prior in Devonshire. Expelled as a royalist in 1647, he apparently lived in London until the Restoration, when he was reinstated at Dean Prior and remained there until his death.

Herrick's single volume of poems, Hesperides (1648), with its appended book of religious poems, Noble Numbers, contains over four hundred short poems. At first glance, they seem merely playful and charming, although remarkable for their equisite and unerring artistry and perfect decorum. Many are love poems on the carpe diem theme—seize the day, time is fleeting, make love now; a famous example is the elegant song "To the Virgins, to Make Much of Time." But Herrick's range is much wider than is sometimes recognized. He moves from the pastoral to the cynical, from an almost rococo elegance to coarse, even vulgar, epigrams, and from the didactic to the dramatic. Also, he derives mythic energy and power from certain recurring motifs. One is metamorphosis, "times trans-shifting," the transience of all natural things. Another is celebration—festivals and feasts—evoking the social, ritualistic, and even anthropological significances and energies contained in rural harvest festivals ("The Hock Cart") or the May Day rituals described in what is perhaps his finest poem, "Corinna's Going A-Maying." Yet another is the classical but also perennial ideal of the "good life," defined in his terms as "cleanly wantonness." For Herrick this involves love devoid of high passion (the several mistresses he addresses seem interchangeable and not very real); the pleasures of food, drink, and song; delight in the beauty of surfaces (as in "Upon Julia's Clothes"); and, finally, the creation of poetry as ballast against the ravages of time.

Published just months before the execution of Charles I, these poems, seem almost oblivious to the catastrophes of the war. But they are not. Poems celebrating rural feasts and festivals, ceremonial social occasions, and the rituals of good fellowship reinforce the conservative values of social stability, tradition, and order threatened by the Puritans. Several poems that draw upon the Celtic mythology of fairy folk make their feasts, temples, worship, and ceremonies stand in for the forbidden ceremonies of the Laudian church and a life governed by ritual. Still other poems, like "The Hock Cart" and "Corinna's Going A-Maying," celebrate the kind of rural festivals that were at the center of the culture wars between royalists and Puritans. Both James I and Charles I urged such activities in their Book of Sports as a means of reinforcing traditional institutions in the countryside and deflecting discontent, while Puritans vigorously opposed them as occasions for drunkenness and licentiousness.

The Argument<sup>2</sup> of His Book

I sing of brooks, of blossoms, birds, and bowers,
 Of April, May, of June, and July flowers.
 I sing of Maypoles, hock carts, wassails, wakes,<sup>3</sup>
 Of bridegrooms, brides, and of their bridal cakes.
 5 I write of youth, of love, and have access
 By these to sing of cleanly wantonness.
 I sing of dews, of rains, and, piece by piece,
 Of balm, of oil, of spice, and ambergris.<sup>4</sup>
 I sing of times trans-shifting,<sup>0</sup> and I write changing
 10 How roses first came red and lilies white.

1. In myth, the Hesperides, or Western Maidens, guarded an orchard and garden, also called Hesperides, in which grew a tree bearing golden apples. Herrick's title suggests that his poems are golden apples from his residence in western Devonshire; the following poems are all from that volume, published in 1648.

2. Subject matter, theme.

3. Festive, not funerary, occasions, to celebrate the dedication of a new church. "Hock carts" carried home the last load of the harvest, so they were adorned and celebrated. "Wassails" were Twelfth Night celebrations.

4. A secretion of the sperm whale that is used in making perfume—hence it suggests something rare and delectable.

I write of groves, of twilights, and I sing
 The court of Mab and of the fairy king.<sup>5</sup>
 I write of hell; I sing (and ever shall)
 Of heaven, and hope to have it after all.

Upon the Loss of His Mistresses<sup>1</sup>

I have lost, and lately, these
 Many dainty mistresses:
 Stately Julia, prime of all;
 Sappho next, a principal;
 5 Smooth Anthea, for a skin
 White and heaven-like crystalline;
 Sweet Electra, and the choice
 Myrrha, for the lute and voice;
 Next Corinna for her wit
 10 And the graceful use of it,
 With Perilla; all are gone,
 Only Herrick's left alone,
 For to number sorrows by
 Their departures hence, and die.

The Vine

I dreamed this mortal part of mine
 Was metamorphosed to a vine,
 Which, crawling one and every way,
 Enthralled my dainty Lucia.<sup>1</sup>
 5 Methought, her long small legs and thighs
 I with my tendrils did surprise;
 Her belly, buttocks, and her waist
 By my soft nervelets were embraced.
 About her head I writhing hung,
 10 And with rich clusters (hid among
 The leaves) her temples I behung,
 So that my Lucia seemed to me
 Young Bacchus ravished by his tree.<sup>0</sup>
 My curls about her neck did crawl,
 15 And arms and hands they did enthrall,
 So that she could not freely stir
 (All parts there made one prisoner).
 But when I crept with leaves to hide
 Those parts which maids keep unespied,
 20 Such fleeting pleasures there I took
 That with the fancy I awoke,

the grapevine

5. Mab was queen of the fairies and wife of their king, Oberon.

1. The ladies are imaginary, and their names are traditional in classical love poetry and pastoral poetry.

1. For the sake of both rhyme and meter, the name of this lady is given three syllables here; in line 12 it has only two.

And found (ah me!) this flesh of mine
 More like a stock<sup>0</sup> than like a vine. hard stalk

Dreams

Here we are all, by day; by night, we're hurled
 By dreams, each one into a several<sup>0</sup> world. separate

Delight in Disorder<sup>1</sup>

A sweet disorder in the dress
 Kindles in clothes a wantonness.
 A lawn<sup>o</sup> about the shoulders thrown fine linen scarf
 Into a fine distraction;
 5 An erring<sup>o</sup> lace, which here and there wandering
 Enthralls the crimson stomacher;<sup>2</sup>
 A cuff neglectful, and thereby
 Ribbons to flow confusedly;
 A winning wave, deserving note,
 10 In the tempestuous petticoat;
 A careless shoestring, in whose tie
 I see a wild civility:
 Do more bewitch me than when art
 Is too precise<sup>3</sup> in every part.

His Farewell to Sack<sup>1</sup>

Farewell, thou thing, time-past so known, so dear
 To me as blood to life and spirit; near,
 Nay, thou more near than kindred, friend, man, wife,
 Male to the female, soul to body, life
 5 To quick action, or the warm soft side
 Of the resigning<sup>o</sup> yet resisting bride. yielding
 The loss of virgins; first fruits of the bed;
 Soft speech, smooth touch, the lips, the maidenhead;
 These and a thousand sweets could never be 10 So near or dear as thou wast once to me.
 O thou, the drink of gods and angels! Wine
 That scatterest spirit and lust;<sup>o</sup> whose purest shine pleasure
 More radiant than the summer's sunbeams shows,
 Each way illustrious, brave;<sup>o</sup> and like to those splendid

1. One of several poems in this period in which women's dress is a means by which to explore the relation of nature and art. See Jonson's "Still to Be Neat," p. 1444.

2. An ornamental covering of the chest, worn under the laces of the bodice.

3. "Precise" and "precision" were terms used satirically about Puritans. Herrick, in praising feminine disarray, is at one level praising the "sprezzatura," or careless grace, of Cavalier art.

1. Sherry wine, imported from Spain.

- 15 Comets we see by night, whose shagg'd<sup>2</sup> portents
 Foretell the coming of some dire events,
 Or<sup>o</sup> some full flame which with a pride aspires, or like to Throwing about his wild and active fires.
 'Tis thou, above nectar, O divinest soul!
- 20 (Eternal in thyself) that canst control
 That which subverts whole nature: grief and care,
 Vexation of the mind, and damned despair.
 'Tis thou alone who with thy mystic fan<sup>3</sup>
 Work'st more than wisdom, art, or nature can
- 25 To rouse the sacred madness,<sup>4</sup> and awake
 The frost-bound blood and spirits, and to make Them frantic with thy raptures, flashing through
 The soul like lightning, and as active too.
 'Tis not Apollo can, or those thrice three
- 30 Castalian sisters sing,<sup>5</sup> if wanting<sup>o</sup> thee. lacking
 Horace, Anacreon both had lost their fame
 Had'st thou not filled them with thy fire and flame.<sup>6</sup>
 Phoebean splendor! and thou Thespian spring!<sup>7</sup>
 Of which sweet swans must drink before they sing
- 35 Their true-paced numbers and their holy lays<sup>o</sup> songs
 Which makes them worthy cedar and the bays.<sup>8</sup>
 But why? why longer do I gaze upon
 Thee with the eye of admiration?
 Since I must leave thee, and enforced must say
- 40 To all thy witching beauties, Go, away.
 But if thy whimpering looks do ask me why,
 Then know that nature bids thee go, not I.
 'Tis her erroneous self has made a brain
 Uncapable of such a sovereign
- 45 As is thy powerful self. Prithee not smile,
 Or smile more inly, lest thy looks beguile
 My vows denounced<sup>o</sup> in zeal, which thus much show thee, proclaimed
 That I have sworn but by thy looks to know thee.
 Let others drink thee freely, and desire
- 50 Thee and their lips espoused, while I admire
 And love thee but not taste thee. Let my muse
 Fail of thy former helps, and only use
 Her inadulterate strength. What's done by me
 Hereafter shall smell of the lamp, not thee.<sup>9</sup>

2. Hairy, referring to a comet's tail.

3. Instrument for winnowing grain; associated with Bacchus, god of wine.

4. Poetic inspiration or frenzy, often likened to intoxication.

5. Apollo, god of poetry, and the Nine Muses; the Castalian spring on Mount Parnassus was sacred to them.

6. Both Horace and Anacreon wrote about the pleasures of wine.

7. In addition to being an epithet of Apollo, Phoebeus in Greek means bright, pure. The inhabitants of Thespieae, in Boeotia, worshipped the Muses and held an annual festival in their honor at the spring of Hippocrene, nearby.

8. Cedar oil was used to preserve papyrus; the poet's crown is woven of bay (i.e., laurel) leaves.

9. To "smell of the lamp" is a proverbial expression for a laborious and uninspired literary production.

Corinna's Going A-Maying

Get up! Get up for shame! The blooming morn
Upon her wings presents the god unshorn.<sup>1</sup>

See how Aurora throws her fair
Fresh-quilted colors through the air:<sup>2</sup>
Get up, sweet slug-a-bed, and see
The dew bespangling herb and tree.

Each flower has wept and bowed toward the east
Above an hour since, yet you not dressed;

Nay, not so much as out of bed?
When all the birds have matins<sup>0</sup> said, morning prayer
And sung their thankful hymns, 'tis sin,
Nay, profanation<sup>0</sup> to keep in, impiety

Whenas a thousand virgins on this day
Spring, sooner than the lark, to fetch in May.<sup>3</sup>

Rise, and put on your foliage, and be seen
To come forth, like the springtime, fresh and green,

And sweet as Flora.<sup>4</sup> Take no care
For jewels for your gown or hair;
Fear not; the leaves will strew
Gems in abundance upon you;

Resides, the childhood of the day has kept,
Against<sup>0</sup> you come, some orient pearls<sup>5</sup> unwept; until

Come and receive them while the light
Hangs on the dew-locks of the night,
And Titan<sup>0</sup> on the eastern hill the sun

Retires himself, or else stands still

Till you come forth. Wash, dress, be brief in praying:
Few beads<sup>6</sup> are best when once we go a-Maying.

Come, my Corinna, come; and, coming, mark
How each field turns<sup>0</sup> a street, each street a park turns into

Made green and trimmed with trees; see how Devotion gives each house a bough
Or branch: each porch, each door ere this,
An ark, a tabernacle is,<sup>7</sup>

Made up of whitethorn neatly interwove,
As if here were those cooler shades of love.

Can such delights be in the street
And open fields, and we not see't?
Come, we'll abroad; and let's obey
The proclamation<sup>8</sup> made for May,

1. Apollo, the sun god; sunbeams are seen as his flowing locks.

2. Aurora is goddess of the dawn.

3. On May Day morning, it was the custom to gather whitethorn blossoms and trim the house with them.

4. Flora. Italian goddess of (lowers, had her festival in the spring.

5. Pearls from the Orient were especially lustrous, like drops of dew.

6. Rosary beads of the "old" Catholic religion, but more generally, a casual term for prayers.

7. The doorways, ornamented with whitethorn, are like the Hebrew Ark of the Covenant or the sanctuary that housed it (Leviticus 23.40—42: "Ye shall take you on the first day the boughs of goodly trees . . .").

8. Probably a reference to Charles I's "Declaration to his subjects concerning lawful sports."

And sin no more, as we have done, by staying;
But, my Corinna, come, let's go a-Maying.

There's not a budding boy or girl this day
But is got up and gone to bring in May;
45 A deal of youth, ere this, is come
Back, and with whitethorn laden, home.
Some have dispatched their cakes and cream
Before that we have left to dream;
And some have wept, and wooed, and plighted troth,<sup>9</sup>
50 And chose their priest, ere we can cast off sloth.
Many a green gown<sup>1</sup> has been given,
Many a kiss, both odd and even;<sup>2</sup>
Many a glance, too, has been sent
From out the eye, love's firmament;<sup>0</sup> sky
55 Many a jest told of the keys betraying
This night, and locks picked; yet we're not a-Maying.

Come, let us go while we are in our prime,
And take the harmless folly of the time.
We shall grow old apace, and die
60 Before we know our liberty.
Our life is short, and our days run
As fast away as does the sun;
And, as a vapor or a drop of rain,
Once lost, can ne'er be found again,
65 So when or you or I are made
A fable, song, or fleeting shade,
All love, all liking, all delight
Lies drowned with us in endless night.<sup>3</sup>
Then while time serves, and we are but decaying,
70 Come, my Corinna, come, let's go a-Maying.

To the Virgins, to Make Much of Time

Gather ye rosebuds while ye may,
Old time is still<sup>0</sup> a-flying;<sup>1</sup> always
And this same flower that smiles today,
Tomorrow will be dying.

5 The glorious lamp of heaven, the sun,
The higher he's a-getting,
The sooner will his race be run,
And nearer he's to setting.

9. Engaged themselves to marry.

1. Got by rolling in the grass.

2. Kisses are odd and even in kissing games.

3. Some echoes of the apocryphal book Wisdom of Solomon 2.1–8: "For the ungodly said . . . the breath of our nostrils is as smoke, and a little spark

. . . and our life shall pass away as the trace of a cloud. . . . Come on therefore . . . Let us crown ourselves with rose buds before they be withered." This carpe diem sentiment is a frequent theme in classical love poetry.

1. Translates the Latin tempus fugit.

That age is best which is the first,
 10 When youth and blood are warmer;
 Rut being spent, the worse, and worst
 Times still succeed the former.

Then be not coy, but use your time,
 And while ye may, go marry;
 15 For having lost but once your prime,
 You may forever tarry.

The Hock Cart,<sup>1</sup> or Harvest Home

to the Right Honorable Mildmay, Earl of Westmoreland

Come, sons of summer, by whose toil
 We are the lords of wine and oil;<sup>2</sup>
 By whose tough labors and rough hands
 We rip up first, then reap our lands.
 5 Crowned with the ears of corn,<sup>0</sup> now come grain
 And, to the pipe, sing harvest home.
 Come forth, my lord, and see the cart
 Dressed up with all the country art.
 See here a maukin,<sup>0</sup> there a sheet, scarecrow
 10 As spotless pure as it is sweet,
 The horses, mares, and frisking fillies
 Clad all in linen, white as lilies,
 The harvest swains<sup>0</sup> and wenches bound young men
 For joy to see the hock-cart crowned.
 15 About the cart, hear how the rout
 Of rural younglings raise the shout,
 Pressing before, some coming after,
 Those with a shout and these with laughter.
 Some bless the cart, some kiss the sheaves,
 20 Some prank<sup>0</sup> them up with oaken leaves; adorn
 Some cross the fill-horse,<sup>3</sup> some with great
 Devotion stroke the home-borne wheat;
 While other rustics, less attent
 To prayers than to merriment,
 25 Run after with their breeches rent.
 Well, on, brave boys, to your lord's hearth,
 Glittering with fire; where, for your mirth,
 Ye shall see first the large and chief
 Foundation of your feast, fat beef;
 30 With upper stories, mutton, veal,
 And bacon,<sup>0</sup> which makes full the meal, pork
 With several dishes standing by,

1. The last cart carrying home the harvest; hence the occasion for a rural festival, traditional throughout Europe. Mildmay Fane, earl of Westmorland (1628—1660), was one of Herrick's patrons.

2. Wine and oil are the yields of Mediterranean farming, connecting the English harvest festival to classical pastoral.

3. The fill-horse is harnessed between the shafts of the cart. Crossing the horse and kissing the sheaves suggest the persistence of pre-Reformation rituals in the countryside.

As here a custard, there a pie,
 And here all-tempting frumenty.<sup>0</sup> pudding
 35 And for to make the merry cheer,
 If smirking<sup>0</sup> wine be wanting<sup>0</sup> here, sparkling / lacking
 There's that which drowns all care, stout beer:
 Which freely drink to your lord's health,
 Then to the plow (the common-wealth),
 40 Next to your flails, your fans,<sup>4</sup> your vats,
 Then to the maids with wheaten hats,
 To the rough sickle and crook'd scythe,
 Drink, frolic boys, till all be blithe.
 Feed, and grow fat; and, as ye eat,
 45 Be mindful that the lab'ring neat,<sup>0</sup> cattle
 As you, may have their fill of meat.<sup>5</sup>
 And know, besides, ye must revoke<sup>0</sup> call back
 The patient ox unto his yoke,
 And all go back unto the plow
 50 And harrow, though they're hanged up now.
 And you must know, your lord's word's true,
 Feed him ye must whose food fills you,
 And that this pleasure is like rain,
 Not sent ye for to drown your pain
 55 But for to make it spring again.<sup>6</sup>

How Roses Came Red<sup>1</sup>

Roses at first were white,
 Till they could not agree,
 Whether my Sappho's breast,
 Or they more white should be.
 5 But being vanquished quite,
 A blush their cheeks bespread;
 Since which (believe the rest)
 The roses first came red.

Upon the Nipples of Julia's Breast

Have ye beheld (with much delight)
 A red rose peeping through a white?
 Or else a cherry (double graced)
 Within a lily center-placed?
 5 Or ever marked<sup>0</sup> the pretty beam observed

4. "Flails" are threshing instruments; "fans" are used to winnow grain from chaff. The plow is the common source of everybody's wealth. In line with the anti-Puritan sentiments of the whole poem, the word "commonwealth," in this communal and earthy sense, invites a contrast with Puritan republican theories.

5. Food (grain or hay).

6. Spring is heralded by rain, but the lines also point to the continual renewal of the agricultural worker's pain and labor.

1. This poem and several others in the collection present minitransformations in witty allusion to Ovid's epiclike Metamorphoses.

A strawberry shows half drowned in cream?
 Or seen rich rubies blushing through
 A pure smooth pearl, and orient<sup>o</sup> too? iridescent
 So like to this, nay all the rest,
 10 Is each neat niplet of her breast.

Upon Jack and Jill. Epigram<sup>2</sup>

When Jill complains to Jack for want of meat,
 Jack kisses Jill, and bids her freely eat.
 Jill says, Of what? Says Jack, On that sweet kiss,
 Which full of nectar and ambrosia is,
 5 The food of poets. So I thought, says Jill;
 That makes them look so lank, so ghost-like still.
 Let poets feed on air or what they will;
 Let me feed full till that I fart, says Jill.

To Marigolds<sup>3</sup>

Give way, an<sup>o</sup> ye be ravished by the sun, if
 And hang the head whenas the act is done.
 Spread as he spreads; wax less as he does wane,
 And as he shuts, close up to maids<sup>o</sup> again. virgins

His Prayer to Ben Jonson

When I a verse shall make,
 Know I have prayed thee,
 For old religion's sake,<sup>4</sup>
 Saint Ren to aid me.

5 Make the way smooth for me
 When I, thy Herrick,
 Honoring thee, on my knee,
 Offer my lyric.

Candles I'll give to thee
 10 And a new altar;
 And thou Saint Ren shalt be
 Writ in my psalter.

2. Cf. Jonson, "On Giles and Joan," p. 1429.

3. The English pot marigold closes its (lowers at dusk.

4. Herrick plays on the fact that Jonson was for a while a Catholic (of the "old religion"), as well as a saint in the mock religion of poetry.

The Bad Season Makes the Poet Sad<sup>1</sup>

Dull to myself and almost dead to these
 My many fresh and fragrant mistresses,
 Lost to all music now, since every thing
 Puts on the semblance here of sorrowing.
 5 Sick is the land to the heart, and doth endure
 More dangerous faintings by her desperate cure.
 But if that golden age would come again,
 And Charles here rule as he before did reign,
 If smooth and unperplexed the seasons were,
 10 As when the sweet Maria lived here,
 I should delight to have my curls half drowned
 In Tyrian dews,<sup>2</sup> and head with roses crowned,
 And once more yet (ere I am laid out dead)
Knock at a star with my exalted head.<sup>3</sup>

The Night-Piece, to Julia

Her eyes the glowworm lend thee,
 The shooting stars attend thee;
 And the elves also,
 Whose little eyes glow
 5 Like the sparks of fire, befriend thee.

No Will-o'th'-Wisp mislight thee,<sup>1</sup>
 Nor snake or slowworm<sup>0</sup> bite thee;
 But on, on thy way,
 Not making a stay,
 10 Since ghost there's none to affright thee.

Let not the dark thee cumber;
 What though the moon does slumber?
 The stars of the night
 Will lend thee their light
 15 Like tapers clear without number.

Then, Julia, let me woo thee,
 Thus, thus to come unto me:
 And when I shall meet
 Thy silv'ry feet,
 20 My soul I'll pour into thee.

adder

1. The bad season is evidently political, not meteorological. Line 10 refers to Charles's queen, Henrietta Maria, so the poem must have been written after 1644, when she was forced to retire to France.

2. Perfume from Tyre was one of many Middle Eastern luxuries proverbial in Roman times.

3. The last line translates literally the last line of Horace's first ode, to his patron, Maecenas. Herrick hopes once more to have enlightened readers and an enlightened patron, so that he can feel something of Horace's exaltation.

1. Will-o'-the-wisp traditionally draws travelers astray with false lights.

Upon His Verses

What offspring other men have got,
 The how, where, when I question not.
 These are the children I have left;
 Adopted some, none got by theft.
 5 But all are touched (like lawful plate)<sup>1</sup>
 And no verse illegitimate.

His Return to London

From the dull confines of the drooping west,<sup>1</sup>
 To see the day spring from the pregnant east,
 Ravished in spirit, I come, nay more, I fly
 To thee, blest place of my nativity!
 5 Thus, thus with hallowed foot I touch the ground
 With thousand blessings by thy fortune crowned.
 O fruitful Genius!<sup>2</sup> that bestowest here
 An everlasting plenty, year by year.
 O place! O people! Manners! framed to please
 10 All nations, customs, kindreds, languages!
 I am a free-born Roman;<sup>3</sup> suffer then
 That I amongst you live a citizen.
 London my home is, though by hard fate sent
 Into a long and irksome banishment;
 is Yet since called back, henceforward let me be,
 O native country, repossessed by thee!
 For, rather than I'll to the west return,
 I'll beg of thee first here to have mine urn.
 Weak I am grown, and must in short time fall;
 20 Give thou my sacred relics burial.

1647?

Upon Julia's Clothes

Whenas in silks my Julia goes,<sup>0</sup> walks
 Then, then, methinks, how sweetly flows
 That liquefaction of her clothes.

 Next, when I cast mine eyes and see
 5 That brave<sup>0</sup> vibration each way free, splendid
 Oh, how that glittering taketh me!

1. A special variety of quartz, known as basanite, was used to test gold and silver objects; the color of the smear left on the touchstone revealed its purity.

1. Devonshire, where his parish, Dean Prior, was located.

2. In classical Rome, the genius of a place was its guardian deity.

3. An ancient Roman born in the city was said to be "free of it," i.e., entitled to its special rights and privileges, including residence there.

Upon Prue, His Maid<sup>1</sup>

In this little urn is laid
 Prudence Baldwin, once my maid,
 From whose happy spark here let
 Spring the purple violet.

To His Book's End<sup>2</sup>

To his book's end this last line he'd have placed:
 Jocund<sup>0</sup> his muse was, but his life was chaste. merry, sprightly

FROM NOBLE NUMBERS

To His Conscience<sup>1</sup>

Can I not sin, but thou wilt be
 My private protonotary?<sup>2</sup>
 Can I not woo thee to pass by
 A short and sweet iniquity?
 5 I'll cast a mist and cloud upon
 My delicate transgression
 So utter dark as that no eye
 Shall see the hugged<sup>0</sup> impiety. cherished
 Gifts blind the wise,<sup>3</sup> and bribes do please
 10 And wind<sup>0</sup> all other witnesses: pervert
 And wilt not thou with gold be tied
 To lay thy pen and ink aside?
 That in the mirk<sup>0</sup> and tongueless night black, murky
 Wanton I may, and thou not write?
 15 It will not be; and therefore now
 For times to come I'll make this vow,
 From aberrations to live free,
 So I'll not fear the Judge, or thee.

Another Grace for a Child

Here a little child I stand,
 Heaving up my either hand;
 Cold as paddocks<sup>0</sup> though they be, frogs

1. This is an odd epitaph, since Prudence Baldwin died four years after Herrick.

2. The last poem of Hesperides.

1. This and the following poem are from Noble Numbers, the collection of Herrick's religious poems that was bound together with Hesperides.

2. Chief recording clerk of a court.

3. Echoes Deuteronomy 16.19: "a gift doth blind the eyes of the wise."

Here I lift them up to thee,
 5 For a benison<sup>0</sup> to fall  blessing
 On our meat and on us all. Amen.

THOMAS CAREW
 1595-1640

Thomas Carew (pronounced Carey) is perhaps the Cavalier poet with the greatest range and complexity. He gained his B.A. at Merton College, Oxford, studied law (his father's profession), held several minor positions in the diplomatic and court bureaucracy, fought for his king in the ill-fated expedition against the Scots (the First Bishops' War, 1639), and died of syphilis. A brilliant, dissolute young man, he was a great favorite with Charles I and Henrietta Maria.

His Poems (1640), published posthumously, are witty and often outrageous, but their emphasis on natural sensuality and the need for union between king and subjects encodes a serious critique of the Neoplatonic artifice of the Caroline court. Carew's spectacular court masque, Coelum Britannicum, performed at the Banqueting Hall at Whitehall on February 18, 1633, was based on a philosophical dialogue by Giordano Bruno. It combines a dramatization of serious social and political problems in the antimasque with wildly hyperbolic praise of the monarchs in the main masque. As a love poet Carew sometimes plays off Donnean situations and poems; elsewhere, as in "Ask me no more where Jove bestows," he imitates Jonson's most purely lyric vein. But his characteristic note is one of frank sexuality and emotional realism. "The Rapture," probably the most erotic poem of the era, describes the sexual act under the sustained metaphor of a voyage. He also wrote country-house poems that, unlike Jonson's "To Penshurst," describe Saxham and Wrest as places of refuge from the mounting dangers outside their gates. Carew's poems of literary criticism provide astute commentary on contemporary authors. "To Ben Jonson" evaluates Jonson with Jonsonian precision and judiciousness in weighing out praise and blame. His famous "Elegy" on Donne praises Donne's innovation, avoidance of classical tags, "giant fancy," and especially his tough masculinity of style, a feature Carew imitates in this poem's energetic runover couplets, quick changes of rhythms and images, and vigorous "strong lines."

An Elegy upon the Death of the Dean of Paul's,
 Dr. John Donne<sup>1</sup>

Can we not force from widowed poetry,
 Now thou art dead, great Donne, one elegy
 To crown thy hearse? Why yet dare we not trust,
 Though with unkneaded dough-baked<sup>2</sup> prose, thy dust,
 5 Such as the unscissored<sup>3</sup> churchman from the flower
 Of fading rhetoric, short-lived as his hour,
 Dry as the sand that measures it,<sup>4</sup> should lay

1. First appearing with a number of other elegies in the 1633 edition of Donne's poems, then reprinted in 1640 with some changes, Carew's tribute is notable among 17th-century poems on poetry for its technical precision.

2. I.e., tedious and flat.

3. With uncut hair.

4. The hourglass was used by preachers to keep track of time.

Upon thy ashes on the funeral day?
 Have we no voice, no tune? Didst thou dispense<sup>0</sup> layout, use up 10 Through all our language both the words and sense?
 'Tis a sad truth. The pulpit may her plain
 And sober Christian precepts still retain;
 Doctrines it may, and wholesome uses,<sup>0</sup> frame, customs
 Grave homilies and lectures; but the flame
 15 Of thy brave soul, that shot such heat and light
 As burnt our earth and made our darkness bright,
 Committed holy rapes upon our will,
 Did through the eye the melting heart distill,
 And the deep knowledge of dark truths so teach
 20 As sense might judge what fancy could not reach,<sup>5</sup> missed
 Must be desired<sup>0</sup> forever. So the fire
 That fills with spirit and heat the Delphic choir,<sup>6</sup>
 Which, kindled first by thy Promethean<sup>7</sup> breath,
 Glowed here a while, lies quenched now in thy death.
 25 The Muses' garden, with pedantic weeds
 O'erspread, was purged by thee; the lazy seeds
 Of servile imitation thrown away,
 And fresh invention planted; thou didst pay
 The debts of our penurious bankrupt age—
 30 Licentious thefts, that make poetic rage
 A mimic fury, when our souls must be
 Possessed or with Anacreon's ecstasy,
 Or Pindar's,<sup>8</sup> not their own. The subtle cheat
 Of sly exchanges, and the juggling feat
 35 Of two-edged words,<sup>9</sup> or whatsoever wrong
 By ours was done the Greek or Latin tongue,
 Thou hast redeemed, and opened us a mine
 Of rich and pregnant fancy, drawn a line
 Of masculine expression, which had good
 40 Old Orpheus<sup>1</sup> seen, or all the ancient brood
 Our superstitious fools admire, and hold
 Their lead more precious than thy burnished gold,
 Thou hadst been their exchequer,<sup>0</sup> and no more treasury
 They in each other's dust had raked for ore.
 45 Thou shalt yield no precedence but of time
 And the blind fate of language, whose tuned chime<sup>0</sup> rhyme
 More charms the outward sense; yet thou mayest claim
 From so great disadvantage greater fame,
 Since to the awe of thy imperious wit
 50 Our stubborn language bends, made only fit
 With her tough thick-ribbed hoops to gird about
 Thy giant fancy, which had proved too stout
 For their soft melting phrases. As in time

5. I.e., so that things too abstract to be imagined might be made plain to sense.

6. The choir of poets, inspired by Apollo, whose oracle was at Delphi.

7. Prometheus stole fire from heaven to aid humankind.

8. Anacreon (6th and 5th centuries B.c.E.) and Pindar (first half of the 5th century B.c.E.) were famous Greek lyric poets.

9. "Sly exchanges": Carew seems to refer to the habit of using English words in their Latin senses. "Two-edged words" might be puns, but these were a favorite device of Donne's.

1. Ancient Greek poet and prophet, often used as the type of all poets.

- They had the start, so did they cull the prime 55 Buds of invention many a hundred year,
 And left the rifled fields, besides the fear
 To touch their harvest; yet from those bare lands
 Of what is purely thine, thy only hands
 (And that thy smallest work) have gleaned more
 60 Than all those times and tongues could reap before.
 But thou art gone, and thy strict laws will be Too hard for libertines in poetry.
 They will repeal<sup>0</sup> the goodly exiled train recall from banishment
 Of gods and goddesses, which in thy just reign
 65 Were banished nobler poems; now with these
 The silenced tales o' th' Metamorphoses<sup>2</sup>
 Shall stuff their lines and swell the windy page,
 Till verse, refined by thee in this last age,
 Turn ballad-rhyme, or those old idols be 70 Adored again with new apostasy.
 O pardon me, that break with untuned verse
 The reverend silence that attends thy hearse,
 Whose awful<sup>0</sup> solemn murmurs were to thee, awesome
 More than these faint lines, a loud elegy,
 75 That did proclaim in a dumb eloquence
 The death of all of the arts, whose influence,
 Grown feeble, in these panting numbers<sup>0</sup> lies verses
 Gasping short-winded accents, and so dies:
 So doth the swiftly turning wheel not stand
 80 In th' instant we withdraw the moving hand,
 But some small time maintain a faint weak course
 By virtue of the first impulsive force;
 And so whilst I cast on thy funeral pile
 Thy crown of bays,<sup>0</sup> oh, let it crack awhile poet's crown
 85 And spit disdain, till the devouring flashes
 Suck all the moisture up; then turn to ashes.
 I will not draw the envy to engross
 All thy perfections, or weep all our loss;
 Those are too numerous for an elegy,
 90 And this too great to be expressed by me.
 Though every pen should take a distinct part,
 Yet art thou theme enough to tire<sup>0</sup> all art.<sup>3</sup> exhaust
 Let others carve the rest; it shall suffice
 I on thy tomb this epitaph incise:
- 95 *Here lies a king, that ruled as he thought fit
 The universal monarchy of wit;
 Here lie two flamens,<sup>4</sup> and both those the best:
 Apollo's first, at last the true God's priest.*

1633, 1640

2. Ovid's tales in the Metamorphoses were a favorite stockpile of poetic properties for Renaissance poets, but Donne did not use them.

3. This line and the preceding one were omitted in the 1640 edition.

4. Priests of ancient Rome: Donne was first a priest of Apollo, the pagan god of poetry, and later a Christian priest.

To Ben Jonson

Upon occasion of his Ode of Defiance annexed to his play of The New Inn<sup>1</sup>

- 'Tis true, dear Ben, thy just chastising hand
Hath fixed upon the sotted age a brand
To their swoll'n pride and empty scribbling due.
It can nor judge nor write; and yet 'tis true
- 5 Thy comic Muse from the exalted line
Touched by thy Alchemist<sup>2</sup> doth since decline
From that her zenith, and foretells a red
And blushing evening when she goes to bed—

Nor think it much (since all thy eaglets may Endure the sunny trial)<sup>3</sup> if we say,
This hath the stronger wing, or that doth shine
Tricked up in fairer plumes, since all are thine.
- 15 Who hath his flock of cackling geese compared With thy tuned choir of swans? Or who hath dared
To call thy births deformed? But if thou bind
By city-custom, or by gavelkind,<sup>4</sup>
In equal shares thy love to all thy race,
- 20 We may distinguish of their sex and place:
Though one hand shape them and though one brain strike
Souls into all, they are not all alike.
Why should the follies then of this dull age
Draw from thy pen such an immodest rage
- 25 As seems to blast thy else-immortal bays,<sup>0</sup> the poet's crown
When thine own tongue proclaims thy itch of praise?
Such thirst will argue drought. No, let be hurled
Upon thy works by the detracting world
What malice can suggest; let the rout<sup>o</sup> say rabble

Count the slow minutes might a Goodwin frame<sup>5</sup>

Sucked by thy watchful lamp that hath betrayed

Into thy ink, while thou growest pale with guilt.<sup>6</sup>
Repine<sup>o</sup> not at the taper's thrifty waste, fret

1. Jonson's late play The New Inn was hissed from the stage in 1629 and published in 1631 with an angry "Ode to Himself" (p. 1446) prefixed. Carew's remonstrance must have been written shortly thereafter.

2. Jonson's play (1610) about three confidence tricksters.

3. To make sure the young birds in his nest are genuine eaglets, the eagle is reputed to fly with them up toward the sun; true eagles will not be blinded by the rays.

4. "City-custom" (i.e., London City custom) and

"gavelkind" (a system of land tenure once common in Kent) were two legal ways of dividing an estate equally among all the heirs—as opposed to the normal English rule of primogeniture (everything to the eldest son).

5. Goodwin Sands were shoals in the Strait of Dover, shifty and treacherous, on which many ships were lost. Jonson's slowness in composition was proverbial.

6. The other great charge against Jonson was that he copied or translated too liberally from other authors.

That sleeks thy terser poems; nor is haste
 Praise, but excuse; and if thou overcome
 40 A knotty writer, bring the booty home;
 Nor think it theft if the rich spoils so torn
 From conquered authors be as trophies worn.
 Let others glut on the extorted praise
 Of vulgar breath: trust thou to after days.
 45 Thy labored works shall live when Time devours
 Th' abortive offspring of their hasty hours.
 Thou art not of their rank, the quarrel lies
 Within thine own verge<sup>7</sup>—then let this suffice,
 The wiser world doth greater thee confess
 50 Than all men else, than thy self only less.

A Song<sup>1</sup>

Ask me no more where Jove bestows,
 When June is past, the fading rose;
 For in your beauties orient<sup>0</sup> deep,
 These flowers, as in their causes, sleep.<sup>2</sup>

lustrous

5 Ask me no more whither do stray
 The golden atoms of the day;
 For in pure love heaven did prepare
 Those powders to enrich your hair.

10 Ask me no more whither doth haste
 The nightingale when May is past;
 For in your sweet dividing<sup>3</sup> throat
 She winters, and keeps warm her note.

15 Ask me no more where those stars light,
 That downwards fall in dead of night;
 For in your eyes they sit, and there
 Fixed become, as in their sphere.

20 Ask me no more if east or west
 The phoenix builds her spicy nest;<sup>4</sup>
 For unto you at last she flies,
 And in your fragrant bosom dies.

7. I.e., within your own territory, against yourself. Duels cannot properly take place between two men of different rank, and as Jonson is out of everyone else's class, he can fight only himself.

1. Widely popular and several times set to music, this poem exists in different forms. Like Donne's "Go and catch a falling star" (p. 1264), it is built around a series of impossibilities.

2. Aristotelian philosophy suggested that objects often lay latent in their causes. The lady is a summation of last summer and cause of the next one.

3. Warbling (from "division," or rapid melodic passage).

4. The phoenix, a legendary bird, builds her nest from spicy shrubs. She dies every five hundred years and a new bird springs from her ashes.

To Saxham<sup>1</sup>

Though frost and snow locked from mine eyes
 That beauty which without door lies,
 Thy gardens, orchards, walks, that so
 I might not all thy pleasures know,
 5 Yet, Saxham, thou within thy gate
 Art of thyself so delicate,
 So full of native sweets, that bless
 Thy roof with inward happiness,
 As neither from nor to thy store
 10 Winter takes aught, or spring adds more.
 The cold and frozen air had starved<sup>0</sup> killed
 Much poor, if not by thee preserved,
 Whose prayers have made thy table blest
 With plenty, far above the rest,
 is The season hardly did afford
 Coarse cates<sup>o</sup> unto thy neighbors' board, food
 Yet thou hadst dainties, as the sky
 Had been thy only volary;<sup>0</sup> aviary
 Or else the birds, fearing the snow
 20 Might to another Deluge<sup>2</sup> grow,
 The pheasant, partridge, and the lark
 Flew to thy house, as to the Ark.
 The willing ox of himself came
 Home to the slaughter, with the lamb,
 25 And every beast did thither bring
 Himself, to be an offering.
 The scaly herd more pleasure took Bathed in thy dish, than in the brook;
 Water, earth, air did all conspire
 30 To pay their tributes to thy fire;
 Whose cherishing flames themselves divide
 Through every room, where they deride
 The night and cold abroad; whilst they,
 Like suns within, keep endless day.
 35 Those cheerful beams send forth their light
 To all that wander in the night,
 And seem to beckon from aloof
 The weary pilgrim to thy roof,
 Where, if refreshed, he will away,
 40 He's fairly welcome; or if stay,
 Far more; which he shall hearty find
 Both from the master and the hind.<sup>o</sup> servant
 The stranger's welcome each man there
 Stamped on his cheerful brow doth wear,
 45 Nor doth this welcome or his cheer
 Grow less 'cause he stays longer here;

1. Little Saxham, near Bun' Saint Edmunds, in Suffolk, was the country residence of Sir John Crofts, a friend of Carew's. Compare Jonson's "To Penshurst" (p. 1434).

 2. Noah's Flood (Genesis 7).

There's none observes, much less repines,
 How often this man sups or dines.
 Thou hast no porter at the door
 50 T'examine or keep back the poor,
 Nor locks nor bolts: thy gates have been Made only to let strangers in;
 Untaught to shut, they do not fear
 To stand wide open all the year,
 55 Careless who enters, for they know
 Thou never didst deserve a foe;
 And as for thieves, thy bounty's such,
 They cannot steal, thou giv'st so much.

A Rapture

I will enjoy thee now, my Celia, come
 And fly with me to love's Elysium.<sup>1</sup>
 The giant, Honor, that keeps cowards out,
 Is but a masquer,<sup>0</sup> and the servile rout<sup>o</sup> actor / rabble
 Of baser subjects only bend in vain
 To the vast idol, whilst the nobler train<sup>o</sup> procession
 Of valiant lovers daily sail between
 The huge Colossus' legs,<sup>2</sup> and pass unseen
 Unto the blissful shore. Be bold and wise,
 And we shall enter; the grim Swiss<sup>3</sup> denies
 Only tame fools a passage, that not know
 He is but form and only frights in show
 The duller eyes that look from far; draw near,
 And thou shalt scorn what we were wont<sup>o</sup> to fear. used
 We shall see how the stalking pageant<sup>4</sup> goes
 With borrowed legs, a heavy load to those
 That made and bear him—not as we once thought
 The seed of gods, but a weak model wrought
 By greedy men, that seek to enclose the common,
 And within private arms empale free woman.<sup>5</sup>
 Come then, and mounted on the wings of love,
 We'll cut the flitting air and soar above
 The monster's head, and in the noblest seats
 Of those blessed shades, quench and renew our heats.
 There shall the queens of love and innocence,
 Beauty and nature banish all offense
 From our close ivy twines, there I'll behold
 Thy bared snow and thy unbraided gold.
 There my enfranchised hand on every side

2. Tradition had it that the ancient Colossus of Rhodes bestrode the entrance to that harbor, so that ships entering or leaving passed between its legs.

4. Figure in a pageant, make-believe giant.

5. To "empale" is to surround with a fence, but the word has phallic overtones as well. The "enclosing" for landowners' private use of pastureland traditionally open to the whole community ("the commons") was a political issue in 17th-century England.

 No curtain there, though of transparent lawn,<sup>6</sup> fine linen
 Shall be before thy virgin treasure drawn,
 But the rich mine to the inquiring eye

 Of roses and fresh myrtles shall be spread
 Under the cooler shade of cypress groves;
 Our pillows, of the down of Venus' doves,<sup>7</sup>
 Whereon our panting limbs we'll gently lay

 That so our slumbers may in dreams have leisure
 To tell the nimble fancy our past pleasure,
 And so our souls that cannot be embraced

- 45 Meanwhile the bubbling stream shall court the shore,
 Th' enamored chirping wood-choir shall adore
 In varied tunes the deity of love;
 The gentle blasts of western winds shall move

 Their dancing shade; till a soft murmur, sent

 Till we in their sweet ecstasy expire.
- 55 Then, as the empty bee, that lately bore
 Into the common treasure all her store,
 Flies 'bout the painted field with nimble wing,
 Deflowering the fresh virgins of the spring,
 So will I rifle all the sweets that dwell
- 60 In my delicious paradise, and swell
 My bag with honey, drawn forth by the power
 Of fervent kisses from each spicy flower.
 I'll seize the rosebuds in their perfumed bed,
 The violet knots, like curious mazes spread

 The warm, firm apple, tipped with coral berry.
 Then will I visit with a wandering kiss
 The vale of lilies and the bower of bliss,

- 70 Into two milky ways, my lips shall slide
 Down those smooth alleys, wearing as I go
 A track<sup>0</sup> for lovers on the printed snow. path

 Like a religious incense shall consume

 That with such halcyon<sup>3</sup> calmness fix our souls
 In steadfast peace, as no affright controls.<sup>o</sup> overpowers

 Watch our close meetings, nor are we betrayed
 To rivals by the bribed chambermaid.
 105 No wedlock bonds unwreath our twisted loves,
 We seek no midnight arbor, no dark groves
 To hide our kisses; there the hated name
 Of husband, wife, lust, modest, chaste, or shame
 Are vain and empty words, whose very sound

 All things are lawful there that may delight

4. In Elysium, Lucrece (chastest of Roman matrons, who committed suicide to atone for the disgrace of her rape by Tarquin) reads Aretino (bawdiest of Italian pornographers) to provoke her attacker to new efforts. Lai's was a famous prostitute of Corinth.

5. Penelope was the faithful wife of Odysseus ("the lost traveler"); during the twenty years he was away (at Troy and on the way back), she fended off her importunate suitors by weaving an endless web—she unwove by night what she wove by day—which she said she had to finish before she could marry again. But in Elysium, she welcomes "the youth of Ithaca" (the suitors) and enjoys "gamesome nights" with them.

6. Closely pursued by Apollo, god of poetry and the sun, Daphne cried out to her father, the river god Peneus, who turned her into a laurel bush or bay tree so that she could get away from Apollo.

7. The shrine of Apollo was at Delphi; he carries a lyre as an emblem of poetic harmony.

8. The songs she sings deserve the laurel crown of poetry—the laurel she had become.

9. Petrarch (1304-1374) wrote his celebrated sonnet sequence to Laura, mourning his unsatisfied desire in the first part, and Laura's death in the second.

1. The inhabitants of Elysium are liberated ("enlarged") from the prison of "the tyrant" Honor, in which woman must be chaste and men must fight duels.

SIR JOHN SUCKLING
1609-1642

The Cavalier ideal is perhaps best seen in the life and poetry of John Suckling—"natural, easy Suckling," as William Congreve's heroine Millimant termed him in The Way of the World several decades later. Born of an aristocratic Norfolk family, Suckling was educated at Cambridge, took the Grand Tour, and fought in the Thirty Years War on the Continent. In 1639 he spent a small fortune to outfit a troop of cavalry in white doublets and scarlet breeches and coats to fight for the king in Scotland (they were ignominiously defeated). In 1641 he took part in an unsuccessful royalist plot to free the king's minister Strafford from execution and then fled to Paris where, a year later, he died bankrupt. Suckling's contemporaries described him as a Don Juan and a wit, as well as "the greatest gallant of his time and the greatest gamester" for bowling and cards. His poems and songs adopt several stances toward love: cynical debunking of love myths, frank enjoyment of sensual pleasure, invitations to love, and poems like "Against Fruition" that claim the greatest delights are in the chase. His witty satire "A Session of the Poets" describes a contest for the position of poet laureate. His playful epithalamium, "A Ballad upon a Wedding," demystifies the usual celebration of the cosmic significances of marriage (as in Spenser's sublime pastoral "Epithalamion") by detailing comic rustic parallels and identifying sex as the great leveler.

Song<sup>1</sup>

Why so pale and wan, fond lover?
Prithee, why so pale?
Will, when looking well can't move her,
Looking ill prevail?
Prithee, why so pale?

Why so dull and mute, young sinner?
Prithee, why so mute?
Will, when speaking well can't win her,
Saying nothing do't?
Prithee, why so mute?

Quit, quit, for shame; this will not move,
This cannot take her.
If of herself she will not love,
Nothing can make her:
The devil take her!

1638

1. This song was first printed in Suckling's play Aglaure (1638).

FROM FRAGMENTA AUREA<sup>1</sup>

Loving and Beloved

There never yet was honest man
 That ever drove the trade of love.
 It is impossible, nor can
 Integrity our ends promote;<sup>o</sup>
 For kings and lovers are alike in this,
 That their chief art in reign dissembling is.

promote

Here we are loved and there we love:
 Good nature now and passion strive
 Which of the two should be above
 And laws unto the other give.
 So we false fire with art sometimes discover,
 And the true fire with the same art do cover.

What rack<sup>2</sup> can fancy find so high?
 Here we must court and here engage,
 Though in the other place we die.
 O! 'tis torture all and cozenage:<sup>o</sup>
 And which the harder is I cannot tell,
 To hide true love, or make false love look well.

trickery

Since it is thus, god of desire,<sup>o</sup>
 Give me my honesty again,
 And take thy brands back and thy fire;
 I'm weary of the state I'm in:
 Since (if the very best should now befall)
 Love's triumph must be Honor's funeral.

Cupid

1646

A Ballad upon a Wedding<sup>1</sup>

I tell thee, Dick, where I have been,
 Where I the rarest things have seen,
 Oh, things without compare!
 Such sights again cannot be found
 5 In any place on English ground,
 Be it at wake<sup>o</sup> or fair.

*a parish festival*1. Golden Remains (1646).

2. An instrument of torture designed to stretch, or even pull apart, the bodies of those bound on it.

1. The poem is a comic epithalamium (wedding poem) that wittily burlesques such solemn and lofty exemplars of the genre as Spenser's "Epitha-lamion," turning pastoral into rude rusticity. This poem probably celebrates the wedding of John Lord Lovelace to Anne Wentworth (July 11, 1638); "Dick" may be the poet Richard Lovelace, the groom's brother.

At Charing Cross,<sup>2</sup> hard by<sup>o</sup> the way close by
 Where we, thou know'st, do sell our hay,
 There is a house with stairs;
 10 And there did I see coming down
 Such folk as are not in our town,
 Forty, at least, in pairs.

Amongst the rest, one pest'lent<sup>o</sup> fine es-pecially
 (His beard no bigger, though, than thine)
 15 Walked on before the rest:
 Our landlord looks like nothing to him;
 The King (God bless him!), 'twould undo him,
 Should he go still<sup>o</sup> so dressed. constantly

At course-a-park,<sup>3</sup> without all doubt,
 20 He should have first been taken out
 By all the maids i'th' town,
 Though lusty Roger there had been,
 Or little George upon the Green,
 Or Vincent of the Crown.<sup>4</sup>

25 Rut wot<sup>o</sup> you what? The youth was going know
 To make an end of all his wooing;
 The parson for him stayed;
 Yet by his leave, for all his haste,
 He did not so much wish all past,
 30 Perchance, as did the maid.

The maid (and thereby hangs a tale,
 For such a maid no Whitsun-ale<sup>5</sup>
 Could ever yet produce):
 No grape that's kindly<sup>o</sup> ripe could be naturally
 35 So round, so plump, so soft as she,
 Nor half so full of juice.

Her finger was so small, the ring
 Would not stay on which they did bring,
 It was too wide a peck;<sup>o</sup> much too large 40 And stay truth (for out it must),
 It looked like the great collar (just)
 About our young colt's neck.

Her feet beneath her petticoat
 Like little mice stole in and out,
 45 As if they feared the light;
 Rut oh! she dances such a way,
 No sun upon an Easter day
 Is half so fine a sight.

2. Originally a stone cross erected by Edward I, it became a busy center of trade in the city of Westminster; the Haymarket is nearby.

3. A country game, in which a girl calls out a boy to choose her.

4. "As good as George of Green" was a folk saying suggesting male prowess; the other names probably have the same import.

5. Festivals for Whitsunday, or Pentecost (the seventh Sunday after Easter), were occasions for merrymaking and, especially, drinking.

He would have kissed her once or twice,
 50 But she would not, she was so nice,<sup>0</sup> demure
     She would not do't in sight;
 And then she looked as who should say,
 I will do what I list<sup>0</sup> today, wish
     And you shall do't at night.

55 Her cheeks so rare a white was on,
 No daisy makes comparison
     (Who sees them is undone),<sup>0</sup> overcome
 For streaks of red were mingled there,
 Such as are on a Katherine pear<sup>6</sup>
 60 (The side that's next the sun).

Her lips were red, and one was thin,
 Compared to that was next her chin
     (Some bee had stung it newly);
 But, Dick, her eyes so guard her face,
 65 I durst no more upon them gaze
     Than on the sun in July.

Her mouth so small, when she does speak,
 Thou'dst swear her teeth her words did break,
     That they might passage get;
 70 But she so handled still the matter,
 They came as good as ours, or better,
     And are not spent a whit.

If wishing should be any sin,
 The parson himself had guilty been 75 (She looked that day so purely);
 And did the youth so oft the feat
 At night, as some did in conceit,<sup>0</sup> fancy
     It would have spoiled him,<sup>0</sup> surely ruined his health

Passion, oh me! how I run on!
 80 There's that that would be thought upon,
     I trow,<sup>0</sup> besides the bride: reckon
 The business of the kitchen's great,
 For it is fit that men should eat,
     Nor was it there denied.

85 Just in the nick the cook knocked thrice,
 And all the waiters in a trice
     His summons did obey;
 Each servingman, with dish in hand,
 Marched boldly up, like our trained band,<sup>7</sup>
 90 Presented, and away.

When all the meat was on the table,
 What man of knife or teeth was able

6. A small, early variety of pear.

7. Our village militia, trained in the rudiments of drill and the use of firearms.

To stay to be entreated?
 And this the very reason was,
 95 Before the parson could say grace,
 The company was seated.

Now hats fly off, and youths carouse;
 Healths first go round, and then the house,
 The bride's came thick and thick;
 100 And when 'twas named another's health,
 Perhaps he made it hers by stealth;
 And who could help it, Dick?

O'th' sudden up they rise and dance;
 Then sit again, and sigh, and glance;
 105 Then dance again and kiss;
 Thus several ways the time did pass,
 Whilst ever] woman wished her place,
 And every man wished his.

By this time all were stol'n aside
 no To counsel and undress the bride,
 But that he must not know;
 But yet 'twas thought he guessed her mind,
 And did not mean to stay behind
 Above an hour or so.

When in he came, Dick, there she lay us Like new-fall'n snow melting away
 ('Twas time, I trow, to part);
 Kisses were now the only stay,
 Which soon she gave, as who would say,
 120 "Good boy!" with all my heart.<sup>8</sup>

But just as heav'ns would have, to cross it,
 In came the bridesmaids with the posset;<sup>9</sup>
 The bridegroom eat° in spite, ate
 For had he left the women to't,
 125 It would have cost two hours to do't,
 Which were too much that night.

At length the candle's out, and now
 All that they had not done, they do:
 What that is, who can tell?
 BO But I believe it was no more
 Than thou and I have done before
 With Bridget and with Nell.

8. Some manuscripts read, "God b'w'y" (God be with you).

9. A mixture of spiced hot milk curdled with sherry wine, traditionally offered to the bridegroom on his wedding night.

FROM THE LAST REMAINS OF SIR JOHN SUCKLING

Out upon It!

Out upon it! I have loved
 Three whole days together;
 And am like to love three more,
 If it prove fair weather.

5 Time shall molt away his wings,
 Ere he shall discover
 In the whole wide world again
 Such a constant lover.

But the spite on't is, no praise
 10 Is due at all to me:
 Love with me had made no stays,
 Had it any been but she.

Had it any been but she,
 And that very face,<sup>1</sup>
 15 There had been at least ere this
 A dozen dozen in her place.

1659

1. Other versions of the poem give the line as "that very very face."

RICHARD LOVELACE

1618-1657

Usually linked with Suckling as a quintessential Cavalier, Richard Lovelace was described by a contemporary as "the most amiable and beautiful person that ever eye beheld." Born into a wealthy Kentish family, he was educated at Oxford and, like Suckling, fought for his king in Scotland (in both expeditions, 1639 and 1640). But he was not a libertine, and his poems, in contrast with Suckling's, often exalt women, love, and honor. Also, he shared with his king a serious interest in art, especially the paintings of Rubens, Van Dyck, and Lely. He was imprisoned for a few months in 1642 for supporting the "Kentish Petition" that urged restoration of the king to his ancient rights; in "To Althea, from Prison," he finds freedom from external bondage in the Cavalier ideals of women, wine, and royalism. During 1643–46 he fought in Holland and France and in the king's armies in England and was wounded abroad. In a general roundup of known royalists in 1648 he was imprisoned for ten months, and while there prepared his poems for publication under the title Lucasta (1649). Besides witty and charming love songs, that volume includes the plaintive ballad about the conflict between love and honor, "To Lucasta, Going to the Wars," and also "The Grasshopper," a poem that presents the Cavalier ideal at its most attractive. That emblematic summer creature is taken to symbolize the loss of the king and the care-free Cavalier life in the Puritan "winter," but Lovelace finds in the fellowship of Cavalier friends a nobler version of the good life and a truer kingship. After 1649 he endured years of penury, largely dependent on the largesse of his friend and fellow royalist, Charles Cotton. His remaining poems appeared in 1659 as Lucasta: Postume Poems.

FROM LUCASTA

To Lucasta, Going to the Wars

Tell me not, sweet, I am unkind,
That from the nunnery
Of thy chaste breast and quiet mind
To war and arms I fly.

True, a new mistress now I chase,
The first foe in the field;
And with a stronger faith embrace
A sword, a horse, a shield.

Yet this inconstancy is such
As you too shall adore;
I could not love thee, dear, so much,
Loved I not honor more.

The Grasshopper<sup>1</sup>

To My Noble Friend, Mr. Charles Cotton

O thou that swing'st upon the waving hair
Of some well-filled oaten beard,<sup>0</sup> head of grain
Drunk every night with a delicious tear
Dropped thee from heav'n, where now th' art reared,

5 The joys of earth and air are thine entire,
That with thy feet and wings dost hop and fly;
And when thy poppy<sup>0</sup> works thou dost retire opiate
To thy carved acorn bed to lie.

Up with the day, the sun thou welcom'st then,
10 Sport'st in the gilt-plats<sup>0</sup> of his beams, golden fields
And all these merry days mak'st merry men,
Thyself, and melancholy streams.<sup>2</sup>

1. In Aesop's Fables the grasshopper lives in improvident, carefree idleness, in contrast with the industrious ant who lays up stores for the winter. The circumstances of the poem are those of the Interregnum, when a winter of Puritanism seemed, to royalists, to be settling over England and obliterating their mode of life. The grasshopper may also allude to the recently executed king, Charles I. 2. The three objects of "mak'st merry" are "men," "thyself," and "melancholy streams."

But ah, the sickle! golden ears are cropped,
 Ceres and Bacchus<sup>3</sup> bid goodnight;
 15 Sharp frosty fingers all your flow'rs have topped,
 And what scythes spared, winds shave off quite.

Poor verdant fool! and now green ice! thy joys,
 Large and as lasting as thy perch of grass,
 Bid us lay in 'gainst winter rain, and poise<sup>0</sup> counterbalance
 20 Their floods with an o'erflowing glass.

Thou best of men and friends! we will create
 A genuine summer in each other's breast;
 And spite of this cold time and frozen fate
 Thaw us a warm seat to our rest.

25 Our sacred hearths shall burn eternally
 As vestal flames;<sup>4</sup> the North Wind, he Shall strike his frost-stretched wings, dissolve, and fly
 This Etna in epitome.<sup>5</sup>

Dropping December shall come weeping in,
 30 Bewail th' usurping of his reign;
 But when in showers of old Greek we begin,
 Shall cry, he hath his crown again!<sup>6</sup>

Night as clear Hesper<sup>0</sup> shall our tapers whip the evening star
 From the light casements where we play,
 35 And the dark hag<sup>7</sup> from her black mantle strip,
 And stick there everlasting day.

Thus richer than untempted kings are we,
 That asking nothing, nothing need:
 Though lord of all that seas embrace, yet he 40 That wants<sup>0</sup> himself is poor indeed. lacks

1649

To Althea, from Prison

When Love with unconfined wings
 Hovers within my gates,
 And my divine Althea brings
 To whisper at the grates;
 5 When I lie tangled in her hair
 And fettered to her eye,

3. Goddess of grain and god of wine.

4. The Vestal Virgins, in Rome, were responsible for tending an eternal flame in the Temple of Vesta.

5. Boreas, the north wind, folding up ("striking") his wings, flees from the heat of the volcano within Mount Etna, a figure for the fires of friendship.

6. Greek wine was especially favored in the classical world. "Crown" here has multiple associations: the crown worn by "King Christmas" at the festivities banned by Puritans; and the crown Cavaliers hoped would soon be restored to Charles II.
 7. Hecate, a daughter of Night.

The gods<sup>1</sup> that wanton<sup>0</sup> in the air
 Know no such liberty.

play

When flowing cups run swiftly round,
 10 With no allaying Thames,<sup>2</sup>
 Our careless heads with roses bound,
 Our hearts with loyal flames;
 When thirsty grief in wine we steep,
 When healths and drafts go free,
 i5 Fishes that tipple in the deep
 Know no such liberty.

When, like committed linnets,<sup>0</sup> I
 With shriller throat shall sing
 The sweetness, mercy, majesty,
 20 And glories of my king;
 When I shall voice aloud how good
 He is, how great should be,
 Enlarged winds, that curl the flood,
 Know no such liberty.

caged finches

25 Stone walls do not a prison make,
 Nor iron bars a cage;
 Minds innocent and quiet take
 That for an hermitage.
 If I have freedom in my love,
 30 And in my soul am free,
 Angels alone, that soar above,
 Enjoy such liberty.

Love Made in the First Age.<sup>1</sup> To Chloris

In the nativity of time,
 Chloris, it was not thought a crime
 In direct Hebrew for to woo.<sup>2</sup>
 Now we make love as all on fire,
 5 Ring retrograde<sup>3</sup> our loud desire,
 And court in English backward too.

Thrice happy was that golden age,
 When compliment was construed rage,<sup>4</sup>
 And fine words in the center hid;
 10 When cursed No stained no maid's bliss,

1. Some versions read "birds" instead of "gods."
 2. No mixture of water (as from the river Thames) in the wine.

1. The Golden Age, described in Ovid's Metamorphoses.

2. Hebrew, supposed to be the original human language, is read from right to left; we have reversed this.

3. Backwards, in reverse. The term also has musical connotations, perhaps referring here to a pattern of bell ringing.

4. Passion. Compliments in the Golden Age were understood as ardent propositions.

And all discourse was summed in Yes,
And naught forbade, but to forbid.

Love then unstinted, love did sip,
And cherries -plucked fresh from the lip,
15 On cheeks and roses free he fed;
Lasses like autumn plums did drop,
And lads indifferently<sup>0</sup> did crop without preference
A flower and a maidenhead.

Then unconfined each did tipple
20 Wine from the bunch, milk from the nipple;
Paps tractable as udders were;
Then equally the wholesome jellies
Were squeezed from olive trees and bellies,
Nor suits of trespass did they fear.

25 A fragrant bank of strawberries,
Diapered<sup>0</sup> with violet's eyes, decorated, dappled
Was table, tablecloth, and fare;
No palace to the clouds did swell,
Each humble princess then did dwell
30 In the piazza<sup>5</sup> of her hair.

Both broken faith and th' cause of it,
All-damning gold, was damned to th' pit;
Their troth, sealed with a clasp and kiss,
Lasted until that extreme day
35 In which they smiled their souls away,
And, in each other, breathed new bliss.

Because no fault, there was no tear;
No groan did grate the granting ear,
No false foul breath their del'cate smell:
40 No serpent kiss poisoned the taste,
Each touch was naturally chaste,
And their mere sense a miracle.

Naked as their own innocence,
And unembroidered from offense<sup>6</sup>
45 They went, above poor riches, gay;
On softer than the cygnet's<sup>0</sup> down, young swan
In beds they tumbled of their own;
For each within the other lay.

Thus did they live; thus did they love,
50 Repeating only joys above;
And angels were, but with clothes on,
Which they would put off cheerfully,

5. Arcade, hence an artful structure.

6. I.e., not ornamented to hide an offense.

To bathe them in the galaxy,<sup>0</sup> the Milky Way
Then gird them with the heavenly zone.<sup>7</sup>

55 Now, Chloris, miserably crave<sup>0</sup> heg
The offered bliss you would not have,
Which evermore I must deny,
Whilst ravished with these noble dreams
And crowned with mine own soft beams,
60 Enjoying of my self I lie.

EDMUND WALLER
1606-1687

Poets of the Restoration and Augustan age regularly identified Edmund Waller as a model, paired as such with Sir John Denham, author of a royalist landscape poem, Cooper's Hill. These two poets were rightly seen as innovators in the use of smooth, often end-stopped, and antithetically balanced couplets, which anticipated the metrical norm of the next age, the heroic couplet. They were also praised for "correct," natural, and graceful diction. The son of a very wealthy father, Waller studied at Eton, Cambridge, and Lincoln's Inn; married a wealthy lady who died young; and courted in artful verse the celebrated beauty Dorothy Sidney (as "Sacharissa"). A Parliamentarian at first, he participated in a royalist plot to seize London for the Crown and upon discovery was thought to have saved his life by informing on his co-conspirators. Exiled to Paris in 1643, he was pardoned in 1651. After the Restoration he took an active part in court life and wrote panegyrics on Charles II. His first volume of poems (1645) was published a few months before Milton's first volume and by the same bookseller, who noted that both poets' songs had been set to music by the famous court musician Henry Lawes.

The Story of Phoebus and Daphne Applied<sup>1</sup>

Fair Sacharissa loved, but loved in vain;<sup>2</sup>
Like Phoebus sung the no less amorous boy;
Like Daphne she, as lovely and as coy.<sup>0</sup> reluctant
5 With numbers<sup>0</sup> he the flying nymph pursues, verses
With numbers such as Phoebus' self might use.
Such is the chase when love and fancy leads O'er craggy mountains and through flowery meads,<sup>0</sup> meadows

1. Phoebus (Apollo), god of poetry, fell in love with Daphne and pursued her until, in answer to her prayer, she was turned into a laurel or bay tree, which became an emblem of poetic fame. Successful poets are crowned with laurel (bay) leaves.
2. Sacharissa (from the Latin for "sugar", hence, sweetest) alludes here and in other Waller poems to Lady Dorothy Sidney of Penshurst, eldest daughter of the Earl of Leicester (the son of that Robert Sidney for whom Jonson wrote "To Penshurst"). Waller courted her unsuccessfully for some years; here he alludes to himself as Thyrsis.

- Invoked to testify the lover's care
 10 Or form some image of his cruel fair.
 Urged with his fury, like a wounded deer,
 O'er these he fled; and now approaching near,
 Had reached the nymph with his harmonious lay,<sup>o</sup> song
 Whom all his charms could not incline to stay.
 15 Yet what he sung in his immortal strain,
 Though unsuccessful, was not sung in vain.
 All but the nymph that should redress his wrong
 Attend his passion and approve his song.
 Like Phoebus thus, acquiring unsought praise,
 20 He caught at love, and filled his arms with bays.

Song

- Go, lovely rose!
 Tell her that wastes her time and me
 That now she knows,
 When I resemble<sup>o</sup> her to thee, compare
 5 How sweet and fair she seems to be.

- Tell her that's young,
 And shuns to have her graces spied,
 That hadst thou sprung
 In deserts, where no men abide,
 io Thou must have uncommended died.

- Small is the worth
 Of beauty from the light retired;
 Bid her come forth,
 Suffer<sup>o</sup> herself to be desired, permit
 15 And not blush so to be admired.

- Then die! that she
 The common fate of all things rare
 May read in thee;
 How small a part of time they share
 20 That are so wondrous sweet and fair!

ABRAHAM COWLEY

1618-1667

Abraham Cowley (pronounced Cooley) published his first volume of verse, Poetical Blossoms (1633), at fifteen; it sold well enough to justify two enlarged editions (1636, 1637)^Educated at Westminster School and Trinity College, Cambridge, he became a fellow of that college, wrote a Latin comedy for student production, and composed many of the lyric poems later published under the title The Mistress (1647). In his Life of Cowley, Samuel Johnson based his definition of the so-called Metaphysical style chiefly on the extravagant conceits in these poems. As a royalist Cowley was ejected from his fellowship in 1644; he then joined the court at Oxford and followed the queen to Paris, serving her as courtier, spy, and confidential scribe. Returning to England in 1654, he brought out a volume of poems (1656) that included several Pindaric odes. Cowley's Pindarics are generally more irregular and more exalted than Jonson's great Pindaric ode on Cary and Morison, though "Ode: Of Wit," included here, is more restrained, closer to a Horatian ode. Cowley sets aside many current meanings of "wit" (among them, genius, learning, skill at discovering unexpected comparisons, quickness of repartee, imagination, a style based on antithesis, and verbal cleverness including puns and sexual innuendos) in order to urge a more comprehensive, albeit undefinable, conception of that quality. The 1656 volume also contained an unfinished biblical epic,  Davideis, and an essay about writing biblical epic that no doubt interested Milton, who was then at work on Paradise Lost. Though Cowley's preface records a defeated royalist's wish "to retire myself to some of our American plantations" and "forsake this world forever," he settled near London and took a degree in medicine from Oxford. After the Restoration he studied and published on botany and wrote a famous ode on the newly formed Royal Society.

Ode: Of Wit

Tell me, O tell, what kind of thing is wit,
 Thou who master art of it.<sup>1</sup>
 For the First Matter loves variety less;
 Less women love't,<sup>2</sup> either in love or dress.
 5 A thousand different shapes it bears,
 Comely in thousand shapes appears.
 Yonder we saw it plain; and here 'tis now,
 Like spirits in a place, we know not how.

London, that vents<sup>0</sup> of false ware so much store, sells
 10 In no ware deceives us more.
 For men, led by the color and the shape,
 Like Zeuxis' birds, fly to the painted grape;<sup>3</sup>
 Some things do through our judgment pass
 As through a multiplying<sup>0</sup> glass, magnifying
 15 And sometimes, if the object be too far,
 We take a falling meteor for a star.

Hence 'tis, a wit, that greatest word of fame,
 Grows such a common name;
 And wits by our creation they become

1. The addressee is unknown. "The First Matter" (line 3): the basic material of the universe, given a multiplicity of shapes by the Deity.

2. I.e., wit loves variety even more than women do, or the First Matter, which takes all shapes.

3. Zeuxis, a Greek painter of the 5th century B.C.E., reportedly painted grapes so realistic that birds came to peck at them.

20 Just so as tit'lar bishops made at Rome.<sup>4</sup>
 'Tis not a tale, 'tis not a jest
 Admired with laughter at a feast,
 Nor florid talk which can that title gain;
 The proofs of wit forever must remain.

25 'Tis not to force some lifeless verses meet
 With their five gouty feet.
 All everywhere, like man's, must be the soul,<sup>5</sup>
 And reason the inferior powers control.

30 Such were the numbers which could call
 The stones into the Theban wall.<sup>6</sup>
 Such miracles are ceased, and now we see
 No towns or houses raised by poetry.

Yet 'tis not to adorn and gild each part;
 That shows more cost than art.
 35 Jewels at nose and lips but ill appear;
 Rather than all things wit, let none be there.
 Several<sup>0</sup> lights will not be seen, separate
 If there be nothing else between.
 Men doubt because they stand so thick i' th' sky
 40 If those be stars which paint the galaxy.

'Tis not when two like words make up one noise,
 Jests for Dutch men and English boys,<sup>7</sup>
 In which who finds out wit, the same may see
 In an'grams and acrostics, poetry.<sup>8</sup>
 45 Much less can that have any place
 At which a virgin hides her face.
 Such dross the fire must purge away; 'tis just
 The author blush there where the reader must.

'Tis not such lines as almost crack the stage
 50 When Bajazet begins to rage;<sup>9</sup>
 Nor a tall met'phor in the bombast way,
 Nor the dry chips of short-lunged Seneca.<sup>1</sup>
 Nor upon all things to obtrude
 And force some odd similitude.
 55 What is it then, which like the power divine
 We only can by negatives define?

In a true piece of wit all things must be,
 Yet all things there agree,
 As in the Ark, joined without force or strife,

4. Certain churches in Rome have as their titular incumbents cardinals whose real duties are elsewhere.

5. A formula from the Neoplatonic philosopher Plotinus (205-270 c.E.) has it that the soul is all in every part.

6. In classical mythology, when Amphion and Zethus were fortifying Thebes, Amphion's performance on the lyre was so moving that the stones rose into place of their own accord.

7. Scorn for a pun mingles with contempt for the Dutch.

8. Cf. the famous essay on wit by Joseph Addison (p. 2481).

9. Bajazet is a grandiloquent character in Marlowe's Tamburlaine.

1. The Senecan style tended toward terse, epigrammatic statements.

60 All creatures dwelt: all creatures that had life;
 Or as the primitive forms of all
 (If we compare great things with small)
 Which without discord or confusion lie
 In that strange mirror of the Deity.<sup>2</sup>

65 But love, that molds one man up out of two,
 Makes me forget and injure you.
 I took you for myself, sure, when I thought
 That you in anything were to be taught.

TO Correct my error with thy pen,
 And if any ask me then
 What thing right wit and height of genius is,
 I'll only show your lines, and say, Tis this.

1656. 1668

2. As in line 3, Cowley posits a kind of first matter that contains potentially all the objects of the world.

KATHERINE PHILIPS

1632-1664

The best-known woman poet of her own and the next generation, Katherine Philips was honored as "the Matchless Orinda," the classical name she chose for herself in her poetic addresses to a coterie of chiefly female friends, especially Mary Aubrey (M. A.) and Anne Owen (Lucasia). Sometimes reminiscent of Donne's love lyrics and sometimes of the ancient Greek Sappho's erotic lyrics to women, these poems develop an exalted ideal of female friendship as a Platonic union of souls. Born to a well-to-do Presbyterian family and educated at Mrs. Salmon's Presbyterian School, Philips was taken to Wales when her mother remarried. In 1648, at age seventeen, she was married to James Philips, a prominent member of Parliament. They lived together twelve years, chiefly in the small Welsh town of Cardigan, and had two children: Hector, whose death a few days after birth prompted one of her most moving poems, and Katherine, who lived to adulthood. A royalist despite her Puritan family connections, Philips forged connections with other displaced royalists. Her poems circulated in manuscript and elicited high praise from Vaughan in Olor Iscanus. They include elegies, epitaphs, poems at parting, and friendship poems to women and men, but also poetry on political themes: a denunciation of the regicide, "Upon the Double Murder of King Charles," and panegyrics on the restored Stuarts. After the Restoration, James Philips barely escaped execution as a regicide, had his estates confiscated, and lost his seat in Parliament, but Katherine became a favorite at court, promoted by her friend Sir Charles Cotterell ("Poliarchus"), who was master of ceremonies. In Ireland attempting (unsuccessfully) to redeem an investment, she translated Corneille's Porapey and her friend the Earl of Orrery produced and printed it in Dublin in 1663. The first edition of her poems, apparently pirated, appeared in 1664, the same year she died of smallpox. Her friend Cotterell brought out an authorized edition in 1667.

A Married State<sup>1</sup>

A married state affords but little ease
 The best of husbands are so hard to please.
 This in wives' careful<sup>0</sup> faces you may spell<sup>0</sup> full of cares/read
 Though they dissemble their misfortunes well.
 5 A virgin state is crowned with much content;<sup>2</sup>
 It's always happy as it's innocent.
 No blustering husbands to create your fears;
 No pangs of childbirth to extort your tears;
 No children's cries for to offend your ears;
 10 Few worldly crosses to distract your prayers:
 Thus are you freed from all the cares that do
 Attend on matrimony and a husband too.
 Therefore Madam, be advised by me
 Turn, turn apostate to love's levity,
 15 Suppress wild nature if she dare rebel.
 There's no such thing as leading apes in hell.<sup>3</sup>

Upon the Double Murder of King Charles

In Answer to a Libelous Rhyme made by V. P.<sup>1</sup>

I think not on the state, nor am concerned
 Which way soever that great helm<sup>2</sup> is turned,
 But as that son whose father's danger nigh
 Did force his native dumbness, and untie
 5 His fettered organs: so here is a cause
 That will excuse the breach of nature's laws.<sup>3</sup>
 Silence were now a sin: nay passion now
 Wise men themselves for merit would allow.<sup>4</sup>
 What noble eye could see (and careless pass)
 10 The dying lion lacked by every ass?
 Hath Charles so broke God's laws, he must not have
 A quiet crown, nor yet a quiet grave?
 Tombs have been sanctuaries; thieves lie here
 Secure from all their penalty and fear.
 15 Great Charles his double misery was this,

1. In a manuscript (Orielson MSS Box 24 at the National Library of Wales) this poem appears with another by Philips, addressed to Anne Barlow (whom she probably met in 1646); this one is probably also for Barlow. Both are signed by her maiden name, C. Fowler, so were evidently written before her marriage in 1648.

2. Praise of the single life is a common topic in women's poetry.

3. Proverbially, the fate of spinsters.

4. The itinerant Welsh preacher Vavasour Powell was a Fifth Monarchist and an ardent republican who justified the regicide on the ground that Christ's second coming was imminent, when he would rule with his saints, putting down all earthly kings. His poem and Philips's answer were likely written shortly after Charles I's execution (January 30, 1649). Powell's poem has been published by Elizabeth H. Hageman in English Manuscript Studies.

2. Steering wheel for the "ships" of state.

3. Breaking the supposed law of nature that excludes women from speaking about public affairs.

4. Wise men, especially Stoic philosophers, normally counsel the firm control or elimination of passions.

Unfaithful friends, ignoble enemies;
 Had any heathen been this prince's foe,
 He would have wept to see him injured so.
 His title was his crime, they'd reason good
 20 To quarrel at the right they had withstood.
 He broke God's laws, and therefore he must die,
 And what shall then become of thee and I?
 Slander must follow treason; but yet stay,
 Take not our reason with our king away.
 25 Though you have seized upon all our defense,
 Yet do not sequester<sup>o</sup> our common sense.
 But I admire<sup>o</sup> not at this new supply:
 No bounds will hold those who at scepters fly.
 Christ will be King, but I ne'er understood,
 30 His subjects built his kingdom up with blood
 (Except their own) or that he would dispense
 With his commands, though for his own defense.
 Oh! to what height of horror are they come
 Who dare pull down a crown, tear up a tomb!<sup>5</sup>

Friendship's Mystery, To My Dearest Lucasia<sup>1</sup>

Come, my Lucasia, since we see
 That miracles men's faith do move,
 By wonder and by prodigy
 To the dull angry world let's prove
 5 There's a religion in our love.

For though we were designed t' agree,
 That fate no liberty destroys,
 But our election is as free
 As angels, who with greedy choice
 10 Are yet determined to their joys.<sup>2</sup>

Our hearts are doubled by the loss,
 Here mixture is addition grown;
 We both diffuse,<sup>o</sup> and both engross:<sup>o</sup>
 And we whose minds are so much one,
 15 Never, yet ever are alone.

spread out / collect

5. Their slanders tear up Charles's tomb after his death.

1. This poem was first printed, with a musical setting by the royalist musician and composer Henry Lawes, as "Mutual Affection betweene Orinda and Lucasia" in Lawes's The Second Book of Ayres (1655); our text is from Poems by the Most Deserv- edly Admired Mrs. Katherine Philips, the Matchless Orinda (1667). Lucasia is Philips's name for her friend Anne Owen.

2. Angels, though created with free will, were thought to have become fixed in goodness when they turned toward God in the first moments after their creation.

We court our own captivity
 Than thrones more great and innocent:
 Twere banishment to be set free,
 Since we wear fetters whose intent
 20 Not bondage is, but ornament.

Divided joys are tedious found,
 And griefs united easier grow:
 We are selves but by rebound,
 And all our titles shuffled so,
 25 Both princes, and both subjects too.<sup>3</sup>

Our hearts are mutual victims laid,
 While they (such power in friendship lies)
 Are altars, priests, and off'rings made:
 And each heart which thus kindly<sup>0</sup> dies, benevolently, naturally
 30 Grows deathless by the sacrifice.

To Mrs. M. A.<sup>1</sup> at Parting

I have examined and do find,
 Of all that favor me
 There's none I grieve to leave behind
 But only only thee.
 5 To part with thee I needs must die,
 Could parting separate thee and I.

But neither chance nor compliment
 Did element our love:
 Twas sacred sympathy was lent
 10 Us from the choir above.
 (That friendship fortune did create,
 Still fears a wound from time or fate.)

Our changed and mingled souls are grown
 To such acquaintance now,
 15 That if each would resume their own,
 Alas! we know not how.
 We have each other so engrossed<sup>0</sup>
 That each is in the union lost.<sup>2</sup>

absorbed

3. Compare Donne, "The Sun Rising", line 21: "She is all states, and all princes, I" (p. 1266).

1. M. A. was Mary Aubrey, the first and, until she married, the dearest member of Philips's "Society of Friendship." Orinda's valedictory poem to her—which Keats admired enough to copy it out in full in an early letter—recalls some of Donne's lyrics, especially "A Valediction: Forbidding Mourning" (p. 1275).

2. These lines play upon the Neoplatonic idea of friendship and spiritual love—two souls become one.

And thus we can no absence know,
 20 Nor shall we be confined;
 Our active souls will daily go
 To learn each other's mind.
 Nay, should we never meet to sense,<sup>0</sup> physically
 Our souls would hold intelligence.<sup>0</sup> would still commune

25 Inspired with a flame divine,
 I scorn to court a stay;<sup>3</sup>
 For from that noble soul of thine
 I ne'er can be away.
 But I shall weep when thou dost grieve;
 30 Nor can I die whilst thou dost live.

By my own temper I shall guess
 At thy felicity,
 And only like my happiness
 Because it pleaseth thee.
 35 Our hearts at any time will tell
 If thou or I be sick or well.

All honor, sure, I must pretend,<sup>0</sup> aspire to
 All that is good or great:
 She that would be Rosania's<sup>4</sup> friend
 40 Must be at least complete.
 If I have any bravery,<sup>0</sup> splendor
 Tis cause I have so much of thee.

Thy leiger<sup>0</sup> soul in me shall lie, ambassadorial
 And all thy thoughts reveal;
 45 Then back again with mine shall fly,
 And thence to me shall steal.
 Thus still to one another tend:
 Such is the sacred name of friend.

Thus our twin souls in one shall grow,
 50 And teach the world new love,
 Redeem the age and sex, and show
 A flame fate dares not move:
 And courting death to be our friend,
 Our lives, together too, shall end.

55 A dew shall dwell upon our tomb
 Of such a quality
 That fighting armies, thither come,
 Shall reconciled be.
 We'll ask no epitaph, but say:
 60 ORINDA and ROSANIA.

On the Death of My First and Dearest Child,
Hector Philips'

Twice forty months in wedlock<sup>2</sup> I did stay,
Then had my vows crowned with a lovely boy.
And yet in forty days<sup>3</sup> he dropped away;
O swift vicissitude of human joy!

5 I did but see him, and he disappeared,
I did but touch the rosebud, and it fell;
A sorrow unforeseen and scarcely feared,
So ill can mortals their afflictions spell.<sup>0</sup> discern

io And now, sweet babe, what can my trembling heart
Suggest to right my doleful fate or thee?
Tears are my muse, and sorrow all my art,
So piercing groans must be thy elegy.

Thus whilst no eye is witness of my moan,
I grieve thy loss (ah, boy too dear to live!),
15 And let the unconcerned world alone,
Who neither will, nor can, refreshment give.

An off'ring too for thy sad tomb I have,
Too just a tribute to thy early hearse.
Receive these gasping numbers to thy grave,
20 The last of thy unhappy mother's verse.<sup>4</sup>

1. In Philips's manuscript the subtitle reads, "born the 23d of April, and died the 2d of May 1655. Set by Mr. Lawes." The musical setting has been published by Joan Applegate in English Manuscript Studies.

2. Philips was married in August 1648.

3. The subtitle indicates that he lived barely ten days; the change here is clearly for the parallelism.

4. This was not in fact Philips's last poem, but the sentiment is both true to human feeling and common in elegy. She had one other child, a year later—a daughter, Katherine, who survived her.

ANDREW MARVELL

1621-1678

Andrew Marvell's finest poems are second to none in this or any other period. He wrote less than Donne, Jonson, and Herbert did, but his range was in some ways greater, as he claimed both the private worlds of love and religion and the public worlds of political and satiric poetry and prose. His overriding concern with art, his elegant, well-crafted, limpid style, and the cool balance and reserve of some poems align him with Jonson. Yet his paradoxes and complexities of tone, his use of dramatic monologue, and his witty, dialectical arguments associate him with Donne. Above all, he is a supremely original poet, so complex and elusive that it is often hard to know what he really thought about the subjects he treated. Many of his poems were published posthumously in 1681, some thirty years after they were written, by a woman who claimed to be his widow but was probably his housekeeper. So their date and order of composition is often in doubt, as is his authorship of some anonymous works.

The son of a Church of England clergyman, Marvell grew up in Yorkshire, attended Trinity College, Cambridge (perhaps deriving the persistent strain of Neoplatonism in his poetry from the academics known as the Cambridge Platonists), ran off to London, and converted to Roman Catholicism until his father put an end to both ventures. He returned to Cambridge, took his degree in 1639, and stayed on as a scholar until his father's death in 1641. During the years of the civil wars (1642—48), he traveled in France, Italy, Holland, and Spain; much later he said of the Puritan "Good Old Cause" that it was "too good to have been fought for." While his earliest poems associate him with royalists, those after 1649 celebrate the Commonwealth and Oliver Cromwell; although he is sometimes ambivalent, Marvell recognizes divine providence in the political changes. From 1650 to 1652 he lived at Nunappleton as tutor to the twelve-year-old daughter of Thomas Fairfax, who had given over his command of the parliamentary army to Cromwell because he was unwilling to invade Scotland. In these years of retirement and ease, Marvell probably wrote most of his love lyrics and pastorals as well as Upon Appleton House. Subsequently he was tutor to Cromwell's ward, William Dutton, and traveled with him on the Continent; in 1657 he joined the blind Milton, at Milton's request, in the post of Latin secretary to Cromwell's Council of State. Marvell accepted the Restoration but maintained his own independent vision and his abiding belief in religious toleration, a mixed state, and constitutional government. He helped his friend Milton avoid execution for his revolutionary polemics and helped negotiate Milton's release from a brief imprisonment. Elected a member of Parliament in 1659 from his hometown, Hull, in Yorkshire, he held that post until 1678, focusing his attention on the needs of his district; on two occasions he went on diplomatic missions—to Holland and Russia. His (necessarily anonymous) antiroyalist polemics of these years include several verse satires on Charles II and his ministers, as well as his best-known prose work, The Rehearsal Transposed (1672—73), which defends Puritan dissenters and denounces censorship with verve and wit. He also wrote a brilliant poem of criticism and interpretation on Milton's Paradise Lost that was prefixed to the second edition (1674).

Many of Marvell's poems explore the human condition in terms of fundamental dichotomies that resist resolution. In religious or philosophical poems like "The Coronet" or "The Dialogue Between the Soul and Body", the conflict is between nature and grace, or body and soul, or poetic creation and sacrifice. In love poems such as "The Definition of Love" or "To His Coy Mistress" it is often between flesh and spirit, or physical sex and platonic love, or idealizing courtship and the ravages of time. In pastorals like the Mower poems and "The Garden," the opposition is between nature and art, or the fallen and the Edenic state, or violent passion and contentment. Marvell's most subtle and complex political poem, "An Horatian Ode upon Cromwell's Return from Ireland," sets stable traditional order and ancient right against providential revolutionary change, and the goods and costs of retirement and peace against those of action and war. Upon Appleton House also opposes the attractions of various kinds of retirement to the duties of action and reformation.

Marvell experimented with style and genre to striking effect. Many of his dramatic monologues are voiced by named, naive personas—the Mower, the Nymph—who stand at some remove from the author. One of his most remarkable figures—the phrase "To a green thought in a green shade," from "The Garden"—derives its power from the unanalyzable suggestiveness the poem invests in the term "green." "To His Coy Mistress," perhaps the best known of the century's carpe diem poems, is voiced by a witty and urbane speaker in balanced and artful couplets. But its rapid shifts from the world of fantasy to the charnal house of reality raise questions as to whether this is a clever seduction poem or a probing of existential angst, and whether Marvell intends to endorse or critique this speaker's view of passion and sex. In Upon Appleton House Marvell transforms the static, mythic features of Jonson's country-house poem "To Penshurst" to create a poem of epiclike scope that incorporates history and the conflicts of contemporary society. It assimilates to the course of providential history the topographical features of the Fairfax estate, the Fairfax family myth of origin, the experiences of the poet-tutor on his progress around the estate, and the activities and projected future of the daughter of the house. In the poem's rich symbolism, biblical events—Eden, the first temptation, the Fall, the wilderness experience of the Israelites—find echoes in the experiences of the Fairfax family, the speaker, the history of the English Reformation, and the wanton destruction of the recent civil wars.

FROM POEMS<sup>1</sup>The Coronet<sup>2</sup>

When for the thorns with which I long, too long,
 With many a piercing wound,
 My Savior's head have crowned,
 I seek with garlands to redress that wrong,
 5 Through every garden, every mead,
 I gather flowers (my fruits are only flowers),
 Dismantling all the fragrant towers<sup>0</sup> high headdress
 That once adorned my shepherdess's head:
 And now, when I have summed up all my store,
 10 Thinking (so I myself deceive)
 So rich a chaplet<sup>0</sup> thence to weave wreath
 As never yet the King of Glory wore,
 Alas! I find the serpent old,<sup>3</sup>
 That, twining<sup>0</sup> in his speckled breast, entwining
 is About the flowers disguised does fold
 With wreaths of fame and interest.<sup>4</sup>
 Ah, foolish man, that wouldst debase with them,
 And mortal glory, heaven's diadem!
 But thou who only couldst the serpent tame,
 20 Either his slippery knots at once untie,
 And disentangle all his winding snare,
 Or shatter too with him my curious frame,<sup>0</sup> elaborate construction
 And let these wither, so that he may die,
 Though set with skill and chosen out with care;
 25 That they, while thou on both their spoils dost tread,<sup>5</sup>
 May crown thy feet, that could not crown thy head.

1. Marvell's lyrics were published posthumously in 1681.

2. A floral wreath, also a garland of poems of praise.

3. Alludes to the serpent that tempted Eve (Genesis 3), traditionally understood to be an instrument for Satan.

4. Self-glorification, self-advancement.

5. See the curse on the serpent (Genesis 3.15), that the seed of Eve will bruise his head.

Bermudas<sup>1</sup>

Where the remote Bermudas ride
 In th' ocean's bosom unespied,
 From a small boat that rowed along,
 The listening winds received this song:

- 5 "What should we do but sing His praise
 That led us through the wat'ry maze
 Unto an isle so long unknown,
 And yet far kinder than our own?
 Where He the huge sea monsters wracks,<sup>2</sup>
 10 That lift the deep upon their backs;
 He lands us on a grassy stage,
 Safe from the storms, and prelate's rage.<sup>3</sup>
 He gave us this eternal spring
 Which here enamels everything,
 15 And sends the fowls to us in care,
 On daily visits through the air;
 He hangs in shades the orange bright,
 Like golden lamps in a green night,
 And does in the pomegranates close
 20 Jewels more rich than Ormus<sup>4</sup> shows;
 He makes the figs our mouths to meet,
 And throws the melons at our feet;
 But apples<sup>0</sup> plants of such a price, pineapples
 No tree could ever bear them twice;
 25 With cedars, chosen by his hand
 From Lebanon, he stores the land;
 And makes the hollow seas that roar
 Proclaim the ambergris<sup>5</sup> on shore;
 He cast (of which we rather<sup>0</sup> boast) more properly
 30 The gospel's pearl upon our coast,
 And in these rocks for us did frame
 A temple, where to sound his name.
 O let our voice his praise exalt
 Till it arrive at heaven's vault,
 35 Which, thence (perhaps) rebounding, may
 Echo beyond the Mexique B a y . G u l f of Mexico

Thus sung they in the English boat
 An holy and a cheerful note;

1. Otherwise known as the Summer Isles, the Bermudas were described in travel books like John Smith's The General History of Virginia, New England, and the Summer Isles (1624) as an Edenic paradise. The poem was probably written after 1653, when Marvell took up residence in the house of John Oxenbridge, who had twice visited the Bermudas.

2. Probably an allusion to the event described in

Edmund Waller's mock epic, a battle between the Bermudans and two stranded whales.

3. The Puritan settlers in Bermuda have escaped both the dangers of the sea voyage and religious persecution at home.

4. Hormuz, a pearl- and jewel-trading center in the Persian Gulf.

5. A substance found in sperm whales that was used in the manufacture of expensive perfume.

And all the way, to guide their chime,
40 With falling oars they kept the time.

A Dialogue Between the Soul and Body<sup>1</sup>

SOUL O, who shall from this dungeon raise
A soul enslaved so many ways?<sup>2</sup>
With bolts of bones, that fettered stands
In feet, and manacled in hands.
5 Here blinded with an eye, and there
Deaf with the drumming of an ear;
A soul hung up, as 'twere, in chains
Of nerves, and arteries, and veins;
Tortured, besides each other part,
10 In a vain head and double heart.

BODY O, who shall me deliver whole
From bonds of this tyrannic soul?
Which, stretched upright, impales me so
That mine own precipice<sup>3</sup> I go;
15 And warms and moves this needless<sup>0</sup> frame without needs
(A fever could but do the same),
And, wanting where<sup>0</sup> its spite to try, lacking an object
Has made me live to let me die.
A body that could never rest
20 Since this ill spirit it possessed.

SOUL What magic could me thus confine
Within another's grief to pine?
Where, whatsoever it complain,<sup>0</sup> suffer, complain of
I feel, that cannot feel,<sup>4</sup> the pain;
25 And all my care itself employs,
That to preserve which me destroys;
Constrained not only to endure
Diseases, but, what's worse, the cure;
And, ready oft the port to gain,
30 Am shipwrecked into health again.

BODY But physic<sup>0</sup> yet could never reach medicine
The maladies thou me dost teach:
Whom first the cramp of hope does tear,
And then the palsy shakes of fear;
35 The pestilence of love does heat,
Or hatred's hidden ulcer eat;

1. The poem derives from the medieval debat (debate) on this theme but alters the usual ending, which gives a clear victory to the soul.

2. The soul echoes Romans 7.24: "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?"

3. Having a soul allows humans to walk erect and so face the danger of falling.

4. The soul can sympathize ("feel") though it has no power of physical sensation.

Joy's cheerful madness does perplex,
 Or sorrow's other madness vex;
 Which knowledge forces me to know,
 40 And memory will not forego.
 What but a soul could have the wit
 To build me up for sin so fit:<sup>1</sup>
 So architects do square and hew
 Green trees that in the forest grew.

The Nymph Complaining for the Death of Her Fawn<sup>1</sup>

The wanton troopers<sup>2</sup> riding by
 Have shot my fawn, and it will die.
 Ungentle men! They cannot thrive
 To kill thee. Thou ne'er didst alive
 5 Them any harm; alas, nor could
 Thy death yet do them any good.
 I'm sure I never wished them ill,
 Nor do I for all this, nor will:
 But if my simple prayers may yet
 10 Prevail with heaven to forget
 Thy murder, I will join my tears
 Rather than fail. But, O my fears!
 It cannot die so. Heaven's king
 Keeps register of everything,
 15 And nothing may we use in vain.
 Even beasts must be with justice slain,
 Else men are made their deodands.<sup>3</sup>
 Though they should wash their guilty hands
 In this warm lifeblood, which doth part
 20 From thine, and wound me to the heart,
 Yet could they not be clean; their stain
 Is dyed in such a purple grain.
 There is not such another in
 The world to offer for their sin.
 1 25 Unconstant Sylvio, when yet
 I had not found him counterfeit,<sup>0</sup> false, deceitful
 One morning (I remember well),
 Tied in this silver chain and bell,
 Gave it to me; nay, and I know
 30 What he said then, I'm sure I do.

1. The lament for the death of a pet is an ancient topic dating back to Catullus and Ovid; the closest analogue may be Virgil's story of Sylvia's deer killed wantonly by the Trojans (Aeneid 7.475ff). John Skelton has a mock-heroic poem on "Philip Sparrow." There are also echoes of the Song of Songs, which have prompted critical debate as to whether Marvell uses them with serious allegorical import or the nymph uses them quite inappropriately.

2. Soldiers of the invading Scots army were called "troopers" (ca. 1640), as were, sometimes, soldiers of Cromwell's New Model Army.

3. In English law, animals or objects forfeited to the Crown (literally, to God) because they were the immediate cause of a human being's death. The nymph applies the term to persons who cause the death of animals.

Said he, Look how your huntsman here
 Hath taught a fawn to hunt his dear.
 But Sylvio soon had me beguiled;
 This waxed tame, while he grew wild,
 35 And quite regardless of my smart,
 Left me his fawn, but took his heart.<sup>4</sup>
 Thenceforth I set myself to play
 My solitary time away
 With this; and very well content
 40 Could so mine idle life have spent.
 For it was full of sport, and light
 Of foot and heart, and did invite
 Me to its game. It seemed to bless
 Itself in me; how could I less
 45 Than love it? O I cannot be
 Unkind t' a beast that loveth me.
 Had it lived long, I do not know
 Whether it too might have done so
 As Sylvio did; his gifts might be 50 Perhaps as false or more than he.
 But I am sure, for aught that I
 Could in so short a time espy,
 Thy love was far more better than
 The love of false and cruel men.
 55 With sweetest milk and sugar first
 I it at mine own fingers nursed.
 And as it grew, so every day
 It waxed more sweet and white than they.
 It had so sweet a breath! and oft
 60 I blushed to see its foot more soft
 And white—shall I say than my hand?—
 Nay, any lady's of the land.
 It is a wondrous thing how fleet
 'Twas on those little silver feet,
 65 With what a pretty skipping grace
 It oft would challenge me the race;
 And when it had left me far away,
 'Twould stay, and run again, and stay.
 For it was nimbler much than hinds,<sup>5</sup>
 70 And trod, as on the four winds.
 I have a garden of my own
 But so with roses overgrown
 And lilies that you would it guess
 To be a little wilderness.
 75 And all the springtime of the year
 It only loved to be there.
 Among the beds of lilies, JU-
 Have sought it oft where it should lie,
 Yet could not, till itself would rise,
 80 Find it, although before mine eyes.

4. A pun: heart/hart (a deer); line 32 also puns on dear/deer.

5. I.e., full-grown deer.

For in the flaxen lilies' shade
 It like a bank of lilies laid.
 Upon the roses it would feed.
 Until its lips ev'n seemed to bleed;
 85 And then to me 'twould boldly trip
 And print those roses on my lip.
 But all its chief delight was still
 On roses thus itself to fill,
 And its pure virgin limbs to fold
 90 In whitest sheets of lilies cold.
 Had it lived long, it would have been
 Lilies without, roses within.
 O help! O help! I see it faint,
 And die as calmly as a saint.
 95 See how it weeps.<sup>6</sup> The tears do come
 Sad, slowly dropping like a gum.
 So weeps the wounded balsam, so
 The holy frankincense doth flow.<sup>7</sup>
 The brotherless Heliades
 100 Melt in such amber tears as these.<sup>8</sup>
 I in a golden vial will
 Keep these two crystal tears, and fill
 It till it do o'erflow with mine,
 Then place it in Diana's shrine.<sup>9</sup>
 105 Now my sweet fawn is vanished to
 Whither the swans and turtles<sup>0</sup> go,
 In fair Elysium<sup>1</sup> to endure
 With milk-white lambs and ermines pure.
 O do not run too fast, for I
 110 Will but bespeak<sup>0</sup> thy grave, and die.
 First my unhappy statue shall
 Be cut in marble, and withal,
 Let it be weeping too; but there
 Th' engraver sure his art may spare,
 115 For I so truly thee bemoan
 That I shall weep, though I be stone:<sup>2</sup>
 Until my tears, still dropping, wear
 My breast, themselves engraving there.
 There at my feet shalt thou be laid,
 120 Of purest alabaster made;
 For I would have thine image be
 White as I can, though not as thee.

6. Deer were supposed to weep as they died.

7. Both balsam and frankincense are fragrant resins obtained a drop at a time from trees with holes bored in them.

8. The three daughters of the sun (Helios), grieving the death of their rash brother Phaethon, were transformed to black poplar trees dropping "tears" of amber.

9. Diana was the goddess of chastity and woodland creatures; nymphs were her attendants.

1. The Elysian fields, a pagan version of heaven.

2. Niobe, lamenting the death of her many children, in whom she took inordinate pride, was turned to stone.

To His Coy Mistress

Had we but world enough, and time,
 This coyness, lady, were no crime.
 We would sit down, and think which way
 To walk, and pass our long love's day.
 5 Thou by the Indian Ganges' side
 Shouldst rubies find; I by the tide
 Of Humber would complain.<sup>1</sup> I would Love you ten years before the Flood,
 And you should, if you please, refuse io Till the conversion of the Jews.<sup>2</sup>
 My vegetable love should grow
 Vaster than empires, and more slow;
 An hundred years should go to praise
 Thine eyes, and on thy forehead gaze;
 15 Two hundred to adore each breast,
 But thirty thousand to the rest:
 An age at least to every part,
 And the last age should show your heart.
 For, lady, you deserve this state,<sup>0</sup> dignity
 20 Nor would I love at lower rate.
 But at my back I always hear
 Time's winged chariot hurrying near;
 And yonder all before us lie
 Deserts of vast eternity.
 25 Thy beauty shall no more be found,
 Nor, in thy marble vault, shall sound
 My echoing song; then worms shall try
 That long-preserved virginity,
 And your quaint<sup>3</sup> honor turn to dust,
 30 And into ashes all my lust:
 The grave's a fine and private place,
 But none, I think, do there embrace.
 Now therefore, while the youthful hue
 Sits on thy skin like morning dew,<sup>4</sup>
 35 And while thy willing soul transpires
 At every pore with instant fires,<sup>5</sup>
 Now let us sport us while we may,
 And now, like amorous birds of prey,
 Rather at once our time devour
 40 Than languish in his slow-chapped<sup>6</sup> power.
 Let us roll all our strength and all
 Our sweetness up into one ball,
 And tear our pleasures with rough strife

1. The exotic river Ganges in India is on one side of the world, the Humber River flows past Mar-veil's city, Hull, on the opposite side. Complaints are poems of plaintive, unavailing love.

2. Popular belief had it that the Jews were to be converted just before the Last Judgment. The exaggerated offers in this stanza play off against conventional hyperbolic declarations of love in Petrarchan poetry.

3. "Quaint" puns on "out of date" and qneynte, a term for the female genitals.

4. The text reads "glew," which could be correct, but "dew" is a common emendation.

5. Urgent, sudden enthusiasm. "Transpires": breathes forth.

6. Slowly devouring jaws.

The Definition of Love

My Love is of a birth as rare
 As 'tis, for object, strange and high;
 It was begotten by Despair
 Upon Impossibility.

5 Magnanimous Despair alone
 Could show me so divine a thing,
 Where feeble Hope could ne'er have flown
 But vainly flapped its tinsel wing.

And yet I quickly might arrive
 10 Where my extended soul is fixed;<sup>1</sup>
 But Fate does iron wedges drive,
 And always crowds itself betwixt.

For Fate with jealous eye does see
 Two perfect loves, nor lets them close;<sup>0</sup> unite
 15 Their union would her ruin be,
 And her tyrannic power depose.<sup>2</sup>

And therefore her decrees of steel
 Us as the distant poles have placed
 (Though Love's whole world on us doth wheel),<sup>3</sup>
 20 Not by themselves to be embraced,

Unless the giddy heaven fall,
 And earth some new convulsion tear,
 And, us to join, the world should all
 Be cramped into a planisphere.<sup>4</sup>

25 As lines, so loves oblique may well
 Themselves in every angle greet;<sup>5</sup>
 But ours, so truly parallel,
 Though infinite, can never meet.

7. One manuscript reads "grates," a somewhat different figure for the sexual act proposed.

8. The sun stood still for Joshua (Joshua 10.12) in his war against Gibeon; see the very different resolution in Donne's "The Sun Rising" (p. 1266).

1. The soul has extended itself from the speaker's body and fixed itself to his lover.

2. Two perfections, united, would not be subject to change and thereby to Fate.

3. Rotates as on its axis.

4. A two-dimensional map of the world; Marvell images a round globe collapsed into a flat pancake shape, top to bottom, which would bring the two poles together.

5. Oblique lines can touch in angles, as might "oblique" lovers that (in one meaning of the term) "deviate from right conduct or thought."

Therefore the Love which us doth bind,
 30 But Fate so enviously debars,
 Is the conjunction of the mind,
 And opposition of the stars.<sup>6</sup>

The Picture of Little T. C. in a Prospect of Flowers<sup>1</sup>

See with what simplicity
 This nymph begins her golden days!
 In the green grass she loves to lie,
 And there with her fair aspect tames
 5 The wilder flowers and gives them names,
 But only with the roses plays,
 And them does tell
 What color best becomes them and what smell.

Who can foretell for what high cause
 10 This darling of the gods was born?
 Yet this is she whose chaster laws
 The wanton Love shall one day fear,
 And under her command severe
 See his bow broke and ensigns<sup>0</sup> torn.      flags, pennants
 15 Happy who can
 Appease this virtuous enemy of man!

O then let me in time compound<sup>0</sup>      come to terms
 And parley with those conquering eyes
 Ere they have tried their force to wound,
 20 Ere with their glancing wheels they drive
 In triumph over hearts that strive
 And them that yield but more despise:
 Let me be laid
 Where I may see thy glories from some shade.

25 Meantime, whilst every verdant thing
 Itself does at thy beauty charm,
 Reform the errors of the spring;
 Make that the tulips may have share
 Of sweetness, seeing they are fair;
 30 And roses of their thorns disarm:
 But most procure
 That violets may a longer age endure.

But O, young beauty of the woods,
 Whom Nature courts with fruit and flowers,

6. "Conjunction" is the coming together of two heavenly bodies in the same sign of the zodiac; "opposition" places them at diametrical opposites.

1. The little girl, T. C., has not been identified with any certainty. "Prospect": landscape.

35 Gather the flowers but spare the buds,
 Lest Flora,<sup>2</sup> angry at thy crime
 To kill her infants in their prime,
 Do quickly make th' example yours;
 And ere we see,
 40 Nip in the blossom all our hopes and thee.

The Mower Against Gardens<sup>1</sup>

Luxurious<sup>0</sup> man, to bring his vice in use,<sup>2</sup>
 Did after him the world seduce,
 And from the fields the flowers and plants allure,
 Where Nature was most plain and pure.
 5 He first enclosed within the garden's square
 A dead and standing pool of air,
 And a more luscious earth for them did knead,
 Which stupefied them while it fed.
 The pink grew then as double as his mind;<sup>3</sup>
 10 The nutriment did change the kind.
 With strange perfumes he did the roses taint;
 And flowers themselves were taught to paint.
 The tulip white did for complexion seek,
 And learned to interline its cheek;
 15 Its onion root they then so high did hold,
 That one was for a meadow sold;<sup>4</sup>
 Another world was searched through oceans new,
 To find the marvel of Peru;<sup>5</sup>
 And yet these rarities might be allowed
 20 To man, that sovereign thing and proud,
 Had he not dealt between the bark and tree,<sup>6</sup>
 Forbidden mixtures there to see.
 No plant now knew the stock from which it came;
 He grafts upon the wild the tame,
 25 That the uncertain and adult'rate fruit
 Might put the palate in dispute.
 His green seraglio<sup>7</sup> has its eunuchs too,
 Lest any tyrant him outdo;
 And in the cherry he does Nature vex,
 30 To procreate without a sex.<sup>8</sup>
 Tis all enforced, the fountain and the grot,<sup>0</sup>

voluptuousgrotto

2. Roman goddess of flowers.

1. The four "Mower" poems are linked by their treatment of a distinctly unusual pastoral figure, a mower rather than a shepherd or goatherd, who provides a singular perspective on those familiar pastoral topics, nature versus art and nature's sympathy for man (the pathetic fallacy). As mower wielding a scythe, he evokes other figures (Time, Death).

2. Into common practice.

3. The double pink, or carnation, is a product of sophisticated ("double") minds.

4. A highly lucrative trade in Dutch tulip bulbs flourished during the 17th century.

5. Mirabilis jalapa, the four-o'clock, was an exotic, multicolored flower found originally in tropical America.

6. An adage for interfering between husband and wife, in reference, apparently, to grafting.

7. Enclosure, a harem in a sultan's palace.

8. Cherries were commonly propagated by grafting.

While the sweet fields do lie forgot,
 Where willing Nature does to all dispense
 A wild and fragrant innocence;
 35 And fauns and fairies do the meadows till
 More by their presence than their skill.
 Their statues polished by some ancient hand
 May to adorn the gardens stand;
 But, howsoe'er the figures do excel,
 40 The gods themselves with us do dwell.

Damon the Mower

Hark how the mower Damon sung,
 With love of Juliana stung!<sup>1</sup>
 While everything did seem to paint
 The scene more fit for his complaint.<sup>2</sup>
 5 Like her fair eyes the day was fair,
 But scorching like his amorous care;
 Sharp, like his scythe, his sorrow was,
 And withered, like his hopes, the grass.

"Oh what unusual heats are here,
 10 Which thus our sunburned meadows sear!
 The grasshopper its pipe gives o'er,
 And hamstringed<sup>0</sup> frogs can dance no more:
 But in the brook the green frog wades,
 And grasshoppers seek out the shades.
 15 Only the snake, that kept within,
 Now glitters in its second skin.

disabled

"This heat the sun could never raise,
 Nor Dog Star so inflame the days;<sup>3</sup>
 It from an higher beauty grow'th,
 20 Which burns the fields and mower both;
 Which mads the dog, and makes the sun
 Hotter than his own Phaeton.<sup>4</sup>
 Not July causeth these extremes,
 But Juliana's scorching beams.

25 "Tell me where I may pass the fires
 Of the hot day or hot desires,
 To what cool cave shall I descend,
 Or to what gelid<sup>0</sup> fountain bend?
 Alas! I look for ease in vain,

icy

1. Damon is a familiar classical name in pastoral; Juliana gets her name from July (lines 23—24).
 2. The plaintive love song of an unrequited lover.
 3. The Dog Star (Sirius in the constellation Canis Major) rises with the sun in late summer, producing the heats of "dog days."

 4. Phaethon, son of Helios, the sun god of Greek mythology; he tried to drive his father's chariot but let the horses run away and scorched the world.

30 When remedies themselves complain:<sup>5</sup>
 No moisture but my tears do rest,
 No cold but in her icy breast.

"How long wilt thou, fair shepherdess,
 Esteem me and my presents less?

35 To thee the harmless snake I bring,
 Disarmed of its teeth and sting;
 To thee chameleons, changing hue,
 And oak leaves tipped with honeydew;
 Yet thou, ungrateful, hast not sought
 40 Nor what they are, nor who them brought.

"I am the mower Damon, known
 Through all the meadows I have mown.
 On me the morn her dew distills
 Before her darling daffodils,

45 And if at noon my toil me heat,
 The sun himself licks off my sweat;
 While, going home, the evening sweet
 In cowslip-water bathes my feet.

"What though the piping shepherd stock

50 The plains with an unnumbered flock?
 This scythe of mine discovers<sup>0</sup> wide
 More ground than all his sheep do hide.
 With this the golden fleece I shear
 Of all these closes every year,<sup>6</sup>

uncovers

55 And though in wool more poor than they,
 Yet I am richer far in hay.

"Nor am I so deformed to sight
 If in my scythe I looked right;
 In which I see my picture done

60 As in a crescent moon the sun.
 The deathless fairies take me oft
 To lead them in their dances soft,
 And when I tune myself to sing,
 About me they contract their ring.<sup>7</sup>

65 "How happy might I still have mowed,
 Had not Love here his thistles sowed!
 But now I all the day complain,
 Joining my labor to my pain;
 And with my scythe cut down the grass,
 70 Yet still my grief is where it was;
 But when the iron blunter grows,
 Sighing, I whet my scythe and woes."

5. I.e., fountain and cave themselves complain of unusual heat.

6. Hay is the "wool" of the fields ("closes").

7. I.e., the "fair" ring, a discolored circle of grass popularly supposed to result from fairies dancing there.

While thus he threw his elbow round,
 Depopulating all the ground,
 75 And with his whistling scythe does cut
 Each stroke between the earth and root,
 The edged steel, by careless chance,
 Did into his own ankle glance,
 And there among the grass fell down<sup>8</sup>
 80 By his own scythe the mower mown.

"Alas!" said he, "these hurts are slight
 To those that die by Love's despite.
 With shepherd's purse and clown's<sup>9</sup> all-heal<sup>9</sup> rustic's
 The blood I stanch and wound I seal.
 85 Only for him no cure is found
 Whom Juliana's eyes do wound.
 'Tis Death alone that this must do;
 For, Death, thou art a mower too."

The Mower to the Glowworms

Ye living lamps, by whose dear light
 The nightingale does sit so late,
 And studying all the summer night
 Her matchless songs does meditate,
 5 Ye country comets, that portend
 No war nor prince's funeral,
 Shining unto no higher end
 Than to presage the grass's fall;
 Ye glowworms, whose officious<sup>9</sup> flame helpful
 10 To wand'ring mowers shows the way,
 That in the night have lost their aim,
 And after foolish fires<sup>9</sup> do stray; will-o'-the-wisps
 Your courteous fires in vain you waste,
 Since Juliana here is come,
 15 For she my mind hath so displaced
 That I shall never find my home.

ca. 1650-52

1681

8. Evokes the biblical phrase "All flesh is grass" (Isaiah 40.6).

9. Folk names for popular remedies to heal wounds, found in fields and hedges.

The Mower's Song

My mind was once the true survey
 Of all these meadows fresh and gay,
 And in the greenness of the grass
 Did see its hopes<sup>1</sup> as in a glass;<sup>0</sup> mirror
 5 When Juliana came, and she,
 What I do to the grass, does to my thoughts and me.<sup>2</sup>

But these, while I with sorrow pine,
 Grew more luxuriant still and fine,
 That not one blade of grass you spied
 10 But had a flower on either side;
 When Juliana came, and she,
 What I do to the grass, does to my thoughts and me.

Unthankful meadows, could you so
 A fellowship so true forego,
 15 And in your gaudy May-games<sup>3</sup> meet,
 While I lay trodden under feet?
 When Juliana came, and she,
 What I do to the grass, does to my thoughts and me.

But what you in compassion ought 20 Shall now by my revenge be wrought,
 And flowers, and grass, and I, and all,
 Will in one common ruin fall;
 For Juliana comes, and she,
 What I do to the grass, does to my thoughts and me.

And thus ye meadows, which have been
 Companions of my thoughts more green,
 Shall now the heraldry become
 With which I shall adorn my tomb;
 For Juliana comes, and she,
 30 What I do to the grass, does to my thoughts and me.

The Garden

How vainly men themselves amaze<sup>0</sup> bewilder
 To win the palm, the oak, or bays,<sup>1</sup>
 And their uncessant labors see
 Crowned from some single herb or tree,
 5 Whose short and narrow-verged<sup>0</sup> shade edged

1. Green is the color of hope.
 2. The alexandrine (twelve-syllable line) used here is the only example of a refrain in Marvell.
 3. Festivals and merrymaking marked the first of

May, May Day.
 1. Honors, respectively, for military, civic, and poetic achievement.

- Does prudently their toils upbraid;<sup>0</sup> reprove
 While all flowers and all trees do close<sup>0</sup> unite, agree
 To weave the garlands of repose!
- Fair Quiet, have I found thee here,
 10 And Innocence, thy sister dear?
 Mistaken long, I sought you then
 In busy companies of men.
 Your sacred plants, if here below,<sup>0</sup> on earth.
 Only among the plants will grow;
- 15 Society is all but rude,
 To<sup>0</sup> this delicious solitude. compared to
- No white nor red<sup>2</sup> was ever seen
 So amorous as this lovely green.
 Fond lovers, cruel as their flame,
 20 Cut in these trees their mistress' name:
 Little, alas, they know or heed
 How far these beauties hers exceed!
 Fair trees, wheresoe'er your barks I wound,
 No name shall but your own be found.<sup>3</sup>
- 25 When we have run our passion's heat,
 Love hither makes his best retreat.
 The gods, that mortal beauty chase,
 Still<sup>0</sup> in a tree did end their race: always
 Apollo hunted Daphne so,
- 30 Only that she might laurel grow;
 And Pan did after Syrinx speed,
 Not as a nymph, but for a reed.<sup>4</sup>
- What wondrous life in this I lead!
 Ripe apples drop about my head;
 35 The luscious clusters of the vine
 Upon my mouth do crush their wine;
 The nectarine and curious<sup>0</sup> peach exquisite
 Into my hands themselves do reach;
 Stumbling on melons<sup>5</sup> as I pass,
- 40 Ensnared with flowers, I fall on grass.
- Meanwhile the mind, from pleasure less,
 Withdraws into its happiness;
 The mind, that ocean where each kind
 Does straight<sup>0</sup> its own resemblance find;<sup>6</sup> immediately

2. Colors traditionally associated with female beauty.

3. Marvell proposes to carve in the bark of trees not "Sylvia" or "Laura," but "Beech" and "Oak."

4. Apollo, the god of poetry, chased Daphne until she turned into a laurel (the emblematic reward of poets); Pan pursued Syrinx until she became a reed, out of which he made panpipes. The gods' motives were, of course, sexual, not horticultural.

5. "Melons," with etymological roots in the Greek word for "apple," may recall the apple over which all humankind stumbled.

6. As the ocean supposedly contained a counterpart of every creature on land, so the ocean of the mind holds the innate ideas of all things (in Neoplatonic philosophy).

45 Yet it creates, transcending these,
Far other worlds and other seas,
Annihilating all that's made
To a green thought in a green shade.

Here at the fountain's sliding foot,
50 Or at some fruit tree's mossy root,
Casting the body's vest<sup>0</sup> aside, garment
My soul into the boughs does glide:
There like a bird it sits and sings,
Then whets<sup>0</sup> and combs its silver wings, preens
55 And, till prepared for longer flight,
Waves in its plumes the various light.<sup>7</sup>

Such was that happy garden-state,
While man there walked without a mate:
After a place so pure and sweet,
60 What other help could yet be meet!<sup>8</sup>
But 'twas beyond a mortal's share
To wander solitary there:
Two paradises 'twere in one
To live in paradise alone.

65 How well the skillful gardener drew
Of flowers and herbs this dial new,<sup>9</sup>
Where from above the milder sun
Does through a fragrant zodiac run;
And as it works, th' industrious bee
70 Computes its time<sup>1</sup> as well as we!
How could such sweet and wholesome hours
Be reckoned but with herbs and flowers?

An Horatian Ode

Upon Cromwell's Return from Ireland<sup>1</sup>

The forward<sup>0</sup> youth that would appear eager, ambitious
Must now forsake his Muses dear,
Nor in the shadows sing
His numbers languishing:

7. The multicolored light of this world, contrasted with the white radiance of eternity.

8. Genesis 2.18 recounts the Lord's decision to make a "help meet" for Adam, Eve.

9. The garden itself is laid out as a sundial.

1. With a pun on "thyme."

1. Oliver Cromwell, the general primarily responsible for Parliament's victory in the civil war, returned from conquering Ireland in May 1650, about eighteen months after the execution of Charles I. The two events were persistently connected: Cromwell's success in Ireland was taken as a sign of God's favor to the new republican regime and to Cromwell as his chosen instrument. Pindaric odes (like Jonson's Cary-Morison ode, p. 1439) are heroic and ecstatic; Horatian odes are poems of cool and balanced judgment, as this one is in its representations of Cromwell, Charles I, and the issues of power and providence.

5 'Tis time to leave the books in dust
 And oil th' unused armor's rust,
     Removing from the wall
     The corselet<sup>0</sup> of the hall.<sup>2</sup> upper body armor

So restless Cromwell could not cease
 10 In the inglorious arts of peace,
     Rut through adventurous war
     Urged his active star;<sup>3</sup>

And, like the three-forked lightning, first
 Breaking the clouds where it was nursed, is Did through his own side
     His fiery way divide:<sup>4</sup>

For 'tis all one to courage high,
 The emulous, or enemy;
     And with such, to enclose
 20 Is more than to oppose.

Then burning through the air he went,
 And palaces and temples rent;
     And Caesar's head at last
     Did through his laurels blast.<sup>5</sup>

25 'Tis madness to resist or blame
 The force of angry heaven's flame;
     And if we would speak true,
     Much to the man is due,

Who from his private gardens, where 30 He lived reserved and austere
     (As if his highest plot
     To plant the bergamot),<sup>6</sup>

Could by industrious valor climb
 To ruin the great work of time,
 35 And cast the kingdom old
     Into another mold;

Though Justice against Fate complain,
 And plead the ancient rights in vain:
     But those do hold or break,
 40 As men are strong or weak.

2. Here as elsewhere there are allusions to Lucan's Pharsalia, a poem of civil war whose sympathies are with Pompey, Cato, and the Roman Republic against Caesar and the empire. The poem's allusions to Caesar are most often to Charles I, but sometimes to Cromwell.

3. Normally the stars are thought to control men's fates, but Cromwell presses his own star forward.

4. The "three-forked lightning" identifies him with

Zeus, suggesting the elemental force by which he surpassed all those in his own party ("side") of radical Independents; the imagery of giving birth to himself also suggests going Caesar (born by cesarean section) one better.

5. Royal crowns were made of laurel because they were supposed to protect from lightning.

6. A pear-shaped orange (from the Turkish, "prince's pear").

Nature that hateth emptiness,
 Allows of penetration less,<sup>7</sup>
 And therefore must make room
 Where greater spirits come.

45 What field of all the civil wars
 Where his were not the deepest scars?
 And Hampton shows what part
 He had of wiser art;<sup>8</sup>

Where, twining subtle fears with hope,
 50 He wove a net of such a scope
 That Charles himself might chase
 To Caresbrooke's narrow case,

That thence the royal actor<sup>9</sup> borne,
 The tragic scaffold might adorn;
 55 While round the armed bands
 Did clap their bloody hands.

He nothing common did or mean
 Upon that memorable scene,
 But with his keener eye
 60 The ax's edge<sup>1</sup> did try;

Nor called the gods with vulgar spite
 To vindicate his helpless right;
 But bowed his comely head
 Down, as upon a bed.

65 This was that memorable hour,
 Which first assured the forced power;
 So when they did design
 The Capitol's first line,

A bleeding head where they begun
 70 Did fright the architects to run;
 And yet in that the state
 Foresaw its happy fate.<sup>2</sup>

And now the Irish are ashamed
 To see themselves in one year tamed;

7. Nature abhors a vacuum, but even more, the penetration of one body's space by another body.

8. Charles was confined at Hampton Court after his defeat, as Parliament attempted to negotiate terms for his restoration. Cromwell was rumored to have connived at his escape to Carisbrooke Castle, on the Isle of Wight, in order to convince Parliament that he could not be trusted and must be executed. Cromwell has shown himself master of the two "arts" of rule defined by Machiavelli, namely, force and craft.

9. The theater metaphors used for Charles are even more powerful because the "tragic scaffold" was erected outside Whitehall, where so many royal masques were produced.

1. A play on the Latin acies, which means the edge of a sword or ax, a keen glance, and the vanguard of a battle. Cf. the newsbook account of the king's execution, p. 1741.

2. Livy and Pliny record that the workmen digging the foundations for a temple of Jupiter at Rome uncovered a bloody head which they were persuaded to take as an omen that Rome would be head (caput) of a great empire; the temple and the hill took the name Capitoline from that event.

75           So much one man can do,
              That does both act and know.

              They can affirm his praises best,
              And have, though overcome, confessed
                  How good he is, how just,
80           And fit for highest trust.<sup>3</sup>

              Nor yet grown stiffer with command,
              But still in the republic's hand—
                  How fit he is to sway,
                  That can so well obey.<sup>4</sup>

85    He to the Commons' feet presents
          A kingdom for his first year's rents;
              And, what he may, forbears
              His fame to make it theirs;<sup>5</sup>

              And has his sword and spoils ungirt,
90    To lay them at the public's skirt:
              So, when the falcon high
              Falls heavy from the sky,

              She, having killed, no more does search,
              But on the next green bough to perch;
95           Where, when he first does lure,
              The falconer has her sure.

              What may not then our isle presume,
              While victory his crest does plume!
                  What may not others fear,
100          If thus he crown each year!

              A Caesar he ere long to Gaul,
              To Italy an Hannibal,
                  And to all states not free,
                  Shall climacteric be.<sup>6</sup>

i05   The Pict no shelter now shall find
          Within his parti-colored mind,
              But from this valor sad,°                   severe, solemn Shrink underneath the plaid;<sup>7</sup>

3. Cromwell conducted a particularly brutal campaign in Ireland, and the Irish had no such testimonials for him; the lines are deeply equivocal.

4. The maxim about obedience fitting one to rule is a commonplace. The implications of "yet" and "still," along with the next stanza, suggest a Caesar figure who has not—but might—cross the Rubicon and defy the Republic, as Julius Caesar did.

5. Thus far, Cromwell gives the Republic credit for his victories.

6. It was thought that Cromwell's military acumen might subdue France and Italy (which threatened to attack the new republic to restore Charles II), just as did Caesar and Hannibal of old. "Climacteric": a period of crucial, epochal change—here, the expectation that the example of a successful English republic would topple absolute monarchs abroad.

7. Early Scots were called Picts (from the Latin pictus, painted), because the warriors painted themselves many colors; contemporary Scots are "parti-colored" (divided into many factions) like a scotch plaid. Cromwell was about to go to subdue Scotland, which had declared for Charles II.

Happy if in the tufted brake
 no The English hunter him mistake,
 Nor lay his hounds in near
 The Caledonian<sup>o</sup> deer.

Scottish

But thou, the war's and Fortune's son,
 March indefatigably on;
 115 And for the last effect,
 Still keep thy sword erect;

Besides the force it has to fright
 The spirits of the shady night,<sup>8</sup>
 The same arts that did gain
 120 A power must it maintain.<sup>9</sup>

Within this sober frame expect
 Work of no foreign architect,
 That unto caves the quarries drew,
 And forests did to pastures hew;

 Did for a model vault his brain,<sup>2</sup>
 Whose columns should so high be raised
 To arch the brows that on them gazed.

Why should of all things man unrul'd
 10 Such unproportioned dwellings build?
 The beasts are by their dens expressed,
 And birds contrive an equal nest;<sup>3</sup>
 The low-roofed tortoises do dwell
 In cases fit of tortoiseshell:

8. A sword carried with the blade upright evokes the classical tradition that underworld spirits (here, the slain king and his followers) are frightened off by raised weapons.

9. The maxim alludes to Machiavelli's advice that a kingdom won by force must for some time be maintained by force.

1. From 1651 to 1653, Marvell served as tutor to Mary Fairfax, daughter of Ann Vere and Thomas Fairfax, commander in chief of the parliamentary army throughout the civil wars. Fairfax opposed the regicide and in 1650 resigned his command rather than lead a preemptive strike against Scotland (which had declared for Charles II). Cromwell took over as Fairfax retired to his country estates in Yorkshire, especially Nunappleton, a comparatively simple brick structure on the site of a former Cistercian priory dissolved by Henry VIII along with all monasteries in 1542. The poem makes the house and its history figure the progress of the Reformation and the recent civil wars, played off against the Fall, the conflicts of the Israelites in the wilderness, and other biblical moments. The poem is structured as a journey around the estate, intersected by a long passage of family history. It was apparently written in the summer of 1651, when Mary Fairfax was twelve.

2. Did design in his brain the absurdly high vaulted ceilings of grand, magnificent houses built for showy display. This poem invites comparison and contrast with other country-house poems and the houses, estates, and society they describe: Jonson's "To Penshurst" (p. 1434), Lanyer's Description of "Cookham" (p. 1319), and Carew's "To Saxham" (p. 1671).

3. I.e., a nest proportioned to their size.

15 No creature loves an empty space;
Their bodies measure out their place.

3

But he, superfluously spread,
Demands more room alive than dead;
And in his hollow palace goes
20 Where winds as he themselves may lose.
What need of all this marble crust
T' impark the wanton mote of dust,
That thinks by breadth the world t' unite
Though the first builders<sup>4</sup> failed in height?

4

25 But all things are composed here
Like nature, orderly and near:
In which we the dimensions find
Of what more sober age and mind,
When larger sized men did stoop
30 To enter at a narrow loop;
As practicing, in doors so strait,
To strain themselves through heaven's gate.

5

And surely when the after age
Shall hither come in pilgrimage,
35 These sacred places to adore,
By Vere and Fairfax trod before,
Men will dispute how their extent
Within such dwarfish confines went;
And some will smile at this as well
40 As Romulus his bee-like cell.<sup>5</sup>

6

Humility alone designs
Those short but admirable lines,
By which, ungirt and unconstrained,
Things greater are in less contained.
45 Let other vainly strive t'immure
The circle in the quadrature!<sup>6</sup>
These holy mathematics can
In ev'ry figure equal man.<sup>7</sup>

7

Yet thus the laden house does sweat,
50 And scarce endures the master great:
But where he comes the swelling hall
Stirs, and the square grows spherical;<sup>8</sup>
More by his magnitude distressed,
Than he is by its straitness pressed;

4. The proud builders of the Tower of Babel, who thought to make it reach to heaven (Genesis 11).
5. The thatched hut of the legendary founder of Rome.

6. To square the circle.
7. The circle symbolized perfection, the square variously virtue, justice, and prudence.
8. The square hall rises up into a domed cupola.

55 And too officiously<sup>o</sup> it slights overeagerly
That in itself which him delights.

8

So honor better lowness bears,
Than that unwonted<sup>o</sup> greatness wears. unaccustomed
Height with a certain grace does bend,
60 But low things clownishly<sup>o</sup> ascend. in rustic fashion
And yet what needs there here excuse,
Where ev'ry thing does answer use?
Where neatness nothing can condemn,
Nor pride invent<sup>o</sup> what to contemn? find out

9

65 A stately frontispiece of poor<sup>9</sup>
Adorns without the open door;
Nor less the rooms within commends
Daily new furniture of friends.
The house was built upon the place
70 Only as for a mark of grace;
And for an inn to entertain
Its lord a while, but not remain.<sup>1</sup>

10

Him Bishops-Hill, or Denton may,
Or Bilbrough, better hold than they;
75 But Nature here hath been so free
As if she said, Leave this to me.
Art would more neatly<sup>o</sup> have defaced elegantly
What she had laid so sweetly waste;
In fragrant gardens, shady woods,
80 Deep meadows, and transparent floods.

11

While with slow eyes we these survey,
And on each pleasant footstep stay,
We opportunely may relate
The progress of this house's fate.
85 A nunnery first gave it birth
For virgin buildings oft brought forth.
And all that neighbor-ruin shows
The quarries whence this dwelling rose.

12

Near to this gloomy cloister's gates
90 There dwelt the blooming virgin Thwaites<sup>2</sup>
Fair beyond measure, and an heir
Which might deformity make fair.
And oft she spent the summer suns

9. Poor people awaiting Fairfax's alms.

1. The house is described as an inn, with an allusion to Hebrews 11.13-16 and the faithful who proclaim themselves "strangers and pilgrims on the earth" as they "desire a better country, that is, an heavenly."

2. In 1518 the heiress Isabel Thwaites was to marry Thomas Fairfax's ancestor, William, but was confined by her guardian, the prioress of Nun-appleton; William obtained an order for her release and then seized her by force and married her.

Discoursing with the subtle nuns.

95 Whence in these words one to her weaved
(As 'twere by chance) thoughts long conceived.

13

"Within this holy leisure we Live innocently as you see.
These walls restrain the world without,
100 But hedge<sup>o</sup> our liberty about. defend
These bars inclose that wider den
Of those wild creatures, called men;
The cloister outward shuts its gates,
And, from us, locks on them the grates.

105 "Here we, in shining armor white,<sup>o</sup> nun's habit
Like virgin amazons do fight:
And our chaste lamps we hourly trim,
Lest the great bridegroom find them dim.<sup>3</sup>
Our orient<sup>o</sup> breaths perfumed are fresh
110 With incense of incessant pray'r.
And holy water of our tears
Most strangely our complexion clears:

R5

"Not tears of grief; but such as those
With which calm pleasure overflows;
115 Or pity, when we look on you
That live without this happy vow.
How should we grieve that must be seen
Each one a spouse, and each a queen;
And can in heaven hence behold
120 Our brighter robes and crowns of gold?

16

"When we have prayed all our beads,
Some one the holy legend<sup>o</sup> reads; a saint's life
While all the rest with needles paint
The face and graces of the saint.
125 But what the linen can't receive
They in their lives do interweave.
This work the saints best represents;
That serves for altar's ornaments.

17

"But much it to our work would add
130 If here your hand, your face we had.
By it we would our Lady touch;<sup>4</sup>
Yet thus she you resembles much.
Some of your features, as we sewed,
Through every shrine should be bestowed:

3. Matthew 25.1—13 contrasts the wise virgins who kept their lamps lit for the bridegroom (Christ) and the foolish ones who did not and so were excluded from the marriage feast (heaven).

4. We could come close to representing the Virgin Mary in our designs with you as model.

135 And in one beauty we would take Enough a thousand saints to make.

18

"And (for I dare not quench the fire
That me does for your good inspire)
"Twere sacrilege a man t' admit
140 To holy things, for heaven fit.
I see the angels in a crown
On you the lilies show'ring down;
And round about you glory breaks,
That something more than human speaks.

19

145 "All beauty, when at such a height,
Is so already consecrate.
Fairfax I know; and long ere this
Have marked the youth, and what he is.
But can he such a rival seem
150 For whom you heav'n should disesteem?
Ah, no! and 'twould more honor prove
He your devoto<sup>0</sup> were, than love.

devotee

20

"Here live beloved, and obeyed,
Each one your sister, each your maid.
155 And, if our rule seem strictly penned,
The rule itself to you shall bend.
Our abbess too, now far in age,
Doth your succession near presage.
How soft the yoke on us would lie,
160 Might such fair hands as yours it tie!

21

"Your voice, the sweetest of the choir,
Shall draw heav'n nearer, raise us higher:
And your example, if our head,
Will soon us to perfection lead.
165 Those virtues to us all so dear,
Will straight<sup>0</sup> grow sanctity when here:
And that, once sprung, increase so fast
Till miracles it work at last.

immediately

22

"Nor is our order yet so nice,<sup>0</sup>
170 Delight to banish as a vice.
Here pleasure piety doth meet,
One perfecting the other sweet.
So through the mortal fruit we boil
The sugar's uncorrupting oil;
175 And that which perished while we pull,
Is thus preserved clear and full.

precise

23

"For such indeed are all our arts;
 Still handling nature's finest parts.
 Flow'rs dress the altars; for the clothes,
 180 The sea-born amber<sup>5</sup> we compose;
 Balms for the grieved<sup>0</sup> we draw; and pastes injured
 We mold, as baits for curious tastes.
 What need is here of man? unless
 These as sweet sins we should confess.

24

185 "Each night among us to your side
 Appoint a fresh and virgin bride;
 Whom if our Lord at midnight find,
 Yet neither should be left behind.
 Where you may lie as chaste in bed,
 190 As pearls together billeted,
 All night embracing arm in arm,
 Like crystal pure with cotton warm.

25

"But what is this to all the store
 Of joys you see, and may make more!
 195 Try but a while, if you be wise:
 The trial neither costs, nor ties."
 Now Fairfax seek her promised faith:<sup>0</sup> promise to wed
 Religion that dispensed hath;
 Which she henceforward does begin:<sup>6</sup>
 200 The nun's smooth tongue has sucked her in.

26

Oft, though he knew it was in vain,
 Yet would he valiantly complain:
 "Is this that sanctity so great,
 An art by which you finelier cheat?
 205 Hypocrite witches, hence avaunt,
 Who though in prison yet enchant!
 Death only can such thieves make fast,
 As rob though in the dungeon cast.

"Were there but, when this house was made,
 210 One stone that a just hand had laid,
 It must have fall'n upon her head
 Who first thee from thy faith misled.
 And yet, how well soever meant,
 With them 'twould soon grow fraudulent:
 215 For like themselves they alter all,
 And vice infects the very wall.

5. Ambergris from the sperm whale supplies the rich perfume for our altar cloths.

6. She now begins her "religious" life in the convent.

28

"But sure those buildings last not long,
 Founded by folly, kept by wrong.
 I know what fruit their gardens yield,
 220 When they it think by night concealed.
 Fly from their vices. 'Tis thy state,<sup>0</sup> estate
 Not thee, that they would consecrate.
 Fly from their ruin. How I fear
 Though guiltless lest thou perish there!"

29

225 What should he do? He would respect
 Religion, but not right neglect;
 For first religion taught him right,
 And dazzled not but cleared his sight.
 Sometimes resolved his sword he draws,
 230 But reverenceth then the laws:
 For justice still that courage led;
 First from a judge, then soldier bred.<sup>7</sup>

30

Small honor would be in the storm.<sup>0</sup> storming the priory
 The court him grants the lawful form;
 235 Which licensed either peace or force,
 To hinder the unjust divorce.
 Yet still the nuns his right debarred,
 Standing upon their holy guard.
 Ill-counseled women, do you know
 240 Whom you resist, or what you do?

31

Is not this he whose offspring fierce
 Shall fight through all the universe;
 And with successive valor try
 France, Poland, either Germany;
 245 Till one, as long since prophesied,
 His horse through conquered Britain ride?
 Yet, against fate, his spouse they kept,
 And the great race would intercept.<sup>8</sup>

32

Some to the breach against their foes
 250 Their wooden saints in vain oppose.
 Another bolder stands at push
 With their old holy-water brush.
 While the disjointed<sup>0</sup> abbess threads distracted
 The jingling chain-shot<sup>9</sup> of her beads.
 255 But their loud'st cannon were their lungs;
 And sharpest weapons were their tongues.

7. His father was judge of the Common Pleas; his maternal grandfather was a heroic soldier.

8. Thomas Fairfax, son of William and Isabel Thwaites, fought in Italy and Germany; his descendants were also honored soldiers; the present Fairfax fulfilled the prophecy by his victories in the Civil War.

9. Cannonballs linked in a chain and fired together.

33

But, waving these aside like flies,
 Young Fairfax through the wall does rise.
 Then th' unfrequented vault appeared,
 260 And superstitions vainly feared.
 The relics false were set to view;
 Only the jewels there were true—
 But truly bright and holy Thwaites
 That weeping at the altar waits.

34

265 But the glad youth away her bears
 And to the nuns bequeaths her tears:
 Who guiltily their prize bemoan,
 Like gypsies that a child had stol'n.
 Thenceforth (as when th' enchantment ends
 270 The castle vanishes or rends)
 The wasting cloister with the rest
 Was in one instant dispossessed.<sup>1</sup>

35

At the demolishing, this seat
 To Fairfax fell as by escheat.<sup>2</sup>
 275 And what both nuns and founders willed
 Tis likely better thus fulfilled:
 For if the virgin proved not theirs,
 The cloister yet remained hers;
 Though many a nun there made her vow,
 280 'Twas no religious house till now.

36

From that blest bed the hero came,
 Whom France and Poland yet does fame;
 Who, when retired here to peace,
 His warlike studies could not cease;
 285 But laid these gardens out in sport
 In the just figure of a fort;
 And with five bastions it did fence,
 As aiming one for ev'ry sense.<sup>3</sup>

37

When in the east the morning ray
 290 Hangs out the colors of the day,
 The bee through these known alleys hums,
 Beating the dian<sup>o</sup> with its drums. reveille
 Then flow'rs their drowsy eyelids raise,
 Their silken ensigns each displays,
 295 And dries its pan<sup>4</sup> yet dank with dew,
 And fills its flask<sup>o</sup> with odors new. powder flask

1. An allusion to Henry VIII's dissolution of the monasteries.

2. Legally, in the absence of an heir, the property reverted to him as lord of the manor; Henry gave monastery lands to his nobles.

3. The garden's five (seeming) bulwarks or fortifications aim at the five senses.

4. In a musket, the hollow part of the lock that receives the priming.

28

These, as their governor goes by,
 In fragrant volleys they let fly;
 And to salute their governess
 300 Again as great a charge they press:
 None for the virgin nymph;<sup>5</sup> for she Seems with the flow'rs a flow'r to be.
 And think so still! though not compare<sup>6</sup>
 With breath so sweet, or cheek so fair.

39

305 Well shot ye firemen!<sup>0</sup> Oh how sweet, shooters
 And round your equal fires do meet;
 Whose shrill report no ear can tell,
 But echoes to the eye and smell.
 See how the flow'rs, as at parade,
 310 Under their colors stand displayed:
 Each regiment in order grows,
 That of the tulip, pink, and rose.

40

But when the vigilant patrol
 Of stars walks round about the pole,
 315 Their leaves, that to the stalks are curled,
 Seem to their staves the ensigns furled.
 Then in some flow'r's beloved hut
 Each bee as sentinel is shut;
 And sleeps so too: but, if once stirred,
 320 She runs you through, nor asks the word.<sup>0</sup> password

41

Oh thou,<sup>9</sup> that dear and happy isle England
 The garden of the world ere while,
 Thou paradise of four<sup>7</sup> seas,
 Which heaven planted us to please,
 325 But, to exclude the world, did guard
 With wat'ry if not flaming sword;<sup>8</sup>
 What luckless apple did we taste,
 To make us mortal, and thee waste?

42

Unhappy! shall we never more
 330 That sweet militia restore,
 When gardens only had their tow'rs,
 And all the garrisons were flow'rs;
 When roses only arms might bear,
 And men did rosy garlands wear?
 335 Tulips, in several colors barred,
 Were then the Switzers<sup>9</sup> of our guard.

5. Mary Fairfax (Maria)—Marvell's pupil at Nunappleton.

6. The imperatives are addressed to the flowers.

7. Pronounced with two syllables.

8. After the Fall, the garden in Eden was guarded by angels with flaming swords.

9. The papal Swiss guards wore multicolored uniforms.

43

The gardener had the soldier's place,
 And his more gentle forts did trace.
 The nursery of all things green
 340 Was then the only magazine.
 The winter quarters were the stoves<sup>0</sup> hothouses
 Where he the tender plants removes.
 But war all this doth overgrow;
 We ordnance plant, and powder sow.

44

345 And yet there walks one on the sod
 Who, had it pleased him and God,
 Might once have made our gardens spring
 Fresh as his own and flourishing.
 But he preferred to the Cinque Ports'
 350 These five imaginary forts;
 And, in those half-dry trenches, spanned<sup>0</sup> restrained
 Pow'r which the ocean might command.

45

For he did, with his utmost skill,
 Ambition weed, but conscience till.
 355 Conscience, that heaven-nursed plant,
 Which most our earthly gardens want.<sup>0</sup> lack, need
 A prickling leaf it bears, and such
 As that which shrinks at every touch;
 But flow'rs eternal, and divine,
 360 That in the crowns of saints do shine.

46

The sight does from these bastions ply
 Th' invisible artillery;
 And at proud Cawood Castle<sup>2</sup> seems
 To point the batt'ry of its beams,
 365 As if it quarreled in<sup>o</sup> the seat found fault with
 Th' ambition of its prelate great;
 But o'er the meads below it plays,
 Or innocently seems to gaze.

47

And now to the abyss I pass
 370 Of that unfathomable grass,
 Where men like grasshoppers appear,
 But grasshoppers are giants<sup>3</sup> there:
 They, in their squeaking laugh, contemn
 Us as we walk more low than them:
 375 And, from the precipices tall
 Of the green spires, to us do call.

1. The five ports on the southeast coast of England, of which Fairfax was warden for a time; the "imaginary forts" (next line) are the "five bastions" of line 287.

2. Seat of the archbishop of York, two miles from Appleton House.

3. Cf. Numbers 13.33: "And there we saw the giants . . . and we were in our own sight as grasshoppers, and so we were in their sight."

28

To see men through this meadow dive,
 We wonder how they rise alive;
 As, underwater, none does know
 380 Whether he fall through it or go;<sup>o</sup> move forward
 But as the mariners that sound
 And show upon their lead the ground,<sup>4</sup>
 They bring up flow'rs so to be seen,
 And prove they've at the bottom been.

49

No scene<sup>o</sup> that turns with engines strange stage set
 Does oft'ner than these meadows change:
 For when the sun the grass hath vexed,
 The tawny mowers enter next;
 Who seem like Israelites to be 390 Walking on foot through a green sea.
 To them the grassy deeps divide
 And crowd a lane to either side.<sup>5</sup>

5°

With whistling scythe and elbow strong,
 These massacre the grass along:
 395 While one, unknowing, carves the rail,<sup>6</sup>
 Whose yet unfeathered quills her fail.
 The edge all bloody from its breast
 He draws, and does his stroke detest;
 Fearing the flesh untimely mowed
 400 To him a fate as black forebode.

5i

But bloody Thestylis<sup>7</sup> that waits
 To bring the mowing camp their cates,<sup>o</sup> food
 Greedy as kites<sup>o</sup> has trussed it up, birds of prey
 And forthwith means on it to sup;
 405 When on another quick she lights,
 And cries, he<sup>8</sup> called us Israelites;
 But now, to make his saying true,
 Rails rain for quails, for manna dew.<sup>9</sup>

Unhappy birds! what does it boot<sup>o</sup> avail
 410 To build below the grasses' root,
 When lowness is unsafe as height,

4. Plumb the depths and show the nature of the ground below.

5. The mowers produce a lane in the grassy meadow, like that formed when the Red Sea parted to allow the Israelites passage.

6. The corncrake (land rail), a field bird.

7. A camp follower comically given the name of a classical shepherdess. The harvest activities allude at times to the Civil War.

8. The author, at line 389. The Puritans constantly compared themselves and their revolution to the Israelites battling enemies and wandering in the wilderness en route to Canaan, the Promised Land.

9. Exodus 13-15 describes the quails and manna (left after the dew evaporated) with which the Israelites were miraculously fed after crossing the Red Sea.

And chance o'ertakes what scapeth spite?
 And now your orphan parents' call
 Sounds your untimely funeral.

415 Death-trumpets creak in such a note,
 And 'tis the sourdine<sup>1</sup> in their throat.

53

Or<sup>o</sup> sooner hatch or higher build: either
 The mower now commands the field;
 In whose new traverse<sup>o</sup> seemeth wrought track

420 A camp of battle newly fought:
 Where, as the meads with hay, the plain
 Lies quilted o'er with bodies slain;
 The women that with forks it fling,
 Do represent the pillaging.

54

425 And now the careless victors play,
 Dancing the triumphs of the hay;<sup>2</sup>
 Where every mower's wholesome heat
 Smells like an Alexander's sweat,<sup>3</sup>
 Their females fragrant as the mead
 430 Which they in fairy circles tread:
 When at their dance's end they kiss,
 Their new-made hay not sweeter is.

55

When after this 'tis piled in cocks,<sup>o</sup> haystacks
 Like a calm sea it shows the rocks:

435 We wond'ring in the river near
 How boats among them safely steer.
 Or, like the desert Memphis<sup>4</sup> sand,
 Short pyramids of hay do stand.
 And such the Roman camps do rise<sup>5</sup>
 440 In hills for soldiers' obsequies.

56

This scene<sup>o</sup> again withdrawing brings stage set
 A new and empty face of things;
 A leveled space, as smooth and plain,
 As cloths for Lely<sup>6</sup> stretched to stain.

445 The world when first created sure
 Was such a table rase<sup>7</sup> and pure;
 Or rather such is the toril
 Ere the bulls enter at Madril.<sup>8</sup>

1. A small pipe put into the mouth of a trumpet to produce a low sound.

2. A country dance (with a pun).

3. Plutarch wrote that Alexander the Great's sweat smelled sweet.

4. An ancient Egyptian city near the pyramids.

5. Hillocks that served as burial mounds; they were actually British in origin, not Roman.

6. Canvases for the Dutch portrait painter Sir Peter Lely, who came to England in 1643.

7. Tabula rasa (Latin); a clean or blank slate.

8. Madrid. "Toril": bull ring.

57

For to this naked equal flat,
 450 Which Levellers<sup>9</sup> take pattern at,
 The villagers in common<sup>0</sup> chase common pasture
 Their cattle, which it closer raise;<sup>0</sup> crops
 And what below the scythe increased<sup>0</sup> grew
 Is pinched yet nearer by the beast.
 455 Such, in the painted world, appeared,
 Davenant with th' universal herd.'

58

They seem within the polished grass
 A landscape drawn in looking glass;
 And shrunk in the huge pasture show
 460 As spots, so shaped, on faces do.<sup>2</sup>
 Such fleas, ere they approach the eye,
 In multiplying<sup>0</sup> glasses lie. magnifying
 They feed so wide, so slowly move,
 As constellations do above.

59

Then, to conclude these pleasant acts,
 Denton sets ope' its cataracts;<sup>3</sup>
 And makes the meadow truly be (What it but seemed before) a sea.
 For, jealous of its lord's long stay,
 It tries t' invite him thus away.
 The river in itself is drowned
 And isles th' astonished cattle round.

60

Let others tell the paradox,
 How eels now bellow in the ox;<sup>4</sup>
 475 How horses at their tails do kick,
 Turned as they hang to leeches quick;<sup>5</sup>
 How boats can over bridges sail,
 And fishes do the stables scale;
 How salmons trespassing are found,
 480 And pikes are taken in the pound.<sup>0</sup> cattle pen

61

But I, retiring from the flood,
 Take sanctuary in the wood;
 And, while it lasts, myself embark
 In this yet green, yet growing ark;

9. A radical faction (actually the Diggers or True Levelers) who sought social and economic equality. A group of Diggers began to put their tenets into practice by taking over and cultivating the land on St. George Hill, part of Fairfax's domain. See Gerrard Winstanley (p. 1751).

1. William Davenant, in his heroic poem Gondibert (2.6), describes a painting of creation, where on the sixth day 'an universal herd' of animals appeared.

2. A landscape (or painted landscape) reflected in a mirror would be reduced in size.

3. Small waterfalls or dams. Denton, also a Fairfax estate (see line 73), was located on the Wharfe River, thirty miles from Nunappleton.

4. Because the ox swallowed them.

5. In popular superstition horse hairs in water became live leeches or eels.

485 Where the first carpenter<sup>6</sup> might best Fit timber for his keel have pressed;<sup>0</sup> obtained
 And where all creatures might have shares,
 Although in armies, not in pairs.

62

The double wood of ancient stocks
 490 Linked in so thick an union locks,
 It like two pedigrees<sup>7</sup> appears,
 On one hand Fairfax, th' other Vere's:
 Of whom though many fell in war,
 Yet more to heaven shooting are:
 495 And, as they nature's cradle decked,
 Will in green age her hearse expect.

63

When first the eye this forest sees
 It seems indeed as wood not trees;
 As if their neighborhood<sup>0</sup> so old nearness
 500 To one great trunk them all did mold.
 There the huge bulk takes place, as meant
 To thrust up a fifth element;<sup>8</sup>
 And stretches still so closely wedged
 As if the night within were hedged.

64

505 Dark all without it knits; within
 It opens passable and thin;
 And in as loose an order grows
 As the Corinthian porticoes.<sup>9</sup>
 The arching boughs unite between 510 The columns of the temple green;
 And underneath the winged choirs
 Echo about their tuned fires.

65

The nightingale does here make choice
 To sing the trials of her voice.
 515 Low shrubs she sits in, and adorns
 With music high the squatted thorns.
 But highest oaks stoop down to hear,
 And list'ning elders prick the ear.
 The thorn, lest it should hurt her, draws
 520 Within the skin its shrunken claws.

66

But I have for my music found
 A sadder, yet more pleasing sound:
 The stock doves,<sup>0</sup> whose fair necks are graced turtledoves
 With nuptial rings, their ensigns chaste;

6. Noah, who built an ark to escape a flood that would cover the earth (Genesis 6).

7. Genealogical trees, of the Fairfax and Vere families.

8. The so-called quintessence, beyond and superior to fire, air, water, and earth.

9. The most elaborate order of Greek columns.

525 Yet always, for some cause unknown,
 Sad pair, unto the elms they moan.
 O why should such a couple mourn,
 That in so equal flames do burn!

67

Then as I careless on the bed
 530 Of gelid strawberries do tread,
 And through the hazels thick espy
 The hatching throstle's shining eye,
 The heron from the ash's top
 The eldest of its young lets drop,
 535 As if it stork-like<sup>1</sup> did pretend
 That tribute to its lord to send.

68

But most the hewel's<sup>o</sup> wonders are,
 Who here has the holtfelster's<sup>o</sup> care.
 He walks still upright from the root,
 540 Meas'ring the timber with his foot;
 And all the way, to keep it clean,
 Doth from the bark the wood-moths glean.
 He, with his beak, examines well
 Which fit to stand and which to fell.

*green woodpecker's

69

545 The good he numbers up, and hacks;
 As if he marked them with the ax.
 But where he, tinkling with his beak,
 Does find the hollow oak<sup>2</sup> to speak,
 That for his building he designs,
 550 And through the tainted side he mines.
 Who could have thought the tallest oak
 Should fall by such a feeble stroke!

70

Nor would it, had the tree not fed
 A traitor-worm, within it bred.
 555 (As first our flesh corrupt within Tempts impotent and bashful sin)
 And yet that worm triumphs not long,
 But serves to feed the hewel's young;
 While the oak seems to fall content,
 560 Viewing the treason's punishment.

71

Thus I, easy philosopher,
 Among the birds and trees confer;
 And little now to make me, wants<sup>o</sup>
 Or<sup>o</sup> of the fowls, or of the plants.

lacks either

1. The stork upon leaving a nest was believed to leave behind one of its young as a tribute to the householder.

2. The "royal" oak was traditionally an emblem of monarchy.

565 Give me but wings as they, and I
 Straight floating on the air shall fly:
 Or turn me but, and you shall see
 I was but an inverted tree.<sup>3</sup>

72

Already I begin to call
 570 In their most learned original:
 And where I language want, my signs
 The bird upon the bough divines;
 And more attentive there doth sit
 Than if she were with lime<sup>4</sup> twigs knit.
 575 No leaf does tremble in the wind
 Which I returning cannot find.

73

Out of these scattered Sibyl's leaves
 Strange prophecies my fancy weaves:<sup>5</sup>
 And in one history consumes,
 580 Like Mexique paintings, all the plumes.<sup>0</sup> feathers
 What Rome, Greece, Palestine, ere said
 I in this light Mosaic<sup>6</sup> read.
 Thrice happy he who, not mistook,
 Hath read in nature's mystic book.<sup>7</sup>

74

585 And see how chance's better wit
 Could with a mask<sup>8</sup> my studies hit!
 The oak-leaves me embroider all,
 Between which caterpillars crawl;
 And ivy, with familiar trails,
 590 Me licks, and clasps, and curls, and hales.
 Under this antic cope<sup>9</sup> I move
 Like some great prelate of the grove.

75

Then, languishing with ease, I toss
 On pallets swol'n of velvet moss;
 595 While the wind, cooling through the boughs,
 Flatters with air my panting brows.
 Thanks for my rest, ye mossy banks,
 And unto you, cool zephyrs,<sup>0</sup> thanks, gentle west winds
 Who, as my hair, my thoughts too shed,<sup>o</sup> pan
 600 And winnow from the chaff my head.

3. Originally classical, this is a widely used metaphor in the Renaissance.

4. Birdlime, a sticky substance smeared on twigs to trap birds.

5. The Cumaean Sibyl, in Virgil, committed her prophecies to leaves that Aeneas feared might be scattered (Aeneid 6.77).

6. The pattern formed by the trembling leaves;

also the books of Moses, who was thought to have written the first five books of the Bible.

7. The book of the creatures, or the book of God's works.

8. Masque costume or disguise appropriate to the speaker's studies.

9. Comic ecclesiastical vestment.

How safe, methinks, and strong, behind
These trees have I encamped my mind;
Where beauty, aiming at the heart,
Bends in some tree its useless<sup>0</sup> dart; harmless
605 And where the world no certain shot
Can make, or me it toucheth not.
But I on it securely play,
And gall its horsemen all the day.

77
Bind me ye woodbines in your twines,
610 Curl me about ye gadding vines,
And O so close your circles lace,
That I may never leave this place:
But, lest your fetters prove too weak,
Ere I your silken bondage break,
615 Do you, O brambles, chain me too,
And courteous briars, nail me through.<sup>1</sup>

78
Here in the morning tie my chain,
Where the two woods have made a lane;
While, like a guard on either side,
620 The trees before their lord divide;
This, like a long and equal thread,
Betwixt two labyrinths does lead.
But, where the floods did lately drown,
There at the evening stake me down.

79
625 For now the waves are fall'n and dried,
And now the meadows fresher dyed;
Whose grass, with moister color dashed,
Seems as green silks but newly washed.
No serpent new nor crocodile
630 Remains behind our little Nile;<sup>2</sup>
Unless itself you will mistake,
Among these meads<sup>0</sup> the only snake. meadows

80
See in what wanton harmless folds
It ev'rywhere the meadow holds;
635 And its yet muddy back doth lick,
Till as a crystal mirror slick;<sup>0</sup> smooth
Where all things gaze themselves, and doubt
If they be in it or without.
And for his shade<sup>0</sup> which therein shines, shadow
640 Narcissus-like, the sun too pines.<sup>3</sup>

1. The imagery evokes imprisonment and crucifixion.

2. Our river; serpents and crocodiles were thought to be bred by spontaneous generation from the mud of the Nile.

3. Narcissus lay beside water, staring at his reflection, pining for himself.

81

Oh what a pleasure 'tis to hedge
 My temples here with heavy sedge;
 Abandoning my lazy side,
 Stretched as a bank unto the tide;
 645 Or to suspend my sliding foot
 On th' osier's undermined root,
 And in its branches tough to hang,
 While at my lines the fishes twang!

82

But now away my hooks, my quills,<sup>0</sup> floats
 650 And angles, idle utensils.
 The young Maria walks tonight:
 Hide trifling youth thy pleasures slight.
 'Twere shame that such judicious eyes
 Should with such toys a man surprise;
 655 She that already is the law
 Of all her sex, her age's awe.

See how loose nature, in respect
 To her, itself doth recollect;
 And everything so whisht<sup>0</sup> and fine,

 Seems to descend with greater care;

665 So when the shadows laid asleep
 From underneath these banks do creep,
 And on the river as it flows
 With ebon shuts<sup>0</sup> begin to close; black shutters
 The modest halcyon<sup>4</sup> comes in sight,
 670 Flying betwixt the day and night;
 And such an horror calm and dumb,
 Admiring nature does benumb.

 The stupid<sup>0</sup> fishes hang, as plain stupefied
 As flies in crystal overta'en;
 And men the silent scene assist,<sup>0</sup> attend
 680 Charmed with the sapphire-winged mist.<sup>5</sup>

4. The kingfisher, who by nesting on the waves

5. The bird in its flight.

Maria such, and so<sup>o</sup> doth hush
 The world, and through the ev'ning rush. in like fashion
 No newborn comet such a train
 Draws through the sky, nor star new-slain.<sup>6</sup>
 665 For straight those giddy rockets<sup>7</sup> fail,
 Which from the putrid earth exhale,
 But by her flames, in heaven tried,
 Nature is wholly vitrified.<sup>o</sup> turned to glass

87

Tis she that to these gardens gave 690 That wondrous beauty which they have;
 She straightness on the woods bestows;
 To her the meadow sweetness owes;
 Nothing could make the river be
 So crystal-pure but only she;
 695 She yet more pure, sweet, straight, and fair,
 Than gardens, woods, meads, rivers are.

88

Therefore what first she on them spent,
 They gratefully again present:
 The meadow, carpets where to tread;
 700 The garden, flow'rs to crown her head;
 And for a glass, the limpid brook,
 Where she may all her beauties look;
 But, since she would not have them seen,
 The wood about her draws a screen.

89

705 For she, to higher beauties raised,
 Disdains to be for lesser praised.
 She counts her beauty to converse
 In all the languages as hers;
 Nor yet in those herself employs
 710 But for the wisdom, not the noise;
 Nor yet that wisdom would affect,
 But as 'tis heaven's dialect.

90

Blest nymph! that couldst so soon prevent
 Those trains<sup>o</sup> by youth against thee meant: anilleiy
 715 Tears (wat'ry shot that pierce the mind)
 And sighs (love's cannon charged with wind)
 True praise (that breaks through all defense)
 And feigned complying innocence;

 720 She scaped the safe, but roughest way.

6. Meteor, or shooting star.

7. Vapors exhaled from the earth.

This 'tis to have been from the first
 In a domestic heaven nursed,
 Under the discipline severe
 Of Fairfax, and the starry Vere;
 725 Where not one object can come nigh
 But pure, and spotless as the eye;
 And goodness doth itself entail
 On females, if there want a male.<sup>8</sup>

92

Go now fond<sup>o</sup> sex that on your face foolish
 730 Do all your useless study place,
 Nor once at vice your brows dare knit
 Lest the smooth forehead wrinkled sit;
 Yet your own face shall at you grin,
 Thorough<sup>o</sup> the black-bag<sup>o</sup> of your skin; through/mask
 735 When knowledge only could have filled
 And virtue all those furrows tilled.

93

Hence she with graces more divine
 Supplies beyond her sex the line;
 And, like a sprig of mistletoe,
 740 On the Fairfacian oak doth grow;
 Whence, for some universal good,
 The priest shall cut the sacred bud;<sup>9</sup>
 While her glad parents most rejoice,
 And make their destiny their choice.

94

745 Meantime ye fields, springs, bushes, flow'rs,
 Where yet she leads her studious hours
 (Till fate her worthily translates,
 And find a Fairfax for our Thwaites),
 Employ the means you have by her,
 750 And in your kind yourselves prefer;<sup>1</sup>
 That, as all virgins she precedes,
 So you all woods, streams, gardens, meads.

95

For you Thessalian Tempe's<sup>2</sup> seat
 Shall now be scorned as obsolete;
 755 Aranjuez, as less, disdained;
 The Bel-Retiro<sup>3</sup> as constrained;
 But name not the Idalian grove,<sup>4</sup>
 For 'twas the seat of wanton Love;

'Tis not, what once it was, the world,
 But a rude heap together hurled;
 All negligently overthrown,
 Gulfs, deserts, precipices, stone.
 765 Your lesser world<sup>6</sup> contains the same,
 But in more decent order tame;
 You heaven's center, nature's lap,
 And paradise's only map.

But now the salmon-fishers moist
 770 Their leathern boats begin to hoist;
 And, like antipodes in shoes,
 Have shod their heads in their canoes.<sup>7</sup>
 How tortoise-like, but not so slow,
 These rational amphibii<sup>8</sup> go!

 Does now like one of them appear.

7. The men who dwell at the "antipodes," on the other side of the world are sometimes said to wear

8. As men, the fishermen are "rational"; and they live in two elements, land and water.

Crisis of Authority

Most of the poets and prose writers who published in the "civil war decades," 1640 to 1660, registered in some way their responses to the conflicts swirling about them. The war and the issues over which it was fought shadow the poetry of Vaughan, Herrick, Lovelace, Suckling, and Marvell and the prose of Thomas Browne and Izaak Walton. Yet often such writers addressed the conflict only obliquely. When Marvell or Herrick celebrates peaceful gardens or fruitful countryside, when Vaughan envisions eternity as a "great ring of pure and endless light" suspended above all mortal turmoil, when Walton rhapsodizes about fishing, they create refuges of the imagination that might partially compensate for the trauma of war. Other writers confronted the issues of the age more straightforwardly. The readings included in this section sample some of this more explicitly political writing and exemplify some of the genres encouraged by the new conditions in which literary materials could be written and circulated.

With the restoration of Charles II in 1660, many of the radical voices of the 1640s and 1650s were muted. Yet the war decades left a lasting imprint upon English literature. They established a tradition of overtly political, often ambitiously literary writing without which it is hard to imagine the works of such authors as Dryden, Swift, and Pope. They established prose as a dominant literary medium, especially for the description and analysis of everyday life. They initiated a tradition of apparently ordinary people's bearing witness in writing to extraordinary events: a vital precedent for the rise of the novel.

This section presents examples of several kinds of writing that flourished during the Civil War and its immediate aftermath: the journalistic reporting of current events; political theory; and careful descriptions of contemporary history, personal experience, and individual character. These excerpts demonstrate a variety of ways in which writers might respond to the disturbing and exciting developments around them: by reporting the details of dramatic, unprecedented occurrences; by analyzing the political and social problems posed by the conflict; by ruminating upon the character of great men; by seizing new opportunities for autobiographical reflection. For other responses to the crisis of the war and other perspectives on the interregnum, go to Norton Literature Online, where you'll find the Leveler John Lilburne's call for a new government founded on popular sovereignty; the Fifth Monarchist Anna Trapnel's report of her visions, her travels, and her critique of Cromwell's government; and the Ranter Abiezer Coppe's radical denunciation of all human laws on the ground that he possesses the Spirit of God.

REPORTING THE NEWS

The following accounts of the king's trial and execution are excerpted from newsbooks, one of the most important new literary forms of the war years. In England the reportage of current events originated in the 1620s, when anxiety over the nation's entanglement in what would become the Thirty Years War on the Continent generated a demand for international news. In addition, in the 1620s and 1630s a few enterprising individuals provided "corantos," handwritten reports of court goings-on, to wealthy individuals in the provinces; these were technically considered private letters, although they sometimes circulated to several hundred paid subscribers. Yet even these modest ventures were always on legally shaky ground. The printing of domestic news, or commentary thereon, was strictly prohibited by Charles I, as it had been by his forebears.

In the early 1640s, censorship collapsed just when many people urgently wanted information about the momentous events transpiring in England, Scotland, and Ireland. The result was the explosive development of printed news. While in 1640 there were no newsbooks, by 1645 there were 755. Their format varied, but typically they were eight-page cheaply printed pamphlets, issued weekly. Most writers and compilers remained anonymous, though in some cases the identity of the authors was an open secret. Unlike the earlier corantos, the inexpensive newsbooks of the 1640s gave a broad spectrum of readers access to information about current events. Often, simultaneously, they propagandized on behalf of various parties to the developing conflict. The newsbooks thus encouraged an unprecedentedly wide and deep sense of civic involvement, and arguably also had the effect of hardening factional differences.

The newsbooks provided eyewitness, or what purported to be eyewitness, accounts of the king's trial and execution very shortly after they occurred. Both events were highly charged, with important and complex stakes on both sides. In the autumn of 1648, many in Parliament who had initially wanted to restrict the king's powers hesitated to remove him from the throne; they favored a negotiated end to hostilities. Yet the powerful leaders of the New Model Army, including Oliver Cromwell, were convinced that Charles was a threat to a reorganized commonwealth. Even if the king dealt with his opponents in good faith, which they doubted, he would be a constant rallying point for opposition to their policies. Conceivably, the war would never be over.

When Charles seemed to be planning to escape from his relatively light confinement on the Isle of Wight, the army council ordered him seized and brought to London, which the army occupied. Yet what were they to do with their captive? Simply to assassinate him would deprive his killers of any semblance of legitimacy. A formal trial, therefore, seemed necessary; but it was not easy to achieve. First, Parliament had to be purged of more than half its members, who disapproved of putting the king on trial. Once reconstituted so as to exclude opposition, Parliament then had to pass a law redefining treason as a crime against the state, not a crime against the king, of which the king himself could not logically have been guilty.

As in the case of most treason trials in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, a guilty verdict was a foregone conclusion. Yet the trial's value as propaganda was unpredictable. The judges and executioners pointedly assumed the regalia and symbolism of state power, and conducted both the trial and the execution with great punctiliousness, in order to bolster the impression of due process in the eyes of onlookers and newsbook readers. Charles's calmly defiant behavior, meanwhile, was not meant to secure his acquittal, which everyone knew would have been unforthcoming anyhow. Rather, he hoped to garner sympathy for his plight, to demonstrate publicly his unwavering adherence to his own principles, and to provoke prosecutors and judges into behaving like rabid zealots. Likewise, his conduct on the scaffold impressed even those who deplored his political position. While his judges and executioners strove to describe him as an overweening tyrant, Charles struggled to appear the heir to a Christian tradition of suffering innocence, a "martyr of the people." In 1660, as soon as the monarchy was restored, Charles I was canonized by the Church of England.

[THE TRIAL OF KING CHARLES I, THE FIRST DAY]

At the high court of justice sitting in the Great Hall of Westminster, Sergeant Bradshaw President,<sup>1</sup> about 70 Members present. Oyez<sup>2</sup> made thrice, silence commanded. The president had the sword and mace carried before him, attended with Colonel Fox, and twenty other officers and gentlemen with partisans.<sup>3</sup> The act of the Commons in Parliament for trial of the king, read. After the court was called, and each member rising up as he was called. The king came into the court, his hat on, and the Commissioners with theirs on also; no congratulation or motion of hats at all.<sup>4</sup> The Sergeant ushered him in with the mace, Colonel Hacker<sup>5</sup> and about thirty officers and gentlemen more came as his guard; the president then spake in these words, viz.

"Charles Stuart, King of England, the Commons of England assembled in Parliament being sensible of the great calamities that have been brought upon this nation, of the innocent blood that hath been shed in this nation, which is referred<sup>6</sup> to you, as the author of it; and according to that duty which they owe to God, to the nation, and themselves, and according to that fundamental power and trust that is reposed in them by the people, have constituted this high court of justice before which you are now brought; and you are to hear the charge upon which the court will proceed."

Mr. Cook Solicitor General.<sup>7</sup> "My lord, in behalf of the Commons of England, and of all the people thereof, I do accuse Charles Stuart, here present, of high treason and high misdemeanors, and I do in the name of the Commons of England desire that the charge may be read unto him."

King. "Hold a little"—tapping the solicitor general twice on the shoulder with his cane, which drawing towards him again, the head thereon fell off, he stooping for it, put it presently<sup>8</sup> into his pocket. This is conceived will be very ominous.

Lord President. "Sir, the court commands the charge to be read; if you have any thing to say after, you may be heard."

The charge was read.

The king smiled often during the time, especially at those words therein, viz that Charles Stuart was a tyrant, traitor, murderer, and public enemy of the commonwealth.

1. John Bradshaw (1609-1659), chief justice of Cheshire and Wales, accepted the office of president after others declined. He lost this office after 1653, when he opposed Cromwell's consolidation of personal power. Bradshaw was posthumously convicted of treason at the Restoration in 1660; his body was exhumed and hanged in chains.

2. Hear ye (French).

3. John Fox (1610—1650) was commander of the Lord President's bodyguard, the members of which carried spears with a lobed base ('partisan'). The "sword and mace" symbolizes state power.

4. For either the king or the judges to doff their hats would be to acknowledge the others' superiority. "Congratulation": salutation.

5. Francis Hacker (1618—1660) commanded the soldiers who guarded the king, signed the king's death warrant, and supervised the guard on the scaffold. He was executed after the Restoration.

6. Attributed.

7. John Cook (1608—1660), a radical republican lawyer, served as chief prosecutor. He was executed after the Restoration.

8. Immediately.

Lord President. "Sir, you have now heard your charge read, containing such matter as appears in it: you find that in the close of it, it is prayed to the court in the behalf of all the Commons of England, that you answer to your charge. The court expects your answer."

King. "I would know by what power I am called hither. I was not long ago in the Isle of Wight; how I came hither is a larger story than I think is fit at this time for me to speak of: But there I entered into a treaty with the two Houses of Parliament, with as much public faith as is possibly to be had of any people in the world. I treated there with a number of honorable lords and gentlemen, and treated honestly and uprightly. I cannot say but they did deal very nobly with me. We were upon conclusion of a treaty. Now I would know by what authority—I mean lawful; there are many unlawful authorities in the world, thieves and robbers by the highways—but I would know by what authority I was brought from thence, and carried from place to place; and when I know by what lawful authority, I shall answer."

"Remember, I am your king, your lawful king; and what sin you bring upon your heads, and the judgments of God upon this land, think well upon it; I say think well upon it before you go further, from one sin to a greater.<sup>9</sup> Therefore let me know by what lawful authority I am seated here, and I shall not be unwilling to answer. In the meantime, I shall not betray my trust. I have a trust committed to me by God, by old and lawful descent. I will not betray it, to answer to a new and unlawful authority. Therefore resolve me that, and you shall hear more of me."

Lord President. "If you had been pleased to have observed what was hinted to you by the court at our first coming hither, you would have known by what authority; which authority requires you in the name of the people of England, of which you are elected king, to answer them."

King. "No sir, I deny that."

Lord President. "If you acknowledge not the authority of the court, they must proceed."

King. "I do tell you so, England was never an elective kingdom, but an hereditary kingdom, for near a thousand years; therefore let me know by what authority I am called hither. I do stand more for the liberty of my people than any here that come to be my pretended judges; and therefore let me know by what lawful authority I am seated here, and I will answer it; otherwise I will not answer it."

Lord President told him he did interrogate the court, which beseemed not one in his condition, and it was known how he had managed his trust.

King. "I desire that you would give me, and all the world, satisfaction in this. For let me tell you, it is not a slight thing you are about. I am sworn to keep the peace by the duty I owe to God and my country; and I will do it to the last breath of my body: And therefore you shall do well to satisfy first God and then the country by what authority you do it; if by a reserved<sup>1</sup> authority, you cannot answer it. There is a God in heaven that will call you, and all that give you power, to an account. Satisfy me in that, and I will answer; otherwise, I betray my trust and the liberties of the people. And therefore think of that, and then I shall be willing. For I do vow, that it is as great a sin to withstand lawful authority, as it is to submit to a tyrannical or any otherways unlawful authority, And therefore satisfy me that, and you shall receive my answer."

Lord President. "The court expects a final answer. They are to adjourn till Monday. If you satisfy not yourself, though we tell you our authority, we are satisfied with our authority, and it is upon God's authority and the kingdom's; and that peace you speak of will be kept in the doing of justice; and that is our present work."

The court adjourned till Monday ten of clock to the Painted Chamber, and thence hither.

As the king went away, facing the court, the king said, "I fear not that," looking upon and meaning the sword.

Going down from the court, the people cried, "Justice, justice, justice!"

Jan. 21. The commissioners kept a fast this day in Whitehall. There preached before them Mr. Sprig, whose text was, "He that sheds blood, by man shall his blood be shed." Mr. Foxley's was "Judge not, lest you be judged." And Mr. Peters' was. "I will bind their kings in chains, and their nobles in fetters of iron."<sup>2</sup> The last sermon made amends for the two former.

[THE EXECUTION OF CHARLES I]

This day the king was beheaded over against the Banqueting House by Whitehall.<sup>1</sup> The manner of execution and what passed before his death take thus.<sup>2</sup> He was brought from Saint James<sup>3</sup> about ten in the morning, walking on foot through the park with a regiment of foot for his guard, with colors flying, drums beating, his private guard of partisans,<sup>4</sup> with some of his gentlemen before, and some behind bareheaded, Dr. Juxon late Bishop of London<sup>5</sup> next behind him, and Colonel Tomlinson<sup>6</sup> (who had the charge of him) to the gallery in Whitehall, and so into the Cabinet Chamber where he used to lie, where he continued at his devotion, refusing to dine (having before taken the sacrament) only about 12 at noon he drank a glass of claret wine, and eat a piece of bread. From thence he was accompanied by Dr. Juxon, Colonel Tomlinson, Colonel Hacker,<sup>7</sup> and the guards before mentioned through the Banqueting House adjoining to which the scaffold was erected between Whitehall Gate and the

2. The biblical texts are Genesis 9.6, Matthew 7.1, and Psalms 149.8. Hugh Peters (1598-1660), Independent preacher to Cromwell's New Model Army, passionately supported the king's execution. He was himself executed after the Restoration.

1. Whitehall Palace was the English monarch's principal residence from 1530 to 1698, when most of it was destroyed by fire. The Banqueting House, designed by Inigo Jones with ceilings painted by Peter Paul Rubens, was built for King James I in 1619-22 and was used to stage court masques. "Over against": just outside.

gate leading into the gallery from Saint James. The scaffold was hung round with black, and the floor covered with black, and the ax and block laid in the middle of the scaffold. There were divers companies of foot and horse on every side the scaffold, and the multitudes of people that came to be spectators very great. The king making a pass upon<sup>8</sup> the scaffold, looked very earnestly on the block, and asked Colonel Hacker if there were no higher; and then spake thus, directing his speech to the gentlemen upon the scaffold.

King. "I shall be very little heard of anybody here; I shall therefore speak a word unto you here. Indeed I could hold my peace<sup>9</sup> very well, if I did not think that holding my peace would make some men think that I did submit to the guilt as well as to the punishment. But I think it is my duty to God first, and to my country, for to clear myself both as an honest man, and a good king, and a good Christian. I shall begin first with my innocency. In troth I think it not very needful for me to insist long upon this, for all the world knows that I never did begin a war with the two Houses of Parliament, and I call God to witness, to whom I must shortly make an account, that I never did intend for to encroach upon their privileges; they began upon me. It is the militia they began upon;<sup>1</sup> they confessed that the militia was mine but they thought it fit to have it from me; and to be short, if anybody will look to the dates of commissions, theirs and mine, and likewise to the declarations,<sup>2</sup> will see clearly that they began these unhappy troubles, not I. So that as the guilt of these enormous crimes that are laid against me, I hope in God that God will clear me of it. I will not; I am in charity;<sup>3</sup> God forbid that I should lay it upon the two Houses of Parliament, there is no necessity of either.<sup>4</sup> I hope they are free of this guilt; for I do believe that ill instruments<sup>5</sup> between them and me has been the chief cause of all this bloodshed. So that by way of speaking, as I find myself clear of this, I hope and pray God that they may too. Yet for all this, God forbid that I should be so ill a Christian, as not to say that God's judgments are just upon me. Many times he does pay justice by an unjust sentence; that is ordinary. I only say this, that an unjust sentence (meaning Strafford)<sup>6</sup> that I suffered for to take effect, is punished now by an unjust sentence upon me. That is, so far I have said, to show you that I am an innocent man.

"Now for to show you that I am a good Christian, I hope there is" (pointing to Dr. Juxon) "a good man that will bear me witness that I have forgiven all the world, and those in particular that have been the chiefcausers of my death. Who they are, God knows; I do not desire to know. I pray God forgive them. But this is not all; my charity must go farther. I wish that they may repent, for indeed they have committed a great sin in that particular. I pray God with Saint Stephen that this be not laid to their charge;<sup>7</sup> nay, not only so, but that they may take the right way to the peace of the kingdom, for charity commands me not only to forgive particular men, but to endeavor to the last gasp the peace of the kingdom. Sirs, I do wish with all my soul, and I do hope there is some here will carry it further, that they may endeavor the peace of the kingdom.

"Now, sirs, I must show you both how you are out of the way, and will put you in a way.<sup>8</sup> First, you are out of the way, for certainly all the way<sup>9</sup> you ever have had yet as I could find by anything, is in the way of conquest. Certainly this is an ill way, for conquest, sir, in my opinion is never just, except there be a good just cause, either for matter of wrong or just title, and then if you go beyond it,<sup>1</sup> the first quarrel that you have to it, that makes it unjust at the end that was just at first. But if it be only matter of conquest, then it is a great robbery; as a pirate said to Alexander that he was a great robber, he was but a petty robber. And so, sir, I do think the way that you are in, is much out of the way. Now, sir, for to put you in the way, believe it you never do right, nor God will never prosper you,<sup>2</sup> until you give Him his due, the king his due (that is, my successors) and the people their due. I am as much for them<sup>3</sup> as any of you. You must give God his due by regulating rightly his Church, according to Scripture, which is now out of order. For to set you in a way particularly<sup>4</sup> now I cannot, but only this, a national synod freely called, freely debating among themselves, must settle this; when that every opinion is freely and clearly heard. For the king, indeed I will not—(Then turning to a gentleman that touched the ax, said, hurt not the ax that may hurt me.)—For the king, the laws of the land will clearly instruct you for that; therefore, because it concerns my own particular I only give you a touch of it.<sup>5</sup> For the people, and truly I desire their liberty and freedom, as much as anybody whomsoever; but I must tell you, that their liberty and their freedom consists in having of government, those laws by which their life and their goods may be most their own. It is not for having share in government, sir, that is nothing pertaining to them.<sup>6</sup> A subject and a sovereign are clean<sup>7</sup> different things; and therefore, until they do that, I mean, that you do put the people in that liberty as I say, certainly they will never enjoy themselves.<sup>8</sup> Sirs, it was for this<sup>9</sup> that now I am come here. If I would have given way to an arbitrary way, for to have all laws changed according to the power of the sword, I needed not to have come here; and therefore I tell you, and I pray God it be not laid to your charge, that I am the martyr of the people. In troth sirs, I shall not hold you much longer; for I will only say this to you, that in truth I could have desired some little time longer because that I would have put this that I have said in a little more order and a little better digested<sup>1</sup> than I have done; and therefore I hope you will excuse me. I have delivered<sup>2</sup> my conscience. I pray God that you do take those courses that are best for the good of the kingdom and your own salvations."

Dr. Juxon. "Will Your Majesty—though it may be very well known Your Majesty's affections to religion—yet it may be expected that you should say somewhat<sup>3</sup> for the world's satisfaction."

King. "I thank you very heartily, my lord, for that I had almost forgotten it.

In troth, sirs, my conscience in religion I think is very well known to the world, and therefore I declare before you all that I die a Christian according to the profession of the Church of England as I found it left me by my father; and this honest man, I think, will witness it." Then turning to the officers said, "sirs, excuse me for this same.<sup>4</sup> I have a good cause, and I have a gracious God; I will say no more."

Then turning to Colonel Hacker, he said, "Take care that they do not put me to pain; and, sir, this, an it please you."<sup>5</sup> But then a gentleman coming near the ax, the king said, "Take heed of the ax, pray take heed of the ax." Then the king speaking to the executioner said, "I shall say but very short prayers, and then thrust out my hands."

Then the king called to Dr. Juxon for his nightcap, and having put it on he said to the executioner, "Does my hair trouble you?" Who desired him to put it all under his cap, which the king did accordingly, by the help of the executioner and the bishop. Then the king turning to Dr. Juxon said, "I have a good cause, and a gracious God on my side."

Dr. Juxon, "There is but one stage more. This stage is turbulent and troublesome; it is a short one: But you may consider it will soon carry you a very great way; it will carry you from earth to heaven, and there you shall find a great deal of cordial joy and comfort."

King. "I go from a corruptible to an incorruptible crown, where no disturbance can be."

Dr. Juxon. "You are exchanged from a temporal to an eternal crown, a good exchange."

Then the king took off his cloak and his George,<sup>6</sup> giving his George to Dr. Juxon, saying "Remember" (it is thought for the prince) and some other small ceremonies past. After which the king stooping down laid his neck upon the block, and after a very little pause stretching forth his hands, the executioner at one blow severed his head from his body. Then his body was put in a coffin covered with black velvet, and removed to his lodging chamber in Whitehall.

POLITICAL WRITING

Not surprisingly, the tumult of civil war stimulated a great deal of thinking about the nature and ends of government. Along with Thomas Hobbes's Leviathan (p. 1596), the three excerpts that follow give some idea of the arguments proposed by English political writers between 1630 and 1655.

In Patriarcha, or The Natural Power of Kings Defended Against the Unnatural Liberty of the People, the royalist Robert Filmer outlines a theory of monarchical absolutism based on the authority of biblical patriarchs—Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, for instance—over their families. God ratified kingly authority, Filmer claims, when he commanded the honoring of parents. Although many royalists retained a larger role for popular consent than Filmer did, Filmer's account of the king's fatherly care of his people, and the people's childlike incompetence to manage political affairs, was close to the Stuart kings' own views. Like Hobbes in Leviathan, Filmer favors royal absolutism, but he works from very different premises, rejecting as unhistorical Hobbes's theory of the state of nature and his speculations on the contractual origin of government. Filmer's recourse to biblical history and to the revealed word of God made his theory more palatable to conservatives than that of Hobbes, who took his methodological premises from geometry and the new science, and his pessimistic assessment of human motives from Machiavelli.

The claims of royalists, who would have concentrated power in the king and deprived the people of any way to get rid of him, came under vigorous attack from the poet John Milton, who during the war years became one of the most effective polemicists for the parliamentary radicals. Milton wrote The Tenure of Kings and Magistrates in 1648, the days leading up to Charles's trial and execution, when many of those who had originally supported limiting the king's power shrank from actually beheading him. Milton decries this hesitation, seeing it as the effect of a misdirected awe for the privileges of monarchs. All political authorities, Milton argues, hold their power in trust from the people, and the people can revoke that trust whenever they choose.

Like Filmer, Milton bases his argument upon biblical history, but he cites very different passages. Filmer emphasizes the importance of fatherly authority in Genesis, which narrates the lives of Adam, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Joseph. Milton acknowledges that the fall of Adam and Eve corrupted human nature so that individuals were henceforth unable to govern themselves properly without external discipline. Yet, he insists, since those charged with implementing that discipline are themselves sinners, they must be kept in check by laws and by strict limitations upon their authority. In Milton's account, problems with the exercise of authority became evident only gradually. Unlike Filmer, who assumes that the social arrangements described in Genesis are a pattern for modern political communities, Milton chooses his examples from later eras in Jewish history: for instance, the Book of Samuel, in which God disapproves of the Israelites' desire for a king.

For both Filmer and Milton, the central issue of the conflict between the king and Parliament is, who has ultimate authority, the king or the people? Gerrard Winstanley construes the problem differently, in primarily economic rather than political terms. Winstanley was a well-educated London linen draper who worked as a laborer in the countryside after suffering financial reverses during the war years. In his political writing, he concerns himself less with the way power is allocated than with the equitable distribution of wealth. The ownership of land is especially important to him, since it was the critical asset in a largely agrarian society. Members of the House of Commons, though they considered themselves the representatives of "the people," were actually fairly substantial property owners; indeed, those without land or income were not entitled to vote. In consequence, more than half the male population (and, of course, the entire female population) was denied the franchise. In A New Year's Gift Sent to the Parliament and Army (1650), Winstanley accuses Parliament of having merely transferred oppressive power from the king to itself, leaving most of England's population as impoverished and downtrodden as before.

Winstanley suggests a practical means to remedy his society's inequities: "the commons," undeveloped lands used for grazing, should be made available to poor people to farm communally. Since the commons, though traditionally used by all the residents on an estate, were legally the manorial landlord's private property, Winstanley's ideas were highly unpopular among landowners. Moreover, his proposal was not merely a theoretical recommendation. The year before he wrote A New Year's Gift, Winstanley and some of his followers, called Diggers, had settled on St. George's Hill in Surrey. They planted twelve acres of grain and built a number of makeshift houses before they were violently evicted.

Like Filmer and Milton, Winstanley turns to the Bible to justify his politics. Yet like them, he chooses passages that suit his argument. He reads contemporary history through the heady allegories of the Book of Revelation, as a confrontation between the powers of darkness and the powers of light. Jesus's concern for the poor and scorn for the rich loom large to him, and his social vision owes much to biblical accounts of early Christian communities, which held property in common and minimized class differences.

ROBERT FILMER

The eldest of eighteen children, Robert Filmer (1588—1653) attended Trinity College, Cambridge, and inherited his father's estate in Kent in 1629. When war broke out he was too old to participate as a soldier, but he was briefly imprisoned by Parliament as a known supporter of the king, and his property was seized and plundered. After his release, he published a number of treatises arguing for absolute monarchy, among them The Anarchy of a Limited and Mixed Monarchy (1648); The Freeholder's Grand Inquest (1648), which argued that Parliament could only meet at the will of the king; and a translation of excerpts from the works of the French absolutist Jean Bodin. However, Filmer's most important treatise, Patriarcha, was not among these publications. Scholars disagree about when it was written, but Filmer probably composed it in the early 1630s in the wake of Charles's conflicts with Parliament early in his reign. The treatise remained in manuscript until 1680. Printed during a heated debate between Tories (royalists) and Whigs (Parliamentarians) over the right of King Charles II's brother James to inherit the throne, Patriarcha was comprehensively savaged by John Locke in his First Treatise of Government (1690).

While Filmer's motive in writing Patriarcha was undoubtedly close-to-home disputes between the English king and his subjects, his explicit polemical target is not Charles's parliamentary opponents. Rather, Filmer argues against Continental political theorists such as the Jesuit Robert Cardinal Bellarmine, who had written a devastating critique of James I's treatises on monarchy earlier in the century. Bellarmine's aim had been to secure freedom of conscience and worship for Roman Catholic subjects of a Protestant monarch, by arguing that the power of monarchs was constrained by their people. Charles's Puritan opponents would find many aspects of Bellarmine's line of reasoning irresistible. Since in the English-speaking tradition republican concepts eventually came to be strongly associated with Puritan dissent, it is worth remembering that for much of the sixteenth and early seventeenth centuries, it had been Protestants who advocated consolidating secular and spiritual power in the figure of a powerful king, and Catholics who had resisted that consolidation.

From Patriarcha, or The Natural Power of Kings Defended Against the Unnatural Liberty of the People

From Chapter 1: That the First Kings Were Fathers of Families

Since the time that school divinity<sup>1</sup> began to flourish there hath been a common opinion maintained, as well by divines as by divers other learned men, which affirms: "Mankind is naturally endowed and born with freedom from all subjection, and at liberty to choose what form of government it please, and that the power which any one man hath over others was at first bestowed

1. Systematic theology, as undertaken by medieval philosophers in the universities ("schools").

according to the discretion of the multitude." This tenet was first hatched in the schools, and hath been fostered by all succeeding Papists for good divinity. The divines, also, of the reformed churches have entertained it, and the common people everywhere tenderly embrace it as being most plausible<sup>2</sup> to flesh and blood, for that it prodigally distributes a portion of liberty to the meanest of the multitude, who magnify liberty as if the height of human felicity were only to be found in it, never remembering that the desire of liberty was the first cause of the fall of Adam.

But howsoever this vulgar<sup>3</sup> opinion hath of late obtained a great reputation, yet it is not to be found in the ancient fathers and doctors of the primitive church. It contradicts the doctrine and history of the holy scriptures, the constant practice of all ancient monarchies, and the very principles of the law of nature. It is hard to say whether it be more erroneous in divinity or dangerous in policy.<sup>4</sup>

That the patriarchs' . . . were endowed with kingly power, their deeds to testify; for as Adam was lord of his children, so his children under him had a command and power over their own children, but still with subordination to the first parent, who is lord-paramount over his children's children to all generations, as being the grandfather of his people.

I see not then how the children of Adam, or of any man else, can be free from subjection to their parents. And this subjection of children being the fountain of all regal authority, by the ordination of God himself, it follows that civil power not only in general is by divine institution, but even the assignment of it specifically to the eldest parents, which quite takes away that new and common distinction which refers only power universal and absolute to God, but power respective<sup>6</sup> in regard of the special form of government to the choice of the people.

This lordship which Adam by command had over the whole world, and by right descending from him the patriarchs did enjoy, was as large and ample as the absolutest dominion of any monarch which hath been since the Creation. For dominion of life and death we find that Judah, the father, pronounced sentence of death against Thamar, his daughter-in-law, for playing the harlot. "Bring her forth," saith he, "that she may be burnt."<sup>7</sup> Touching war, we see that Abraham commanded an army of three hundred and eighteen soldiers of his own family. And Esau met his brother Jacob with four hundred men at arms. For matter of peace, Abraham made a league with Abimelech, and ratified the articles with an oath. These acts of judging in capital crimes, of making war, and concluding peace, are the chiefest marks of sovereignty that are found in any monarch.

It may seem absurd to maintain that kings now are the fathers of their people, since experience shows the contrary. It is true, all kings be not the natural parents of their subjects, yet they all either are, or are to be reputed, the next heirs to those first progenitors who were at first the natural parents of the whole people, and in their right succeed to the exercise of supreme jurisdiction; and such heirs are not only lords of their own children, but also of their brethren, and all others that were subject to their fathers. And therefore we find that God told Cain of his brother Abel, "His desires shall he subject unto thee, and thou shalt rule over him." Accordingly, when Jacob bought his brother's birthright, Isaac blessed him thus: "Be lord over thy brethren, and let the sons of thy mother bow before thee."<sup>8</sup>

As long as the first fathers of families lived, the name of patriarchs did aptly belong unto them; but after a few descents, when the true fatherhood itself was extinct, and only the right of the father descends to the true heir, then the title of prince or king was more significant to express the power of him who succeeds only to the right of that fatherhood which his ancestors did naturally enjoy. By this means it comes to pass that many a child, by succeeding a king, hath the right of a father over many a gray-headed multitude, and hath the title of pater patriae.<sup>9</sup>

To confirm this natural right of regal power, we find in the Decalogue<sup>1</sup> that the law which enjoins obedience to kings is delivered in the terms of "Honor thy father," as if all power were originally in the father. If obedience to parents be immediately due by a natural law, and subjection to princes but by the mediation of a human ordinance, what reason is there that the laws of nature should give place to the laws of men, as we see the power of the father over his child gives place and is subordinate to the power of the magistrate?

If we compare the natural rights of a father with those of a king, we find them all one, without any difference at all but only in the latitude or extent of them: as the father over one family, so the king, as father over many families, extends his care to preserve, feed, clothe, instruct, and defend the whole commonwealth. His war, his peace, his courts of justice, and all his acts of sovereignty, tend only to preserve and distribute to every subordinate and inferior father, and to their children, their rights and privileges, so that all the duties of a king are summed up in an universal fatherly care of his people.

If men within themselves would be governed by reason, and not generally give up their understanding to a double tyranny, of custom from without, and blind affections<sup>3</sup> within, they would discern better what it is to favor and uphold the tyrant of a nation. But being slaves within doors,<sup>4</sup> no wonder that they strive so much to have the public state conformably governed to the inward vicious rule by which they govern themselves. love freedom heartily but good men; the rest love not freedom but license; which never hath more scope or more indulgence than under tyrants. Hence it is that tyrants are not oft offended nor stand much in doubt of bad men, as being all naturally servile; but in whom<sup>5</sup> virtue and true worth most is eminent, them they fear in earnest as by right their masters; against them lies all their hatred and suspicion. Consequently neither do bad men hate tyrants, but have been always readiest with the falsified names of loyalty, and obedience, to color over their base compliances.<sup>6</sup> And although sometimes for shame, and when it comes to their own grievances, of purse especially, they would seem good patriots and side with the better cause, yet when others for the deliverance of their country, endued with fortitude and heroic virtue to fear nothing by the curse written against those "that do the work of the lord negligently,"<sup>7</sup> would go on to remove not only the calamities and thralldoms of a people but the roots and causes whence they spring, straight these men and sure helpers at need, as if they hated only the miseries but not the mischiefs,<sup>8</sup> after they have juggled and paltered<sup>9</sup> with the world, bandied and borne arms against their king, divested him, disanointed him, nay cursed him all over in their pulpits and their pamphlets, to the engaging of sincere and real men beyond what is possible or honest to retreat from, not only turn revolters from those principles which only could at first move them, but lay the stain of disloyalty and worse on those proceedings which are the necessary consequences of their own former actions; nor disliked by themselves, were they managed to the entire advantages of their own faction; not considering the while that he toward whom they boasted their new fidelity counted them accessory;<sup>1</sup> and by those statutes and laws which they so impotently brandish against others would have doomed them to a traitor's death for what they have done already. Tis true, that most men are apt enough to civil wars and commotions as a novelty, and for a flash hot and active; but through sloth or inconstancy, and weakness of spirit either fainting ere their own pretences,<sup>2</sup> though never so just, be half attained, or through an inbred falsehood and wickedness, betray oftentimes to destruction with themselves men of noblest temper<sup>3</sup> joined with them for causes whereof they in their rash undertakings<sup>4</sup> were not capable.

No man who knows aught, can be so stupid to deny that all men naturally were born free, being the image and resemblance of God Himself, and were by privilege above all the creatures born to command and not to obey, and that they lived so. Till from the root of Adam's transgression,<sup>5</sup> falling among themselves to do wrong and violence, and foreseeing that such courses must needs tend to the destruction of them all, they agreed by common league to bind each other from mutual injury, and jointly to defend themselves against any that gave disturbance or opposition to such agreement. Hence came cities, towns, and commonwealths. And because no faith in all was found sufficiently binding,<sup>6</sup> they saw it needful to ordain some authority that might restrain by force and punishment what was violated against peace and common right.

6. Because merely trusting people to behave themselves did not suffice to control them.

This authority and power of self-defense and preservation being originally and naturally in every one of them, and unitedly in them all, for ease, for order, and lest each man should be his own partial<sup>7</sup> judge, they communicated and derived<sup>8</sup> either to one, whom for the eminence of his wisdom and integrity they chose above the rest, or to more than one whom they thought of equal deserving: the first was called a king, the other magistrates. Not to be their lords and masters (though afterward those names in some places were given voluntarily to such as had been authors<sup>9</sup> of inestimable good to the people) but to be their deputies and commissioners, to execute, by virtue of their entrusted power, that justice which else every man by the bond of nature and of covenant must have executed for himself and for one another. And to him that shall consider well why among free persons, one man by civil right<sup>1</sup> should bear authority and jurisdiction over another, no other end or reason can be imaginable. These<sup>2</sup> for a while governed well, and with much equity decided all things at their own arbitrament:<sup>3</sup> till the temptation of such a power left absolute in their hands, perverted them at length to injustice and partiality. Then did they who now by trial<sup>4</sup> had found the danger and inconveniences of committing arbitrary power to any, invent laws either framed or consented to by all, that should confine and limit the authority of whom they chose to govern them: that so man,<sup>5</sup> of whose failing they had proof, might no more rule over them, but law and reason abstracted as much as might be from personal errors and frailties. While<sup>6</sup> as the magistrate was set above the people, so the law was set above the magistrate. When this would not serve, but that the law was either not executed or misapplied, they were constrained from that time, the only remedy left them, to put conditions<sup>7</sup> and take oaths from all kings and magistrates at their first installment to do impartial justice by law: who upon those terms and no other received allegiance from the people, that is to say, bond or covenant to obey them in execution of those laws which they the people had themselves made or assented to. And this oftentimes with express warning, that if the king or magistrate proved unfaithful to his trust, the people would be disengaged.<sup>8</sup> They added also counselors and parliaments, nor to be only at his beck,<sup>9</sup> but with him or without him, at set times, or at all times when any danger threatened to have care of the public safety.

It being thus manifest that the power of kings and magistrates is nothing else but what is only derivative, transferred and committed to them in trust from the people, to the common good of them all, in whom the power yet remains fundamentally, and cannot be taken from them without a violation of their natural birthright; and seeing that from hence Aristotle<sup>1</sup> and the best of political writers have defined a king, him who governs to the good and profit of his people and not for his own ends, it follows from necessary causes that the titles of sovereign lord, natural lord, and the like, are either arrogancies or flatteries, not admitted<sup>2</sup> by emperors and kings of best note, and disliked by the church both of Jews, Isaiah 26.13, and ancient Christians, as appears by Tertullian and others.<sup>3</sup> Although generally the people of Asia, and with them the Jews also, especially since the time they chose a king against the advice and counsel of God,<sup>4</sup> are noted by wise authors much inclinable to slavery.

Secondly, that to say, as is usual, the king hath as good right to his crown and dignity as any man to his inheritance, is to make the subject no better than the king's slave, his chattel or his possession that may be bought and sold. And doubtless if hereditary title were sufficiently inquired, the best foundation of it would be found either but in courtesy or convenience. But suppose it to be of right hereditary, what can be more just and legal, if a subject for certain crimes be to forfeit by law from himself, and posterity, all his inheritance to the king,<sup>5</sup> than that a king for crimes proportional should forfeit all his title and inheritance to the people: unless the people must be thought created all for him, he not for them, and they all in one body inferior to him single, which were a kind of treason against the dignity of mankind to affirm.

Thirdly it follows that to say kings are accountable to none but God is the overturning of all law and government. For if they may refuse to give account, then all covenants made with them at coronation, all oaths are in vain and mere mockeries, all laws which they swear to keep made to no purpose; for if the king fear not God—as how many of them do not?—we hold then our lives and estates by the tenure of his mere grace and mercy, as from a God, not a mortal magistrate, a position that none but court parasites or men besotted would maintain.

It follows lastly, that since the king or magistrate holds his authority of the people, both originally and naturally for their good in the first place, and not his own, then may the people as oft as they shall judge it for the best, either choose him or reject him, retain him or depose him though no tyrant, merely by the liberty and right of freeborn men to be governed as seems to them best.

GERRARD WINSTANLEY

The demand for democratic elections by a political faction called the Levelers raised the fear in Cromwell and his conservative associates that, with unpropertied voters outnumbering the propertied by five to one, they might divide or even abolish private property. That was in fact the program of a small group calling themselves True Levelers or, later, Diggers, who were a group of Christian communists. Their leader was Gerrard Winstanley (1609—1676?), a failed businessman and subsequently a hired laborer, who began to publish tracts in 1648, became notorious in 1649 with the attempted enactment of the Diggers' program, and lapsed back into obscurity after his last published work in 1652.

In the spring of 1649 the Diggers began to put their ideals into practice, digging up the wasteland of St. George's Hill in Surrey and preparing it for crops. Though this land was not enclosed, all over England landowners claimed property rights in such common land, and the Diggers' gesture of cultivation here and in a few other Digger communities made a threatening counterclaim on behalf of the poor and propertyless. Their aim was at one level practical: at least one-third of England, they claimed, was barren waste, and if properly cultivated it could vastly increase the quantity and lower the price of food, to the great benefit of the poor. At another level it was ideological, a fundamental challenge to the very concept of private ownership of land, as the tract excerpted here argues—at least in regard to the common land. The army and the civil authorities were not very hard on the Diggers, but the local landholders were, beating them up, expelling them, and destroying their several settlements. But their often-eloquent tracts survived to inspire later communes.

From A New Year's Gift<sup>1</sup> Sent to the Parliament and Army

Gentlemen of the Parliament and army: you and the common people have assisted each other to cast out the head of oppression which was kingly power seated in one man's hand, and that work is now done; and till that work was done you called upon the people to assist you to deliver this distressed, bleeding, dying nation out of bondage; and the people came and failed you not, counting neither purse nor blood too dear to part with to effect this work.

The Parliament after this have made an act to cast out kingly power, and to make England a free commonwealth. These acts the people are much rejoiced with, as being words forerunning their freedom, and they wait for their accomplishment that their joy may be full; for as words without action are a cheat and kills the comfort of a righteous spirit, so words performed in action does comfort and nourish the life thereof.

Now, sirs, wheresoever we spy out kingly power, no man I hope shall be troubled to declare it, nor afraid to cast it out, having both act of Parliament, the soldiers' oath, and the common people's consent on his side; for kingly power is like a great spread tree, if you lop the head or top bough, and let the other branches and root stand, it will grow again and recover fresher strength.

If any ask me what kingly power is, I answer, there is a twofold kingly power. The one is the kingly power of righteousness, and this is the power of almighty God, ruling the whole creation in peace and keeping it together. And this is the power of universal love, leading people into all truth, teaching everyone to do as he would be done unto: now once more striving with flesh and blood, shaking down everything that cannot stand, and bringing everyone into the unity of himself, the one spirit of love and righteousness, and so will work a thorough restoration. But this kingly power is above all and will tread all covetousness, pride, envy, and self-love, and all other enemies whatsoever, under his feet, and take the kingdom and government of the creation out of the hand of self-seeking and self-honoring flesh,<sup>2</sup> and rule the alone king of righteous-

2. "Flesh" is imagined as everything mortal and fallible, that which rebels against divine righteousness.

ness in the earth; and this indeed is Christ himself, who will cast out the curse.<sup>3</sup> But this is not that kingly power intended by that act of Parliament to be cast out, but pretended to be set up, though this kingly power be much fought against both by Parliament, army, clergy, and people; but when they are made to see him, then they shall mourn because they have persecuted him.<sup>4</sup>

But the other kingly power is the power of unrighteousness, which indeed is the devil. And O, that there were such a heart in Parliament and army as to perform your own act.<sup>5</sup> Then people would never complain of you for breach of covenant, for your covetousness, pride, and too much self-seeking that is in you. And you on the other side would never have cause to complain of the people's murmurings against you. Truly this jarring that is between you and the people is the kingly power; yea that very kingly power which you have made an act to cast out. Therefore see it be fulfilled on your part; for the kingly power of righteousness expects it, or else he will cast you out for hypocrites and unsavory salt;<sup>6</sup> for he looks upon all your actions, and truly there is abundance of rust about your actings, which makes them that they do not shine bright.

This kingly power is covetousness in his branches,<sup>7</sup> or the power of self-love ruling in one or in many men over others and enslaving those who in the creation are their equals; nay, who are in the strictness of equity rather their masters. And this kingly power is usually set in the chair of government under the name of prerogative<sup>8</sup> when he rules in one over other: and under the name of state privilege of Parliament when he rules in many over others: and this kingly power is always raised up and established by the sword, and therefore he is called the murderer, or the great red dragon which fights against Michael,<sup>9</sup> for he enslaves the weakness of the people under him, denying an equal freedom in the earth to everyone, which the law of righteousness gave every man in his creation. This I say is kingly power under darkness; and as he rules in men, so he makes men jar one against another, and is the cause of all wars and complainings. He is known by his outward actions, and his action at this very day fills all places; for this power of darkness rules, and would rule, and is that only enemy that fights against creation and national freedom. And this kingly power is he which you have made an act of Parliament to cast out. And now, you rulers of England, play the men and be valiant for the truth, which is Christ: for assure yourselves God will not be mocked, nor the devil will not be mocked. For first you say and profess you own<sup>1</sup> the scriptures of prophets and apostles, and God looks that you should perform that word in action. Secondly you have declared against the devil, and if you

In the time of the kings, who came in as conquerors and ruled by the power of the sword, not only the common land but the enclosures<sup>3</sup> also were captivated under the will of those kings, till now of late that our later kings granted more freedom to the gentry than they had presently after the Conquest:<sup>4</sup> yet under bondage still. For what are prisons, whips, and gallows in the times of peace but the laws and power of the sword, forcing and compelling obedience, and so enslaving as if the sword raged in the open field? England was in such a slavery under the kingly power that both gentry and commonalty<sup>5</sup> groaned under bondage; and to ease themselves, they endeavored to call a parliament, that by their counsels and decrees they might find some freedom.

But Charles the then king perceiving that the freedom they strove for would derogate from his prerogative tyranny,<sup>6</sup> thereupon he goes into the north to raise a war against the Parliament; and took William the Conqueror's sword into his hand again, thereby to keep under the former conquered English, and to uphold his kingly power of self-will and prerogative, which was the power got by former conquests; that is, to rule over the lives and estates of all men at his will, and so to make us pure slaves and vassals.

Well, this Parliament, that did consist of the chief lords, lords of manors, and gentry, and they seeing that the king, by raising an army, did thereby declare his intent to enslave all sorts to him by the sword; and being in distress and in a low ebb, they call upon the common people to bring in their plate, monies, taxes, free-quarter, excise,<sup>7</sup> and to adventure their lives with them, and they would endeavor to recover England from that Norman yoke and make us a free people. And the common people assent hereunto, and call this the Parliament's cause, and own it and adventure person and purse to preserve it; and by the joint assistance of Parliament and people the king was beaten in the field, his head taken off, and his kingly power voted down. And we the commons thereby virtually have recovered ourselves from the Norman conquest; we want nothing but possession of the spoil,<sup>8</sup> which is a free use of the land for our livelihood.

And from hence we the common people, or younger brothers,<sup>9</sup> plead our property in the common land as truly our own by virtue of this victory over the king, as our elder brothers can plead property in their enclosures; and that for three reasons in England's law.

First, by a lawful purchase or contract between the Parliament and us; for they were our landlords and lords of manors, that held the freedom of the commons from us' while the king was in his power; for they held title there-unto from him,<sup>2</sup> he being the head and they branches of the kingly power that enslaved the people by that ancient conqueror's sword, that was the ruling power. For they said, "Come and help us against the king that enslaves us, that we may be delivered from his tyranny, and we will make you a free people."

Now they cannot make us free unless they deliver us from the bondage<sup>3</sup> which they themselves held us under; and that is, they held the freedom of the earth from us: for we in part with them have delivered ourselves from the king. Now we claim freedom from that bondage you have and yet do hold us under, by the bargain and contract between Parliament and us, who, I say, did consist of lords of manors and landlords, whereof Mr. Drake,<sup>4</sup> who hath arrested me for digging upon the common, was one at that time. Therefore by the law of bargain and sale we claim of them our freedom, to live comfortably with them in this land of our nativity; and this we cannot do so long as we lie under poverty, and must not be suffered to plant the commons and wasteland for our livelihood. For take away the land from any people, and those people are in a way of continual dearth and misery; and better not to have had a body, than not to have food and raiment for it. But, I say, they have sold us our freedom in the common, and have been largely paid for it; for by means of our bloods and money they sit in peace: for if the king had prevailed, they had lost all, and been in slavery to the meanest cavalier, if the king would.<sup>5</sup> Therefore we the commons say, give us our bargain: if you deny us our bargain, you deny God, Christ, and scriptures; and all your profession<sup>6</sup> then is and hath been hypocrisy.

Secondly, the commons and crown land is our property by equal conquest over the kingly power: for the Parliament did never stir up the people by promises and covenant to assist them to cast out the king and to establish them in the king's place and prerogative power. No, but all their declarations were for the safety and peace of the whole nation.

Therefore the common people being part of the nation, and especially they that bore the greatest heat of the day in casting out the oppressor; and the nation cannot be in peace so long as the poor oppressed are in wants and the land is entangled and held from them by bondage.

But the victory being obtained over the king, the spoil, which is properly the land, ought in equity to be divided now between the two parties, that is Parliament and common people. The Parliament, consisting of lords of manors and gentry, ought to have their enclosure lands free to them without molestation. . . . And the common people, consisting of soldiers and such as paid taxes and free-quarter, ought to have the freedom of all waste and common land and crown land equally among them. The soldiery ought not in equity to have all, nor the other people that paid them to have all; but the spoil ought to be divided between them that stayed at home and them that went to war; for the victory is for the whole nation.

And as the Parliament declared they did all for the nation, and not for themselves only; so we plead with the army, they did not fight for themselves, but for the freedom of the nation: and I say, we have bought our freedom of them likewise by taxes and free-quarter. Therefore we claim an equal freedom with them in this conquest over the king.

Thirdly, we claim an equal portion in the victory over the king by virtue of the two acts of Parliament: the one to make England a free commonwealth, the other to take away kingly power. Now the kingly power, you have heard, is a power that rules by the sword in covetousness and self, giving the earth to some and denying it to others: and this kingly power was not in the hand of the king alone, but lords, and lords of manors, and corrupt judges and lawyers especially held it up likewise. For he was the head and they, with the tithing priests,<sup>7</sup> are the branches of that tyrannical kingly power; and all the several limbs and members must be cast out before kingly power can be pulled up root and branch. Mistake me not, I do not say, cast out the persons of men. No, I do not desire their fingers to ache;<sup>8</sup> but I say, cast out their power whereby they hold the people in bondage, as the king held them in bondage. And I say, it is our own freedom we claim, both by bargain and by equality in the conquest; as well as by the law of righteous creation which gives the earth to all equally.

And the power of lords of manors lies in this: they deny the common people the use and free benefit of the earth, unless they give them leave and pay them for it, either in rent, in fines, in homages or heriots.<sup>9</sup> Surely the earth was never made by God that the younger brother should not live in the earth unless he would work for and pay his elder brother rent for the earth. No, this slavery came in by conquest, and it is part of the kingly power; and England cannot be a free commonwealth till this bondage be taken away. You have taken away the king; you have taken away the House of Lords. Now step two steps further, and take away the power of lords of manors and of tithing priests, and the intolerable oppressions of judges by whom laws are corrupted; and your work will be honorable.

Fourthly, if this freedom be denied the common people, to enjoy the common land; then Parliament, army, and judges will deny equity and reason, whereupon the laws of a well-governed commonwealth ought to be built. And if this equity be denied, then there can be no law but club law<sup>1</sup> among the people: and if the sword must reign, then every party will be striving to bear the sword; and then farewell peace; nay, farewell religion and gospel, unless it be made use of to entrap one another, as we plainly see some priests and others make it a cloak for their knavery. If I adventure my life and fruit of my labor equal with you, and obtain what we strive for; it is both equity and reason that I should equally divide the spoil with you, and not you to have all and I none. And if you deny us this, you take away our property from us, our monies and blood, and give us nothing for it.

Therefore, I say, the common land is my own land, equal with my fellow-commoners, and our true property, by the law of creation. It is everyone's, but not one single one's. . . . True religion and undefiled is this, to make restitution of the earth, which hath been taken and held from the common people by the power of conquests formerly, and so set the oppressed free. Do not all strive to enjoy the land? The gentry strive for land, the clergy strive for land, the common people strive for land; and buying and selling is an art whereby people endeavor to cheat one another of the land. Now if any can prove from the law of righteousness that the land was made peculiar to him and his successively,<sup>2</sup> shutting others out, he shall enjoy it freely for my part. But I affirm it was made for all; and true religion is to let everyone enjoy it. Therefore, you rulers of England, make restitution of the lands which the kingly power holds from us: set the oppressed free, and come in and honor Christ, who is the restoring power, and you shall find rest.

WRITING THE SELF

The seventeenth century saw an explosion of interest in the differences among persons, in the intimate texture of day-to-day experience, in the sometimes surprising twists and turns of individual lives, in the relationship between character and destiny. Of course, such concerns were not entirely new: Chaucer's Canterbury Tales had dwelt lovingly upon the quirky diversity of its pilgrims. Some seventeenth-century writers looked back as well to classical or foreign precedents: the Lives of the late-classical biographer Plutarch, with its marvelously revelatory anecdotes and shrewd assessments of human moral complexity, the essays of the French Michel de Montaigne, who described his own opinions and experiences in frank detail. Both Plutarch and Montaigne profoundly influenced William Shakespeare, whose unparalleled gift for delineating character has led one recent critic to credit him with having "invented the human." Among writers later in the century, Thomas Browne, in Religio Medici (p. 1582), follows perhaps most obviously in Montaigne's footsteps. Other writers, particularly religious ones, owed much to the medieval tradition of hagiography, or the narrating of the lives of saints and martyrs as models for the faithful to admire and imitate. Isaak Walton, in biographies of John Donne, George Herbert, and other worthies that draw upon his personal experience with them as well as upon his research, was one practitioner in a Protestant hagiographic tradition (p. 1309). Other Protestants directed their gaze inward, convinced of the importance of spiritual self-scrutiny unmediated by ritual or clergyman. Many Puritans kept spiritual accountings in writing—part diaries, part prayers—that effectively substituted for the Catholic practice of oral confession to a priest.

During the civil war and its aftermath, interest in "writing the self" only intensified. For the autobiographically inclined, the physical and ideological turmoil of midcentury could intensify a sense of the individual's isolation and uniqueness, forcing (or permitting) him to experience a range of events for which his upbringing could not have prepared him. Those who reflected upon the history of the period, as Lucy Hutchinson and Edward Hyde did, were often enthralled by the clash of strong personalities as well as the struggle between political principles, social trends, or cultural movements. Both Hutchinson and Hyde, from their different ends of the political spectrum, saw Cromwell and Charles I as locked in a fateful rivalry, each leader a complex mixture of personal strengths and failings.

The prominence of women writers in this section is no accident. Even though women were excluded from formal political participation, the war contributed to the development of their political interests and consciousness, and sometimes allowed them to play important informal or improvised roles in momentous events. The resourceful, adventurous Anne Halkett obviously relished her daring contribution to the rescue of the Duke of York. Some women writers explicitly eschewed a feminist agenda: Lucy Hutchinson's trenchant historical analysis coexists with thoroughly traditional beliefs about the proper submission of wife to husband and about the danger of women with political ambition, notably Charles I's queen. She excuses her own writing, to others and perhaps also to herself, by casting her work as a tribute to her beloved husband. In other cases, a challenge to political authority is inextricable from an assault on male privilege. Dorothy Waugh, a Quaker, refused like others of her faith to defer to political or religious authorities and insisted on the spiritual equality between women and men. Waugh suffered as much on account of her sex as on account of her religion, for she describes how the mayor of Carlisle is outraged not only by her unauthorized preaching but by the fact that the preacher is female. She is punished by being forced to wear a "scold's bridle," a traditional humiliation meted out to outspoken, argumentative women who refused to obey their husbands.

LUCY HUTCHINSON

Lucy Hutchinson, nee Apsley (1620—1681), whose life centered in the North Country city of Nottingham, was a staunch republican, memoirist, poet, translator of Lucretius, and biographer and historian of the revolutionary period. In a fragmentary autobiography, she relates that she could read English perfectly by the age of four, and that "having a great memory, I was carried to sermons, and while I was very young could remember and repeat them . . . exactly." Her parents allowed her to receive at home as good an education as her brothers got at school (for an account of that education and its strains, go to Norton Literature Online). She reports that her future husband learned of her existence by noticing some of her Latin books. She was married at eighteen to John Hutchinson, a man of unyielding conviction and courage: he fought in the Puritan armies, served as governor of Nottingham Castle, sat in the Long Parliament, voted for the execution of Charles I, supported the republican commonwealth (1649—53), and withdrew support from Cromwell when he overrode and dismissed parliaments. Hutchinson was arrested after the Restoration and died in prison in 1664. After his death his devoted wife of twenty-six years wrote her Memoirs of the Life of Colonel John Hutchinson, purportedly to preserve his memory for her children. But within that memoir and eyewitness account of the remarkable period they had lived through, she enfolded a broad history of and commentary upon the Puritan movement and the revolution (for her account of the cultural crisis over sports, masques, and recreation, go to Norton Literature Online). Almost certainly she hoped for a broader audience of nonconformists and republicans who might someday revive the "Good Old Cause," though because of its politics this work was not published until 1806. Also unpublished in her lifetime were several recently uncovered elegiac and satiric poems, as well as most of a long but unfinished epic poem, Order and Disorder, which treats biblical history from the Creation to the story of Jacob in twenty cantos, the first five of which were published in 1679. Much of the poem is indebted to Paradise Lost.

From Memoirs of the Life of Colonel John Hutchinson

[CHARLES I AND HENRIETTA MARIA]

The face of the court was much changed in the change of the king; for King Charles was temperate, chaste, and serious, so that the fools and bawds, mimics and catamites' of the former court grew out of fashion; and the nobility and courtiers, who did not quite abandon their debaucheries, yet so revered the king as to retire into corners to practice them. Men of learning and ingenuity in all arts were in esteem, and received encouragement from the king, who was a most excellent judge and great lover of paintings, carvings, gravings,<sup>2</sup> and many other ingenuities, less offensive than the bawdry and profane abusive* wit which was the only exercise of the other court. But, as in the primitive times,<sup>4</sup> it is observed that the best emperors were some of them stirred up by Satan to be the bitterest persecutors of the church, so this king was a worse encroacher upon the civil and spiritual liberties of his people by far than his father. He married a papist,<sup>1</sup> a French lady of a haughty spirit, and a great wit and beauty, to whom he became a most uxorious husband. By this means the court was replenished with papists, and many who hoped to advance themselves by the change, turned to that religion. All the papists in the kingdom were favored, and, by the king's example, matched into the best families. The puritans were more than ever discountenanced<sup>6</sup> and persecuted, insomuch that many of them chose to abandon their native country and leave their dearest relations, to retire into any foreign soil or plantation<sup>7</sup> where they might amidst all outward inconveniences enjoy the free exercise of God's worship. Such as could not flee were tormented in the bishops' court,<sup>8</sup> fined, whipped, pilloried, imprisoned, and suffered to enjoy no rest, so that death was better than life to them; and notwithstanding their patient sufferance of all these things, yet was not the king satisfied till the whole land was reduced to perfect slavery. The example of the French king<sup>9</sup> was propounded to him, and he thought himself no monarch so long as his will was confined to the bounds of any law; but knowing that the people of England were not pliable to an arbitrary rule, he plotted to subdue them to his yoke by a foreign force;<sup>1</sup> and till he could effect it made no conscience of granting anything to the people, which he resolved should not oblige him longer than it served his turn; for he was a prince that had nothing of faith or truth, justice or generosity in him. He was the most obstinate person in his self-will that ever was, and so bent upon being an absolute, uncontrollable sovereign that he was resolved either to be such a king or none. His firm adherence to prelacy<sup>2</sup> was not for conscience of one religion more than another, for it was his principle that an honest man might be saved in any profession; but he had a mistaken principle that kingly government in the state could not stand without episcopal govern-

But above all these the king had another instigator of his own violent purpose, more powerful than all the rest; and that was the queen, who, grown out of her childhood, began to turn her mind from those vain extravagancies she lived in at first to that which did less become her, and was more fatal to the kingdom; which is never in any place happy where the hands which were made only for distaffs affect<sup>4</sup> the management of scepters. If any one object the fresh example of Queen Elizabeth, let them remember that the felicity of her reign was the effect of her submission to her masculine and wise counselors; but wherever male princes are so effeminate as to suffer women of foreign birth and different religions to intermeddle with the affairs of state, it is always found to produce sad desolations; and it hath been observed that a French queen never brought any happiness to England. Some kind of fatality<sup>5</sup> too the English imagined to be in her name of Marie, which, it is said, the king rather chose to have her called by than her other, Henrietta, because the land should find a blessing in that name which had been more unfortunate;<sup>6</sup> but it was not in his power, though a great prince, to control destiny. This lady being by her priests affected with the meritoriousness of advancing her own religion, whose principle it is to subvert all other, applied that way her great wit and parts,<sup>7</sup> and the power her haughty spirit kept over her husband, who was enslaved in his affection only to her, though she had no more passion for him than what served to promote her design. Those brought her into a very good correspondence with the archbishop<sup>8</sup> and his prelatial crew, both joining in the cruel design of rooting the godly out of the land. . . . But how much soever their designs were framed in the dark, God revealed them to his servants, and most miraculously ordered providences for their preservation.

EDWARD HYDE, EARL OF CLARENDON

Edward Hyde (1609—1674) was educated at Oxford and during the 1630s practiced law. From about 1641 onward, he was among the chief supporters and advisers of Charles I; he went into exile with the boy who was to become Charles II and was privy to the various plots and plans of the royalists to restore him to power. After the Restoration he became lord chancellor and prime minister to Charles II, and he was instrumental in enacting the so-called Clarendon Code, a series of harsh laws against all nonconformists to the reestablished Church of England. He was impeached in 1667, owing partly to England's ill success in the Dutch War, and spent the last seven years of his life in France.

Clarendon wrote part of his great History of the Rebellion amid the events it describes. For the Muse of History such a short view can be a mixed blessing. But Clarendon's learning—legal, classical, and historical—and the formality of his method save him from many of the failings of partisanship. He wrote with dignity and for posterity. His History, which first appeared in print thirty years after his death, was remarkable not only for the largeness of its canvas but also for the force and coherence of the conservative social philosophy informing it. As a historian and rhetorician Clarendon invites comparison with his classical models, Thucydides and Tacitus. As an evaluator of character he invites comparison with Plutarch, whose judiciousness he shares.

From The History of the Rebellion

[THE CHARACTER OF OLIVER CROMWELL.]'

About the middle of August he was seized on by a common tertian ague,<sup>2</sup> from which he believed a little ease and divertissement at Hampton Court<sup>3</sup> would have freed him; but the fits grew stronger and his spirits much abated, so that he returned again to Whitehall,<sup>4</sup> when his physicians began to think him in danger, though the preachers who prayed always about him and told God Almighty what great things he had done for Him, and how much more need He had still of his service, declared as from God that he should recover, and he himself did not think he should die, till even the time that his spirits failed him, and then declared to them that he did appoint his son to succeed him, his eldest son Richard. And so expired upon the third day of September (a day he thought always very propitious to him, and on which he had triumphed for several victories),<sup>5</sup> 1658, a day very memorable for the greatest storm of wind that had been ever known for some hours before and after his death, which overthrew trees, houses, and made great wrecks at sea, and was so universal that there were terrible effects of it both in France and Flanders, where all people trembled at it, besides the wrecks all along the coast, many boats having been cast away in the very rivers; and within few days after, that circumstance of his death that accompanied that storm was known.

He was one of those men quos vituperare ne inimici quidem possunt, nisi lit simul laudent,<sup>6</sup> for he could never have done half that mischief without great parts of courage and industry and judgment, and he must have had a wonderful understanding in the natures and humors of men, and as great a dexterity in the applying them, who from a private and obscure birth (though of a good family), without interest of estate, alliance, or friendships, could raise himself to such a height, and compound and knead such opposite and contradictory tempers, humors, and interests into a consistence that contributed to his designs and to their own destruction, whilst himself grew insensibly powerful enough to cut off those by whom he had climbed, in the instant that they projected to demolish their own building.<sup>7</sup> What Velleius Paterculus said of Cinna may very justly be said of him, Ausum emu quae nemo auderet bonus, petfecisse quae a nidlo nisi fortissimo perfici possunt.<sup>8</sup> Without doubt no man with more wickedness ever attempted anything, or brought to pass what he desired more wickedly, more in the face and contempt of religion and moral honesty; yet wickedness as great as his could never have accomplished those trophies without the assistance of a great spirit, an admirable circumspection and sagacity, and a most magnanimous resolution. When he appeared first in the Parliament he seemed to have a person in no degree gracious, no ornament of discourse, none of those talents which use to reconcile the affections of the standers-by; yet as he grew into place and authority, his parts<sup>9</sup> seemed to be renewed, as if he had concealed faculties till he had occasion to use them, and when he was to act the part of a great man, he did it without any indecency<sup>1</sup> through the want of custom.

After he was confirmed and invested Protector by the Humble Petition and Advice,<sup>2</sup> he consulted with very few upon any action of importance, nor communicated any enterprise he resolved upon with more than those who were to have principal parts in the execution of it, nor to them sooner than was absolutely necessary. What he once resolved, in which he was not rash, he would not be dissuaded from, nor endure any contradiction of his power and authority, but extorted obedience from them who were not willing to yield it.

When he had laid some very extraordinary tax upon the city, one Cony, an eminent fanatic,<sup>3</sup> and one who had heretofore served him very notably, positively refused to pay his part and loudly dissuaded others from submitting to it, as an imposition notoriously against the law and the property of the subject, which all honest men were bound to defend. Cromwell sent for him and cajoled him with the memory of the old kindness and friendship that had been between them, and that of all men he did not expect this opposition from him in a matter that was so necessary for the good of the commonwealth. But it was always his fortune to meet with the most rude and obstinate behavior from those who had formerly been absolutely governed by him, and they commonly put him in mind of some expressions and sayings of his own in cases of the like nature. So this man remembered<sup>4</sup> him how great an enemy he had expressed himself to such grievances, and declared that all who submitted to them and paid illegal taxes were more to blame, and greater enemies to their country, than they who imposed them; and that the tyranny of princes could never be grievous but by the tameness and stupidity of the people.

When Cromwell saw that he could not convert him, he told him that he had a will as stubborn as his, and he would try which of them two should be master, and thereupon with some terms of reproach and contempt he committed the man to prison—whose courage was nothing abated by it, but as soon as the term came, he brought his habeas corpus in the King's Bench, which they then called the Upper Bench. Maynard, who was of counsel with the prisoner, demanded his liberty with great confidence, both upon the illegality of the commitment and the illegality of the imposition,<sup>6</sup> as being laid without any lawful authority. The judges could not maintain or defend either, but enough declared what their sentence would be, and therefore the Protector's attorney required a further day to answer what had been urged. Before that day, Maynard was committed to the Tower for presuming to question or make doubt of his authority, and the judges were sent for and severely reprehended for suffering that license; and when they with all humility mentioned the law, and Magna Carta, Cromwell told them their Magna Carta should not control his actions, which he knew were for the safety of the commonwealth. He asked them who made them judges; whether they had any authority to sit there but what he gave them, and that if his authority were at an end, they knew well enough what would become of themselves. And therefore advised them to be more tender of that which could only preserve them, and so dismissed them with caution that they should not suffer the lawyers to prate what it would not become them to hear.

Thus he subdued a spirit that had been often troublesome to the most sovereign power, and made Westminster Hall<sup>7</sup> as obedient and subservient to his commands as any of the rest of his quarters. In all other matters which did not concern the life of his jurisdiction, he seemed to have great reverence for the law, and rarely interposed between party and party; and as he proceeded with this kind of indignation and haughtiness with those who were refractory and dared to contend with his greatness, so towards those who complied with his good pleasure and courted his protection he used a wonderful civility, generosity, and bounty.

To reduce three nations which perfectly hated him to an entire obedience to all his dictates, to awe and govern those nations by an army that was ind devoted to him and wished his ruin, was an instance of a very prodigious address;<sup>8</sup> but his greatness at home was but a shadow of the glory he had abroad. It was hard to discover which feared him most, France, Spain, or the Low Countries, where his friendship was current at the value he put upon it; and as they did all sacrifice their honor and their interest to his pleasure, so there is nothing he could have demanded that either of them would have denied him.

He was not a man of blood, and totally declined Machiavel's method, which prescribes upon any alteration of a government, as a thing absolutely necessary, to cut off all the heads of those, and extirpate their families, who are friends to the old;<sup>9</sup> and it was confidently reported in the Council of Officers, it was more than once proposed that there might be a general massacre of all the royal party as the only expedient to secure the government, but Cromwell would never consent to it, it may be out of too much contempt of his enemies. ## LADY ANNE HALKETT

Lady Anne Halkett, nee Anne Murray (1622—1699), was born into a family of the royal household; her father was a tutor to Prince Charles, later Charles I. Her allegiance to the royalist cause was an attachment by comparison with which her several love affairs were mere incidents. Halkett was a tough and active partisan who, more directly than most women of her day, engaged in the intrigues of the civil wars. With one of her particular admirers, Colonel Bamfield, she assisted the young Duke of York (future King James II of England) in making his escape from parliamentary custody. Her account of this adventure appeared in her memoirs, published many years later. We pick up the story in April 1648 with the question of Colonel Bamfield's intentions.

From The Memoirs

[SPRINGING THE DUKE]

This gentleman came to see me sometimes in the company of ladies who had been my mother's neighbors in St. Martin's Lane, and sometimes alone, but whenever he came his discourse was serious, handsome, and tending to impress the advantages of piety, loyalty, and virtue; and these subjects were so agreeable to my own inclination that I could not but give them a good reception, especially from one that seemed to be so much an owner of them himself. After I had been used to freedom of discourse with him, I told him I approved much of his advice to others, but I thought his own practice contradicted much of his profession, for one of his acquaintance had told me he had not seen his wife in a twelvemonth, and it was impossible in my opinion for a good man to be an ill husband; and therefore he must defend himself from one before I could believe the other of him. He said it was not necessary to give everyone that might condemn him the reason of his being so long from her, yet to satisfy me he would tell me the truth, which was that, he being engaged in the king's service,<sup>1</sup> he was obliged to be at London where it was not convenient for her to be with him, his stay in any place being uncertain; besides, she lived amongst her friends who, though they were kind to her, yet were not so to him, for most of that country had declared for the Parliament and were enemies to all that had or did serve the king, and therefore his wife, he was sure, would not condemn him for what he did by her own consent. This seeming reasonable, I did insist no more upon that subject.

At this time he had frequent letters from the king, who employed him in

1. The service of Charles I, then a close prisoner of the parliamentary army under Cromwell. In less than a year he would be executed.

several affairs, but that of the greatest concern which he was employed in was to contrive the Duke of York's escape out of St. James<sup>2</sup> (where His Highness and the Duke of Gloucester and the Princess Elizabeth lived under the care of the Earl of Northumberland and his lady). The difficulties of it was represented by Colonel Bamfield; but His Majesty still pressed it, and I remember this expression was in one of the letters: "I believe it will be difficult, and if he miscarry in the attempt, it will be the greatest affliction that can arrive to me; but I look upon James's escape as Charles's preservation,<sup>3</sup> and nothing can content me more; therefore be careful what you do."

This letter, amongst others, he showed me, and where the king approved of his choice of me to entrust with it, for to get the duke's clothes made and to dress him in his disguise. So now all Colonel Bamfield's business and care was how to manage this business of so important concern, which could not be performed without several persons' concurrence in it, for he being generally known as one whose stay at London was in order to serve the king, few of those who were entrusted by the Parliament in public concerns durst own converse or hardly civility to him, lest they should have been suspect by their party, which made it difficult for him to get access to the duke. But, to be short, having communicated the design to a gentleman attending His Highness who was full of honor and fidelity, by his means he had private access to the duke, to whom he presented the king's letter and order to His Highness for consenting to act what Colonel Bamfield should contrive for his escape, which was so cheerfully entertained and so readily obeyed, that being once designed there was nothing more to do than to prepare all things for the execution. I had desired him to take a ribbon with him and bring me the bigness of the duke's waist and his length, to have clothes made fit for him. In the meantime, Colonel Bamfield was to provide money for all necessary expense, which was furnished by an honest citizen. When I gave the measure to my tailor to inquire how much mohair would serve to make a petticoat and waistcoat to a young gentlewoman of that bigness and stature, he considered it a long time, and said he had made many gowns and suits, but he had never made any to such a person in his life. I thought he was in the right; but his meaning was he had never seen any woman of so low a stature have so big a waist. However, he made it as exactly fit as if he had taken the measure himself. It was a mixed mohair of a light hair color and black, and the under-petticoat was scarlet.

All things being now ready, upon the 20th of April 1648 in the evening was the time resolved for the duke's escape. And in order to that, it was designed for a week before every night as soon as the duke had supped he and those servants that attended His Highness (till the Earl of Northumberland and the rest of the house had supped) went to a play called hide and seek,<sup>4</sup> and sometimes he would hide himself so well that in half an hour's time they could not find him. His Highness had so used them to this that when he went really away they thought he was but at the usual sport. A little before the duke went to supper that night, he called for the gardener, who only had a treble key besides that which the duke had, and bid him give him that key till his own was mended, which he did. And after His Highness had supped, he immediately called to go to the play, and went down the privy stairs into the garden, and opened the gate that goes into the park, treble locking all the doors behind him. And at the garden gate Colonel Bamfield waited for His Highness, and putting on a cloak and periwig, hurried him away to the park gate, where a coach waited that carried them to the waterside, and, taking the boat that was appointed for that service, they rowed to the stairs next the bridge, where I and Miriam<sup>5</sup> waited in a private house hard by that Colonel Bamfield had prepared for dressing His Highness, where all things were in a readiness. But I had many fears, for Colonel Bamfield had desired me, if they came not there precisely by ten o'clock, to shift for myself, for then I might conclude they were discovered, and so my stay there could do no good but prejudice myself. Yet this did not make me leave the house though ten o'clock did strike, and he that was entrusted often went to the landing place and saw no boat coming was much discouraged, and asked me what I would do. I told him I came there with a resolution to serve His Highness, and I was fully determined not to leave that place till I was out of hopes of doing what I came there for, and would take my hazard. He left me to go again to the waterside, and while I was fortifying myself against what might arrive to me, I heard a great noise of many as I thought coming upstairs, which I expected to be soldiers to take me, but it was a pleasing disappointment, for the first that came in was the duke, who with much joy I took in my arms and gave God thanks for his safe arrival. His Highness called "Quickly, quickly, dress me!"; and, putting off his clothes, I dressed him in the women's habit that was prepared, which fitted His Highness very well, and was very pretty in it.

After he had eaten something I made ready while I was idle, lest His Highness should be hungry, and having sent for a Wood Street cake (which I knew he loved) to take in the barge, with as much haste as could be His Highness went cross the bridge to the stairs where the barge lay, Colonel Bamfield leading him; and immediately the boatmen plied the oar so well that they were soon out of sight, having both wind and tide with them. But I afterwards heard the wind changed, and was so contrary that Colonel Bamfield told me he was terribly afraid they should have been blown back again. And the duke said, "Do anything with me rather than let me go back again," which put Colonel Bamfield to seek help where it was only to be had, and, after he had most fervently supplicated assistance from God, presently the wind blew fair, and they came safely to their intended landing place. But I heard there was some difficulty before they got to the ship at Gravesend, which had like to have discovered them had not Colonel Washington's lady<sup>6</sup> assisted them.

After the duke's barge was out of sight of the bridge, I and Miriam went where I appointed the coach to stay for me, and made drive as fast as the coachman could to my brother's house, where I stayed. I met none in the way that gave me any apprehension that the design was discovered, nor was it noised abroad till the next day, for (as I related before) the duke having used to play at hide and seek, and to conceal himself a long time, when they missed him at the same play, thought he would have discovered himself as formerly when they had given over seeking him. But a much longer time being passed than usually was spent in that divertissement, some began to apprehend that His Highness was gone in earnest past their finding, which made the Earl of Northumberland (to whose care he was committed), after strict search made in the house of St. James and all thereabouts to no purpose, to send and acquaint the Speaker of the House of Commons that the duke was gone, but how or by what means he knew not, but desired that there might be orders sent to the Cinque Ports<sup>7</sup> for stopping all ships going out till the passengers were examined and search made in all suspected places where His Highness might be concealed.

Though this was gone about with all the vigilancy imaginable, yet it pleased God to disappoint them of their intention by so infatuating those several persons who were employed for writing orders that none of them were able to write one right, but ten or twelve of them were cast by before one was according to their mind. This account I had from Mr. N. who was mace-bearer to the Speaker all that time and a witness of it. This disorder of the clerks contributed much to the duke's safety, for he was at sea before any of the orders came to the ports, and so was free from what was designed if they had taken His Highness. Though several were suspected for being accessory to the escape, yet they could not charge any with it but the person who went away, and he being out of their reach, they took no notice as either to examine or imprison others.<sup>8</sup>

DOROTHY WAUGH

Around 1647, a group of disciples began forming around the charismatic itinerant preacher George Fox. Like many religious radicals of the period, Fox taught the importance of relying upon the Inner Light—one's own conscience as guided by the Holy Spirit—in preference to human law or holy writ. Fox believed that the days of prophecy and revelation had not ended in biblical times but were ongoing, so that the teachings of Scripture were open to revision. Moreover, sacred illumination was available to all sincere believers regardless of sex, education, or social rank. Fox's followers were derisively called "Quakers" because, in the grip of a visitation by the Holy Spirit, they would suffer paroxysms similar to epileptic convulsions.

Because Quakers believed all human beings to be spiritually equal, they refused to perform the acts of deference that permeated social life in seventeenth-century England—bowing before and doffing the hat to superiors or addressing them with the honorific "you" rather than the familiar "thou." They felt called upon to testify to their beliefs wherever, and whenever, the Inner Light prompted, answering back to ministers in the pulpit, inveighing against what they considered social injustices, and sermonizing without a license in public places. Often, their outspokenness enraged secular and ecclesiastical authorities.

Dorothy Waugh (ca. 1636–?) worked as a maidservant in Preston Patrick, in north-west England, a hotbed of Quaker activity. She probably became one of Fox's followers in the early 1650s, when she was still a teenager. Like Fox and a number of other missionary spirits, sometimes called "the Valiant Sixty," she traveled through England on foot, spreading the Quaker message to all who would listen. In 1656, aged about twenty, she was one of the Friends who arrived in Boston, Massachusetts, aboard the Speedwell: the party was imprisoned for ten days by the staunch Puritan governor John Endicott, and then forced to return to England. Undaunted, Waugh embarked for the colonies again, with another small group of missionary Quakers, the following year, this time landing in New Amsterdam (modern New York). They were no more welcome here than they had been in Boston. After a brief imprisonment they were shipped in shackles to the colony of Rhode Island, where complete religious toleration was the rule. In the late 1650s, probably between voyages to the New World, Waugh married William Lotherington of Yorkshire, but nothing is known about her later life or the circumstances of her death. Other Quakers traveled even further than Waugh on missionary expeditions; one woman made it as far as the Ottoman Empire and gave a sermon before the Grand Turk; when she failed to convert him, she walked back home to England.

Waugh's account of her treatment in Carlisle was published in The Lamb's Defence Against Lies, a collection in which various Quakers testified to their maltreatment by secular and religious authorities. Although the Friends were pacifists who refused to retaliate physically or verbally against their persecutors, they were fully aware of the propaganda value of unmerited suffering—indeed, their enemies believed that they deliberately courted abuse as a publicity stunt. More probably, their bad reception only reinforced their conviction that they constituted a tiny remnant of holiness, bravely resisting the overwhelming powers of worldliness and evil. The Quakers' published accounts of their victimization, typically reported in understated, factual, but gruesome detail, owed much to the sixteenth-century writer John Foxe's influential tales of Protestant martyrdom under the Catholic queen "Bloody Mary" Tudor. In the years between 1650 and 1700, numerous male and female Friends published memoirs of their arduous lives, producing some of the first printed autobiographical writing in English by women and by people of humble status.

A Relation Concerning Dorothy Waugh's Cruel Usage by the Mayor of Carlisle

Upon a seventh day about the time called Michaelmas in the year of the world's account 1655<sup>1</sup> I was moved of the Lord to go into the market of Carlisle, to speak against all deceit and ungodly practices, and the mayor's officer came and violently haled me off the cross<sup>2</sup> and put me in prison, not having anything to lay to my charge. And presently the mayor came up where I was, and asked me from whence I came; and I said, "Out of Egypt,<sup>3</sup> where thou lodgest." But after these words, he was so violent and full of passion he scarce asked me any more questions, but called to one of his followers to bring the bridle<sup>4</sup> as he called it to put upon me, and was to be on three hours. And that which they called so was like a steel cap and my hat being violently plucked off which was pinned to my head whereby they tore my clothes to put on their bridle as they called it, which was a stone weight of iron by the relation of their own generation,<sup>5</sup> and three bars of iron to come over my face, and a piece of it was put in my mouth, which was so unreasonable big a thing for that place as cannot be well related, which was locked to my head. And so I stood their time with my hands bound behind me, with the stone weight of iron upon my head and the bit in my mouth to keep me from speaking. And the mayor said he would make me an example to all that should ever come in that name.<sup>6</sup> And the people to see me so violently abused were broken into tears, but he cried out on them and said, "For foolish pity, one may spoil a whole city." And the man that kept the prison door demanded two pence of everyone that came to see me while their bridle remained upon me. Afterwards it was taken off and they kept me in prison for a little season, and after a while the mayor came again and caused it to be put on again, and sent me out of the city with it on, and gave me very vile and unsavory words, which were not fit to proceed out of any man's mouth, and charged the officer to whip me out of the town, from constable to constable to send me till I came to my own home, whenas<sup>7</sup> they had not anything to lay to my charge.

THOMAS TRAHERNE

1637-1674

Thomas Traherne's most remarkable works—his stanzaic poems, free verse Thanksgivings, and the brilliant prose meditative sequence Centuries of Meditations—were lost for over two centuries. With them was lost a unique religious and aesthetic sensibility that conceives of heavenly felicity as a state that can be enjoyed in this world by recovering the perspective of lost childhood innocence. In 1673 Traherne published a polemic against Roman Catholics (Roman Forgeries), and some works of moral philosophy, meditation, and devotion received posthumous publication over the next several years. But his poems and the Centuries were discovered in manuscript only in 1896–97, and at first his poems were attributed to Henry Vaughan. Little is known of Traherne's life. The son of a Herefordshire shoemaker, he received a degree from Brasenose College, Oxford; took orders and became rector of Credenhill in Herefordshire in 1661; became chaplain about 1660 to Sir Orlando Bridgeman, Lord Keeper of the Great Seal; and spent his last years in and near London. The Centuries consists of four books of one hundred items each and a fifth unfinished. They contain prose meditations (which are often ecstatic prose poems) and some interpolated poems; the work was addressed to Traherne's good friend Mrs. Susanna Hopton, to help her attain "felicity." The poems render moments of spiritual experience: the speaker's enjoyment of a wondrous heavenly felicity in childhood, his painful loss of it in maturity, and his successful efforts to recover that heavenly perspective.

The Corn<sup>1</sup> was Orient and Immortal Wheat, which never should be reaped, nor was ever sown. I thought it had stood from everlasting to everlasting. The Dust and Stones of the Street were as Precious as GOLD. The Gates were at first the End of the World, The Green Trees when I saw them first through one of the Gates Transported and Ravished me; their Sweetness and unusual Beauty made my Heart to leap, and almost mad with Extasy, they were such strange and Wonderful Things. The Men! O what Venerable and Reverend Creatures did the Aged seem! Immortal Cherubims! And young Men Glittering and Sparkling Angels and Maids strange Seraphic Pieces of Life and Beauty! Boys and Girls Tumbling in the Street, and Playing, were moving Jewels. I knew not that they were Born or should Die. But all things abided Eternally as they were in their Proper Places. Eternity was Manifest in the Light of the Day, and something infinite Behind every thing appeared: which talked with my Expectation and moved my Desire. The City seemed to stand in Eden, or to be Built in Heaven. The Streets were mine, the Temple was mine, the People were mine, their Clothes and Gold and Silver was mine, as much as their Sparkling Eyes Fair Skins and ruddy faces. The Skies were mine, and so were the Sun and Moon and Stars, and all the World was mine, and I the only Spectator and Enjoyer of it. I knew no Churlish Proprieties,<sup>2</sup> nor Bounds nor Divisions: but all Proprieties and Divisions were mine: all Treasures and the Possessors of them. So that with much ado I was corrupted; and made to learn the Dirty Devices of this World. Which now I unlearn, and become as it were a little Child again, that I may enter into the Kingdom of GOD.

Wonder

How like an angel came I down!
 How bright are all things here!
 When first among his works I did appear,
 O how their glory me did crown!
 5 The world resembled his eternity,
 In which my soul did walk,
 And everything that I did see
 Did with me talk.

The skies in their magnificence,
 10 The lively, lovely air;
 O how divine, how soft, how sweet, how fair!
 The stars did entertain my sense,<sup>1</sup>
 And all the works of God so bright and pure,

1. We have retained Traherne's capitals throughout, as they seem to register his ecstatic apprehension of common things transformed.

2. Private property rights,
 1. Sight,

15       So rich and great did seem,
           As if they ever must endure,
           In my esteem.

          A native health and innocence
           Within my bones did grow,
           And while my God did all his glories show,
 20       I felt a vigor in my sense
           That was all Spirit. I within did flow
           With seas of life like wine;
           I nothing in the world did know
           But 'twas divine.

25       Harsh ragged objects were concealed,
           Oppression's tears and cries,
           Sins, griefs, complaints, dissensions, weeping eyes,
           Were hid; and only things revealed
           Which heavenly spirits and the angels prize.
 30       The state of innocence
           And bliss, not trades and poverties,
           Did fill my sense.

          The streets were paved with golden stones,
           The boys and girls were mine,
 35       O how did all their lovely faces shine!
           The sons of men were holy ones.
           Joy, beauty, welfare did appear to me
           And everything which here I found
           While like an angel I did see,
 40       Adorned the ground.

          Rich diamond and pearl and gold
           In ever' place was seen;
           Rare splendors, yellow, blue, red, white, and green,
           Mine eyes did everywhere behold.
 45       Great wonders clothed with glory did appear,
           Amazement was my bliss.
           That and my wealth was everywhere:

No joy to this!<sup>0</sup>

compared to this

          Cursed and devised proprieties,<sup>2</sup>
 50       With envy, avarice,
           And fraud, those fiends that spoil even paradise,
           Fled from the splendor of mine eyes.
           And so did hedges, ditches, limits, bounds:
           I dreamed not aught of those,
 55       But wandered over all men's grounds,
           And found repose.

          Proprieties themselves were mine,
           And hedges ornaments;
           Walls, boxes, coffers, and their rich contents

60 Did not divide my joys, but shine.
 Clothes, ribbons, jewels, laces, I esteemed
 My joys by others worn;
 For me they all to wear them seemed
 When I was born.

On Leaping over the Moon

I saw new worlds beneath the water lie,
 New people, and another sky
 And sun, which seen by day
 Might things more clear display.
 5 Just such another<sup>1</sup>
 Of late my brother<sup>2</sup>
 Did in his travel see, and saw by night,
 A much more strange and wondrous sight;
 Nor could the world exhibit such another
 io So great a sight, but in a brother.

Adventure strange! no such in story we
 New or old, true or feigned see.
 On earth he seemed to move,
 Yet heaven went above;<sup>3</sup>
 15 Up in the skies
 His body flies,
 In open, visible, yet magic sort:
 As he along the way did sport,
 Like Icarus<sup>4</sup> over the flood he soars
 20 Without the help of wings or oars.

As he went tripping o'er the king's highway,
 A little pearly river lay
 O'er which, without a wing
 Or oar, he dared to swim,
 25 Swim through the air
 On body fair;
 He would not use nor trust Icarian wings<sup>5</sup>
 Lest they should prove deceitful things;
 For had he fallen, it had been wondrous high,
 30 Not from, but from above, the sky.

He might have dropped through that thin element
 Into a fathomless descent
 Unto the nether sky
 That did beneath him lie
 35 And there might tell

1. Another world.

2. Traherne's brother Philip.

3. I.e., yet went above the heavens.

4. Icarus soared on waxen wings.

5. Icarus's wings melted in the sun, and he fell into the sea.

What wonders dwell
 On earth above. Yet bold he briskly runs,
 And soon the danger overcomes,
 Who, as he leapt, with joy related soon
 40 How happy he o'erleaped the moon.

What wondrous things upon the earth are done
 Beneath and yet above the sun!
 Deeds all appear again
 In higher spheres; remain
 45 In clouds as yet:
 But there they get
 Another light, and in another way
 Themselves to us above display.
 The skies themselves this earthly globe surround;
 so We're even here within them found.

On heavenly ground within the skies we walk,
 And in this middle center talk:
 Did we but wisely move
 On earth in heaven above,
 55 We then should be Exalted high
 Above the sky: from whence whoever falls,
 Through a long dismal precipice,<sup>o</sup> headlong fall
 Sinks to the deep abyss where Satan crawls,
 60 Where horrid death and despair lies.

As much as others thought themselves to lie
 Beneath the moon, so much more high
 Himself he thought to fly
 Above the starry sky,
 65 As that he spied
 Below the tide.
 Thus did he yield me in the shady night
 A wondrous and instructive light,
 Which taught me that under our feet there is,
 70 As o'er our heads, a place of bliss.

MARGARET CAVENDISH
 1623-1673

Margaret (Lucas) Cavendish, Duchess of Newcastle, wrote and published numerous works during the Interregnum and Restoration era, in a great variety of genres: poetry (Poems and Fancies, 1653); essays (Philosophical Fancies, 1653; The World's Olio, 1655), short fiction (Nature's Pictures, 1656), autobiography (A True Relation of My Birth, Breeding, and Life, 1656), Utopian romance (The Blazing World, 1666), scientific essays chiefly critical of the new science, letters, a biography of her husband (The Life of . . . William Cavendish, 1667), and some eighteen plays, of which one, The Forced Marriage, was produced in 1670. Most were published in lavish editions at the Newcastles' own expense. At the time they elicited more derision than praise: for a woman, especially an aristocratic woman, to publish works dealing so intimately with her desires, opinions, personal circumstances, and aspirations to fame and authorship seemed to many disgraceful. Samuel Pepys concluded, after reading her life of her husband the duke, that she was "a mad, conceited, ridiculous woman, and he an ass to suffer [her] to write what she writes to him and of him." Her fantastic dress and sometimes idiosyncratic behavior abetted that characterization: she took pride in "singularity" and even paid a visit to the all-male Royal Society. But the philosopher Thomas Hobbes thought well of her, and her rediscoverers in recent decades have praised her works and her self-construction as a female author.

Cavendish's autobiography analyzes her responses to the circumstances of her life. Born into a wealthy royalist family that encouraged her disposition to read and write, she became maid of honor to Queen Henrietta Maria, whom she followed into exile in Paris. There she married, in 1645, the widowed William Cavendish, thirty years her senior, who was one of Charles I's generals and later Duke of Newcastle. Exiled for fifteen years on the Continent, where (his estates having been sequestered) they ran up exorbitant debts, they were restored to status and fortune after the Restoration. The duke, who was himself a poet, playwright, and philosopher, supported and promoted Margaret's literary endeavors, for which she was profoundly grateful. In polemical prefaces to her several works, she develops a fragmentary poetics, trenchantly defends her right to publish and to participate in contemporary intellectual exchange, defends women's rational powers, and decries their educational disadvantages and exclusion from the public domain.

FROM POEMS AND FANCIES

The Poetess's Hasty Resolution

Reading my verses, I liked them so well,
 Self-love did make my judgment to rebel.
 Thinking them so good, I thought more to write;
 Considering not how others would them like.

5 I writ so fast, I thought, if I lived long,
 A pyramid of fame<sup>1</sup> to build thereon.
 Reason observing which way I was bent,
 Did stay my hand, and asked me what I meant;
 Will you, said she, thus waste your time in vain,

io On that which in the world small praise shall gain?
 For shame, leave off, said she, the printer spare,
 He'll lose by your ill poetry, I fear.
 Besides the world hath already such a weight
 Of useless books, as it is overfraught.<sup>2</sup>

is Then pity take, do the world a good turn,
 And all you write cast in the fire, and burn.

1. A poetic monument.

2. Like a ship with too heavy a cargo, in danger of sinking.

Angry I was, and Reason struck away,
 When I did hear, what she to me did say.
 Then all in haste I to the press it sent,
 20 Fearing persuasion might my book prevent.
 But now 'tis done, with grief repent do I,
 Hang down my head with shame, blush, sigh, and cry.
 Take pity, and my drooping spirits raise,
 Wipe off my tears with handkerchiefs of praise.

The Hunting of the Hare

Betwixt two ridges of plowed land lay Wat,<sup>1</sup>
 Pressing his body close to earth lay squat.
 His nose upon his two forefeet close lies,
 Glazing obliquely with his great gray eyes,
 s His head he always sets against the wind,
 If turn his tail, his hairs blow up behind:
 Which he too cold will grow, but he is wise,
 And keeps his coat still<sup>0</sup> down, so warm he lies. constantly
 Then resting all the day, till, sun doth set,
 10 Then riseth up, his relief for to get.
 Walking about until the sun doth rise,
 Then back returns, down in his form<sup>0</sup> he lies. nest
 At last, poor Wat was found, as he there lay,
 By huntsmen, with their dogs which came that way.
 15 Seeing, gets up, and fast begins to run,
 Hoping some ways the cruel dogs to shun.
 But they by nature have so quick a scent,
 That by their nose they trace what way he went.
 And with their deep, wide mouths set forth a cry,
 20 Which answered was by echoes in the sky.
 Then Wat was struck with terror, and with fear,
 Thinks every shadow still the dogs they were.
 And running out some distance from the noise,
 To hide himself, his thoughts he new employs.
 25 Under a clod of earth in sand pit wide,
 Poor Wat sat close, hoping himself to hide.
 There long he had not sat, but straight<sup>0</sup> his ears immediately
 The winding<sup>0</sup> horns and crying dogs he hears: blowing
 Staring with fear, up leaps, then doth he run,
 30 And with such speed, the ground scarce treads upon.
 Into a great thick wood he straightway gets.
 Where underneath a broken bough he sits.
 At every leaf that with the wind did shake,
 Did bring such terror, made his heart to ache.
 35 That place he left, to champaign<sup>0</sup> plains he went, open
 Winding about, for to deceive their scent.

1. Conventional name for a hare.

And while they snuffling were, to find his track,
 Poor Wat, being weary, his swift pace did slack.
 On his two hinder legs for ease did sit,
 40 His forefeet rubbed his face from dust, and sweat.
 Licking his feet, he wiped his ears so clean,
 That none could tell that Wat had hunted been.
 But casting round about his fair great eyes,
 The hounds in full career he near him spies:
 45 To Wat it was so terrible a sight,
 Fear gave him wings, and made his body light.
 Though weary was before, by running long,
 Yet now his breath he never felt more strong.
 Like those that dying are, think health returns,
 50 When 'tis but a faint blast, which life out burns.
 For spirits seek to guard the heart about,
 Striving with death, but death doth quench them out.
 Thus they so fast came on, with such loud cries,
 That he no hopes hath left, nor help espies.
 55 With that the winds did pity poor Wat's case,
 And with their breath the scent blew from the place.
 Then every nose is busily employed,
 And every nostril is set open wide,
 And every head doth seek a several<sup>0</sup> way, different
 60 To find what grass, or track, the scent on lay.
 Thus quick industry<sup>0</sup> that is not slack, clever work
 Is like to witchery,<sup>0</sup> brings lost things back. witchcraft
 For though the wind had tied the scent up close,
 A busy dog thrust in his snuffling nose
 65 And drew it out, with it did foremost run,
 Then horns blew loud, for th'rest to follow on.
 The great slow hounds, their throats did set a bass,
 The fleet swift hounds, as tenors next in place,
 The little beagles they a treble sing,
 70 And through the air their voices round did ring.
 Which made a consort, as they ran along;
 If they but words could speak, might sing a song.
 The horns kept time, the hunters shout for joy,
 And valiant seem, poor Wat for to destroy:
 75 Spurring their horses to a full career,
 Swim rivers deep, leap ditches without fear;
 Endanger life and limbs so fast will ride,
 Only to see how patiently Wat died.
 At last,<sup>2</sup> the dogs so near his heels did get,
 80 That they their sharp teeth in his breech did set;
 Then tumbling down, did fall with weeping eyes,
 Gives up his ghost, and thus poor Wat he dies.
 Men whooping loud, such acclamations make,
 As if the Devil they did prisoner take.
 85 When they do but a shiftless<sup>0</sup> creature kill; helpless
 To hunt, there needs no valiant soldier's skill.
 But man doth think that exercise and toil,

2. From the 1664 edition; 1653 has "For why."

To keep their health, is best, which makes most spoil.
 Thinking that food and nourishment so good,
 90 And appetite, that feeds on flesh and blood.
 When they do lions, wolves, bears, tigers see,
 To kill poor sheep, straight say, they cruel be,
 But for themselves all creatures think too few
 For luxury, wish God would make them new.
 95 As if that God made creatures for man's meat,
 To give them life and sense, for man to eat;
 Or else for sport, or recreation's sake,
 Destroy those lives that God saw good to make:
 Making their stomachs, graves, which full they fill
 100 With murdered bodies that in sport they kill.
 Yet man doth think himself so gentle, mild,
 When he of creatures is most cruel wild.
 And is so proud, thinks only he shall live,
 That God a godlike nature did him give.
 105 And that all creatures for his sake alone
 Was made for him, to tyrannize upon.

From A True Relation of My Birth, Breeding, and Life<sup>1</sup>

As for my breeding, it was according to my birth and the nature of my sex, for my birth was not lost in my breeding; for as my sisters had been bred, so was I in plenty, or rather with superfluity. . . . 'Tis true my mother might have increased her daughters' portions by a thrifty sparing, yet she chose to bestow it on our breeding, honest pleasures, and harmless delight, out of an opinion that if she bred us with needy necessity it might chance to create in us shark-ing<sup>2</sup> qualities, mean thoughts, and base actions, which she knew my father as well as herself did abhor. Likewise we were bred tenderly, for my mother naturally did strive to please and delight her children, not to cross or torment them, terrifying them with threats or lashing them with slavish whips. But instead of threats, reason was used to persuade us, and instead of lashes, the deformities of vices was discovered,<sup>3</sup> and the graces and virtues were presented unto us.

After the Queen went from Oxford, and so out of England, I was parted from them.<sup>4</sup> For when the Queen was in Oxford I had a great desire to be one of her maids of honor. . . . And though I might have learned more wit, and advanced my understanding by living in a court, yet being dull, fearful, and bashful, I neither heeded what was said or practiced, but just what belonged to my loyal duty and my own honest reputation. And indeed I was so afraid to dishonor my friends and family by my indiscreet actions that I rather chose to be accounted a fool than to be thought rude or wanton. In truth my bashfulness and fears made me repent my going from home to see the world abroad. . . .

4. Her mother and family; her father had died when she was two years old. In 1643 Charles I moved his family and court to Oxford, where Margaret became maid of honor to Queen Henrietta Maria; in 1644 the queen fled with some supporters, Margaret among them, to her native Paris, to urge support for the royalist cause.

So I continued almost two years, until such time as I was married from thence. For my Lord the Marquis of Newcastle did approve of those bashful fears which many condemned, and would choose such a wife as he might bring to his own humors,<sup>5</sup> and not such an one as was wedded to self-conceit, or one that had been tempered to the humors of another, for which he wooed me for his wife. And though I did dread marriage, and shunned men's companies as much as I could, yet I could not nor had not the power to refuse him, by reason my affections were fixed on him, and he was the only person I ever was in love with. Neither was I ashamed to own it, but gloried therein, for it was not amorous love. I never was infected therewith—it is a disease, or a passion, or both, I know by relation, not by experience. Neither could title, wealth, power, or person entice me to love. But my love was honest and honorable, being placed upon merit; which affection joyed at the fame of his worth, pleased with delight in his wit, proud of the respects he used to me, and triumphing in the affections he professed for me. . . . And though my lord hath lost his estate, and banished out of his country for his loyalty to his king and country, yet neither despised poverty nor pinching necessity could make him break the bonds of friendship, or weaken his loyal duty to his king or country.

When I am writing any sad feigned stories or serious humors or melancholy passions, I am forced many times to express them with the tongue before I can write them with the pen, by reason those thoughts that are sad, serious, and melancholy are apt to contract and to draw back too much, which oppression doth as it were overpower or smother the conception in the brain. But when some of those thoughts are sent out in words, they give the rest more liberty to place themselves in a more methodical order, marching more regularly with my pen on the ground of white paper. But my letters seem rather as a ragged rout, than a well-armed body, for the brain being quicker in creating than the hand in writing, or the memory in retaining, many fancies are lost by reason they oftentimes outrun the pen. Where I, to keep speed in the race, write so fast as I stay not so long as to write my letters plain, insomuch as some have taken my handwriting for some strange character.<sup>6</sup> . . . My only trouble is lest my brain should grow barren, or that the root of my fancies should become insipid, withering into a dull stupidity, for want of maturing subjects to write on.

Since I have writ in general thus far of my life, I think it fit, I should speak something of my humor, particular practice, and disposition. As for my humor, I was from my childhood given to contemplation, being more taken or delighted with thoughts than in conversation with a society, in so much as I would walk two or three hours, and never rest, in a musing, considering, contemplating manner, reasoning with myself of everything my senses did present. . . . Likewise I had a natural stupidity towards the learning of any other language than my native tongue, for I could sooner and with more facility understand the sense than remember the words, and for want of such memory makes me so unlearned in foreign languages as I am: as for my practice,<sup>7</sup> I was never very active, by reason I was given so much to contemplation. . . . As for my study of books it was little, yet I chose rather to read, than to employ my time in any other work, or practice, and when I read what I understood not, I would ask my brother, the lord Lucas, he being learned, the sense of meaning thereof; but my serious study could not be much, by reason I took great delight in attiring, fine dressing, and fashions, especially such fashions as I did invent myself, not taking that pleasure in such fashions as was invented by others: also I did dislike any should follow my fashions, for I always took delight in a singularity, even in the accoutrements of habits, but whatsoever I was addicted to, either in fashion of clothes, contemplations of thoughts, actions of life, they were lawful, honorable, and modest, of which I can avouch to the world with a great confidence, because it is a pure truth.

I am a great emulator; for though I wish none worse than they are, yet it is lawful for me to wish myself the best, and to do my honest endeavor thereunto; for I think it no crime to wish myself the exactest<sup>8</sup> of Nature's works, my thread of life the longest, my chain of destiny the strongest, my mind the peaceablest, my life the pleasantest, my death the easiest, and the greatest saint in heaven. Also to do my endeavor, so far as honor and honesty doth allow of, to be the highest on fortune's wheel, and to hold the wheel from turning if I can; and if it be commendable to wish another's good, it were a sin not to wish my own; for as envy is a vice, so emulation is a virtue, but emulation is in the way to ambition, or indeed it is a noble ambition. But I fear my ambition inclines to vainglory, for I am very ambitious; yet 'tis neither for beauty, wit, titles, wealth, or power, but as they are steps to raise me to fame's tower, which is to live by remembrance on after-ages. . . . But I hope my readers will not think me vain for writing my life, since there have been many that have done the like, as Caesar, Ovid,<sup>9</sup> and many more, both men and women, and I know no reason I may not do it as well as they: but I verily believe some censuring readers will scornfully say, Why hath this lady writ her own life? since none cares to know whose daughter she was, or whose wife she is, or how she was bred, or what fortunes she had, or how she lived, or what humor or disposition she was of? I answer that it is true, that 'tis to no purpose to the readers, but it is to the authoress, because I write it for my own sake, not theirs; neither did I intend this piece for to delight, but to divulge; not to please the fancy but to tell the truth, lest after-ages should mistake, in not knowing I was daughter to one Master Lucas<sup>1</sup> of St. Johns, near Colchester, in Essex, second wife to the Lord

The Blazing World Part romance, part Utopia, and part science fiction, The Blazing World is also an idealized version of Cavendish's own ideas and fantasies in that it portrays the effortless rise of a woman to absolute power. It begins in the vein of romance: a young woman is abducted and miraculously saved as a tempest carries the abductors' boat to the North Pole and on to another universe, the Blazing World, whose emperor promptly marries her and turns over the entire government of the realm to her. It takes on a Utopian character, as the new empress learns from the fantastically diverse inhabitants about their numerous scientific experiments and about the royalist politics and religious uniformity of the place. She then brings Margaret Cavendish to be her scribe and returns with Margaret (in the state of disembodied spirits and Platonic friends) to visit and learn about Margaret's world and Margaret's husband, the duke; she also puts down a rebellion at home and subjects other nations to her beneficent rule. Cavendish's preface makes a bold claim for authorial self-sufficiency, equating her creation of and rule over her textual world with the conquering and ruling of empires by Caesar and Alexander. She emphasizes the satisfactions of authorship, but in doing so she also underscores the social and political restrictions on women that have confined her sphere of action to an imagined world.

The Description of a New World, Called The Blazing World<sup>1</sup>

To the Reader

* * 'This is the reason, why I added this piece of fancy to my philosophical observations, and joined them as two worlds at the ends of their poles; both for my own sake, to divert my studious thoughts, which I employed in the contemplation thereof, and to delight the reader with variety, which is always pleasing. But lest my fancy should stray too much, I chose such a fiction as would be agreeable to the subject treated of in the former parts; it is a description of a new world, not such as Lucian's or the French-man's world in the moon;<sup>2</sup> but a world of my own creating, which I call the Blazing World: the first part whereof is romancical, the second philosophical, and the third is merely fancy, or (as I may call it) fantastical, which if it add any satisfaction to you, I shall account myself a happy creatoress; if not, I must be content to live a melancholy life in my own world; I cannot call it a poor world, if poverty be only want of gold, silver, and jewels; for there is more gold in it than all the chemists ever did, and (as I verily believe) will ever be able to make. As for the rocks of diamonds, I wish with all my soul they might be shared amongst my noble female friends, and upon that condition, I would willingly quit my part; and of the gold I should only desire so much as might suffice to repair my noble lord and husband's losses:<sup>3</sup> for I am not covetous, but as ambitious as ever any of my sex was, is, or can be; which makes, that though I cannot be Henry the Fifth, or Charles the Second, yet I endeavor to be Margaret the First; and although I have neither power, time nor occasion to conquer the world as Alexander and Caesar did; yet rather than not to be mistress of one, since-fortune and the fates would give me none, I have made a world of my own: for which nobody, I hope, will blame me, since it is in everyone's power to do the like.

* * * No sooner was the lady brought before the emperor, but he conceived her to be some goddess, and offered to worship her; which she refused, telling him, (for by that time she had pretty well learned their language) that although she came out of another world, yet was she but a mortal; at which the emperor rejoicing, made her his wife, and gave her an absolute power to rule and govern all that world as she pleased. But her subjects, who could hardly be persuaded to believe her mortal, tendered her all the veneration and worship due to a deity. . . .

Their priests and governors were princes of the imperial blood, and made eunuchs for that purpose; and as for the ordinary sort of men in that part of the world where the emperor resided, they were of several complexions; not white, black, tawny, olive or ash-colored; but some appeared of an azure, some of a deep purple, some of a grass-green, some of a scarlet, some of an orange color, etc. Which colors and complexions, whether they were made by the bare reflection of light, without the assistance of small particles, or by the help of well-ranged and ordered atoms; or by a continual agitation of little globules; or by some pressing and reacting motion, I am not able to determine. The rest of the inhabitants of that world, were men of several different sorts, shapes, figures, dispositions, and humors, as I have already made mention heretofore; some were bear-men, some worm-men, some fish- or mear-men,<sup>4</sup> otherwise called sirens; some bird-men, some fly-men, some ant-men, some geese-men, some spider-men, some lice-men, some fox-men, some ape-men, some jackdaw-men, some magpie-men, some parrot-men, some satyrs, some giants, and many more, which I cannot all remember; and of these several sorts of men, each followed such a profession as was most proper for the nature of their species, which the empress encouraged them in, especially those that had applied themselves to the study of several arts and sciences; for they were as ingenious and witty in the invention of profitable and useful arts, as we are in our world, nay, more; and to that end she erected schools, and founded several societies. The bear-men were to be her experimental philosophers, the bird-men her astronomers, the fly-, worm-, and fish-men her natural philosophers, the ape-men her chemists, the satyrs her Galenic physicians, the fox-men her politicians, the spider- and lice-men her mathematicians, the jackdaw-, magpie-, and parrot-men her orators and logicians, the giants her architects, etc. But before all things, she having got a sovereign power from the emperor over all the world, desired to be informed both of the manner of their religion and government, and to that end she called the priests and statesmen, to give her an account of either. Of the statesmen she inquired, first, why they had so few laws? To which they answered, that many laws made many divisions, which most commonly did breed factions, and at last break out into open wars. Next, she asked, why they preferred the monarchical form of government before any other? They answered, that as it was natural for one body to have "but one head, so it was also natural for a politic body to have but one governor; and that a commonwealth, which had many governors, was like a monster with many heads: besides, said they, a monarchy is a divine form of government, and agrees most with our religion; for as there is but one God, whom we all unanimously worship and adore with one faith, so we are resolved to have but one emperor, to whom we all submit with one obedience.

Then the empress seeing that the several sorts of her subjects had each their churches apart, asked the priests whether they were of several religions? They answered Her Majesty, that there was no more but one religion in all that world, nor no diversity of opinions in that same religion; for though there were several sorts of men, yet had they all but one opinion concerning the worship and adoration of God. The empress asked them, whether they were Jews, Turks, or Christians? We do not know, said they, what religions those are; but we do all unanimously acknowledge, worship, and adore the only, omnipotent, and eternal God, with all reverence, submission, and duty. Again, the empress inquired, whether they had several forms of worship? They answered, no: for our devotion and worship consists only in prayers, which we frame according to our several necessities, in petitions, humiliations, thanksgiving, etc. Truly, replied the empress, I thought you had been either Jews, or Turks, because I never perceived any women in your congregations; but what is the reason, you bar them from your religious assemblies? It is not fit, said they, that men and women should be promiscuously together in time of religious worship; for their company hinders devotion, and makes many, instead of praying to God, direct their devotion to their mistresses. But, asked the empress, have they no congregation of their own, to perform the duties of divine worship, as well as men? No, answered they: but they stay at home, and say their prayers by themselves in their closets.<sup>5</sup> Then the empress desired to know the reason why the priests and governors of their world were made eunuchs? They answered, to keep them from marriage: for women and children most commonly make disturbance both in church and state. But, said she, women and children have no employment in church or state. 'Tis true, answered they; but although they are not admitted to public employments, yet are they so prevalent<sup>6</sup> with their husbands and parents, that many times by their importunate persuasions, they cause as much, nay, more mischief secretly, than if they had the management of public affairs.

[THE EMPRESS BRINGS THE DUCHESS OF NEWCASTLE TO THE BLAZING WORLD]

After some time, when the spirits had refreshed themselves in their own vehicles, they sent one of their nimblest spirits, to ask the empress, whether she would have a scribe.* * * Then the spirit asked her, whether she would have the soul of a living or a dead man? Why, said the empress, can the soul quit a living body, and wander or travel abroad? Yes, answered he, for according to Plato's doctrine, there is a conversation of souls, and the souls of lovers live in the bodies of their beloved. Then I will have, answered she, the soul of some ancient famous writer, either of Aristotle, Pythagoras, Plato, Epicurus,<sup>7</sup> or the like. The spirit said, that those famous men were very learned, subtle, and ingenious writers, but they were so wedded to their own opinions, that they would never have the patience to be scribes. Then, said she, I'll have the soul of one of the most famous modern writers, as either of Galileo, Gassendus, Descartes, Helmont, Hobbes, H. More,<sup>8</sup> etc. The spirit answered, that they were fine ingenious writers, but yet so self-conceited, that they would scorn to be scribes to a woman. But, said he, there's a lady, the Duchess of Newcastle, which although she is not one of the most learned, eloquent, witty, and ingenious, yet is she a plain and rational writer, for the principle of her writings, is sense and reason, and she will without question, be ready to do you all the service she can. This lady then, said the empress, will I choose for my scribe, neither will the emperor have reason to be jealous, she being one of my own sex. In truth, said the spirit, husbands have reason to be jealous of platonic lovers, for they are very dangerous, as being not only very intimate and close, but subtle and insinuating. You say well, replied the empress; wherefore I pray send me the Duchess of Newcastle's soul; which the spirit did; and after she came to wait on the empress, at her first arrival the empress embraced and saluted her with a spiritual kiss.

[THE DUCHESS WANTS A WORLD TO RULE]

Well, said the duchess, setting aside this dispute, my ambition is, that I would fain be as you are, that is, an empress of a world, and I shall never be at quiet until I be one. I love you so well, replied the empress, that I wish with all my soul, you had the fruition of your ambitious desire, and I shall not fail to give you my best advice how to accomplish it; the best informers are the immaterial spirits, and they'll soon tell you, whether it be possible to obtain your wish. But, said the duchess, I have little acquaintance with them, for I never knew any before the time you sent for me. They know you, replied the empress; for they told me of you, and were the means and instrument of your coming hither: wherefore I'll confer with them, and inquire whether there be not another world, whereof you may be empress as well as I am of this. No sooner had the empress said this, but some immaterial spirits came to visit her, of whom she inquired, whether there were but three worlds in all, to wit, the Blazing World where she was in, the world which she came from, and the world where the duchess lived? The spirits answered, that there were more numerous worlds than the stars which appeared in these three mentioned worlds. Then the empress asked, whether it was not possible, that her dearest friend the Duchess of Newcastle, might be empress of one of them.<sup>9</sup> Although there be numerous, nay, infinite worlds, answered the spirits, yet none is without government. But is none of these worlds so weak, said she, that it may be surprised or conquered? The spirits answered, that Lucian's world of lights, had been for some time in a snuff,<sup>1</sup> but of late years one Helmont had got it, who since he was emperor of it, had so strengthened the immortal parts thereof with mortal outworks, as it was for the present impregnable. Said the empress, if there be such an infinite number of worlds, I am sure, not only my friend, the duchess, but any other might obtain one. Yes, answered the spirits, if those worlds were uninhabited; but they are as populous as this, your majesty governs. Why, said the empress, it is not impossible to conquer a world. No, answered the spirits, but, for the most part, conquerors seldom enjoy their conquest, for they being more feared than loved, most commonly come to an untimely end. If you will but direct me, said the duchess to the spirits, which world is easiest to be conquered, her Majesty will assist me with means, and I will trust to fate and fortune; for I had rather die in the adventure of noble achievements, than live in obscure and sluggish security; since by the one, I may live in a glorious fame, and by the other I am buried in oblivion. The spirits answered, that the lives of fame were like other lives; for some lasted long, and some died soon. Tis true, said the duchess; but yet the shortest-lived fame lasts longer than the longest life of man. But, replied the spirits, if occasion does not serve you, you must content yourself to live without such achievements that may gain you a fame: but we wonder, proceeded the spirits, that you desire to be empress of a terrestrial world, whenas you can create yourself a celestial world if you please. What, said the empress, can any mortal be a creator? Yes, answered the spirits; for every human creature can create an immaterial world fully inhabited by immaterial creatures, and populous of immaterial subjects, such as we are, and all this within the compass of the head or skull; nay, not only so, but he may create a world of what fashion and government he will, and give the creatures thereof such motions, figures, forms, colors, perceptions, etc. as he pleases, and make whirlpools, lights, pressures, and reactions, etc. as he thinks best; nay, he may make a world full of veins, muscles, and nerves, and all these to move by one jolt or stroke: also he may alter that world as often as he pleases, or change it from a natural world, to an artificial; he may make a world of ideas, a world of atoms, a world of lights, or whatsoever his fancy leads him to. And since it is in your power to create such a world, what need you to venture life, reputation and tranquility, to conquer a gross material world? . . . You have converted me, said the duchess to the spirits, from my ambitious desire; wherefore I'll take your advice, reject and despise all the worlds without me, and create a world of my own.

The Epilogue to the Reader

By this poetical description, you may perceive, that my ambition is not only to be empress, but authoress of a whole world; and that the worlds I have made, both the Blazing and the other Philosophical World, mentioned in the first part of this description, are framed and composed of the most pure, that

JOHN MILTON

1608-1674

As a young man, John Milton proclaimed himself the future author of a great English epic. He promised a poem devoted to the glory of the nation, centering on the deeds of King Arthur or some other ancient hero. When Milton finally published his epic thirty years later, readers found instead a poem about the Fall of Satan and humankind, set in Heaven, Hell, and the Garden of Eden, in which traditional heroism is denigrated and England not once mentioned. What lay between the youthful promise and the eventual fulfillment was a career marked by private tragedy and public controversy.

In his poems and prose tracts Milton often explores or alludes to crises in his own life: worries about fleeting time, the choice of a vocation and early death, painful disappointment in marriage, and the catastrophe of blindness, manifesting in this the heightened seventeenth-century concern with the self. At the same time, no other major English poet has been so deeply involved in the great questions and political crises of his times. His works inscribe and help construct some basic Western institutions, concepts, and attitudes that were taking on modern form in his lifetime: companionate marriage, the new science and the new astronomy, freedom of the press, religious liberty and toleration, republicanism, and more. It is scarcely possible to treat Milton's career separately from the history of England in his lifetime, not only because he was an active participant in affairs of church and state, but also because when he signed himself, as he often did, "John Milton, Englishman," he was presenting himself as England's prophetic bard, the spokesman for the nation as a whole even when he found himself in a minority of one.

As well, no English poet before Milton fashioned himself quite so self-consciously as an author. The young Milton deliberately set out to follow the steps of the ideal poetic career—beginning with pastoral (the mode prominent in several of his early English poems) and ending with epic. His models for this progression were Virgil and Spenser: he called the latter "a better teacher than Scotus or Aquinas." In this approach to his vocation he stood at the opposite end of the spectrum from such Cavalier contemporaries as John Suckling and Richard Lovelace, who turned to verse with an air of studied carelessness. Milton resembles Spenser especially in his constant use of myth and archetype and also in his readiness to juxtapose biblical and classical stories. He is everywhere concerned with the conventions of genre, yet he infused every genre he used with new energy, transforming it for later practitioners. The Western literary and intellectual heritage impinged on his writing as immediately and directly as the circumstances of his own life, but he continually reconceived the ideas, literary forms, and values of this heritage to make them relevant to himself and to his age.

Milton's family was bourgeois, cultured, and staunchly Protestant. His father was a scrivener—a combination of solicitor, investment adviser, and moneylender—as well as an amateur composer with some reputation in musical circles. Milton had a younger brother, Christopher, who practiced law, and an elder sister, Anne. At age seventeen he wrote a funeral elegy for the death of Anne's infant daughter and later educated her two sons, Edward and John (Edward wrote his biography). Milton had private tutors at home and also attended one of the finest schools in the land, St. Paul's. At school he began a long and close friendship with Charles Diodati, with whom he exchanged Latin poems and letters over several years, and for whose death in 1638 he wrote a moving Latin elegy. Milton was deeply grateful to his father for his excellent early education, especially in languages (Latin, Greek, Hebrew and its dialects, Italian, and French: later he learned Spanish and Dutch).

In 1625 Milton entered Christ's College, Cambridge. He was briefly suspended during his freshman year over some dispute with his tutor, but he graduated in 1629 and was made Master of Arts three years later. As his surviving student orations indicate, he was profoundly disappointed in his university education, reviling the scholastic logic and Latin rhetorical exercises that still formed its core as "futile and barren controversies and wordy disputes" that "stupify and benumb the mind." He went to university with the serious intention of taking orders in the Church of England—the obvious vocation for a young man of his scholarly and religious bent—but became increasingly disenchanted with the lack of reformation in the church under Archbishop William Laud, and in the hindsight of 1642 he proclaimed himself "church-outed by the prelates." No doubt his change of direction was also linked to the fastidious contempt he expressed for the ignorant and clownish clergymen-in-the-making who were his fellow students at Cambridge: "They thought themselves gallant men, and I thought them fools." Those students retaliated by dubbing Milton "the Lady of Christ's College."

Above all, Milton came to believe more and more strongly that he was destined to serve his language, his country, and his God as a poet. He began by writing occasional poetry in Latin, the usual language for collegiate poets and for poets who sought a European audience. Milton wrote some of the century's best Latin poems, but as early as 1628 he announced to a university audience his determination to glorify England and the English language in poetry. In his first major English poem (at age twenty-one), the hymn "On the Morning of Christ's Nativity," Milton already portrayed himself as a prophetic bard. This poem is very different from Richard Crashaw's Nativity hymn, with its Spenserian echoes, its allusion to Roman Catholic and Laudian "idolatry" in the long passage on the expulsion of the pagan gods, and its stunning moves from the Creation to Doomsday, from the manger at Bethlehem to the cosmos, and from the shepherd's chatter to the music of the spheres. Two or three years later, probably, Milton wrote the companion poems "L'Allegro" and "Il Penseroso," achieving a stylistic tour de force by creating from the same meter (octosyllabic couplets) entirely different sound qualities, rhythmic effects, and moods. These poems celebrate, respectively, Mirth and Melancholy, defining them by their ancestry, lifestyles, associates, landscapes, activities, music, and literature. In 1634, at the invitation of his musician friend Henry Lawes, he wrote the masque called Comms, in which the villain is portrayed as a refined, seductive, and dissolute Cavalier, and which challenges the absolutist politics of court masques like Ben Jonson's Masque of Blackness or Thomas Carew's Coelum Britannicum by locating true virtue and good pleasure in the households of the country aristocracy rather than at court.

After university, as part of his preparation for a poetic career, Milton undertook a six-year program of self-directed reading in ancient and modern theology, philosophy, history, science, politics, and literature. He was profoundly grateful to his father for sparing him the grubby business of making money and also for financing these years of private study, followed by a fifteen-month "grand tour" of France, Italy, and Switzerland. In 1638 Milton contributed the pastoral elegy "Lycidas" to a Cambridge volume lamenting the untimely death of a college contemporary. This greatest of English funeral elegies explores Milton's deep anxieties about poetry as a vocation, confronts the terrors of mortality in language of astonishing resonance and power, and incorporates a furious apocalyptic diatribe on the corrupt Church of England clergy. Nonetheless, while he was in Italy he exchanged verses and learned compliments with various Catholic intellectuals and men of letters, some of whom became his friends. Milton could always maintain friendships and family relationships across ideological divides. In 1645 his English and Latin poems were published together in a two-part volume. Poems of Mr. John Milton.

Upon his return to England, Milton opened a school and was soon involved in Presbyterian efforts to depose the bishops and reform church liturgy, writing five "antiprelatical tracts" denouncing and satirizing bishops. These were the first in a series of political interventions Milton produced over the next twenty years, characterized by remarkable courage and independence of thought. He wrote successively on church government, divorce, education, freedom of the press, regicide, and republicanism. From the outbreak of the Civil War in 1642 until his death, Milton allied himself with the Puritan cause, but his religious opinions developed throughout his life, from relative orthodoxy in his youth to ever more heretical positions in his later years. And while his family belonged to the class that benefited most directly from Europe's first bourgeois revolution, his brother, Christopher, fought on the royalist side. The Milton brothers, like most of their contemporaries, did not see these wars as a confrontation of class interests, but as a conflict between radically differing theories of government and, above all, religion.

Some of Milton's treatises were prompted by personal concerns or crises. He interrupted his polemical tract, The Reason of Church Government Urged Against Prelaty (1642), to devote several pages to a discussion of his poetic vocation and the great works he hoped to produce in the future. His tracts about divorce, which can hardly have seemed the most pressing of issues in the strife-torn years 1643–45, were motivated by his personal experience of a disastrous marriage. Aged thirty-three, inexperienced with women, and idealistic about marriage as in essence a union of minds and spirits, he married a young woman of seventeen, Mary Powell, who returned to her royalist family just a few months after the marriage. In response, Milton wrote several tracts vigorously advocating divorce on the grounds of incompatibility and with the right to remarry—a position almost unheard of at the time and one that required a boldly antiliteral reading of the Gospels. The fact that these tracts could not be licensed and were roundly denounced in Parliament, from pulpits, and in print prompted him to write Areopagitica (1644), an impassioned defense of a free press and the free commerce in ideas against a Parliament determined to restore effective censorship. He saw these personal issues—reformed poetry, domestic liberty achieved through needful divorce, and a free press—as vital to the creation of a reformed English culture.

In 1649, just after Charles I was executed, Milton published The Tenure of Kings and Magistrates (go to page 1748 and to Norton Literature Online for extracts from the Tenure), which defends the revolution and the regicide and was of considerable importance in developing a "contract theory" of government based on the inalienable sovereignty of the people—a version of contract very different from that of Thomas Hobbes. Milton was appointed Latin Secretary to the Commonwealth government (1649–53) and to Oliver Cromwell's Protectorate (1654–58), which meant that he wrote the official letters—mostly in Latin—to foreign governments and heads of state. He also wrote polemical defenses of the new government: Eikonoklastes (1649), to counter the powerful emotional effect of Eikon Basilike, supposedly written by the king just before his death (an excerpt is included on Norton Literature Online), and two Latin Defenses upholding the regicide and the new republic to European audiences.

During these years Milton suffered a series of agonizing tragedies. Mary Powell returned to him in 1645 but died in childbirth in 1652, leaving four children; the only son, John, died a few months later. That same year Milton became totally blind; he thought his boyhood habit of reading until midnight had weakened his eyesight and that writing his first Defense to answer the famous French scholar Claudius Salmasius had destroyed it. Milton married again in 1656, apparently happily, but his new wife, Katherine Woodcock, was dead two years later, along with their infant daughter. Katherine is probably the subject of his sonnet "Methought I Saw My Late Espoused Saint," a moving dream vision poignant with the sense of loss—both of sight and of love. Milton had little time for poetry in these years, but his few sonnets revolutionized the genre, overlaying the Petrarchan metrical structure with an urgent rhetorical voice and using the small sonnet form, hitherto confined mainly to matters of love, for new and grand subjects: praises of Cromwell and other statesmen mixed with admonition and political advice; a prophetic denunciation calling down God's vengeance for Protestants massacred in Piedmont; and an emotion-filled account of his continuing struggle to come to terms with his blindness as part of God's providence.

Cromwell's death in 1658 led to mounting chaos and a growing belief that a restored Stuart monarchy was inevitable. Milton held out against that tide. His several tracts of 1659–60 developed radical arguments for broad toleration, church disestablishment, and republican government. And just as he was among the first to attack the power of the bishops, so he was virtually the last defender of the "Good Old Cause" of the Revolution; the second edition of his Ready and Easy Way to Establish a Free Commonwealth appeared in late April 1660, scarcely two weeks before the Restoration, when the monarchy was restored. For several months after that event, Milton was in hiding, his life in danger. Friends, especially the poet Andrew Marvell, managed to secure his pardon and later his release from a brief imprisonment. He lived out his last years in reduced circumstances, plagued by ever more serious attacks of gout but grateful for the domestic comforts provided by his third wife, Elizabeth Minshull, whom he married in 1663 and who survived him.

In such conditions, dismayed by the defeat of his political and religious cause, totally blind and often ill, threatened by the horrific plague of 1665 and the great fire of 1666, and entirely dependent on amanuenses and friends to transcribe his dictation, he completed his great epic poem. Paradise Lost (1667/74) radically reconceives the epic genre and epic heroism, choosing as protagonists a domestic couple rather than martial heroes and degrading the military glory celebrated in epic tradition in favor of "the better fortitude / Of patience and heroic martyrdom." It offers a sweeping imaginative vision of Hell, Chaos, and Heaven; prelapsarian life in Eden; the power of the devil's political rhetoric; the psychology of Satan, Adam, and Eve; and the high drama of the Fall and its aftermath.

In his final years, Milton published works on grammar and logic chiefly written during his days as a schoolmaster, a history of Britain (1670) from the earliest times to the Norman Conquest, and a treatise urging toleration for Puritan dissenters (1673). He also continued work on his Christian Doctrine, a Latin treatise that reveals how far he had moved from the orthodoxies of his day. The work denies the Trinity (making the Son and the Holy Spirit much inferior to God the Father), insists upon free will against Calvinist predestination, and privileges the inspiration of the Spirit even above the Scriptures and the Ten Commandments. Such radical and heterodox positions could not be made public in his lifetime, certainly not in the repressive conditions of the Restoration, and Milton's Christian Doctrine was subsequently lost to view for over 150 years.

In 1671 Milton published two poems that resonated with the harsh repression and the moral and political challenges all Puritan dissenters faced after the Restoration. Paradise Regained, a brief epic in four books, treats Jesus' Temptation in the Wilderness as an intellectual struggle through which the hero comes to understand both himself and his mission and through which he defeats Satan by renouncing the whole panoply of false or faulty versions of the good life and of God's kingdom. Samson Agonistes, a classical tragedy, is the more harrowing for the resemblances between its tragic hero and its author. The deeply flawed, pain-wracked, blind, and defeated Samson struggles, in dialogues with his visitors, to gain self-knowledge, discovering at last a desperate way to triumph over his captors and offer his people a chance to regain their freedom. (The tragedy in its entirety is available on Norton Literature Online.) In these last poems Milton sought to educate his readers in moral and political wisdom and virtue. Only through such inner transformation, Milton now firmly believed, would men and women come to value—and so perhaps reclaim—the intellectual, religious, and political freedom he so vigorously promoted in his prose and poetry.

FROM POEMS

On the Morning of Christ's Nativity<sup>1</sup>

1

This is the month, and this the happy morn
Wherein the son of Heaven's eternal King,
Of wedded maid and virgin mother born,
Our great redemption from above did bring;

1. This ode was written on Christmas ] 629, a few weeks after Milton's twenty-first birthday. He placed it first in the 1645 edition of his poems, claiming in it his vocation as inspired poet. The poem often looks back to Spenser: the first four stanzas are an adaptation of the Spenserian stanza;

there are several Spenserian archaisms (]- prefixes) and some Spenser-like onomatopoeia (lines 156, 172). Comparison with Crashaw's Nativity poem (p. 1645) will highlight some important differences between Roman Catholic and Puritan aesthetics in this period.

5 For so the holy sages once did sing,
 That he our deadly forfeit<sup>2</sup> should release,
 And with his Father work us a perpetual peace.

2

That glorious form, that light unsufferable,<sup>0</sup> unable to be endured
 And that far-beaming blaze of majesty
 io Wherewith he wont<sup>0</sup> at Heaven's high council-table was accustomed
 To sit the midst of Trinal Unity,<sup>3</sup>
 He laid aside; and here with us to be,
 Forsook the courts of everlasting day,
 And chose with us a darksome house of mortal clay.

3

15 Say, heavenly Muse, shall not thy sacred vein
 Afford a present to the infant God?
 Hast thou no verse, no hymn, or solemn strain,
 To welcome him to this his new abode,
 Now while the heaven by the sun's team untrod<sup>4</sup>
 20 Hath took no print of the approaching light,
 And all the spangled host<sup>0</sup> keep watch in squadrons bright? angels

4

See how from far upon the eastern road
 The star-led wizards<sup>5</sup> haste with odors sweet:
 O run, prevent<sup>0</sup> them with thy humble ode, anticipate
 25 And lay it lowly at his blessed feet;
 Have thou the honor first thy Lord to greet,
 And join thy voice unto the angel choir,
 From out His secret altar touched with hallowed fire.<sup>6</sup>

The Hymn

1

It was the winter wild
 30 While the Heaven-born child
 All meanly wrapped in the rude manger lies;
 Nature in awe to him
 Had doffed her gaudy trim<sup>7</sup>
 With her great Master so to sympathize;
 35 It was no season then for her
 To wanton with the sun, her lusty paramour.

2. The sentence of death consequent on the Fall. "Holy sages": for example, the prophet Isaiah (chaps. 9 and 40) and Job (chap. 19) were thought to have foretold Christ as Messiah.

3. The Trinity: Father, Son (incarnate in Christ), and Holy Ghost.

4. In classical myth, the sun (Phoebus Apollo) drove across heaven in a chariot drawn by horses.

5. The Magi who followed the star of Bethlehem to find and adore the infant Christ.

6. Isaiah's lips were touched by a burning coal from the altar, purifying him and confirming him as a prophet (Isaiah 6.7).

7. Put off her garments of leaves and flowers.

2

Only with speeches fair
 She woos the gentle air
 To hide her guilty front<sup>0</sup> with innocent snow, brow
 40 And on her naked shame,
 Pollute with sinful blame,
 The saintly veil of maiden white to throw,<sup>8</sup>
 Confounded that her Maker's eyes
 Should look so near upon her foul deformities.

3

45 But he her fears to cease
 Sent down the meek-eyed Peace;
 She, crowned with olive green, came softly sliding
 Down through the turning sphere,<sup>9</sup>
 His ready harbinger,<sup>0</sup> forerunner
 so With turtle<sup>1</sup> wing the amorous clouds dividing,
 And waving wide her myrtle wand,
 She strikes a universal peace through sea and land.

4

No war or battle's sound
 Was heard the world around;<sup>2</sup>
 55 The idle spear and shield were high up-hung;
 The hooked chariot<sup>3</sup> stood
 Unstained with hostile blood,
 The trumpet spake not to the armed throng,
 And kings sat still with awful<sup>0</sup> eye, filled with awe
 60 As if they surely knew their sovereign Lord was by.

5

But peaceful was the night
 Wherein the Prince of Light
 His reign of peace upon the earth began:
 The winds, with wonder whist,<sup>0</sup> hushed
 65 Smoothly the waters kissed,
 Whispering new joys to the mild ocean,
 Who now hath quite forgot to rave,
 While birds of calm<sup>4</sup> sit brooding on the charmed wave.

The stars with deep amaze
 70 Stand fixed in steadfast gaze,

8. Nature fell also with the Fall, so she is a harlot (line 36), not a pure maiden, despite her white garment of snow.

9. The Ptolemaic spheres, revolving around the earth.

1. Like a turtledove, which, like the myrtle (next line), is an emblem of Venus (Love), as the olive crown is of peace.

2. Around the time of Christ's birth, the "Peace of Augustus" held, during which no major wars disturbed the Roman Empire; that peace was sometimes attributed to Christ.

3. War chariots were built with scythelike hooks on the axles, to wound and kill.

4. Kingfishers (halcyons) were thought to calm the seas during the time they nested on its waves.

Bending one way their precious influence,
 And will not take their flight
 For all the morning light,
 Or Lucifer<sup>5</sup> that often warned them thence;
 75 But in their glimmering orbs did glow
 Until their Lord himself bespake,<sup>0</sup> and bid them go. spoke out

And though the shady gloom
 Had given day her room,
 The sun himself withheld his wonted speed,
 And hid his head for shame
 As<sup>0</sup> his inferior flame as if
 The new-enlightened world no more should need;
 He saw a greater Sun<sup>6</sup> appear
 Than his bright throne or burning axletree<sup>0</sup> could bear. chariot axle

The shepherds on the lawn
 Or ere the point of<sup>3</sup> dawn just before
 Sat simply chatting in a rustic row;
 Full little thought they than<sup>0</sup> then
 That the mighty Pan<sup>7</sup>
 Was kindly<sup>8</sup> come to live with them below;
 Perhaps their loves or else their sheep
 Was all that did their silly<sup>0</sup> thoughts so busy keep. simple, humble

9

When such music sweet
 Their hearts and ears did greet
 95 As never was by mortal finger struck,
 Divinely warbled voice
 Answering the stringed noise,
 As all their souls in blissful rapture took;
 The air, such pleasure loath to lose,
 100 With thousand echoes still prolongs each heavenly close.<sup>0</sup> cadence

10

Nature that heard such sound
 Beneath the hollow round
 Of Cynthia's seat,<sup>9</sup> the airy region thrilling,<sup>0</sup> piercing, delighting
 Now was almost won
 105 To think her part was done,
 And that her reign had here its last fulfilling;
 She knew such harmony alone
 Could hold all heaven and earth in happier union.

5. Not Satan but the morning star, Venus.

6. The familiar Son/sun pun.

7. Pan, patron of shepherds, is a merry, goat-footed god, but he was often conceived in more exalted terms and identified with Christ, because his name in Greek means "all."

8. By nature; also, benevolently.

9. Cynthia is the moon. Nature rules below the moon (the region of the four elements and subject to decay). The unchanging, perfect region above the moon is normally the only place one could hear either angels' hymnody or the music of the spheres.

11

At last surrounds their sight
no A globe of circular light
That with long beams the shamefaced night arrayed;<sup>0</sup> adorned with rays
The helmed cherubim
And sworded seraphim<sup>1</sup>
Are seen in glittering ranks with wings displayed,
115 Harping in loud and solemn choir
With unexpressive<sup>0</sup> notes to Heaven's newborn heir. inexpressible

12

Such music (as 'tis said)
Before was never made,
But when of old the sons of morning sung,<sup>2</sup>
120 While the Creator great
His constellations set,
And the well-balanced world on hinges<sup>0</sup> hung, the two poles
And cast the dark foundations deep,
And bid the welt'ring waves their oozy channel keep.

13

125 Ring out, ye crystal spheres,
Once bless our human ears
(If ye have power to touch our senses so),
And let your silver chime
Move in melodious time,
130 And let the bass of Heaven's deep organ blow;
And with your ninefold harmony<sup>3</sup>
Make up full consort to th' angelic symphony.

14

For if such holy song
Enwrap our fancy long,
135 Time will run back and fetch the age of gold;<sup>4</sup>
And speckled vanity
Will sicken soon and die,
And leprous sin will melt from earthly mold,
And Hell itself will pass away,
140 And leave her dolorous mansions to the peering day.

15

Yea, Truth and Justice then
Will down return to men,

1. Seraphim and cherubim are the highest of the traditional nine orders of angels; they are often portrayed in martial attire.

2. Job 38.4—7: "Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth? . . . /When the morning stars sang together and all the sons of God shouted for joy?"

3. In Pythagorean theory, each of the nine moving spheres sounds a distinctive note (the tenth, the primum mobile, does not move). It was supposed that, after the Fall, this harmonious music of the spheres could not be heard on earth. Earth would be the "bass" of the cosmic organ, sounding under that planetary harmony.

4. The first age, of human innocence, classical mythology's equivalent to the Garden of Eden.

Th' enameled arras<sup>0</sup> of the rainbow wearing,                    brightly colored fabric
 And Mercy set between,<sup>5</sup>
 145 Throned in celestial sheen,
       With radiant feet the tissued<sup>6</sup> clouds down steering;
 And Heaven, as at some festival,
 Will open wide the gates of her high palace hall.

16

But wisest Fate says no,
 150 This must not yet be so;
       The Babe lies yet in smiling infancy<sup>7</sup>
 That on the bitter cross
 Must redeem our loss,
       So both himself and us to glorify;
 155 Yet first to those ychained" in sleep
 The wakeful trump of doom must thunder through the deep,

17

With such a horrid clang
 As on Mount Sinai rang
       While the red fire and smoldering clouds outbrake;
 160 The aged earth, aghast
 With terror of that blast,
       Shall from the surface to the center shake,
 When at the world's last session,
 The dreadful Judge in middle air shall spread His throne.<sup>9</sup>

18

165 And then at last our bliss
 Full and perfect is,
       But now begins; for from this happy day
 Th' old dragon under ground,<sup>1</sup>
 In straiter limits bound,
 170 Not half so far casts his usurped sway,
 And wroth to see his kingdom fail,
 Swinges<sup>0</sup> the scaly horror of his folded tail.                    lashes

19

The oracles are dumb;<sup>2</sup>
 No voice or hideous hum
       Runs through the arched roof in words deceiving.

5. This allegorical scene, suggesting a masque descent, alludes to Psalm 85.10, part of the liturgy for Christmas: "Mercy and truth are met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other." Peace, in the poem, has already descended (lines 45–52). The lines also evoke the flight of Astraea, the classical goddess of justice, at the end of the Golden Age, and her return with its restoration, celebrated by Virgil in his fourth eclogue, applied by him to the birth of Pollio but by Christians to Christ.

6. Cloth woven with silver and gold.

7. The Latin word, infans, means, literally, "non-speaking."

8. One of Spenser's archaic y- prefixes.

9. Moses received the Ten Commandments amid thunder and lightning atop Mount Sinai (Exodus 19); the Last Judgment will take place amid similar uproar. "Session": court proceeding.

1. The devil (Revelation 20.2).

2. An ancient tradition held that pagan oracles ceased with the coming of Christ; another identified the pagan gods with the fallen angels.

Apollo from his shrine
 Can no more divine,
     With hollow shriek the steep of Delphos leaving,<sup>3</sup>
 No nightly trance or breathed spell
 180 Inspires the pale-eyed priest from the prophetic cell.

20

The lonely mountains o'er
 And the resounding shore
     A voice of weeping heard and loud lament;
 From haunted spring and dale
 185 Edged with the poplar pale,
     The parting genius<sup>4</sup> is with sighing sent;
 With flower-in-woven tresses torn
 The nymphs in twilight shade of tangled thickets mourn.

21

In consecrated earth
 190 And on the holy hearth,
     The lars and lemures<sup>5</sup> moan with midnight plaint;
 In urns and altars round
 A drear and dying sound
     Affrights the flamens<sup>6</sup> at their sendee quaint;
 195 And the chill marble seems to sweat,
 While each peculiar power forgoes his wonted seat.

22

Peor and Baalim'
 Forsake their temples dim,
     With that twice-battered god of Palestine,<sup>8</sup>
 200 And mooned Ashtaroth,<sup>9</sup>
 Heaven's queen and mother both,
     Now sits not girt with tapers' holy shine;
 The Libyc Hammon' shrinks<sup>0</sup> his horn;
 In vain the Tyrian maids their wounded Thammuz mourn.<sup>2</sup>

draws in

23

205 And sullen Moloch,<sup>3</sup> fled,
 Hath left in shadows dread
     His burning idol all of blackest hue;
 In vain with cymbals' ring

3. Apollo's main shrine was at Delphi, on the slopes of Mount Parnassus.

4. A local deity guarding a particular place.

5. Spirits of the dead. "Lars": household gods.

6. Roman priests.

7. Other manifestations of Baal, a Canaanite sun god.

8. Dagon, the Philistine god whose image at Ashdod was twice thrown down when the Ark of the Covenant was placed beside it (1 Samuel 5.2—4).

9. Ashtaroth, also known as Astarte, was a Phoenician fertility goddess identified with the moon.

1. Hammon, also Ammon, an Egyptian and Libyan god, depicted as a ram.

2. Thammuz, lover of Ashtaroth, was killed by a boar and lamented by the Phoenician women; he was taken into the Greek pantheon as Adonis.

3. Moloch was a Phoenician fire god, a brazen idol with a human body and a calf's head; the statue ("his burning idol," line 207) was heated flaming hot and children were thrown into its embrace, with cymbals drowning out their cries (2 Kings 22.10).

They call the grisly Icing
 210 In dismal dance about the furnace blue;
 The brutish gods of Nile as fast,<sup>4</sup>
 Isis and Orus and the dog Anubis haste.

24

Nor is Osiris seen
 In Memphian grove or green,
 215 Trampling the unshowered<sup>o</sup> grass with lowings loud, rainless
 Nor can he be at rest
 Within his sacred chest;
 Naught but profoundest Hell can be his shroud.
 In vain with timbrelled anthems dark
 220 The sable-stoled sorcerers bear his worshipped ark.<sup>5</sup>

25

He feels from Judah's land
 The dreaded Infant's hand,
 The rays of Bethlehem blind his dusky eyne;<sup>o</sup> eyes
 Nor all the gods beside 225 Longer dare abide,
 Not Typhon huge, ending in snaky twine;
 Our Babe, to show his godhead true,
 Can in his swaddling bands control the damned crew.<sup>6</sup>

26

So when the sun in bed,
 230 Curtained with cloudy red,
 Pillows his chin upon an orient<sup>o</sup> wave, eastern, bright
 The flocking shadows pale
 Troop to th' infernal jail;
 Each fettered ghost slips to his several<sup>o</sup> grave; separate
 235 And the yellow-skirted fays
 Fly after the night-steeds, leaving their moon-loved maze.<sup>7</sup>

27

But see! the Virgin blessed
 Hath laid her Babe to rest.
 Time is our tedious song should here have ending.
 240 Heaven's youngest-teemed<sup>o</sup> star latest bom
 Hath fixed her polished car,<sup>o</sup> gleaming chariot
 Her sleeping Lord with handmaid lamp attending:
 And all about the courtly stable
 Bright-harnessed<sup>o</sup> angels sit in order serviceable. bright-armed

4. Egyptian gods had some features of animals: Isis (next line) was represented with cow's horns, Orus, or Horus, with a hawk's head; Osiris (lines 213–15) sometimes had the shape of a bull.

5. Osiris's image was carried from temple to temple in a wooden chest, and his priests accompanied it with tambourines ("timbrels").

6. Typhon was a hundred-headed monster who was a serpent below the waist, a figure for the devil. The infant Christ controlling him calls up (as a foreshadowing) the story of the infant Hercules strangling two giant serpents in his cradle.

7. Fairy rings. "Night-steeds": horses drawing Night's chariot.

On Shakespeare<sup>1</sup>

What needs my Shakespeare for his honored bones
 The labor of an age in piled stones,
 Or that his hallowed relics should be hid
 Under a star-ypointing<sup>2</sup> pyramid?
 Dear son of memory,<sup>3</sup> great heir of fame,
 What<sup>0</sup> need'st thou such weak witness of thy name? why
 Thou in our wonder and astonishment
 Hast built thyself a livelong<sup>0</sup> monument. enduring
 For whilst to th' shame of slow-endeavoring art
 Thy easy numbers<sup>0</sup> flow, and that each heart
 Hath from the leaves of thy unvalued<sup>0</sup> book invaluable
 Those Delphic<sup>4</sup> lines with deep impression took,
 Then thou, our fancy of itself bereaving,
 Dost make us marble with too much conceiving;<sup>5</sup>
 And so sepulchered in such pomp dost lie,
 That kings for such a tomb would wish to die.

Hence loathed Melancholy,<sup>2</sup>
 Of Cerberus<sup>3</sup> and blackest midnight born,
 In Stygian<sup>4</sup> cave forlorn
 'Mongst horrid shapes, and shrieks, and sights unholy,
 5 Find out some uncouth<sup>0</sup> cell, desolate
 Where brooding Darkness spreads his jealous wings,
 And the night raven sings;
 There under ebon shades and low-browed rocks,
 As ragged as thy locks,
 10 In dark Cimmerian<sup>5</sup> desert ever dwell.
 But come thou goddess fair and free,
 In heaven yclept Euphrosyne,<sup>6</sup>

1. This tribute, Milton's first published poem, appeared in the Second Folio of Shakespeare's plays (1632).

2. A Spenserian archaism.

3. As "son of memory" Shakespeare is a brother of the Muses, who are the daughters of Mnemosyne (Memory).

4. Apollo, god of poetry, had his oracle at Delphi.

5. Shakespeare's mesmerized readers are themselves his ("marble") monument.

1. The companion poems "L'Allegro" and "Il Penseroso" are both written in tetrameter couplets, except for the first ten lines, but Milton's virtuosity produces entirely different tempos and sound qualities in the two poems. The Italian titles name, respectively, the cheerful, mirthful man and the melancholy, contemplative man. The poems are carefully balanced and their different values celebrated, though "Il Penseroso's" greater length and final coda may intimate that life's superiority. Mirth, the presiding deity of "L'Allegro," is described in terms that evoke Botticelli's presentation of the Grace Euphrosyne (youthful mirth) and her sisters in his Primavera.

2. The black melancholy recognized and here exorcized by Mirth's man is a disease leading to madness. "Il Penseroso" celebrates "white" melancholy as the temperament of the scholarly, contemplative man, represented in Durer's famous engraving Melancholy. Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy treats the entire range of possibilities.

3. The three-headed hellhound of classical mythology.

4. Near the river Styx, in the underworld.

5. Homer's Cimmereans (Odyssey 11.13–19) live on the outer edge of the world, in perpetual darkness.

6. The three Graces—Euphrosyne (four syllables) figuring Youthful Mirth; Aglaia, Brilliance; and Thalia, Bloom—were commonly taken to be offspring of Venus (Love and Beauty) and Bacchus (god of wine). Milton proceeds, however, to devise

And by men, heart-easing Mirth,
 Whom lovely Venus at a birth
 With two sister Graces more
 To ivy-crowned Bacchus bore;
 Or whether (as some sager sing)
 The frolic wind that breathes the spring,
 Zephyr with Aurora playing,
 As he met her once a-Maying,
 There on beds of violets blue,
 And fresh-blown<sup>o</sup> roses washed in dew, newly opened
 Filled her with thee a daughter fair, ,
 So buxom,<sup>o</sup> blithe, and debonair. lively
 Haste thee nymph, and bring with thee
 Jest and youthful Jollity,
 Quips<sup>o</sup> and Cranks," and wanton Wiles, witty sayings / jokes
 Nods, and Becks,<sup>o</sup> and wreathed Smiles, beckoninas
 Such as hang on Hebe's<sup>7</sup> cheek,
 And love to live in dimple sleek;
 Sport that wrinkled Care derides,
 And Laughter holding both his sides.
 Come, and trip it<sup>o</sup> as ye go dance
 On the light fantastic toe,
 And in thy right hand lead with thee
 The mountain nymph, sweet Liberty;
 And if I give thee honor due,
 Mirth, admit me of thy crew
 To live with her and live with thee,
 In unproved<sup>o</sup> pleasures free; irreproachable
 To hear the lark begin his flight,
 And, singing, startle the dull night,
 From his watchtower in the sides,
 Till the dappled dawn doth rise;
 Then to come in spite oP sorrow, in defiance of
 And at my window bid good morrow,
 Through the sweetbriar or the vine,
 Or the twisted eglantine.
 While the cock with lively din
 Scatters the rear of darkness thin,
 And to the stack or the barn door,
 Stoutly struts his dames before;
 Oft listening how the hounds and horn
 Cheerly rouse the slumbering morn,
 From the side of some hoar<sup>o</sup> hill,
 Through the high wood echoing shrill.
 Sometime walking not unseen
 By hedgerow elms, on hillocks green,
 Right against the eastern gate,
 Where the great sun begins his state,<sup>8</sup>

another, more innocent parentage for Euphrosyne (ascribing it to "some sager," lines 17-24): Zephyr, the West Wind, and Aurora, goddess of the Dawn.

7. Goddess of youth and cupbearer to the gods,
 8. Stately procession, as by a monarch,

Robed in flames and amber light,
 The clouds in thousand liveries dight;<sup>o</sup> dressed
 While the plowman near at hand
 Whistles o'er the furrowed land,
 65 And the milkmaid singeth blithe,
 And the mower whets his scythe,
 And every shepherd tells his tale
 Under the hawthorn in the dale.
 Straight<sup>o</sup> mine eye hath caught new pleasures immediately
 70 Whilst the landscape round it measures,
 Russet lawns and fallows<sup>o</sup> gray, -plowed land
 Where the nibbling flocks do stray,
 Mountains on whose barren breast
 The laboring clouds do often rest;
 75 Meadows trim with daisies pied,<sup>o</sup> multicolored
 Shallow brooks, and rivers wide.
 Towers and battlements it sees
 Bosomed high in tufted trees,
 Where perhaps some beauty lies,
 80 The cynosure<sup>o</sup> of neighboring eyes.
 Hard by, a cottage chimney smokes
 From betwixt two aged oaks,
 Where Corydon and Thyrsis met
 Are at their savory dinner set
 85 Of herbs and other country messes,
 Which the neat-handed<sup>o</sup> Phyllis dresses; dexterous
 And then in haste her bower she leaves,
 With Thestylis<sup>1</sup> to bind the sheaves;
 Or if the earlier season lead
 90 To the tanned<sup>o</sup> haycock in the mead. sun-dried
 Sometimes with secure<sup>o</sup> delight careless
 The upland hamlets will invite,
 When the merry bells ring round
 And the jocund rebecks<sup>2</sup> sound
 95 To many a youth and many a maid,
 Dancing in the checkered shade;
 And young and old come forth to play
 On a sunshine holiday,
 Till the livelong daylight fail;
 100 Then to the spicy nut-brown ale,
 With stories told of many a feat,
 How fairy Mab the junkets<sup>3</sup> eat;
 She was pinched and pulled, she said,
 And he, by friar's lantern led,
 105 Tells how the drudging goblin<sup>4</sup> sweat
 To earn his cream bowl duly set,

9. Literally, the bright poiestar, or North Star, by which mariners steer; here, a splendid object, much gazed at.

1. Milton uses traditional names from classical pastoral—Corydon, Thyrsis, Phyllis, Thestylis—for his rustic English shepherds.

2. A small three-stringed fiddle. "Jocund": merry, sprightly.

3. Sweetmeats, especially with cream. Queen Mab is the fairy queen, consort of Oberon. "She" and "he" in the next two lines are country folk telling of their experiences with fairies.

4. Robin Goodfellow, alias Puck, Pook, or Hobgoblin. "Friar's lantern": will-o'-the-wisp.

When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,
 His shadowy flail hath threshed the corn
 That ten day laborers could not end;
 Then lies him down the lubber fiend,<sup>5</sup>
 And stretched out all the chimney's<sup>0</sup> length, fireplace's
 Basks at the fire his hairy strength;
 And crop-full<sup>0</sup> out of doors he flings satiated
 Ere the first cock his matin rings.
 Thus done the tales, to bed they creep,
 By whispering winds soon lulled asleep.
 Towered cities please us then,
 And the busy hum of men,
 Where throngs of knights and barons bold
 In weeds of peace high triumphs<sup>6</sup> hold,
 With store of ladies, whose bright eyes
 Rain influence,<sup>7</sup> and judge the prize
 Of wit or arms, while both contend
 To win her grace, whom all commend.
 There let Hymen<sup>8</sup> oft appear
 In saffron robe, with taper clear,
 And pomp and feast and revelry,
 With masque and antique<sup>0</sup> pageantry; ancient, also antic
 Such sights as youthful poets dream
 On summer eves by haunted stream.
 Then to the well-trod stage anon,
 If Jonson's learned sock be on,
 Or sweetest Shakespeare, fancy's child,
 Warble his native woodnotes wild."<sup>1</sup>
 And ever against eating cares;<sup>1</sup>
 Lap me in soft Lydian airs,<sup>2</sup>
 Married to immortal verse
 Such as the meeting soul may pierce
 In notes with many a winding bout<sup>o</sup>
 Of linked sweetness long drawn out,
 With wanton heed and giddy cunning,
 The melting voice through mazes running,
 Untwisting all the chains that tie
 The hidden soul of harmony;
 That Orpheus' self may heave his head
 From golden slumber on a bed
 Of heaped Elysian flowers, and hear
 Such strains as would have won the ear
 Of Pluto, to have quite set free

5. Puck, here identified with the folktale goblin, Lob-lie-by-the-fire. Robin traditionally did all manner of drudging work for people, to be rewarded with a bowl of cream.

6. Pageants. "Weeds of peace": courtly raiment.

7. The ladies' eyes are stars and so have astrological influence over the men.

8. Roman god of marriage. An orange-yellow ("saffron") robe and a torch are his attributes.

9. It was conventional to contrast Jonson as a "learned" poet and Shakespeare as a "natural" one, but L'Allegro's views and choices of literature also suits with his nature. "Sock": the comedian's low-heeled slipper, contrasted with the tragedian's buskin, a high-heeled boot.

1. "Eating cares" (Horace, Odes 2.11.18) is one of many classical echoes in the poem.

2. Plato considered "Lydian airs" to be enervating, soft, and sensual; he preferred the solemn Doric mode. Some others thought Lydian airs relaxing and delightful.

Hence vain deluding joys,<sup>2</sup>

 And fancies fond<sup>o</sup> with gaudy shapes possess, foolish
 As thick and numberless
 As the gay motes that people the sunbeams,
 Or likest hovering dreams,
 10 The fickle pensioners of Morpheus'<sup>3</sup> train.
 But hail thou Goddess sage and holy,
 Hail, divinest Melancholy,
 Whose saintly visage is too bright
 To hit<sup>o</sup> the sense of human sight, suit

 O'erlaid with black, staid wisdom's hue;<sup>4</sup>
 Black, but such as in esteem,

 Or that starred Ethiope queen<sup>6</sup> that strove

 The sea nymphs, and their powers offended.
 Yet thou art higher far descended;
 Thee bright-haired Vesta long of yore
 To solitary Saturn bore;<sup>7</sup>
 25 His daughter she (in Saturn's reign
 Such mixture was not held a stain).
 Oft in glimmering bowers and glades
 He met her, and in secret shades

3. Orpheus's music so moved Pluto that he agreed to release Orpheus's dead wife Eurydice (four syllables, accent on the second) from the underworld (Elysium), but he violated the condition set—that he not look back at her—and so lost her again. Milton often uses Orpheus as a figure for the poet.

4. The final lines echo Marlowe's "The Passionate Shepherd to His Love" (p. 1274): "If these delights thy mind may move, / Then live with me and be my love."

1. II Penseroso whose name is Italian for "the thoughtful one," celebrates a melancholy that does not produce madness but the scholarly temperament, ruled by Saturn. See note 2 on p. 1797 to "L' Ailegro."

2. In "II Penseroso," Mirth is not the innocent joys of "L'Allegro," but "vain deluding joys."

3. Morpheus is the god of sleep. "Pensioners": followers.

4. The melancholy humor, caused by black bile, was thought to make the face dark or saturnine—from the ancient god Saturn, allegorized in Neoplatonic philosophy as "the collective angelic mind."

5. Memnon, in Odyssey 11, was a handsome Ethiopian prince; his sister Himera's beauty was mentioned by later commentators. Cf. Song of Solomon 1.5, "I am black but comely."

6. Cassiopeia was turned into a constellation ("starred") for bragging that she was more beautiful than the sea nymphs.

7. Vesta, daughter of Saturn, was goddess of the household and a virgin, as were her priestesses. Milton invented the story of her sexual congress with Saturn on Mount Ida, resulting in Melancholy's birth. Saturn ruled the gods and the world during the Golden Age, which ended when he was murdered by his son Jove.

Of woody Ida's inmost grove,

 The cherub Contemplation;<sup>1</sup>

 Sweet bird that shunn'st the noise of folly,
 Most musical, most melancholy!
 Thee chantress oft the woods among
 I woo to hear thy evensong;<sup>4</sup>
 65 And missing thee, I walk unseen
 On the dry smooth-shaven green,
 To behold the wandering moon,
 Riding near her highest noon,
 Like one that had been led astray
 70 Through the heaven's wide pathless way;
 And oft as if her head she bowed,
 Stooping through a fleecy cloud.
 Oft on a plat<sup>0</sup> of rising ground, plot, open field

8. A delicate black cloth.

9. Still as a statue.

1. The special function of cherubim is contemplation of God; Milton alludes also (line 53) to their identification with the wheels of the mystical chariot/throne of God described by Ezekiel (Ezekiel 10).

2. The nightingale (the bird into which Philomela was transformed after her rape by her brother-in-law Tereus) traditionally sings a mournful song. " 'Less': unless.

3. Goddess of the moon, also associated with Hecate, goddess of the underworld, who drives a pair of sleepless dragons.

4. The evening liturgy traditionally sung by cloistered monks and nuns ("chantress" evokes such a singer); "L'Allegro's" cock, by contrast, calls hearers to the morning liturgy, "matins" (line 114).

I hear the far-off curfew sound

Or if the air will not permit,
Some still removed place will fit,
Where glowing embers through the room
so Teach light to counterfeit a gloom,
Far from all resort of mirth,
Save the cricket on the hearth,
Or the bellman's' drowsy charm,
To bless the doors from nightly harm;

5. Night watchman who rang a bell to mark the hours.

6. The Great Bear constellation never sets in northern skies.

7. Various esoteric books (actually written in the 3rd and 4th centuries) were attributed to an ancient Egyptian, Hermes Trismegistus ("thrice great"). Neoplatonists made him the father of all knowledge; later he became a patron of magicians and alchemists. To "unsphere" Plato is to bring him magically back to earth from whatever sphere he now inhabits—in practical terms, by reading his books.

8. Demons (daemons), halfway between gods and men, preside over the four elements.

9. Royal robe, worn by tragic actors.

1. Tragedies about Thebes include Sophocles' Oedipus cycle, those about the line of Pelops, Aeschylus's Oresteia, and those about Troy, Euripides' Trojan Women.

2. The buskin (high boot) of tragedy, contrasted with the "sock" of comedy ("L'Allegro," line 132).

3. Mythical poet-priest of the pre-Homeric age, supposedly a son or pupil of Orpheus.

4. For the story of Orpheus, see "L'Allegro," line 145, and note 5 (on line 150).

5. Chaucer, whose Squire's Tale is unfinished.

And if aught<sup>0</sup> else great bards beside anything

6. A capsule definition of allegory.

7. The now soberly dressed Aurora, goddess of the dawn, once fell in love with Cephalus ("the Attic boy") and hunted with him. "Tricked and frownced": adorned and with frizzled hair.

8. Roman god of woodlands.

9. Massive and strong. "Antic": covered with quaint or grotesque carvings, also antique.

1. Dressed. "Storied windows": stained-glass windows depicting biblical stories.

As may with sweetness, through mine ear,

 And bring all heaven before mine eyes.
 And may at last my weary age
 Find out the peaceful hermitage,
 The hairy gown and mossy cell,
 170 Where I may sit and rightly spell<sup>o</sup> study
 Of every star that heaven doth shew,
 And every herb that sips the dew,
 Till old experience do attain
 To something like prophetic strain.
 175 These pleasures, Melancholy, give,<sup>2</sup>
 And I with thee will choose to live.

Lycidas Milton wrote this pastoral elegy for a volume of Latin, Greek, and English poems, Iusta Eduourdo King Naufrago (1638), commemorating the death by shipwreck of his college classmate Edward King, three years younger than himself. King was not a close friend, but Milton's deepest emotions, anxieties, and fears are engaged here because, as poet and minister, King could serve Milton as a kind of alter ego. Still engaged in preparing himself, at the age of twenty-nine, for his projected poetic career, Milton was forced to recognize the uncertainty of all human endeavors. King's death posed the problem of mortality in its most agonizing form: the death of the young, the unfulfilled, the good seems to deny all meaning to life, to demonstrate the uselessness of exceptional talent, lofty ambition, and noble ideals of service to God.

While the poem expresses Milton's anxieties, it also serves as an announcement of his grand ambitions. Like Edmund Spenser, Milton saw mastery of the pastoral mode as the first step in a great poetic career. In "Lycidas" that mastery is complete. In the tradition that Milton received from classical and Renaissance predecessors, including Theocritus, Virgil, Petrarch, and Spenser, the pastoral landscape was invested with profound significances that had little indeed to do with the hard life of agricultural labor. In lines 25–36, Milton evokes the conventional pastoral topic of carefree shepherds who engage in singing contests, watch contentedly over their grazing sheep, fall in love, and write poetry, offering an image of human life in harmony with nature and the seasonal processes of fruition and mellowing before the winter of death. That classical image of the shepherd as poet is mingled with the Christian understanding of the shepherd as pastor (Christ is the Good Shepherd), and sometimes as the prophet called to his mission from the fields, like David or Isaiah. Milton calls on all these associations, along with other motifs specific to pastoral funeral elegy: the recollection of past friendship, a questioning of destiny for cutting short this life, a procession of mourners (often mythological figures), and a "flower passage" in which nature pays tribute to the dead shepherd.

"Lycidas" uses but continually tests and challenges the assumptions and conventions of pastoral elegy, making for profound tensions and clashes of tone. The pastoral "oaten flute" is interrupted by divine pronouncements and bitter invective; nature seems rife with examples of meaningless waste and early death; the "blind Fury" often cuts off the poet's "thin-spun life" before he can win fame; good pastors die young while corrupt "Blind mouths" remain; and Nature cannot even pay her tribute of flowers to Lycidas's funeral bier since he welters in the deep, his bones hurled to the "bottom of the monstrous world." In response to these fierce challenges come pronouncements by Apollo and St. Peter, and images of protection and resurrection in nature and myth, culminating in a new vision of pastoral: in heaven Lycidas enjoys a perfected pastoral existence, and in the coda the consoled shepherd arises and carries his song to "pastures new." Milton's questioning leads to a final reassertion of confidence in his calling as national poet. Moreover, in the headnote added in the 1645 volume of his Poems, he lays claim to prophetic authority, for the Church of England clergy he denounced as corrupt in 1638 had mostly been expelled from their livings by Puritan reformers in 1645.

2. Compare "L'Allegro," lines 151–52 (p. 1801), and the final lines of Marlowe's "Passionate Shepherd" (p. 1274).

Lycidas

In this monody<sup>1</sup> the author bewails a learned friend, unfortunately drowned in his passage from Chester on the Irish seas, 1637. And by occasion foretells the ruin of our corrupted clergy, then in their height.

Yet once more, O ye laurels, and once more
 Ye myrtles brown, with ivy never sere,<sup>2</sup>
 I come to pluck your berries harsh and crude," unripe
 And with forced fingers rude," unskilled

5 Shatter your leaves before the mellowing year.
 Bitter constraint, and sad occasion dear,<sup>0</sup> heartfelt, also dire
 Compels me to disturb your season due;
 For Lycidas is dead, dead ere his prime,<sup>3</sup>
 Young Lycidas, and hath not left his peer.

10 Who would not sing for Lycidas? He knew
 Himself to sing, and build the lofty rhyme.<sup>4</sup>
 He must not float upon his watery bier
 Unwept, and welter<sup>0</sup> to the parching wind, he tossed about
 Without the meed<sup>0</sup> of some melodious tear.<sup>0</sup> reward/elegy

15 Begin then, sisters of the sacred well<sup>5</sup>
 That from beneath the seat of Jove doth spring,
 Begin, and somewhat loudly sweep the string.
 Hence with denial vain, and coy excuse;
 So may some gentle muse<sup>6</sup>

20 With lucky words favor my destined urn,
 And as he passes turn,
 And bid fair peace be to my sable shroud.
 For we were nursed upon the selfsame hill,
 Fed the same flock, by fountain, shade, and rill.

25 Together both, ere the high lawns<sup>0</sup> appeared upland pastures
 Under the opening eyelids of the morn,

1. A dirge sung by a single voice, though this one incorporates several other voices. Milton added this headnote in the edition of 1645; it identifies Milton as a prophet in the passage denouncing the clergy in this 1638 poem (lines 112–31) and invites the reader to remember Milton's 1641–42 polemics against the English bishops and church government (now dismantled).

2. "Laurels," associated with Apollo and poetry; "myrtle," associated with Venus and love; "ivy," associated with Bacchus and frenzy (also learning). All three are evergreens ("never sere") linked to poetic inspiration.

3. King was twenty-five.

4. King had written several poems of compliment in the patronage mode, chiefly on members of the royal family.

5. The nine (sister) Muses called (probably) from the fountain Aganippe, near Mount Helicon.

6. Here, some kindly poet.

We drove afield, and both together heard
 What time the grayfly winds her sultry horn,<sup>7</sup>
 Battening<sup>0</sup> our flocks with the fresh dews of night, feeding fat
 30 Oft till the star that rose at evening bright<sup>8</sup>
 Toward heaven's descent had sloped his westering wheel.
 Meanwhile the rural ditties were not mute,
 Tempered to th' oaten flute,<sup>9</sup>
 Rough satyrs danced, and fauns with cloven heel
 35 From the glad sound would not be absent long,
 And old Damoetas<sup>1</sup> loved to hear our song.
 But O the heavy change, now thou art gone,
 Now thou art gone, and never must return!
 Thee, shepherd, thee the woods and desert caves,
 40 With wild thyme and the gadding<sup>0</sup> vine o'ergrown, wandering
 And all their echoes mourn.
 The willows and the hazel copses<sup>0</sup> green thickets of trees
 Shall now no more be seen,
 Fanning their joyous leaves to thy soft lays.
 45 As killing as the canker<sup>2</sup> to the rose, cankerworm
 Or taint-worm<sup>2</sup> to the weanling herds that graze,
 Or frost to flowers that their gay wardrobe wear
 When first the white-thorn blows;<sup>3</sup>
 Such, Lycidas, thy loss to shepherd's ear.
 50 Where were ye, nymphs,<sup>4</sup> when the remorseless deep
 Closed o'er the head of your loved Lycidas?
 For neither were ye playing on the steep
 Where your old bards, the famous Druids,<sup>5</sup> lie,
 Nor on the shaggy top of Mona high,
 55 Nor yet where Deva spreads her wizard stream:<sup>6</sup>
 Ay me! I fondly dream—
 Had ye been there—for what could that have done?
 What could the Muse<sup>7</sup> herself that Orpheus bore,
 The Muse herself, for her enchanting<sup>8</sup> son
 60 Whom universal Nature did lament,
 When by the rout that made the hideous roar
 His gory visage down the stream was sent,
 Down the swift Hebrus to the Lesbian shore?<sup>9</sup>
 Alas! What boots<sup>0</sup> it with incessant care profits
 65 To tend the homely slighted shepherd's trade,
 And strictly meditate the thankless muse?<sup>1</sup>

7. I.e., heard the grayfly when she buzzes.

8. Hesperus, the evening star.

9. Panpipes, played traditionally by shepherds in pastoral.

1. A type name from pastoral poetry, possibly referring to some particular tutor at Cambridge. "Satyrs": goat-legged woodland creatures, Pan's boisterous attendants.

2. Internal parasite fatal to newly weaned lambs.

3. Hawthorn blooms.

4. Nature deities.

5. Priestly poet-kings of Celtic Britain, who worshipped the forces of nature. They are buried on the mountain ("steep") Kerig-y-Druidion in Wales.

6. Mona is the island of Anglesey. Deva, the river Dee in Cheshire, was magic ("wizard") because its shifting stream foretold prosperity or dearth for the land. All these places are in the West Country, near where King drowned.

7. Calliope, Muse of epic poetry, was the mother of Orpheus.

8. Implies both song and magic; the root word survives in "incantation."

9. Orpheus's song was drowned out by the screams of a mob ("rout") of Thracian women, the Bacchantes, who then were able to tear him to pieces and throw his gory head into the river Hebrus, which carried it—still singing—to the island of Lesbos, bringing that island the gift of poetry.

1. I.e., study to write poetry (a Virgilian phrase).

Were it not better done as others use,
 To sport with Amaryllis in the shade,
 Or with the tangles of Neaera's hair?<sup>2</sup>
 Fame is the spur that the clear spirit doth raise
 (That last infirmity of noble mind)
 To scorn delights, and live laborious days;
 But the fair guerdon<sup>0</sup> when we hope to find,
 And think to burst out into sudden blaze,
 Comes the blind Fury<sup>3</sup> with th' abhorred shears,
 And slits the thin-spun life. "But not the praise," Phoebus replied, and touched my trembling ears;<sup>4</sup>
 "Fame is no plant that grows on mortal soil,
 Nor in the glistening foil<sup>5</sup>
 Set off to th' world, nor in broad rumor lies,
 But lives and spreads aloft by those pure eyes,
 And perfect witness of all-judging Jove;
 As he pronounces lastly on each deed,
 Of so much fame in heaven expect thy meed."<sup>0</sup>

reivardreward

O fountain Arethuse, and thou honored flood,
 Smooth-sliding Mincius, crowned with vocal reeds,
 That strain I heard was of a higher mood.<sup>6</sup>
 But now my oat<sup>c</sup> proceeds,
 And listens to the herald of the sea<sup>7</sup>
 That came in Neptune's plea.
 He asked the waves, and asked the felon<sup>0</sup> winds,
 "What hard mishap hath doomed this gentle swain?"
 And questioned every gust of rugged<sup>0</sup> wings
 That blows from off each beaked promontory;
 They knew not of his story,
 And sage Hippotades<sup>8</sup> their answer brings,
 That not a blast was from his dungeon strayed;
 The air was calm, and on the level brine,
 Sleek Panope<sup>9</sup> with all her sisters played.
 It was that fatal and perfidious bark,
 Built in th' eclipse,<sup>1</sup> and rigged with curses dark,
 That sunk so low that sacred head of thine.

pastoral flutesavageshepherdstormy

Next Camus,<sup>2</sup> reverend sire, went footing slow,
 His mantle hairy, and his bonnet sedge,<sup>0</sup>
 Inwrought with figures dim, and on the edge
 Like to that sanguine flower inscribed with woe.<sup>3</sup>
 "Ah! who hath reft," quoth he, "my dearest pledge?"

formed of reeds

2. "Amaryllis" and "Neaera" (Nee-eye-ra), conventional names for pretty shepherdesses wooed in song by pastoral shepherds.

3. Atropos, one of the three Fates, whose scissors cuts the thread of human life after her sisters spin and measure it. Milton makes her a savage, and blind, Fury.

4. Phoebus Apollo, god of poetic inspiration. In Eclogue 6.3–4 he plucked Virgil's ears, warning him against impatient ambition.

5. Flashy, glittering metal foil, set under a gem to enhance its brilliance.

6. Arethusa was a fountain in Sicily associated with Greek pastoral poetry (Theocritus), Mincius a river in Lombardy associated with Latin pastoral (Virgil); Milton invokes them as a return to the pastoral after the "higher mood" of Apollo's speech.

7. Triton, who comes gathering evidence about the accident for Neptune's court.

8. Aeolus, god of winds.

9. The chief Nereid, or sea nymph.

1. Eclipses were taken as evil omens.

2. God of the river Cam, representing Cambridge University.

3. Like the AI AI cry of grief supposedly found on the hyacinth, a "sanguine flower" sprung from the blood of the youth Hyacinthus, beloved of Apollo and accidentally killed by him.

Last came and last did go
 The pilot of the Galilean lake;<sup>4</sup>
 110 Two massy keys he bore of metals twain
 (The golden opes, the iron shuts amain).<sup>0</sup> forever
 He shook his mitered locks, and stern bespake:
 "How well could I have spared for<sup>o</sup> thee, young swain, in place of Enow<sup>o</sup> of such as for their bellies' sake enough (plural)
 ii5 Creep and intrude and climb into the fold!<sup>5</sup>
 Of other care they little reckoning make,
 Than how to scramble at the shearers' feast,<sup>6</sup>
 And shove away the worthy bidden guest.
 Blind mouths!<sup>7</sup> that scarce themselves know how to hold 120 A sheep-hook, or have learned aught else the least
 That to the faithful herdsman's art belongs!
 What recks it them? What need they? They are sped;<sup>8</sup>
 And when they list,<sup>0</sup> their lean<sup>0</sup> and flashy songs choose / meager
 Grate on their scrannel<sup>0</sup> pipes of wretched straw. harsh, thin
 125 The hungry sheep look up, and are not fed,
 But swol'n with wind, and the rank mist they draw,<sup>0</sup> inhale
 Rot inwardly,<sup>9</sup> and foul contagion spread,
 Besides what the grim wolf with privy paw<sup>1</sup>
 Daily devours apace, and nothing said.
 130 But that two-handed engine at the door<sup>2</sup>
 Stands ready to smite once, and smite no more."
 Return, Alpheus,<sup>3</sup> the dread voice is past,
 That shrunk thy streams; return, Sicilian muse,
 And call the vales, and bid them hither cast
 135 Their bells and flowerets of a thousand hues.<sup>4</sup>
 Ye valleys low where the mild whispers use,<sup>0</sup> frequent
 Of shades and wanton winds, and gushing brooks,
 On whose fresh lap the swart star<sup>5</sup> sparely looks,
 Throw hither all your quaint enameled eyes,<sup>6</sup>
 HO That on the green turf suck the honeyed showers,
 And purple all the ground with vernal flowers.

4. St. Peter, originally a fisherman on the sea of Galilee, was Christ's chief apostle; his keys open and shut the gates of heaven. He wears a bishop's miter (line 112): Milton in his "antiprelatical tracts" allows for a special role for apostles but denies any distinction in office between bishops and ministers in the later church.

5. Cf. John 10.1: "He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber."

6. Festive suppers for the sheepshearers (hence, the material rewards of their ministry). "Worthy bidden guest" (next line): cf. Matthew 22.8, the parable of the marriage feast, "they which were bidden were not worthy."

7. Collapsing blindness with greed, this audacious metaphor accuses churchmen of shirking oversight (episcopus, bishop, means "supervision") and of glutting themselves, although pastors ought to feed their flocks. "Sheep-hook" (next line): the bishop's staff is in the form of a shepherd's crook.

8. Provided for. "What recks it them?": what do they care?

9. Sheep rot is used as an allegory of church corruption by both Petrarch and Dante.

1. I.e., Roman Catholicism, whose agents operated in secret ("privy"). Conversions in the court of the Roman Catholic queen Henrietta Maria were notorious.

2. A celebrated crux, variously explained as the two houses of Parliament, St. Peter's keys, the two-edged sword of the Book of Revelation, a sword wielded by two hands, and by other guesses; what is clear is the denunciation of impending, apocalyptic vengeance. In Matthew 24.33 the Last Judgment is said to be "even at the doors."

3. A river in Arcadia, fabled to pass unmixed through the sea before mixing its waters with the "fountain Arethuse" in Sicily, again reviving the pastoral mode after the fierce denunciation of Peter (see lines 85-87).

4. A catalogue of flowers was a common pastoral topic. "Bells": bell-shaped flowers.

5. The Dog Star, Sirius, associated with the heats of late summer.

6. Flowers curiously patterned and adorned with many colors.

Bring the rathe<sup>0</sup> primrose that forsaken dies, early
 The tufted crow-toe, and pale jessamine,<sup>7</sup>
 The white pink, and the pansy freaked<sup>0</sup> with jet, flecked.
 The glowing violet,
 The musk rose, and the well-attired woodbine,
 With cowslips wan<sup>o</sup> that hang the pensive head, pale
 And every flower that sad embroidery wears:
 Bid amaranthus<sup>8</sup> all his beauty shed,
 And daffadillies fill their cups with tears,
 To strew the laureate hearse<sup>0</sup> where Lycid lies. laurel-decked bier
 For so to interpose a little ease,
 Let our frail thoughts dally with false surmise.<sup>9</sup>
 Ay me! whilst thee the shores and sounding seas
 Wash far away, where'er thy bones are hurled,
 Whether beyond the stormy Hebrides,<sup>1</sup>
 Where thou perhaps under the whelming<sup>0</sup> tide roaring, overwhelming
 Visit'st the bottom of the monstrous world;
 Or whether thou, to our moist vows denied,
 Sleep'st by the fable of Bellerus old,<sup>2</sup>
 Where the great vision of the guarded mount
 Looks toward Namancos and Bayona's hold;<sup>3</sup>
 Look homeward angel now, and melt with ruth:<sup>o</sup> pity
 And, O ye dolphins,<sup>4</sup> waft the hapless youth.
 Weep no more, woeful shepherds, weep no more,
 For Lycidas your sorrow is not dead,
 Sunk though he be beneath the wat'ry floor;
 So sinks the daystar<sup>0</sup> in the ocean bed, the sun
 And yet anon repairs his drooping head,
 And tricks<sup>0</sup> his beams, and with new-spangled ore adorns, trims
 Flames in the forehead of the morning sky:
 So Lycidas sunk low, but mounted high,
 Through the dear might of him that walked the waves,<sup>5</sup>
 Where, other groves and other streams along,<sup>6</sup>
 With nectar pure his oozy<sup>o</sup> locks he laves, moist
 And hears the unexpressive nuptial song,<sup>7</sup>
 In the blest kingdoms meek of joy and love.
 There entertain him all the saints above,
 In solemn troops and sweet societies
 That sing, and singing in their glory move,

7. White jasmine. "Tufted crow-toe": hyacinth or buttercup, growing in clusters. "Woodbine" (line 146): honeysuckle.

8. In Greek, "unfading," a legendary flower of immortality, one that never fades.

9. False, because Lycidas's body is not here to receive floral and poetic tributes.

1. Islands off the coast of Scotland, the northern terminus of the Irish Sea.

2. A fabulous giant invented by Milton as the origin of the Latin name for Land's End in Cornwall, Bellerium. "Monstrous world" (line 158): filled with monsters, also, immense.

3. "The guarded mount" is St. Michael's Mount in Cornwall, where the archangel was said to have appeared to fishermen in 495, and from which he is envisioned as looking over the Atlantic toward a region and fortress ("Bayona's hold") in northern Spain, thereby guarding Protestant England against the continuing Roman Catholic threat.

4. Dolphins brought the Greek poet Arion safely ashore, for love of his verse, and also performed other sea rescues.

5. Christ, who rescued Peter when he tried and failed to walk on the Sea of Galilee (Matthew 14.25-31).

6. See Revelation 22.1-2, on the "pure river of water of life," and the "tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruits."

7. Inexpressible hymn of joy sung at "the marriage supper of the Lamb" (Revelation 19).

And wipe the tears forever from his eyes.
 Now, Lycidas, the shepherds weep no more;
 Henceforth thou art the Genius<sup>8</sup> of the shore,
 In thy large recompense, and shalt be good
 185 To all that wander in that perilous flood.
 Thus sang the uncouth swain<sup>9</sup> to th' oaks and rills,
 While the still morn went out with sandals gray;
 He touched the tender stops of various quills,<sup>1</sup>
 With eager thought warbling his Doric<sup>2</sup> lay:
 190 And now the sun had stretched out all the hills,
 And now was dropped into the western bay;
 At last he rose, and twitched his mantle blue:<sup>3</sup>
 Tomorrow to fresh woods, and pastures new.

*From The Reason of Church Government Urged

[PLANS AND PROJECTS]

* * * Concerning therefore this wayward subject against prelaty,<sup>2</sup> the touching whereof is so distasteful and disquietous<sup>3</sup> to a number of men, as by what hath been said I may deserve of charitable readers to be credited that neither envy nor gall hath entered me upon this controversy, but the enforcement of conscience only and a preventive fear lest the omitting of this duty should be against me when I would store up to myself the good provision of peaceful hours; so lest it should be still imputed to me, as I have found it hath been, that some self-pleasing humor of vainglory hath incited me to contest with men of high estimation, now while green years are upon my head;<sup>4</sup> from this needless surmial I shall hope to dissuade the intelligent and equal auditor, if I can but say successfully that which in this exigent<sup>5</sup> behooves me; although I would be heard only, if it might be, by the elegant and learned reader, to whom principally for a while I shall beg leave I may address myself. To him it will be no new thing though I tell him that if I hunted after praise by the ostentation of wit and learning, I should not write thus out of mine own season

8. Local guardian spirit.

9. Another voice now seems to take over from the previously heard voice of the "uncouth swain" (unknown, unskilled shepherd).

1. The oaten stalks of panpipes.

2. Rustic, the dialect of Theocritus and other famous Greek pastoral poets.

3. The color of hope. "Twitched": pulled up around his shoulders.

1. This was the fourth of five tracts Milton published attacking the bishops, liturgy, and church government of the Church of England, in support of Presbyterian reform, though these tracts also show signs of the more radical positions he will soon adopt. This 1642 treatise is the first one to carry his name, so the autobiographical passage is in part to introduce himself to the reader and explain why, though a layman and a young man, he feels himself called, and well prepared, to write on theology and ecclesiastical order. Beyond that rhetorical purpose, this is also the fullest account Milton ever set forth of his poetics: his sense of the poet's calling, of the nature and multiple uses of poetry, and of the several genres he already has employed or hopes to attempt. It also registers his inner conflict between duty (to serve God and his church with his learning) and desire (to write poetry).

2. Government by prelates (bishops). "Wayward": untoward, unpromising.

3. Distressing.

4. Milton's opponents, Bishops Joseph Hall, James Ussher, and Lancelot Andrewes, were famous, and he was still almost unknown, at age thirty-four.

5. Urgent occasion. "Equal": impartial.

when I have neither yet completed to my mind the full circle of my private studies,<sup>6</sup> although I complain not of any insufficiency to the matter in hand; or, were I ready to my wishes, it were a folly to commit anything elaborately composed to the careless and interrupted listening of these tumultuous times. Next, if I were wise only to mine own ends, I would certainly take such a subject as of itself might catch applause, whereas this hath all the disadvantages on the contrary, and such a subject as the publishing whereof might be delayed at pleasure, and time enough to pencil it over with all the curious touches of art, even to the perfection of a faultless picture; whenas in this argument the not deferring is of great moment to the good speeding,<sup>7</sup> that if solidity have leisure to do her office, art cannot have much. Lastly, I should not choose this manner of writing, wherein knowing myself inferior to myself, led by the genial power of nature<sup>8</sup> to another task, I have the use, as I may account it, but of my left hand. And though I shall be foolish in saying more to this purpose, yet, since it will be such a folly as wisest men going about to commit have only confessed and so committed, I may trust with more reason, because with more folly, to have courteous pardon. For although a poet, soaring in the high region of his fancies with his garland and singing robes about him, might without apology speak more of himself than I mean to do, yet for me sitting here below in the cool element of prose, a mortal thing among many readers of no empyreal conceit,<sup>9</sup> to venture and divulge unusual things of myself, I shall petition to the gentler sort, it may not be envy<sup>1</sup> to me.

I must say, therefore, that after I had from my first years by the ceaseless diligence and care of my father (whom God recompense) been exercised to the tongues and some sciences, as my age would suffer,<sup>2</sup> by sundry masters and teachers both at home and at the schools, it was found that whether aught was imposed me by them that had the overlooking, or betaken to of mine own choice in English or other tongue, prosing or versing (but chiefly this latter), the style, by certain vital signs it had, was likely to live. But much latelier in the private academies of Italy,<sup>3</sup> whither I was favored to resort—perceiving that some trifles which I had in memory, composed at under twenty or thereabout (for the manner is that everyone must give some proof of his wit<sup>4</sup> and reading there) met with acceptance above what was looked for, and other things which I had shifted in scarcity of books and conveniences to patch up amongst them, were received with written encomiums,<sup>5</sup> which the Italian is not forward to bestow on men of this side the Alps—I began thus far to assent both to them and divers of my friends here at home, and not less to an inward prompting which now grew daily upon me, that by labor and intent study (which I take to be my portion in this life) joined with the strong propensity of nature, I might perhaps leave something so written to aftertimes, as they should not willingly let it die. These thoughts at once possessed me, and these

6. After taking his B.A. and M.A. degrees from Cambridge, Milton spent nearly six more years in private study at home; he was still continuing that program of reading.

7. Prompt publication is essential in polemic, so substance rather than art must be the priority. "Office": duty.

8. Intellectual gifts or natural disposition.

9. Without sublime and elevated conceits.

1. Cause for odium or disrespect.

2. Admit. "Tongues": foreign languages. In Ad

Patrem Milton says that as a boy he learned Latin, Greek, French, Italian, and Hebrew.

3. When on the grand tour of the Continent (1638–39) Milton enjoyed attending academies in Rome and especially Florence, which were centers for literary, scientific, and social exchange.

4. Ingenuity, creative powers; Milton read some of his Latin poems to the academies.

5. Praises. Milton published five of these encomiums, four in Latin, one in Italian, as prefatory material to the Latin part of his 1645 Poenis.

other: that if I were certain to write as men buy leases, for three lives and downward,<sup>6</sup> there ought no regard be sooner had than to God's glory by the honor and instruction of my country. For which cause, and not only for that I knew it would be hard to arrive at the second rank among the Latins, I applied myself to that resolution which Ariosto followed against the persuasions of Bembo,<sup>7</sup> to fix all the industry and art I could unite to the adorning of my native tongue; not to make verbal curiosities the end—that were a toilsome vanity—but to be an interpreter and relater of the best and sagest things among mine own citizens throughout this island in the mother dialect. That what the greatest and choicest wits of Athens, Rome, or modern Italy, and those Hebrews of old did for their country, I, in my proportion, with this over and above of being a Christian,<sup>8</sup> might do for mine; not caring to be once named abroad, though perhaps I could attain to that, but content with these British islands as my world; whose fortune hath hitherto been that if the Athenians, as some say, made their small deeds great and renowned by their eloquent writers, England hath had her noble achievements made small by the unskillful handling of monks and mechanics.

Time serves not now, and perhaps I might seem too profuse to give any certain account of what the mind at home in the spacious circuits of her musing hath liberty to propose to herself, though of highest hope and hardest attempting: whether that epic form whereof the two poems of Homer and those other two of Virgil and Tasso are a diffuse, and the book of Job a brief, model;<sup>9</sup> or whether the rules of Aristotle herein are strictly to be kept, or nature to be followed,<sup>1</sup> which in them that know art and use judgment is no transgression but an enriching of art; and lastly, what king or knight before the conquest<sup>2</sup> might be chosen in whom to lay the pattern of a Christian hero. And as Tasso gave to a prince of Italy his choice whether he would command him to write of Godfrey's expedition against the infidels, or Belisarius against the Goths, or Charlemagne against the Lombards;<sup>3</sup> if to the instinct of nature and the emboldening of art aught may be trusted, and that there be nothing adverse in our climate<sup>4</sup> or the fate of this age, it haply would be no rashness from an equal diligence and inclination to present the like offer in our own ancient stories; or whether those dramatic constitutions<sup>5</sup> wherein Sophocles and Euripides reign shall be found more doctrinal and exemplary to a nation. The Scripture also affords us a divine pastoral drama in the Song of Solomon, consisting of two persons and a double chorus, as Origen rightly judges. And the Apocalypse of St. John is the majestic image of a high and stately tragedy, shutting up and intermingling her solemn scenes and acts with a sevenfold

6. Leases were often drawn for a tenancy to run through the longest-lived of three named persons.

7. Rejecting Cardinal Bembo's advice, Ariosto said he would rather be first among the Italian poets than second among those <sup>W</sup>riting Latin.

8. The advantage would be in having "true" subjects to write about.

9. The great models for the "diffuse" or long, epic were Homer's Iliad and Odyssey, Virgil's Aeneid, and Torquato Tasso's Gerusalemme liberata; there was also a long tradition of reading the Book of Job as a "brief" epic, a moral conflict between Job and Satan. Milton's brief epic, Paradise Regained (1671), makes some use of that model. For all the genres he discusses, Milton cites both classical and biblical models.

1. One contemporary debate concerned whether the Aristotelian rule of beginning in medias res was to be followed, or Ariosto's "natural" method of beginning at the beginning of the story.

2. At first Milton considered as potential epic subjects King Arthur, who fought against invading Saxons, and King Alfred, who warred with invading Danes; he excluded those after the Norman Conquest.

3. Tasso offered this choice to his patron, Alfonso II d'Este, Duke of Ferrara.

4. Milton often speculated that the cold climate of England might not be conducive to poetry, as the warmer climate of Italy and Greece had been.

5. Plays.

chorus of hallelujahs and harping symphonies; and this my opinion the grave authority of Paraeus, commenting that book, is sufficient to confirm.<sup>6</sup> Or if occasion shall lead to imitate those magnificent odes and hymns wherein Pindarus and Callimachus<sup>7</sup> are in most things worthy, some others in their frame judicious, in their matter most an end<sup>8</sup> faulty. But those frequent songs throughout the law and prophets beyond all these, not in their divine argument alone, but in the very critical art of composition, may be easily made appear over all the kinds of lyric poesy to be incomparable.<sup>9</sup> These abilities, wheresoever they be found, are the inspired gift of God rarely bestowed, but yet to some (though most abuse) in every nation; and are of power beside the office of a pulpit to inbreed and cherish in a great people the seeds of virtue and public civility, to allay the perturbations of the mind and set the affections in right tune, to celebrate in glorious and lofty hymns the throne and equipage of God's almightiness, and what he works and what he suffers to be wrought with high providence in his church, to sing the victorious agonies of martyrs and saints, the deeds and triumphs of just and pious nations doing valiantly through faith against the enemies of Christ, to deplore the general relapses of kingdoms and states from justice and God's true worship. Lastly, whatsoever in religion is holy and sublime, in virtue amiable or grave, whatsoever hath passion or admiration in all the changes of that which is called fortune from without or the wily subtleties and refluxes of man's thoughts from within, all these things with a solid and treatable smoothness to paint out and describe.<sup>1</sup> Teaching over the whole book of sanctity and virtue through all the instances of example, with such delight to those especially of soft and delicious temper,<sup>2</sup> who will not so much as look upon truth herself unless they see her elegantly dressed, that whereas the paths of honesty and good life appear now rugged and difficult, though they be indeed easy and pleasant, they would then appear to all men both easy and pleasant, though they were rugged and difficult indeed. And what a benefit this would be to our youth and gentry may be soon guessed by what we know of the corruption and bane which they suck in daily from the writings and interludes of libidinous and ignorant poetasters,<sup>3</sup> who, having scarce ever heard of that which is the main consistence of a true poem, the choice of such persons as they ought to introduce, and what is moral and decent to each one, do for the most part lap up<sup>4</sup> vicious principles in sweet pills to be swallowed down, and make the taste of virtuous documents harsh and sour.

But because the spirit of man cannot demean<sup>5</sup> itself lively in this body without some recreating intermission of labor and serious things, it were happy for the commonwealth if our magistrates, as in those famous governments of old, would take into their care, not only the deciding of our contentious law cases and brawls, but the managing of our public sports and festival pastimes, that

6. Sophocles and Euripides are supreme examples of Greek tragedy; the Scripture models for drama are the Song of Solomon as a "divine pastoral drama" (Milton cites Origen, an Alexandrine Father of the 3rd century), and the Book of Revelation as a "high and stately tragedy" (he cites David Paraeus, a German theologian of the 16th and 17th centuries).

7. Pindar, a 5th century B.C.E. Greek poet, wrote numerous odes especially on winners of the Olympic games; Callimachus, a 3rd century B.C.E. Alexandrine Greek, wrote elegant elegiac verse on the origin of various myths and rituals.

8. Almost entirely.

9. He thinks especially of the Psalms, often compared to classical lyric.

1. See the wide range of kinds and subjects and functions suggested for the serious national poet.

2. Temperament. Milton here paraphrases Horace's formula echoed by Sidney and Jonson, that poetry both teaches and delights, and that it encourages virtuous endeavor.

3. Some of the pseudo-poets of the Cavalier court who wrote on lascivious topics.

4. Roll up.

they might be, not such as were authorized a while since,<sup>6</sup> the provocations of drunkenness and lust, but such as may inure and harden our bodies by martial exercises to all warlike skill and performance, and may civilize, adorn, and make discreet our minds by the learned and affable meeting of frequent academies, and the procurement of wise and artful recitations sweetened with eloquent and graceful enticements to the love and practice of justice, temperance, and fortitude, instructing and bettering the nation at all opportunities, that the call of wisdom and virtue may be heard everywhere, as Solomon saith: "She crieth without, she uttereth her voice in the streets, in the top of high places, in the chief concourse, and in the openings of the gates."<sup>7</sup> Whether this may not be, not only in pulpits, but after another persuasive method,<sup>8</sup> at set and solemn panegyries, in theaters, porches,<sup>9</sup> or what other place or way may win most upon the people to receive at once both recreation and instruction, let them in authority consult.

The thing which I had to say, and those intentions which have lived within me ever since I could conceive myself anything worth to my country, I return to crave excuse that urgent reason hath plucked from me by an abortive and foredated discovery.<sup>1</sup> And the accomplishment of them lies not but in a power above man's to promise; but that none hath by more studious ways endeavored, and with more unwearied spirit that none shall, that I dare almost aver of myself as far as life and free leisure will extend; and that the land had once enfranchised herself from this impertinent<sup>2</sup> yoke of prelaty, under whose inquisitorious and tyrannical duncery no free and splendid wit can flourish. Neither do I think it shame to covenant with any knowing reader that for some few years yet I may go on trust with him toward the payment of what I am now indebted, as being a work not to be raised from the heat of youth or the vapors of wine, like that which flows at waste from the pen of some vulgar amonist or the trencher fury of a rhyming parasite, nor to be obtained by the invocation of Dame Memory and her siren daughters,<sup>3</sup> but by devout prayer to that Eternal Spirit who can enrich with all utterance and knowledge, and sends out his seraphim with the hallowed fire of his altar to touch and purify the lips of whom he pleases.<sup>4</sup> To this must be added industrious and select reading, steady observation, insight into all seemly and generous arts and affairs; till which in some measure be compassed, at mine own peril and cost I refuse not to sustain this expectation.* * * But were it the meanest under-service, if God by his secretary conscience enjoin it, it were sad for me if I should draw back; for me especially, now when all men offer their aid to help ease and lighten the difficult labors of the church, to whose service by the intentions of my parents and friends I was destined of a child, and in mine own resolutions: till coming to some maturity of years and perceiving what tyranny had invaded the church, that he who would take orders must subscribe

6. Charles I's republication (1633) of James I's Booth of Sports, encouraging sports, dancing, and rural festivals on Sundays—anathema to Puritans.

7. The phrases are from Proverbs 1.20—21 and 8.2—3. Milton would not ban recreation or festival pastimes but reform them: his models are the lofty encomiastic poems and recitations Plato would admit into his Republic, the literary and social exchanges of the Italian academies, and martial exercises (to prepare the citizenry for war, now imminent).

8. I.e., poetry.

9. Porticos. "Panegyries": solemn public meetings.

1. I.e., I have been forced to write for my country's sake and to reveal my poetic plans before I was ready to do either.

2. Unsuitable, absurd.

3. True poetry comes, not from youth, wine, a full plate, or even Memory (and her daughters the Muses): tradition alone does not make a poet.

4. The coal from the altar that purifies the prophet's Hps (Isaiah 6.6-7): the passage makes poetry first and foremost the product of inspiration, but Milton also insists on his need to attain well-nigh universal knowledge and experience.

slave and take an oath withal,<sup>5</sup> which, unless he took with a conscience that would retch, he must either straight perjure or split his faith; I thought it better to prefer a blameless silence before the sacred office of speaking, bought and begun with servitude and forswearing. Howsoever, thus church-outed by the prelates, hence may appear the right I have to meddle in these matters, as before the necessity and constraint appeared.

Areopagitica This passionate, trenchant defense of intellectual liberty has had a powerful influence on the evolving liberal conception of freedom of speech, press, and thought. Milton's specific target is the Press Ordinance of June 14, 1643, Parliament's attempt to crack down on the flood of pamphlets (including Milton's own controversial treatises on divorce) that poured forth both from legal and from underground presses as the Civil War raged. Like Tudor and Stuart censorship laws, Parliament's ordinance demanded that works be registered with the stationers and licensed by the censors before publication, and that both author and publisher be identified, on pain of fines and imprisonment for both. Milton vigorously protests the prepublication licensing of books, arguing that such measures have only been used by, and are only fit for, degenerate cultures. In the regenerate English nation, now "rousing herself like a strong man after sleep," men and women must be allowed to develop in virtue by participating in the clash and conflict of ideas. Truth will always overcome falsehood in reasoned debate. Thus, in opposition to the Presbyterians then in power, Milton defends widespread religious toleration, though with restrictions on Roman Catholicism, which, like most of his Protestant contemporaries, he viewed as a political threat and a tyranny binding individual conscience to the pope.

The title associates the tract with the speech of the Greek orator Isocrates to the Areopagus, the Council of the Wise in Athens. Learned readers would have recognized the irony of this. While Isocrates instructed the council to reform Athens by careful supervision of the private lives of citizens, Milton argues that only liberty and removal of censorship can advance reformation. This association explains the oratorical tone of the tract, which was, in fact, subtitled "A Speech." In this most literary of his tracts, Milton's style is elevated, eloquent, dense with poetic figures, and ranges in tone from satire and ridicule to urgent pleading and florid praise. His arguments and principles are often couched in striking images and phrases. One example is his passionate testimony to the potency and inestimable value of books: "As good almost kill a man as kill a good book . . ." Most memorable is his ringing credo that echoes down the centuries to protest every new tyranny: "Give me the liberty to know, to utter, and to argue freely according to conscience, above all liberties."

Frovt Areopagitica

I deny not, but that it is of greatest concernment in the church and commonwealth, to have a vigilant eye how books demean<sup>1</sup> themselves as well as men; and thereafter to confine, imprison, and do sharpest justice on them as malefactors:<sup>2</sup> For books are not absolutely dead things, but do contain a

5. Milton was not willing to subscribe the oath affirming that the Book of Common Prayer and the present government of the church by bishops were according to the word of God; still less was he willing to subscribe the notorious "etcetera" oath required in 1640, that the minister would never seek to alter the government of the church "by archbishops, bishops, deacons, and archdeacons, etc."

1. Behave.

2. Milton allows that books may be called to account after publication, if they are proved to contain libels or other manifest crimes (he leaves this quite vague).

potency of life in them to be as active as that soul was whose progeny they are; nay they do preserve as in a vial the purest efficacy and extraction of that living intellect that bred them. I know they are as lively, and as vigorously productive, as those fabulous dragon's teeth; and being sown up and down, may chance to spring up armed men.<sup>3</sup> And yet on the other hand unless wariness be used, as good almost kill a man as kill a good book; who kills a man kills a reasonable creature, God's image; but he who destroys a good book, kills reason itself, kills the image of God, as it were in the eye. Many a man lives a burden to the earth; but a good book is the precious lifeblood of a master spirit, embalmed and treasured up on purpose to a life beyond life. 'Tis true, no age can restore a life, whereof perhaps there is no great loss; and revolutions of ages do not oft recover the loss of a rejected truth, for the want of which whole nations fare the worse. We should be wary therefore what persecution we raise against the living labors of public men, how we spill that seasoned life of man preserved and stored up in books; since we see a kind of massacre, whereof the execution ends not in the slaying of an elemental life, but strikes at that ethereal and fifth essence,<sup>4</sup> the breath of reason itself, slays an immortality rather than a life. But lest I should be condemned of introducing licence, while I oppose licensing, I refuse not the pains to be so much historical, as will serve to show what hath been done by ancient and famous commonwealths, against this disorder, till the very time that this project of licensing crept out of the Inquisition,<sup>5</sup> was caught up by our prelates, and hath caught some of our presbyters.<sup>6</sup> * * *

* * * Good and evil we know in the field of this world grow up together almost inseparably; and the knowledge of good is so involved and interwoven with the knowledge of evil, and in so many cunning resemblances hardly to be discerned, that those confused seeds which were imposed on Psyche as an incessant labor to cull out and sort asunder were not more intermixed.<sup>7</sup> It was from out the rind of one apple tasted, that the knowledge of good and evil, as two twins cleaving together, leaped forth into the world. And perhaps this is that doom which Adam fell into of knowing good and evil, that is to say of knowing good by evil.

As therefore the state of man now is, what wisdom can there be to choose, what continence to forbear, without the knowledge of evil? He that can apprehend and consider vice with all her baits and seeming pleasures, and yet abstain, and yet distinguish, and yet prefer that which is truly better, he is the true wayfaring<sup>8</sup> Christian. I cannot praise a fugitive and cloistered virtue, unexercised and unbreathed,<sup>9</sup> that never sallies out and sees her adversary, but slinks out of the race where that immortal garland is to be run for, not without dust and heat. Assuredly we bring not innocence into the world, we bring

3. After Cadmus killed a dragon on his way to founding Thebes, on a god's advice he sowed the dragon's teeth, which sprang up as an army, the belligerent forefathers of Sparta.

4. Quintessence, a pure, mystical substance above the four elements (fire, air, water, earth).

5. The Roman Catholic institution for suppressing heresy, especially strong in Spain.

6. The Presbyterians, powerful in the Parliament, were striving to establish theirs as the national church and suppress others. Milton, who began by supporting them in The Reason of Church Government and his other antiprelatical tracts (1641–42), now rejects them, in large part because they seek to supplant one repressive church with another.

7. Angry at her son Cupid's love for Psyche, Venus set the girl many trials, among them to sort out a vast mound of mixed seeds, but the ants took pity on her and did the work.

8. The printed text reads "wayfaring," calling up the image of the Christian pilgrim; several presentation copies correct it (by hand) to "warfaring," calling up the image of the Christian warrior. Both suit the passage.

impurity much rather; that which purifies us is trial, and trial is by what is contrary. That virtue therefore which is but a youngling in the contemplation of evil, and knows not the utmost that vice promises to her followers, and rejects it, is but a blank virtue, not a pure; her whiteness is but an excremental<sup>1</sup> whiteness; which was the reason why our sage and serious poet Spenser (whom I dare be known to think a better teacher than Scotus or Aquinas), describing true temperance under the person of Guyon, brings him in with his Palmer through the Cave of Mammon and the Bower of Earthly Bliss,<sup>2</sup> that he might see and know, and yet abstain.

Since therefore the knowledge and survey of vice is in this world so necessary to the constituting of human virtue, and the scanning of error to the confirmation of truth, how can we more safely, and with less danger, scout into the regions of sin and falsity than by reading all manner of tractates and hearing all manner of reason:<sup>1</sup> And this is the benefit which may be had of books promiscuously read.

But of the harm that may result hence, three kinds are usually reckoned. First is feared the infection that may spread; but then all human learning and controversy in religious points must remove out of the world, yea, the Bible itself; for that oftentimes relates blasphemy not nicely,<sup>3</sup> it describes the carnal sense of wicked men not unelegantly, it brings in holiest men passionately murmuring against providence through all the arguments of Epicurus;<sup>4</sup> in other great disputes it answers dubiously and darkly to the common reader.<sup>5</sup>

To sequester out of the world into Atlantic and Utopian politics,<sup>6</sup> which never can be drawn into use, will not mend our condition, but to ordain wisely as in this world of evil, in the midst whereof God hath placed us unavoidably. . . . Impunity and remissness, for certain, are the bane of a commonwealth; but here the great art lies, to discern in what the law is to bid restraint and punishment, and in what things persuasion only is to work. If every action which is good or evil in man at ripe years were to be under pittance<sup>7</sup> and prescription and compulsion, what were virtue but a name, what praise could be then due to well-doing, what gramercy<sup>8</sup> to be sober, just, or continent?

Many there be that complain of divine providence for suffering Adam to transgress; foolish tongues! When God gave him reason, he gave him freedom to choose, for reason is but choosing; he had been else a mere artificial Adam, such an Adam as he is in the motions.<sup>9</sup> We ourselves esteem not of that obedience, or love, or gift, which is of force: God therefore left him free, set before him a provoking object, ever almost in his eyes; herein consisted his merit, herein the right of his reward, the praise of his abstinence.<sup>1</sup> Wherefore did he create passions within us, pleasures round about us, but that these rightly tempered are the very ingredients of virtue? They are not skillful considerers of human things, who imagine to remove sin by removing the matter of sin; for, besides that it is a huge heap increasing under the very act of diminishing, though some part of it may for a time be withdrawn from some persons, it cannot from all, in such a universal thing as books are; and when this is done, yet the sin remains entire. Though ye take from a covetous man all his treasure, he has yet one jewel left: ye cannot bereave him of his covetousness. Banish all objects of lust, shut up all youth into the severest discipline that can be exercised in any hermitage, ye cannot make them chaste that came not thither so; such great care and wisdom is required to the right managing of this point.

5. Milton goes on to argue that a fool can find material for folly in the best books, and a wise person material for wisdom in the worst. Also, one cannot remove evil by censoring books without also censoring ballads, fiddlers, clothing, conversation, and all social life.

Suppose we could expel sin by this means; look how much we thus expel of sin, so much we expel of virtue: for the matter of them both is the same; remove that, and ye remove them both alike. This justifies the high providence of God, who, though he commands us temperance, justice, continence, yet pours out before us, even to a profuseness, all desirable things, and gives us minds that can wander beyond all limit and satiety. Why should we then affect a rigor contrary to the manner of God and of nature, by abridging or scanting those means, which books freely permitted are, both to the trial of virtue and the exercise of truth? It would be better done to learn that the law must needs be frivolous which goes to restrain things uncertainly and yet equally working to good and to evil. And were I the chooser, a dram of well-doing should be preferred before many times as much the forcible hindrance of evil-doing. For God sure esteems the growth and completing of one virtuous person more than the restraint of ten vicious.

What advantage is it to be a man over it is to be a boy at school, if we have only scaped the ferula to come under the fescue of an imprimatur;<sup>2</sup> if serious and elaborate writings, as if they were no more than the theme of a grammar-lad under his pedagogue, must not be uttered without the cursory eyes of a temporizing and extemporizing licenser?<sup>1</sup> He who is not trusted with his own actions, his drift not being known to be evil, and standing to the hazard of law and penalty, has no great argument to think himself reputed, in the commonwealth wherein he was born, for other than a fool or a foreigner.

When a man writes to the world, he summons up all his reason and deliberation to assist him; he searches, meditates, is industrious, and likely consults and confers with his judicious friends, after all which done he takes himself to be informed in what he writes, as well as any that writ before him. If in this the most consummate act of his fidelity and ripeness, no years, no industry, no former proof of his abilities can bring him to that state of maturity as not to be still mistrusted and suspected (unless he carry all his considerate diligence, all his midnight watchings, and expense of Palladian<sup>4</sup> oil, to the hasty view of an unleisured licenser, perhaps much his younger, perhaps far his inferior in judgment, perhaps one who never knew the labor of book-writing), and if he be not repulsed, or slighted, must appear in print like a puny<sup>5</sup> with his guardian, and his censor's hand on the back of his title to be his bail and

And how can a man teach with authority, which is the life of teaching, how can he be a doctor<sup>6</sup> in his book as he ought to be, or else had better be silent, whenas all he teaches, all he delivers, is but under the tuition, under the correction of his patriarchal<sup>7</sup> licenser to blot or alter what precisely accords not with the hide-bound humor which he calls his judgment? When every acute reader upon the first sight of a pedantic license, will be ready with these like words to ding the book a quoit's<sup>8</sup> distance from him: "I hate a pupil teacher, I endure not an instructor that comes to me under the wardship of an overseeing fist. I know nothing of the licenser, but that I have his own hand here for his arrogance; who shall warrant me his judgment?"

"The state, sir," replies the stationer,<sup>9</sup> but has a quick return: "The state shall be my governors, but not my critics; they may be mistaken in the choice of a licenser, as easily as this licenser may be mistaken in an author."

Well knows he who uses to consider, that our faith and knowledge thrives by exercise, as well as our limbs and complexion.<sup>1</sup> Truth is compared in Scripture to a streaming fountain;<sup>2</sup> if her waters flow not in a perpetual progression, they sicken into a muddy pool of conformity and tradition. A man may be a heretic in the truth; and if he believe things only because his pastor says so, or the Assembly<sup>3</sup> so determines, without knowing other reason, though his belief be true, yet the very truth he holds becomes his heresy.

Truth indeed came once into the world with her Divine Master, and was a perfect shape most glorious to look on: but when he ascended, and his apostles after him were laid asleep, then straight arose a wicked race of deceivers, who, as that story goes of the Egyptian Typhon with his conspirators, how they dealt with the good Osiris,<sup>4</sup> took the virgin Truth, hewed her lovely form into a thousand pieces, and scattered them to the four winds. From that time ever since, the sad friends of Truth, such as durst appear, imitating the careful search that Isis made for the mangled body of Osiris, went up and down gathering up limb by limb, still as they could find them. We have not yet found them all, Lords and Commons, nor ever shall do, till her Master's second coming; he shall bring together every joint and member, and shall mold them into an immortal feature of loveliness and perfection. Suffer not these licensing prohibitions to stand at every place of opportunity, forbidding and disturbing them that continue seeking, that continue to do our obsequies' to the torn body of our martyred saint.

motion of their orbs bring them to such a place in the firmament where they may be seen evening or morning? The light which we have gained was given us, not to be ever staring on, but by it to discover onward things more remote from our knowledge. It is not the unfrocking of a priest, the unmitering of a bishop, and the removing him from off the Presbyterian shoulders, that will make us a happy nation. No, if other things as great in the church, and in the rule of life both economical and political, be not looked into and reformed, we have looked so long upon the blaze that Zwinglius and Calvin<sup>7</sup> hath beacons up to us, that we are stark blind.

There be who perpetually complain of schisms and sects, and make it such a calamity that any man dissents from their maxims. 'Tis their own pride and ignorance which causes the disturbing, who neither will hear with meekness, nor can convince; yet all must be suppressed which is not found in their syntagma.<sup>8</sup> They are the troublers, they are the dividers of unity, who neglect and permit not others to unite those dissevered pieces which are yet wanting to the body of Truth. To be still searching what we know not by what we know, still closing up truth to truth as we find it (for all her body is homogeneous and proportional), this is the golden rule in theology as well as in arithmetic, and makes up the best harmony in a church; not the forced and outward union of cold and neutral and inwardly divided minds.

Lords and Commons of England, consider what nation it is whereof ye are, and whereof ye are the governors: a nation not slow and dull, but of a quick, ingenious, and piercing spirit, acute to invent, subtle and sinewy to discourse, not beneath the reach of any point the highest that human capacity can soar to. Therefore the studies of learning in her deepest sciences have been so ancient and so eminent among us, that writers of good antiquity and ablest judgment have been persuaded that even the school of Pythagoras and the Persian wisdom took beginning from the old philosophy of this island.<sup>9</sup> And that wise and civil Roman, Julius Agricola,<sup>1</sup> who governed once here for Caesar, preferred the natural wits of Britain before the labored studies of the French. Nor is it for nothing that the grave and frugal Transylvanian sends out yearly from as far as the mountainous borders of Russia, and beyond the Hercynian wilderness, not their youth, but their staid men, to learn our language and our theologic arts.

Yet that which is above all this, the favor and the love of heaven we have great argument to think in a peculiar manner propitious and propending<sup>2</sup> towards us. Why else was this nation chosen before any other, that out of her, as out of Zion,<sup>3</sup> should be proclaimed and sounded forth the first tidings and trumpet of Reformation to all Europe? And had it not been the obstinate perverseness of our prelates against the divine and admirable spirit of Wycliffe to suppress him as a schismatic and innovator, perhaps neither the Bohemian Huss and Jerome,<sup>4</sup> no, nor the name of Luther or of Calvin, had been ever known: the glory of reforming all our neighbors had been completely ours. But now, as our obdurate clergy have with violence demeaned the matter, we are become hitherto the latest and the backwardest scholars of whom' God offered to have made us the teachers.

Now once again by all concurrence of signs, and by the general instinct of holy and devout men, as they daily and solemnly express their thoughts, God is decreeing to begin some new and great period in his church, even to the reforming of Reformation itself; what does he then but reveal himself to his servants, and as his manner is, first to his Englishmen? I say, as his manner is, first to us, though we mark not the method of his counsels, and are unworthy. Behold now this vast city: a city of refuge,<sup>6</sup> the mansion house of liberty, encompassed and surrounded with his protection; the shop of war hath not there more anvils and hammers waking, to fashion out the plates<sup>7</sup> and instruments of armed justice in defense of beleaguered truth, than there be pens and heads there, sitting by their studious lamps, musing, searching, revolving new notions and ideas wherewith to present, as with their homage and their fealty, the approaching Reformation: others as fast reading, trying all things, assenting to the force of reason and conviction.

What could a man require more from a nation so pliant and so prone to seek after knowledge? What wants there to such a towardly and pregnant<sup>8</sup> soil, but wise and faithful laborers, to make a knowing people, a nation of prophets,<sup>9</sup> of sages, and of worthies? We reckon more than five months yet to harvest; there need not be five weeks; had we but eyes to lift up, the fields are white already.<sup>1</sup> Where there is much desire to learn, there of necessity will be much arguing, much writing, many opinions; for opinion in good men is but knowledge in the making. Under these fantastic terrors of sect and schism we wrong the earnest and zealous thirst after knowledge and understanding which God hath stirred up in this city.

What some lament of, we rather should rejoice at, should rather praise this pious forwardness among men, to reassume the ill-deputed care of their religion into their own hands again. A little generous prudence, a little forbearance of one another, and some grain of charity might win all these diligences to join, and unite into one general and brotherly search after truth; could we but forgo this prelatical tradition of crowding free consciences and Christian liberties into canons and precepts of men. I doubt not, if some great and worthy stranger should come among us, wise to discern the mold and temper of a people, and how to govern it, observing the high hopes and aims, the diligent alacrity of our extended thoughts and reasonings in the pursuance of truth and freedom, but that he would cry out as Pyrrhus did, admiring the Roman docility and courage: "If such were my Epirots, I would not despair the greatest design that could be attempted, to make a church or kingdom happy."<sup>2</sup> Yet these are the men cried out against for schismatics and sectaries;<sup>3</sup> as if, while the temple of the Lord was building, some cutting, some squaring he was burned at the stake in 1415, as was (the next year) his follower Jerome of Prague.

the marble, others hewing the cedars, there should be a sort of irrational men, who could not consider there must be many schisms and many dissections<sup>4</sup> made in the quarry and in the timber, ere the house of God can be built. And when every stone is laid artfully together, it cannot be united into a continuity, it can but be contiguous in this world; neither can every piece of the building be of one form; nay rather the perfection consists in this, that out of many moderate varieties and brotherly dissimilitudes that are not vastly disproportional, arises the goodly and the graceful symmetry that commends the whole pile and structure. Let us therefore be more considerate builders, more wise in spiritual architecture, when great reformation is expected. For now the time seems come, wherein Moses the great prophet may sit in heaven rejoicing to see that memorable and glorious wish of his fulfilled, when not only our seventy elders, but all the Lord's people, are become prophets.<sup>5</sup>

Methinks I see in my mind a noble and puissant nation rousing herself like a strong man after sleep, and shaking her invincible locks;<sup>6</sup> methinks I see her as an eagle mewing her mighty youth, and kindling her undazzled eyes at the full midday beam;<sup>7</sup> purging and unsealing her long-abused sight at the fountain itself of heavenly radiance; while the whole noise of timorous and flocking birds, with those also that love the twilight, flutter about, amazed at what she means, and in their envious gabble would prognosticate<sup>8</sup> a year of sects and schisms.

What should ye do then, should ye suppress all this flowery crop of knowledge and new light sprung up and yet springing daily in this city? Should ye set an oligarchy of twenty engrossers<sup>9</sup> over it, to bring a famine upon our minds again, when we shall know nothing but what is measured to us by their bushel? Believe it, Lords and Commons, they who counsel ye to such a suppressing do as good as bid ye suppress yourselves; and I will soon show how.<sup>1</sup>

And now the time in special is by privilege to write and speak what may help to the further discussing of matters in agitation. The temple of Janus with his two controversial faces might now not insignificantly be set open.<sup>2</sup> And though all the winds of doctrine were let loose to play upon the earth, so Truth be in the field, we do injuriously by licensing and prohibiting to misdoubt her strength. Let her and Falsehood grapple; who ever knew Truth put to the worse in a free and open encounter? Her<sup>3</sup> confuting is the best and surest suppressing. the discipline of Geneva framed and fabricated already to our hands.<sup>4</sup>

Yet when the new light which we beg for shines in upon us, there be who envy and oppose if it come not first in at their casements. What a collusion is this, whenas we are exhorted by the wise man to use diligence, to seek for wisdom as for hidden treasures early and late,<sup>5</sup> that another order shall enjoin us to know nothing but by statute. When a man hath been laboring the hardest labor in the deep mines of knowledge, hath furnished out his findings in all their equipage, drawn forth his reasons as it were a battle<sup>6</sup> ranged, scattered and defeated all objections in his way, calls out his adversary into the plain, offers him the advantage of wind and sun if he please, only that he may try the matter by dint of argument; for his opponents then to skulk, to lay ambushments, to keep a narrow bridge of licensing where the challenger should pass, though it be valor enough in soldiership, is but weakness and cowardice in the wars of Truth.

For who knows not that Truth is strong, next to the Almighty? She needs no policies nor stratagems nor licensings to make her victorious—those are the shifts and the defenses that error uses against her power. Give her but room, and do not bind her when she sleeps, for then she speaks not true, as the old Proteus<sup>7</sup> did, who spake oracles only when he was caught and bound, but then rather she turns herself into all shapes except her own, and perhaps tunes her voice according to the time, as Micaiah did before Ahab,<sup>8</sup> until she be adjured into her own likeness.

Yet it is not impossible that she may have more shapes than one. What else is all that rank of things indifferent, wherein Truth may be on this side or on the other without being unlike herself? What but a vain shadow else is the abolition of those ordinances, that handwriting nailed to the cross?<sup>9</sup> What great purchase is this Christian liberty which Paul so often boasts of? His doctrine is that he who eats or eats not, regards a day or regards it not, may do either to the Lord.<sup>1</sup> How many other things might be tolerated in peace and left to conscience, had we but charity, and were it not the chief stronghold of our hypocrisy to be ever judging one another? I fear yet this iron yoke of outward conformity hath left a slavish print upon our necks; the ghost of a linen decency<sup>2</sup> yet haunts us. We stumble and are impatient at the least dividing of one visible congregation from another, though it be not in fundamentals; and through our forwardness to suppress and our backwardness to recover any enthralled piece of truth out of the grip of custom, we care not<sup>3</sup> to keep truth separated from truth, which is the fiercest rent and disunion of all. We do not see that while we still affect by all means a rigid and external formality, we may as soon fall again into a gross conforming stupidity, a stark and dead congealment of "wood and hay and stubble,"<sup>4</sup> forced and frozen together, which is more to the sudden degenerating of a church than many sub-dichotomies of petty schisms.

2. White bands around the necks of clergymen are made emblems of formal piety.

3. Scruple not.

4. The contrast between "wood and hay and stubble" and "gold and silver and precious stones" (next paragraph) is from 1 Corinthians 3.12.

Not that I can think well of every light separation, or that all in a church is to be expected "gold and silver and precious stones." It is not possible for man to sever the wheat from the tares, the good fish from the other fry; that must be the angels' ministry at the end of mortal things.<sup>5</sup> Yet if all cannot be of one mind—as who looks they should be?—this doubtless is more wholesome, more prudent, and more Christian, that many be tolerated rather than all compelled. I mean not tolerated popery and open superstition, which, as it extirpates all religions and civil supremacies, so itself should be extirpate, provided first that all charitable and compassionate means be used to win and regain the weak and the misled; that also which is impious or evil absolutely, either against faith or manners,<sup>6</sup> no law can possibly permit that intends not to unlaw itself; but those neighboring differences or rather indifferences are what I speak of, whether in some point of doctrine or of discipline, which though they may be many yet need not interrupt "the unity of spirit," if we could but find among us the "bond of peace."<sup>7</sup>

In the meanwhile, if anyone would write and bring his helpful hand to the slow-moving reformation which we labor under, if truth have spoken to him before others, or but seemed at least to speak, who hath so bejesuited<sup>8</sup> us that we should trouble that man with asking license to do so worthy a deed? And not consider this, that if it come to prohibiting, there is not aught more likely to be prohibited than truth itself; whose first appearance to our eyes bleared and dimmed with prejudice and custom is more unsightly and unpalatable than many errors, even as the person is of many a great man slight and contemptible to see to. And what do they tell us vainly of new opinions, when this very opinion of theirs, that none must be heard but whom they like, is the worst and newest opinion of all others, and is the chief cause why sects and schisms do so much abound, and true knowledge is kept at distance from us; besides yet a greater danger which is in it. For when God shakes a kingdom<sup>9</sup> with strong and healthful commotions to a general reforming, it is not untrue that many sectaries and false teachers are then busiest in seducing; but yet more true it is that God then raises to his own work men of rare abilities and more than common industry, not only to look back and revise what hath been taught heretofore, but to gain further and go on some new enlightened steps in the discovery of truth.

Sonnets Milton wrote twenty-four sonnets between 1630 and 1658. Five in Italian constitute a mini-Petrarchan sequence on a perhaps imaginary Italian lady. The rest, in English, are individual poems on a wide variety of topics and occasions, though not on the usual sonnet topics (love, as in the sequences of Sidney, Spenser, and Shakespeare, or religious devotion, as in that of Donne). Milton writes sometimes about personal crises (his blindness, the death of his wife), sometimes about political issues or personages (Cromwell, the persecuting Parliament), sometimes about friends and friendship (Cyriack Skinner, Lady Margaret Ley), sometimes about historical events (a threatened royalist attack on London, the massacre of Protestants in Piedmont). His tone ranges from Jonsonian urbanity to prophetic denunciation. The form of the sonnets is Petrarchan (see "Poetic Forms and Literary Terminology," in the appendices to this volume), but in the later sonnets especially (e.g., the Blindness and Piedmont sonnets) the sense runs on from line to line, overriding the expected end-stopped lines and the octave/sestet shift. There is some precedent for this in the Italian sonneteer Giovanni della Casa, but not for the powerful tension Milton creates as meaning and emotion strive within and against the formal metrics of the Petrarchan sonnet. Milton's new ways with the sonnet had a profound and acknowledged influence on the Romantic poets, especially Wordsworth and Shelley.

 From them whose sin ye envied, not abhorred,

1. Misrepresent. "Semblance": appearance.

2. Equal, adequate. "It": Milton's inner growth. "Even / To that same lot": conformed to my appointed destiny.

3. The final lines allow for various readings. "Taskmaster" identifies God with the parable (Matthew 20.1–16) in which a vineyard keeper takes on workers throughout the day, paying the same wages to those hired at the first and at the eleventh hour.

1. The sonnet targets the Presbyterians, whom Milton in The Reason of Church Government (p. 1811) and other antiprelatical tracts of 1641—

42 had supported against the bishops. Now that they have overthrown the bishops and dominate the Long Parliament, they seek to become the national church, repressing all others. This sonetto cauduto, or "tailed sonnet" (an Italian form) has the usual fourteen lines followed by (two "tails" of three lines each.

2. Bishops and the ecclesiastical church structure.

3. The practice of holding several benefices at once; she is a "widowed whore" because her earlier lovers, the Anglican clergy, can no longer possess her.

5 Dare ye for this adjure<sup>0</sup> the civil sword<sup>4</sup> invoke
 To force our consciences that Christ set free,
 And ride us with a classic hierarchy<sup>5</sup>
 Taught ye by mere A. S. and Rutherford?<sup>6</sup>
 Men whose life, learning, faith, and pure intent
 10 Would have been held in high esteem with Paul
 Must now be named and printed heretics
 By shallow Edwards and Scotch what-d'ye-call:<sup>7</sup>
 But we do hope to find out all your tricks,
 Your plots and packing<sup>0</sup> worse than those of Trent,<sup>8</sup> fraudulent dealings
 is That so the Parliament<sup>9</sup>
 May with their wholesome and preventive shears
 Clip your phylacteries,<sup>1</sup> though balk your ears,<sup>2</sup>
 And succor our just fears
 When they shall read this clearly in your charge:

To the Lord General Cromwell, May 1652<sup>1</sup>

Cromwell, our chief of men, who through a cloud
 Not of war only, but detractions<sup>2</sup> rude,
 Guided by faith and matchless fortitude
 To peace and truth<sup>3</sup> thy glorious way hast ploughed,
 5 And on the neck of crowned Fortune proud
 Hast reared God's trophies,<sup>4</sup> and his work pursued,
 While Darwen stream with blood of Scots imbrued<sup>5</sup>
 And Dunbar field resounds thy praises loud,
 And Worcester's laureate wreath;<sup>6</sup> yet much remains

4. State authority.

5. The Presbyterian church order comprised of synods and classes as governing boards and disciplinary courts.

6. Adam Stuart and Samuel Rutherford, Scottish Presbyterian pamphleteers who urged the establishment of an English national Presbyterian church on the Scottish model.

7. Thomas Edwards analyzed hundreds of so-called heresies in a book picturesquely titled Gangraena (1645, 1646). It even identifies Milton as the founder of a sect of Divorcers, promoting "divorce at pleasure." "Scotch what-d'ye-call" may refer to another Scots cleric, Robert Baillie, or may simply be a sneer at the unpronounceability of Scottish names.

8. The Council of Trent, held by the Roman Church to deal with the Protestant Reformation, was notorious as a scene of political jockeying.

9. In the previous few months Independents and more secular-minded republicans had gained some strength in the Parliament, so Milton could hope they might weigh in against Presbyterian repression.

1. Little scrolls containing texts from the Pentateuch, worn on the forehead and arm by observant Jews; Milton takes them as a symbol of self-righteous ostentation.

2. "Balk": spare. Mutilation by cutting off the ears was a punishment formerly suffered by several Presbyterian leaders, as Milton hereby reminds them. Milton changed the rather cruel manuscript version of this line—"Crop ye as close as marginal P's ears"—alluding to the ultraprolific pamphleteer William Prynne, who stuffed his margins with citations, and who had his ears cropped twice.

 3. "Priest" is, etymologically, a contracted form of "Presbyter."

1. The sonnet appeals to Cromwell, a longtime supporter of religious toleration but also of some kind of loosely defined national church, to oppose recent proposals by Independents to set up a national church with a paid clergy and some limits to toleration. This is the only Milton sonnet to end with an epigrammatic couplet. It could not be published in the 1673 Poems of Milton because the subject would have offended the restored Stuart monarchy.

2. Cromwell was a target of slander and vituperation from royalists and from extreme radicals.

3. The words "Truth and Peace" were on a coin issued by Parliament to honor Cromwell's victories over the Scots at Preston (1648), Dunbar (1650), and Worcester (1651).

4. Alluding to the ancient Greek custom of erecting trophies of victory on the battlefield.

5. Stained with blood. The river Darwen runs through Preston, site of a major victory by Cromwell over the Scots.

6. Cromwell described his victory at Worcester as his "crowning mercy."

10 To conquer still; peace hath her victories
 No less renowned than war; new foes arise,
 Threatening to bind our souls with secular chains:<sup>7</sup>
 Help us to save free conscience from the paw
 Of hireling wolves<sup>8</sup> whose gospel is their maw.<sup>9</sup> belly

When I Consider How My Light Is Spent<sup>1</sup>

When I consider how my light is spent,<sup>0</sup> extinguished
 Ere half my days,<sup>2</sup> in this dark world and wide,
 And that one talent which is death to hide<sup>3</sup>
 Lodged with me useless, though my soul more bent
 5 To serve therewith my Maker, and present
 My true account, lest he returning chide;
 "Doth God exact day-labor, light denied?"<sup>4</sup>
 I fondly<sup>0</sup> ask; but Patience to prevent<sup>0</sup> foolishly/forestall
 That murmur, soon replies, "God doth not need io Either man's work or his own gifts; who best Bear his mild yoke, they serve him best. His state<sup>0</sup> splendor
 Is kingly.<sup>5</sup> Thousands at his bidding speed
 And post o'er land and ocean without rest:
 They also serve who only stand and wait."

On the Late Massacre in Piedmont<sup>1</sup>

Avenge,<sup>2</sup> O Lord, thy slaughtered saints, whose bones
 Lie scattered on the Alpine mountains cold;

7. Alluding to the new proposals that Parliament, the secular power, repress heresies and blasphemy.
 8. Milton fiercely opposed a paid clergy, believing they should support themselves or be supported by their congregations.

1. Apparently written soon after Milton lost his sight entirely in 1652.

2. Milton was forty-three in 1652; he is obviously not thinking of the biblical lifespan of seventy, but perhaps of that of his father, who died at eighty-four.

3. In the parable of the talents (Matthew 25.14—30), a crucial text for Puritans, the servants who put their master's money ("talents") to earn interest for him were praised, while the servant who buried the single talent he was given was deprived of it and cast into outer darkness. Milton puns on "literary talent." "Useless" (line 4) carries a pun on "usury," the return expected by the Master.

4. Milton alludes here to the parable of the vineyard keeper (see "How Soon Hath Time," note 3), and also to John 9.4, spoken by Jesus before curing a blind man: "I must work the works of him that sent me, while it is day: the night cometh, when no man can work."

5. The changed metaphor for God—from master who needs to profit from his workers to king—allows the inference that those who "stand and wait" may be placed nearest the throne.

1. The Waldensians (or Vaudois) were a proto-Protestant sect dating to the 12th century who lived in the valleys of northern Italy (the Piedmont) and southern France; Protestants considered them a remnant retaining apostolic purity, free of Catholic superstitions and graven images ("stocks and stones," line 4). The treaty that had allowed them freedom of worship was bypassed in 1655 when the armies of the Catholic duke of Savoy conducted a massacre, razing villages, committing unspeakable atrocities, and hurling women and children from the mountaintops. Protestant Europe was outraged, and in his capacity as Cromwell's Latin secretary Milton translated and wrote several letters about the episode. The sonnet incorporates details from such letters and the contemporary newsbooks. Here Milton transforms the sonnet into a prophetic denunciation.

2. Cf. Revelation 6.9-10: "the souls of them that were slain for the word of God . . . cried with a loud voice, saying, 'How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood . . . ?'"

Even them who kept thy truth so pure of old
 When all our fathers worshipped stocks and stones,<sup>3</sup>
 5 Forget not: in thy book<sup>4</sup> record their groans
 Who were thy sheep and in their ancient fold
 Slain by the bloody Piemontese that rolled
 Mother with infant down the rocks. Their moans
 The vales redoubled to the hills, and they io To heaven. Their martyred blood and ashes sow
 O'er all th' Italian fields, where still doth sway
 The triple tyrant:<sup>5</sup> that from these may grow
 A hundredfold, who having learnt thy way
 Early may fly the Babylonian woe.<sup>6</sup>

Methought I Saw My Late Espoused Saint<sup>1</sup>

Methought I saw my late espoused saint
 Brought to me like Alcestis<sup>2</sup> from the grave,
 Whom Jove's great son to her glad husband gave,
 Rescued from death by force though pale and faint.
 5 Mine, as whom<sup>3</sup> washed from spot of childbed taint,
 Purification in the old law did save,<sup>4</sup>
 And such, as yet once more I trust to have Full sight of her in heaven without restraint,
 Came vested all in white, pure as her mind,
 io Fler face was veiled, yet to my fancied sight<sup>5</sup>
 Love, sweetness, goodness, in her person shined
 So clear, as in no face with more delight.
 But O, as to embrace me she inclined,
 I waked, she fled, and day brought back my night.

3. Pagan gods of wood and stone, but with allusion to Roman Catholic "idols."

4. Cf. Revelation 20.12: "the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works." "Sheep" (next line) echoes Romans 8.36: "we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter."

5. The pope, wearing his tiara with three crowns. The passage alludes to Tertullian's maxim that "the blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church"; also to the parable of the sower (Matthew 13.3), some of whose seed brought forth fruit "an hundredfold" (see next line); and also to Cadmus, who sowed dragon's teeth that sprang forth armed men.

6. Protestants often identified the Roman Church with the whore of Babylon (Revelation 17—18).

1. There is some debate as to whether this poem refers to Milton's first wife, Mary Powell, who died in May 1652, three days after giving birth to her third daughter, or his second wife, Katherine Woodcock, who died in February 1658, after giving birth (in October 1657) to a daughter. The text can support either, but the latter seems more likely. The sonnet is couched as a dream vision.

2. In Euripides' Alcestis, Alcestis, wife of Admetus, is rescued from the underworld by Hercules ("Jove's great son," next line) and restored, veiled, to Admetus; he is overjoyed when he lifts the veil, but she must remain silent until she is ritually cleansed.

3. As one whom.

4. The Mosaic Law (Leviticus 12.2—8) prescribed periods for the purification of women after childbirth (eighty days for a daughter).

5. She is veiled like Alcestis, and Milton's sight of her is only "fancied"; he never saw the face of his second wife, Katherine, because of his blindness.

Paradise Lost The setting of Milton's great epic encompasses Heaven, Hell, primordial Chaos, and the planet earth. It features battles among immortal spirits, voyages through space, and lakes of fire. Yet its protagonists are a married couple living in a garden, and its climax consists in the eating of a piece of fruit. Paradise Lost is ultimately about the human condition, the Fall that caused "all our woe," and the promise and means of restoration. It is also about knowing and choosing, about free will. In the opening passages of Books 1, 3, 7, and 9, Milton highlights the choices and difficulties he faced in creating his poem. His central characters—Satan, Beelzebub, Abdiel, Adam, and Eve—are confronted with hard choices under the pressure of powerful desires and sometimes devious temptations. Milton's readers, too, are continually challenged to choose and to reconsider their most basic assumptions about freedom, heroism, work, pleasure, language, nature, and love. The great themes of Paradise Lost are intimately linked to the political questions at stake in the English Revolution and the Restoration, but the connection is by no means simple or straightforward. This is a poem in which Satan leads a revolution against an absolute monarch and in which questions of tyranny, servitude, and liberty are debated in a parliament in Hell. Milton's readers are hereby challenged to rethink these topics and, like Abdiel debating with Satan in Books 5 and 6, to make crucial distinctions between God as monarch and earthly kings.

In Milton's time, the conventions of epic poetry followed a familiar recipe. The action was to begin in medias res (in the middle of things), following the poet's statement of his theme and invocation of his Muse. The reader could expect grand battles and love affairs, supernatural intervention, a descent into the underworld, catalogues of warriors, and epic similes. Milton had absorbed the epic tradition in its entirety, and his poem abounds with echoes of Homer and Virgil, the fifteenth-century Italians Tasso and Ariosto, and the English Spenser. But in Paradise Lost he at once heightens epic conventions and values and utterly transforms them. This is the epic to end all epics. Milton gives us the first and greatest of all wars (between God and Satan) and the first and greatest of love affairs (between Adam and Eve). His theme is the destiny of the entire human race, caught up in the temptation and Fall of our first "grand parents."

Milton challenges his readers in Paradise Lost, at once fulfilling and defying all of our expectations. Nothing in the epic tradition or in biblical interpretation can prepare us for the Satan who hurtles into view in Book 1, with his awesome energy and defiance, incredible fortitude, and, above all, magnificent rhetoric. For some readers, including Blake and Shelley, Satan is the true hero of the poem. But Milton is engaged in a radical reevaluation of epic values, and Satan's version of heroism must be contrasted with those of the loyal Abdiel and the Son of God. Moreover, the poem's truly epic action takes place not on the battlefield but in the moral and domestic arena. Milton's Adam and Eve are not conventional epic heroes, but neither are they the conventional Adam and Eve. Their state of innocence is not childlike, tranquil, and free of sexual desire. Instead, the first couple enjoy sex, experience tension and passion, make mistakes of judgment, and grow in knowledge. Their task is to prune what is unruly in their own natures as they prune the vegetation in their garden, for both have the capacity to grow wild. Their relationship exhibits gender hierarchy, but Milton's early readers may have been surprised by the fullness and complexity of Eve's character and the centrality of her role, not only in the Fall but in the promised restoration.

We expect in epics a grand style, and Milton's style engulfs us from the outset with its energy and power, as those rushing, enjambed, blank-verse lines propel us along with only a few pauses for line endings or grammar (there is only one full stop in the first twenty-six lines). The elevated diction and complex syntax, the sonorities and patternings make a magnificent music. But that music is an entire orchestra of tones, including the high political rhetoric of Satan in Books 1 and 2, the evocative sensuousness of the descriptions of Eden, the delicacy of Eve's love lyric to Adam in Book 4, the relatively plain speech of God in Book 3, and the speech rhythms of Adam and Eve's marital quarrel in Book 9. This majestic achievement depends on the poet's rejection of heroic couplets, the norm for epic and tragedy in the Restoration, vigorously defended by Dryden but denounced by Milton in his note on "The Verse." The choice of verse form was, like so many other things in Milton's life, in part a question of politics. Milton's terms associate the "troublesome and modern bondage of rhyming" with Restoration monarchy and the repression of dissidents and present his use of unrhymed blank verse as a recovery of "ancient liberty."

The first edition (1667) presented Paradise Lost in ten books; the second (1674) recast it into twelve books, after the Virgilian model, splitting the original Books 7 and 10. We present the twelve-book epic in its entirety, to allow readers to experience the impact of the whole.

PARADISE LOST

SECOND EDITION (1674)

The Verse

The measure is English heroic verse without rhyme, as that of Homer in Greek and of Virgil in Latin; rhyme being no necessary adjunct or true ornament of poem or good verse, in longer works especially, but the invention of a barbarous age, to set off wretched matter<sup>1</sup> and lame meter; graced indeed since by the use of some famous modern poets,<sup>2</sup> carried away by custom, but much to their own vexation, hindrance, and constraint to express many things otherwise, and for the most part worse than else they would have expressed them. Not without cause therefore some both Italian<sup>3</sup> and Spanish poets of prime note have rejected rhyme both in longer and shorter works, as have also long since our best English tragedies, as a thing of itself, to all judicious ears, trivial and of no true musical delight; which consists only in apt numbers,<sup>4</sup> fit quantity of syllables, and the sense variously drawn out from one verse into another, not in the jingling sound of like endings, a fault avoided by the learned ancients both in poetry and all good oratory. This neglect then of rhyme so little is to be taken for a defect, though it may seem so perhaps to vulgar readers, that it rather is to be esteemed an example set, the first in English, of ancient liberty recovered to heroic poem from the troublesome and modern bondage of rhyming.

Book 1

The Argument<sup>1</sup>

This first book proposes, first in brief, the whole subject, man's disobedience, and the loss thereupon of Paradise wherein he was placed: then touches

1. Perhaps the bawdy content of the Latin songs composed by goliardic poets of the Middle Ages; they learned rhyme from medieval hymns.

2. Notably, Dryden. See his Essay of Dramatic Poesy, p. 2125.

3. Trissino and Tasso.

4. Appropriate rhythm.

1. Paradise Lost appeared originally without any sort of prose aid to the reader, but the printer asked Milton for some "Arguments," or summary explanations of the action in the various books, and these were prefixed to later issues of the poem. We reprint the "Argument" for the first book.

the prime cause of his fall, the Serpent, or rather Satan in the Serpent; who revolting from God, and drawing to his side many legions of angels, was by the command of God driven out of Heaven with all his crew into the great deep. Which action passed over, the poem hastes into the midst of things,<sup>2</sup> presenting Satan with his angels now fallen into Hell, described here, not in the center<sup>3</sup> (for Heaven and Earth may be supposed as yet not made, certainly not yet accursed) but in a place of utter darkness, fitliest called Chaos: here Satan with his angels lying on the burning lake, thunderstruck and astonished, after a certain space recovers, as from confusion, calls up him who next in order and dignity lay by him; they confer of their miserable fall. Satan awakens all his legions, who lay till then in the same manner confounded; they rise, their numbers, array of battle, their chief leaders named, according to the idols known afterwards in Canaan and the countries adjoining. To these Satan directs his speech, comforts them with hope yet of regaining Heaven, but tells them lastly of a new world and new kind of creature to be created, according to an ancient prophecy or report in Heaven; for that angels were long before this visible creation, was the opinion of many ancient Fathers.<sup>4</sup> To find out the truth of this prophecy, and what to determine<sup>5</sup> thereon he refers to a full council. What his associates thence attempt. Pandemonium the palace of Satan rises, suddenly built out of the deep: the infernal peers there sit in council.

Of man's first disobedience, and the fruit<sup>1</sup>
 Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal<sup>9</sup> taste deadly
 Brought death into the world, and all our woe,
 With loss of Eden, till one greater Man<sup>2</sup>

 Sing Heav'nly Muse,<sup>3</sup> that on the secret top
 Of Oreb, or of Sinai, didst inspire
 That shepherd, who first taught the chosen seed,
 In the beginning how the heav'ns and earth
 10 Rose out of Chaos: or if Sion hill<sup>4</sup>
 Delight thee more, and Siloa's brook that flowed
 Fast by the oracle of God; I thence

 That with no middle flight intends to soar is Above th' Aonian mount,<sup>5</sup> while it pursues
 Things unattempted yet in prose or rhyme.<sup>6</sup>
 And chiefly thou O Spirit,<sup>7</sup> that dost prefer
 Before all temples th' upright heart and pure,

2. According to Horace, the epic poet should begin, "in medias res."

3. I.e., of the earth.

4. Church Fathers, the Christian writers of the first centuries.

5. I.e., what action to take.

1. Eve's apple, and all the consequences of eating it. This first proem (lines 1—26) combines the epic statement of theme and invocation.

2. Christ, the second Adam.

3. In Greek mythology, Urania, Muse of astronomy; here, however, by the references to Oreb (Horeb) and Sinai (following), identified with the Muse who inspired Moses ("that shepherd") to write Genesis and the other four books of the Pentateuch for the instruction of the Jews ("the chosen seed").

4. Mount Zion: the site of Solomon's Temple. "Siloa's brook" (next line): a spring near the Temple where Christ cured a blind man.

5. Helicon, home of the classical Muses. Milton will attempt to surpass Homer and Virgil.

6. Paradoxically, Milton vaunts his originality in a translated line from Ariosto's Orlando Furioso 1.2. The allusion also challenges the romantic epic in Ariosto's tradition.

7. Here identified with God's creating power.

Instruct me, for thou know'st; thou from the first
Wast present, and with mighty wings outspread
Dove-like sat'st brooding<sup>8</sup> on the vast abyss
And mad'st it pregnant: what in me is dark
Illumine, what is low raise and support;
That to the height of this great argument" subject, theme
I may assert Eternal Providence,
And justify<sup>9</sup> the ways of God to men. show the justice of

Say first, for Heav'n hides nothing from thy view
Nor the deep tract of Hell, say first what cause<sup>9</sup>
Moved our grand parents in that happy state, .
Favored of Heav'n so highly, to fall off
From their Creator, and transgress his will
For<sup>o</sup> one restraint, lords of the world besides?" because of/ otherwise
Who first seduced them to that foul revolt?
Th' infernal Serpent; he it was, whose guile
Stirred up with envy and revenge, deceived
The mother of mankind, what time<sup>o</sup> his pride when
Had cast him out from Heav'n, with all his host
Of rebel angels, by whose aid aspiring
To set himself in glory above his peers,<sup>o</sup> equals
He trusted to have equaled the Most High,
If he opposed; and with ambitious aim
Against the throne and monarchy of God
Raised impious war in Heav'n and battle proud
With vain attempt. Him the Almighty Power
Hurled headlong flaming from th' ethereal sky
With hideous ruin and combustion down
To bottomless perdition, there to dwell
In adamantin<sup>e</sup> chains and penal fire,
Who durst defy th' Omnipotent to arms.
Nine times the space<sup>2</sup> that measures day and night
To mortal men, he with his horrid crew
Lay vanquished, rolling in the fiery gulf
Confounded though immortal: but his doom
Reserved him to more wrath; for now the thought
Both of lost happiness and lasting pain
Torments him; round he throws his baleful<sup>o</sup> eyes malignant
That witnessed huge affliction and dismay
Mixed with obdurate pride and steadfast hate:
At once as far as angels' ken<sup>o</sup> he views range of sight
The dismal situation waste and wild,
A dungeon horrible, on all sides round
As one great furnace flamed, yet from those flames
No light, but rather darkness visible
Served only to discover sights of woe,

8. A composite of phrases and ideas from Genesis 1.2 ("And the earth was without form, and void, and darkness was upon the face of the deep. And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters"). Only a small number of Milton's many allusions to the Bible (in many versions) can be indicated in the notes. Milton's brooding dove image comes from the Latin (Tremellius) Bible version, incubabat, "incubated."

9. An opening question like this is an epic convention.

1. A mythical substance of great hardness.
2. Extent of time.

- 65 Regions of sorrow, doleful shades, where peace
 And rest can never dwell, hope never comes
 That comes to all;<sup>3</sup> but torture without end
 Still urges,<sup>0</sup> and a fiery deluge, fed always provokes
 With ever-burning sulphur unconsumed:
- 70 Such place Eternal Justice had prepared
 For those rebellious, here their prison ordained
 In utter darkness, and their portion set
 As far removed from God and light of Heav'n
 As from the center thrice to th' utmost pole.<sup>4</sup>
- 75 O how unlike the place from whence they fell!
 There the companions of his fall, o'erwhelmed
 With floods and whirlwinds of tempestuous fire,
 He soon discerns, and welt'ring<sup>0</sup> by his side rolling in the waves
 One next himself in power, and next in crime,
- 50 Long after known in Palestine, and named
 Beelzebub.<sup>5</sup> To whom th' Arch-Enemy,
 And thence in Heav'n called Satan,<sup>6</sup> with bold words
 Breaking the horrid silence thus began.
 "If thou beest he; but O how fall'n!<sup>7</sup> how changed
- 85 From him, who in the happy realms of light
 Clothed with transcendent brightness didst outshine
 Myriads though bright: if he whom mutual league,
 United thoughts and counsels, equal hope
 And hazard in the glorious enterprise,
- 90 Joined with me once, now misery hath joined
 In equal ruin: into what pit thou seest
 From what height fall'n, so much the stronger proved
 He with his thunder:<sup>0</sup> and till then who knew thunderbolt
 The force of those dire arms? Yet not for those,
- 95 Nor what the potent victor in his rage
 Can else inflict, do I repent or change,
 Though changed in outward luster, that fixed mind
 And high disdain, from sense of injured merit,
 That with the mightiest raised me to contend,
- 100 And to the fierce contention brought along
 Innumerable force of spirits armed
 That durst dislike his reign, and me preferring,
 His utmost power with adverse power opposed
 In dubious<sup>0</sup> battle on the plains of Heav'n, of uncertain outcome
- 105 And shook his throne. What though the field be lost?
 All is not lost; the unconquerable will,
 And study<sup>0</sup> of revenge, immortal hate, intense consideration

3. The phrase alludes to Dante ("All hope abandon, ye who enter here").

4. Milton makes use of various images of the cosmos in Paradise Lost: (1) the earth is the center of the (Ptolemaic) cosmos of ten concentric spheres; (2) the earth and the whole cosmos are an appendage hanging from Heaven by a golden chain; (3) the cosmos seems Copernican from the angels' perspective (see Book 8). Here, the fall from Heaven to Hell is described as thrice as far as the distance from the center (earth) to the outermost sphere.

5. A Phoenician deity, or Baal (the name means "Lord of Flies"). He is called the prince of devils in Matthew 12.24. As with the other fallen angels, his angelic name has been obliterated, and he is now called by the name he will bear as a pagan deity. That literary strategy evokes all the evil associations attaching to those names in human history.

6. In Hebrew the name means "adversary."

7. Alludes to Isaiah 14.12: "How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, Son of the morning."

And courage never to submit or yield:
 And what is else not to be overcome?<sup>8</sup>
 1 io That glory never shall his wrath or might Extort from me. To bow and sue for grace
 With suppliant knee, and deify his power
 Who from the terror of this arm so late Doubted<sup>0</sup> his empire, that were low indeed, feared for ii5 That were an ignominy and shame beneath
 This downfall; since by fate the strength of gods<sup>9</sup>
 And this empyreal substance cannot fail,<sup>0</sup> cease to exist
 Since through experience of this great event
 In arms not worse, in foresight much advanced,
 120 We may with more successful hope resolve
 To wage by force or guile eternal war
 Irreconcilable, to our grand foe,
 Who now triumphs, and in th' excess of joy
 Sole reigning holds the tyranny of Heav'n."
 125 So spake th' apostate angel, though in pain,
 Vaunting aloud, but racked with deep despair:
 And him thus answered soon his bold compeer.<sup>0</sup> comrade
 "O Prince, O Chief of many throned Powers,
 That led th' embattled Seraphim<sup>1</sup> to war
 130 Under thy conduct, and in dreadful deeds
 Fearless, endangered Heav'n's perpetual King;
 And put to proof his high supremacy,
 Whether upheld by strength, or chance, or fate;
 Too well I see and rue the dire event,<sup>0</sup> outcome
 135 That with sad overthrow and foul defeat
 Hath lost us Heav'n, and all this mighty host
 In horrible destruction laid thus low,
 As far as gods and heav'nly essences
 Can perish: for the mind and spirit remains
 140 Invincible, and vigor soon returns,
 Though all our glory extinct, and happy state
 Here swallowed up in endless misery.
 But what if he our conqueror (whom I now
 Of force<sup>0</sup> believe almighty, since no less necessarily 145 Than such could have o'erpow'ered such force as ours)
 Have left us this our spirit and strength entire Strongly to suffer and support our pains,
 That we may so suffice<sup>0</sup> his vengeful ire, satisfy'
 Or do him mightier service as his thralls
 150 By right of war, whate'er his business be Here in the heart of Hell to work in fire,
 Or do his errands in the gloomy deep;
 What can it then avail though yet we feel
 Strength undiminished, or eternal being

8. I.e., what else does it mean not to be overcome?
 9. A term commonly used in the poem for angels.
 But to Satan and his followers it means more, as Satan claims the position of a god, subject to fate
 but nothing else. Their substance is "empyrean"
 (next line), of the empyrean.

1. According to tradition, there were nine orders of angels, arranged hierarchically—seraphim, cherubim, thrones, dominions, virtues, powers, principalities, archangels, and angels. The poem makes use of some of these titles but does not keep this hierarchy.

- 155 To undergo eternal punishment?"
 Whereto with speedy words th' Arch-Fiend replied.
 "Fall'n Cherub, to be weak is miserable
 Doing or suffering: but of this be sure,
 To do aught<sup>0</sup> good never will be our task, anything
- 160 But ever to do ill our sole delight,
 As being the contrary to his high will
 Whom we resist. If then his providence
 Out of our evil seek to bring forth good,
 Our labor must be to pervert that end,
- 165 And out of good still to find means of evil;
 Which ofttimes may succeed, so as perhaps Shall grieve him, if I fail" not, and disturb err
 His inmost counsels from their destined aim.
 But see the angry victor hath recalled
- no His ministers of vengeance and pursuit
 Back to the gates of Heav'n: the sulphurous hail
 Shot after us in storm, o'erblown hath laid<sup>o</sup> calmed
 The fiery surge, that from the precipice
 Of Heav'n received us falling, and the thunder,
- 175 Winged with red lightning and impetuous rage,
 Perhaps hath spent his shafts, and ceases now
 To bellow through the vast and boundless deep.
 Let us not slip<sup>o</sup> th' occasion, whether scorn, let slip
 Or satiate fury yield it from our foe.
- 180 Seest thou yon dreary plain, forlorn and wild,
 The seat of desolation, void of light,
 Save what the glimmering of these livid<sup>o</sup> flames bluish
 Casts pale and dreadful? Thither let us tend
 From off the tossing of these fiery waves,
- 185 There rest, if any rest can harbor there,
 And reassembling our afflicted powers," armies
 Consult how we may henceforth most offend<sup>o</sup> harm, vex
 Our enemy, our own loss how repair,
 How overcome this dire calamity,
- 190 What reinforcement we may gain from hope,
 If not what resolution from despair."<sup>2</sup>
- Thus Satan talking to his nearest mate
 With head uplift above the wave, and eyes
 That sparkling blazed, his other parts besides
- 195 Prone on the flood, extended long and large
 Lay floating many a rood,<sup>3</sup> in bulk as huge

2. Five of the last nine lines of Satan's speech rhyme.

3. An old unit of measure, between six and eight yards.

4. Both the Titans, led by Briareos (said to have had a hundred hands), and the earth-born Giants, represented by Typhon (who lived in Cilicea near Tarsus and was said to have had a hundred heads), fought with Jove. They were punished by being thrown into the underworld. Christian mythographers found in these stories an analogy to Satan's revolt and punishment.

5. The whale, often identified with the great sea monster and enemy of the Lord in Isaiah 17.1 and

- Created hugest that swim th' ocean stream:
 Him haply<sup>o</sup> slumb'ring on the Norway foam
 The pilot of some small night-founded<sup>o</sup> skiff,
 205 Deeming some island, oft, as seamen tell,<sup>6</sup>
 With fixed anchor in his scaly rind
 Moors by his side under the lee,<sup>o</sup> while night
 Invests<sup>o</sup> the sea, and wished morn delays:
 So stretched out huge in length the Arch-Fiend lay 210 Chained on the burning lake, nor ever thence Had ris'n or heaved his head, but that the will
 And high permission of all-ruling Heaven
 Left him at large to his own dark designs,
 That with reiterated crimes he might 215 Heap on himself damnation, while he sought
 Evil to others, and enraged might see
 How all his malice served but to bring forth
 Infinite goodness, grace, and mercy shown
 On man by him seduced, but on himself
 220 Treble confusion, wrath, and vengeance poured.
 Forthwith upright he rears from off the pool
 His mighty stature; on each hand the flames
 Driv'n backward slope their pointing spires,<sup>o</sup> and rolled
 In billows, leave i' th' midst a horrid<sup>o</sup> vale.
 225 Then with expanded wings he steers his flight
 Aloft, incumbent on<sup>o</sup> the dusky air
 That felt unusual weight, till on dry land
 He lights,<sup>o</sup> if it were land that ever burned
 With solid, as the lake with liquid fire,
 230 And such appeared in hue; as when the force
 Of subterranean wind transports a hill
 Torn from Pelorus, or the shattered side
 Of thund'ring Etna,<sup>7</sup> whose combustible
 And fueled entrails thence conceiving fire,
 235 Sublimed<sup>o</sup> with mineral fury, aid the winds,
 And leave a singed bottom all involved<sup>o</sup>
 With stench and smoke: such resting found the sole
 Of unblest feet. Him followed his next mate,
 Both glorying to have scaped the Stygian<sup>o</sup> flood
 240 As gods, and by their own recovered strength,
 Not by the sufferance<sup>o</sup> of supernal power.
 "Is this the region, this the soil, the clime,"
 Said then the lost Archangel, "this the seat<sup>o</sup>
 That we must change for Heav'n, this mournful gloom
 245 For that celestial light? Be it so, since he
 Who now is sov'reign can dispose and bid
 What shall be right: farthest from him is best
 Whom reason hath equaled, force hath made supreme Above his equals. Farewell happy fields
 250 Where joy forever dwells: Hail horrors, hail the crocodile-like dragon of Job 41. Both were also identified with Satan.

6. The story of the deceived sailor and the illusory island was a commonplace, but the reference to Norway suggests a 16th-century version by Olaus Magnus, a Swedish historian.

7. Pelorus and Etna are volcanic mountains in Sicily.

Infernal world, and thou profoundest Hell
 Receive thy new possessor: one who brings
 A mind not to be changed by place or time.
 The mind is its own place, and in itself
 255 Can make a Heav'n of Hell, a Hell of Heav'n.<sup>8</sup>
 What matter where, if I be still the same,
 And what I should be, all but less than<sup>0</sup> he barely less than Whom thunder hath made greater? Here at least
 We shall be free; th' Almighty hath not built
 260 Here for his envy,<sup>9</sup> will not drive us hence:
 Here we may reign secure, and in my choice
 To reign is worth ambition though in Hell:
 Better to reign in Hell, than serve in Heav'n.<sup>1</sup>
 But wherefore let we then our faithful friends,
 265 Th' associates and copartners of our loss
 Lie thus astonished<sup>0</sup> on th' oblivious pool,<sup>2</sup> stunned
 And call them not to share with us their part
 In this unhappy mansion, or once more
 With rallied arms to try what may be yet
 270 Regained in Heav'n, or what more lost in Hell?"
 So Satan spake, and him Beelzebub
 Thus answered. "Leader of those armies bright,
 Which but th' Omnipotent none could have foiled,
 If once they hear that voice, their liveliest pledge
 275 Of hope in fears and dangers, heard so oft
 In worst extremes, and on the perilous edge<sup>0</sup> front lines
 Of battle when it raged, in all assaults
 Their surest signal, they will soon resume
 New courage and revive, though now they lie
 280 Groveling and prostrate on yon lake of fire,
 As we erewhile, astounded and amazed,
 No wonder, fall'n such a pernicious highth."
 He scarce had ceased when the superior Fiend
 Was moving toward the shore; his ponderous shield
 285 Ethereal temper,<sup>3</sup> massy, large and round,
 Behind him cast; the broad circumference
 Hung on his shoulders like the moon, whose orb
 Through optic glass the Tuscan artist views<sup>4</sup>
 At evening from the top of Fesole,
 290 Or in Valdarno, to descry new lands,
 Rivers or mountains in her spotty globe.
 His spear, to equal which the tallest pine
 Hewn on Norwegian hills, to be the mast
 Of some great ammiral,<sup>0</sup> were but a wand admiral's ship
 295 He walked with to support uneasy steps
 Over the burning marl,<sup>0</sup> not like those steps soil

8. Compare Satan's soliloquy, 4.32-113.

9. I.e., because he desires this place.

1. An ironic echo of Odyssey 11.489-91, where the shade of Achilles tells Odysseus that it is better to be a farmhand on earth than king among the dead.

2. The epithet "oblivious" is transferred from the fallen angels to the pool into which they have fallen.

3. I.e., tempered in celestial fire.

4. Galileo, who looked through a telescope ("optic glass") from the hill town of Fiesole, outside Florence, in the valley of the Arno River ("Valdarno," val d'Arno, line 290). In 1610 he published a book describing the mountains on the moon.

On heaven's azure; and the torrid clime
 Smote on him sore besides, vaulted with fire;
 Nathless<sup>0</sup> he so endured, till on the beach nevertheless
 Of that inflamed<sup>0</sup> sea, he stood and called flaming
 His legions, angel forms, who lay entranced
 Thick as autumnal leaves that strow the brooks
 In Vallombrosa,<sup>5</sup> where th' Etrurian shades
 High overarched embow'r;<sup>0</sup> or scattered sedge<sup>0</sup> form bowers I seaweed
 Afloat, when with fierce winds Orion armed Hath vexed the Red Sea coast,<sup>6</sup> whose waves o'erthrew
 Busiris<sup>7</sup> and his Memphian chivalry,
 While with perfidious hatred they pursued
 The sojourners of Goshen, who beheld
 From the safe shore their floating carcasses
 And broken chariot wheels; so thick bestrown
 Abject and lost lay these, covering the flood,
 Under amazement of their hideous change.
 He called so loud, that all the hollow deep
 Of Hell resounded. "Princes, Potentates,
 Warriors, the flow'r of Heav'n, once yours, now lost,
 If such astonishment as this can seize
 Eternal Spirits: or have ye chos'n this place
 After the toil of battle to repose
 Your wearied virtue,<sup>0</sup> for the ease you find strength, valor
 To slumber here, as in the vales of Heav'n?
 Or in this abject posture have ye sworn
 To adore the conqueror? who now beholds
 Cherub and Seraph rolling in the flood
 With scattered arms and ensigns,<sup>0</sup> till anon battle flags
 His swift pursuers from Heav'n gates discern
 Th' advantage, and descending tread us down
 Thus drooping, or with linked thunderbolts
 Transfix us to the bottom of this gulf.
 Awake, arise, or be forever fall'n."
 They heard, and were abashed, and up they sprung
 Upon the wing, as when men wont<sup>0</sup> to watch accustomed
 On duty, sleeping found by whom they dread,
 Rouse and bestir themselves ere well awake.
 Nor did they not perceive the evil plight
 In which they were, or the fierce pains not feel;<sup>8</sup>
 Yet to their general's voice they soon obeyed
 Innumerable. As when the potent rod
 Of Amram's son<sup>9</sup> in Egypt's evil day
 Waved round the coast, up called a pitchy cloud
 Of locusts, warping<sup>0</sup> on the eastern wind, swarming

5. The name means "shady valley" and refers to a region high in the Apennines, about twenty miles from Florence, in Tuscany ("Etruria"). Similes comparing the numberless dead to falling leaves are frequent in epic (e.g., Aeneid 6.309—10).

6. Orion is a constellation whose rising near sunset in late summer and autumn was associated with storms in the Red Sea.

7. Mythical Egyptian pharaoh, whom Milton associates with the pharaoh of Exodus 14, who pursued the Israelites ("sojourners of Goshen," line 309) into the Red Sea, which God parted for them. His "chivalry" (following) are horsemen from Memphis.

8. The double negatives make a positive: they did perceive both plight and pain.

9. Moses, who drew down a plague of locusts on Egypt (Exodus 10.12-15).

That o'er the realm of impious Pharaoh hung
 Like night, and darkened all the land of Nile:
 So numberless were those bad angels seen
 345 Hovering on wing under the cope<sup>o</sup> of Hell roof
 'Twixt upper, nether, and surrounding fires;
 Till, as a signal giv'n, th' uplifted spear
 Of their great Sultan<sup>1</sup> waving to direct
 Their course, in even balance down they light
 350 On the firm brimstone, and fill all the plain;
 A multitude, like which the populous north
 Poured never from her frozen loins, to pass
 Rhene or the Danaw, when her barbarous sons
 Came like a deluge on the south, and spread
 355 Beneath Gibraltar to the Libyan sands.<sup>2</sup>
 Forthwith from every squadron and each band
 The heads and leaders thither haste where stood
 Their great commander; godlike shapes and forms
 Excelling human, princely dignities,
 360 And powers that erst<sup>o</sup> in Heaven sat on thrones; formerly
 Though of their names in heav'nly records now
 Be no memorial, blotted out and razed<sup>o</sup> erased
 By their rebellion, from the Books of Life.
 Nor had they yet among the sons of Eve
 365 Got them new names, till wand'ring o'er the earth,
 Through God's high sufferance for the trial of man,
 By falsities and lies the greatest part
 Of mankind they corrupted to forsake
 God their Creator, and th' invisible
 370 Glory of him that made them, to transform
 Oft to the image of a brute, adorned
 With gay religions<sup>o</sup> full of pomp and gold, showy rites
 And devils to adore for deities:
 Then were they known to men by various names,
 375 And various idols through the heathen world.
     Say, Muse, their names then known, who first, who last,<sup>3</sup>
 Roused from the slumber on that fiery couch,
 At their great emperor's call, as next in worth
 Came singly<sup>o</sup> where he stood on the bare strand, one at a time
 380 While the promiscuous<sup>o</sup> crowd stood yet aloof. mixed
     The chief were those who from the pit of Hell
 Roaming to seek their prey on earth, durst fix
 Their seats long after next the seat of God,<sup>4</sup>
 Their altars by his altar, gods adored
 385 Among the nations round, and durst abide Jehovah thund'ring out of Zion, throned
 Between the Cherubim;<sup>5</sup> yea, often placed Within his sanctuary itself their shrines,

1. A first use of this description of Satan as an Oriental despot.

2. The barbarian invasions of Rome began with crossings of the Rhine ("Rhene") and Danube ("Danaw") rivers and spread across Spain, via Gibraltar, to North Africa.

3. The catalogue of gods here is an epic convention; Homer catalogues ships; Virgil, warriors.

4. The first group of devils come from the Middle East, close neighbors of Jehovah "throned" in his sanctuary in Jerusalem.

5. Golden cherubim adorned opposite ends of the gold cover on the Ark of the Covenant.

Abomination; and with cursed things

 And with their darkness durst affront his light.
 First Moloch,<sup>6</sup> horrid king besmeared with blood
 Of human sacrifice, and parents' tears,
 Though for the noise of drums and timbrels<sup>0</sup> loud
 395 Their children's cries unheard, that passed through fire
 To his grim idol. Him the Ammonite<sup>7</sup>
 Worshipped in Rabba and her wat'ry plain,
 In Argob and in Basan, to the stream
 Of utmost Arnon. Nor content with such 400 Audacious neighborhood, the wisest heart
 Of Solomon he led by fraud to build
 His temple right against the temple of God
 On that opprobrious hill, and made his grove
 The pleasant valley of Hinnom, Tophet thence 405 And black Gehenna called, the type of Hell.<sup>8</sup>
 Next Chemos,<sup>9</sup> th' obscene dread of Moab's sons,
 From Aroer to Nebo, and the wild
 Of southmost Abarim; in Hesebon

 And Eleale to th' Asphaltic Pool.<sup>1</sup>
 Peor<sup>2</sup> his other name, when he enticed
 Israel in Sittim on their march from Nile
 To do him wanton rites, which cost them woe.

 Even to that hill of scandal,<sup>3</sup> by the grove
 Of Moloch homicide, lust hard by<sup>o</sup> hate;
 Till good Josiah drove them thence to Hell.
 With these came they, who from the bord'ring flood

 Egypt from Syrian ground,<sup>4</sup> had general names
 Of Baalim and Ashtaroth, those male,
 These feminine.<sup>5</sup> For Spirits when they please

6. Moloch was a sun god, sometimes represented as a roaring bull or with a calf's head, within whose brazen image living children were supposedly burned as sacrifices.

7. The Ammonites lived east of the Jordan River. "Rabba" (next line) is modern Amman, in Jordan; "Argob," "Basan," "utmost Arnon" (lines 398-99) are lands east of the Dead Sea.

8. The rites of Moloch on "that opprobrious hill" (the Mount of Olives), just opposite the Jewish temple, and in the valley of Hinnom so polluted those places that they were turned into the refuse dump of Jerusalem. Under the name "Tophet" and "Gehenna," Hinnom became a type of Hell.

9. Chemos, or Chemosh, associated with Moloch in 1 Kings 11.7, was the god of the Moabites, whose lands (many drawn from Isaiah 15-16) are mentioned in the following lines.

1. The Dead Sea.

2. The story of Peor seducing the Israelites in Sittim is told in Numbers 25.

3. The Mount of Olives, where Solomon built temples for Chemos and Moloch (1 Kings 11.7); epithets were commonly attached to the names of gods, as in the next line, Moloch "homicide." Josiah (following line) destroyed pagan idols in Jerusalem and other cities (2 Chronicles 34).

4. Palestine lies between the Euphrates and "the brook Besor" (1 Samuel 30.10).

5. Plural forms, masculine and feminine, respectively, denoting aspects of the sun god Baal and the moon goddess Astarte (called "Astareth" in line 438, below).

Dilated or condensed, bright or obscure,
 430 Can execute their airy purposes,
 And works of love or enmity fulfill.
 For those the race of Israel oft forsook
 Their Living Strength, and unfrequented left
 His righteous altar, bowing lowly down
 435 To bestial gods; for which their heads as low
 Bowed down in battle, sunk before the spear
 Of despicable foes. With these in troop
 Came Astoreth, whom the Phoenicians called
 Astarte, queen of Heav'n, with crescent horns;
 440 To whose bright image nightly by the moon
 Sidonian virgins<sup>6</sup> paid their vows and songs,
 In Sion also not unsung, where stood
 Her temple on th' offensive mountain,<sup>7</sup> built
 By that uxorious king, whose heart though large,
 445 Beguiled by fair idolatresses, fell
 To idols foul. Thammuz<sup>8</sup> came next behind,
 Whose annual wound in Lebanon allured
 The Syrian damsels to lament his fate
 In amorous ditties all a summer's day,
 450 While smooth Adonis<sup>9</sup> from his native work
 Ran purple to the sea, supposed with blood
 Of Thammuz yearly wounded: the love-tale
 Infected Sion's daughters with like heat,
 Whose wanton passions in the sacred porch
 455 Ezekiel<sup>1</sup> saw, when by the vision led
 His eye surveyed the dark idolatries
 Of alienated Judah. Next came one
 Who mourned in earnest, when the captive ark
 Maimed his brute image, head and hands lopped off
 460 In his own temple, on the grunsel edge,<sup>2</sup>
 Where he fell flat, and shamed his worshippers:
 Dagon his name, sea monster, upward man
 And downward fish: yet had his temple high
 Reared in Azotus, dreaded through the coast
 465 Of Palestine, in Gath and Ascalon
 And Accaron and Gaza's<sup>3</sup> frontier bounds.
 Him followed Rimmon,<sup>4</sup> whose delightful seat
 Was fair Damascus, on the fertile banks
 Of Abbana and Pharphar, lucid streams.
 470 He also against the house of God was bold:
 A leper once he lost and gained a king,
 Ahaz his sottish conqueror, whom he drew

6. Sidon and Tyre were the chief cities of Phoenicia.

7. The Mount of Olives again. "That uxorious king" (next line) is Solomon, who "loved many strange women" (2 Kings 11.1-8).

8. A Syrian god, supposedly killed by a boar in Lebanon; his Greek form was Adonis, beloved of Aphrodite and god of the solar year. Annual festivals mourned his death and celebrated his revival as signifying the death and rebirth of vegetation.

9. Here, the Lebanese river named for the deity because every spring it turned bloodred from sedi-imentary mud.

1. The prophet complained that Jewish women were worshipping Thammuz (Ezekiel 8.14).

2. When the Philistines stole the ark of God, they placed it in the temple of their sea god, Dagon, but in the morning the mutilated statue of Dagon was found on the threshold ("grunsel edge") (1 Samuel 5.1-5).

3. The five chief cities of the Philistines, sites of Dagon's worship.

4. A Phoenician god whose temple was in Damascus.

God's altar to disparage and displace
 For one of Syrian mode,<sup>5</sup> whereon to burn
 His odious off'rings, and adore the gods
 Whom he had vanquished. After these appeared
 A crew who under names of old renown,
 Osiris, Isis, Orus<sup>6</sup> and their train
 With monstrous shapes and sorceries abused
 Fanatic Egypt and her priests, to seek
 Their wand'ring gods disguised in brutish forms
 Rather than human. Nor did Israel scape
 Th' infection when their borrowed gold composed
 The calf in Oreb:<sup>7</sup> and the rebel king
 Doubled that sin in Bethel and in Dan,
 Lik'ning his Maker to the grazed ox,<sup>8</sup>
 Jehovah, who in one night when he passed
 From Egypt marching, equaled<sup>9</sup> with one stroke
 Both her firstborn and all her bleating gods.<sup>9</sup>
 Belial came last,<sup>1</sup> than whom a spirit more lewd
 Fell not from Heaven, or more gross to love
 Vice for itself: to him no temple stood
 Or altar smoked; yet who more oft than he
 In temples and at altars, when the priest
 Turns atheist, as did Eli's sons,<sup>2</sup> who filled
 With lust and violence the house of God.
 In courts and palaces he also reigns
 And in luxurious cities, where the noise
 Of riot ascends above their loftiest tow'rs,
 And injury and outrage: and when night
 Darkens the streets, then wander forth the sons
 Of Belial, flown<sup>0</sup> with insolence and wine.<sup>3</sup>
 Witness the streets of Sodom, and that night
 In Gibeah, when the hospitable door
 Exposed a matron to avoid worse rape.<sup>4</sup>

5. A Syrian general, Naaman, was cured of leprosy and converted from worship of Rimmon by the waters of the Jordan (2 Kings 5), while King Ahaz, an Israelite monarch who conquered Damascus, was converted there to Rimmon's worship.

6. The second group of devils includes the Egyptian gods driven from Heaven by the revolt of the giants (Ovid, Metamorphoses 5) and forced to wander in "monstrous" (next line) animal disguises.

7. In the wilderness of Egypt, while Moses was receiving the Law, Aaron made a golden calf, thought to be an idol of the Egyptian god Apis and made of ornaments brought out of Egypt (Exodus 32).

8. Jeroboam, "the rebel king" who led the ten tribes of Israel in revolt against Solomon's son, Rehoboam; he doubled Aaron's sin by making two golden calves (1 Kings 12.25—30).

9. Jehovah smote the firstborn of all Egyptian families as well as their gods (Exodus 12.12).

1. Belial was never worshipped as a god; his name means "wickedness," but its use in phrases like "sons of Belial" encouraged personification.

2. Priests who were termed "sons of Belial" because they seized for themselves offerings made to God and lay with women who assembled at the door of the tabernacle (1 Samuel 2.12—22).

3. This passage, with its present-tense verbs, invites application to current examples—at court and in Restoration London.

4. Lot begged the Sodomites to rape his daughters rather than his (male) angel guests (Genesis 19); in Gibeah a Levite avoided "worse" (homosexual) rape by surrendering his concubine to riotous "sons of Belial" (Judges 19.21-30).

5. The Ionian Greeks ("Javan's issue," i.e., of the line of Javan, grandson of Noah) regarded the Titans as gods; their supposed parents were Heaven (Uranus) and Earth (Gaea).

By younger Saturn, he from mightier Jove,
 His own and Rhea's son, like measure found;
 So Jove usurping reigned:<sup>6</sup> these first in Crete

 Of cold Olympus ruled the middle air
 Their highest heav'n; or on the Delphian cliff,
 Or in Dodona, and through all the bounds
 Of Doric land;<sup>7</sup> or who with Saturn old

 And o'er the Celtic roamed the utmost isles.<sup>8</sup>
 All these and more came flocking; but with looks
 Downcast and damp,<sup>9</sup> yet such wherein appeared depressed, dazed

 525 Not in despair, to have found themselves not lost
 In loss itself; which on his count'nance cast
 Like doubtful hue:<sup>9</sup> but he his wonted<sup>0</sup> pride accustomed
 Soon recollecting, with high words, that bore
 Semblance of worth, not substance, gently raised
 530 Their fainting courage, and dispelled their fears.
 Then straight<sup>0</sup> commands that at the warlike sound immediately
 Of trumpets loud and clarions be upreared
 His mighty standard; that proud honor claimed
 Azazel<sup>1</sup> as his right, a Cherub tall:
 535 Who forthwith from the glittering staff unfurled
 Th' imperial ensign, which full high advanced
 Shone like a meteor streaming to the wind
 With gems and golden luster rich emblazed,
 Seraphic arms and trophies:<sup>2</sup> all the while 540 Sonorous metal<sup>0</sup> blowing martial sounds: trumpets
 At which the universal host upsent
 A shout that tore Hell's concave,<sup>0</sup> and beyond vault
 Frighted the reign of Chaos and old Night.<sup>3</sup>
 All in a moment through the gloom were seen
 545 Ten thousand banners rise into the air
 With orient<sup>0</sup> colors waving: with them rose lustrous
 A forest huge of spears: and thronging helms
 Appeared, and serried<sup>4</sup> shields in thick array pushed close together
 Of depth immeasurable: anon they move
 550 In perfect phalanx to the Dorian<sup>4</sup> mood
 Of flutes and soft recorders; such as raised
 To highth of noblest temper heroes old
 Arming to battle, and instead of rage
 Deliberate valor breathed, firm and unmoved

6. The Titan Cronos, or Saturn, deposed his elder brother, married his sister Rhea, and ruled until he was deposed by his father, Zeus (Jove), who had been reared in secret on Mount Ida in Crete.

7. Zeus and the other Olympian gods had their seat on Mount Olympus, in "middle air"; they were worshipped in Delphi, Dodona, and throughout Greece ("Doric lands").

8. Saturn, after his downfall, fled over "Adria" (the Adriatic Sea) to the "Hesperian fields" (Italy), crossed the "Celtic" fields of France, and thence to Britain, the "utmost isles."

9. Satan's face reflected the same mixed emotions.

1. Traditionally, one of the four standard-bearers in Satan's army. "Clarions" (line 532): small, shrill trumpets.

2. Their flags bear the heraldic arms of the various orders of angels and memorials of their battles.

3. In Paradise Lost 2.894-909, 959-70 Chaos and Night rule the region of unformed matter between Heaven and earth.

4. Severe, martial music used by the Spartans marching to battle. "Phalanx": battle formation.

With dread of death to flight or foul retreat,
 Nor wanting power to mitigate and swage<sup>0</sup> assuage
 With solemn touches, troubled thoughts, and chase
 Anguish and doubt and fear and sorrow and pain
 From mortal or immortal minds. Thus they Breathing united force with fixed thought
 Moved on in silence to soft pipes that charmed
 Their painful steps o'er the burnt soil; and now
 Advanced in view they stand, a horrid<sup>0</sup> front bristling with spears
 Of dreadful length and dazzling arms, in guise
 Of warriors old with ordered spear and shield,
 Awaiting what command their mighty chief
 Had to impose. He through the armed files
 Darts his experienced eye, and soon traverse<sup>0</sup>
 The whole battalion views, their order due,
 Their visages and stature as of gods,
 Their number last he sums. And now his heart
 Distends with pride, and hard'ning in his strength
 Glories: for never since created man<sup>5</sup>
 Met such embodied force, as named<sup>0</sup> with these composed
 Could merit more than that small infantry
 Warred on by cranes:<sup>6</sup> though all the giant brood
 Of Phlegra with th' heroic race were joined
 That fought at Thebes and Ilium,<sup>7</sup> on each side
 Mixed with auxiliar<sup>0</sup> gods; and what resounds allied
 In fable or romance of Uther's son
 Begirt with British and Armoric knights;
 And all who since, baptized or infidel
 Jousted in Aspramont or Montalban,
 Damasco, or Morocco, or Trebisond,
 Or whom Biserta sent from Afric shore
 When Charlemagne with all his peerage fell
 By Fontarabia.<sup>8</sup> Thus far these beyond
 Compare of mortal prowess, yet observed<sup>0</sup> obeyed
 Their dread commander: he above the rest
 In shape and gesture proudly eminent
 Stood like a tow'r; his form had yet not lost
 All her<sup>9</sup> original brightness, nor appeared
 Less than Archangel ruined, and th' excess
 Of glory obscured: as when the sun new-ris'n
 Looks through the horizontal<sup>0</sup> misty air on the horizon
 Shorn of his beams, or from behind the moon
 In dim eclipse disastrous<sup>0</sup> twilight sheds ill-starred
 On half the nations, and with fear of change

5. I.e., since the creation of man.

6. Pygmies (little people, with a pun, in "infantry" on "infants") had periodic fights with the cranes, in Pliny's account. Compared with Satan's forces, all other armies are puny.

7. In Greek mythology, the Giants fought the gods at Phlegra in Macedonia; in Roman myth, it was at Phlegra in Italy. Satan's forces surpass them, even if joined with the Seven who fought against Thebes and the whole Greek host that besieged Troy ("Ilium").

8. Satan's forces also surpass the "British and Armoric" (from Brittany) knights who fought with King Arthur ("Uther's son") and all the romance knights who fought at the famous named sites in the following lines. Roncesvalles, near Fontarabia, was the place where Charlemagne's "peerage," including his best knight, Roland, were defeated in battle (though not Charlemagne himself).

9. Forma in Latin is feminine.

Perplexes monarchs. Darkened so, yet shone
 Above them all th' Archangel: but his face
 Deep scars of thunder had intrenched,<sup>0</sup> and care furrowed
 Sat on his faded cheek, but under brows
 Of dauntless courage, and considerate" pride conscious, deliberate
 Waiting revenge: cruel his eye, but cast
 Signs of remorse and passion<sup>0</sup> to behold compassion, pain
 The fellows of his crime, the followers rather (Far other once beheld in bliss) condemned
 Forever now to have their lot in pain,
 Millions of Spirits for his fault amerced<sup>0</sup> deprived
 Of Heav'n, and from eternal splendors flung
 For his revolt, yet faithful how they stood,
 Their glory withered: as when Heaven's fire
 Hath scathed<sup>0</sup> the forest oaks, or mountain pines, damaged
 With singed top their stately growth though bare
 Stands on the blasted heath. He now prepared
 To speak; whereat their doubled ranks they bend
 From wing to wing, and half enclose him round
 With all his peers: attention held them mute.
 Thrice he essayed,<sup>0</sup> and thrice, in spite of scorn, attempted
 Tears such as angels weep burst forth: at last Words interwove with sighs found out their way.
 "O myriads of immortal Spirits, O Powers
 Matchless, but with th' Almighty, and that strife
 Was not inglorious, though th' event" was dire, outcome
 As this place testifies, and this dire change
 Hateful to utter: but what power of mind
 Foreseeing or presaging, from the depth
 Of knowledge past or present, could have feared,
 How such united force of gods, how such
 As stood like these, could ever know repulse?
 For who can yet believe, though after loss,
 That all these puissant" legions, whose exile potent, powerful
 Hath emptied Heav'n, shall fail to reascend
 Self-raised, and repossess their native seat?
 For me, be witness all the host of Heav'n,
 If counsels different," or danger shunned contradictory
 By me, have lost our hopes. But he who reigns
 Monarch in Heav'n, till then as one secure
 Sat on his throne, upheld by old repute,
 Consent or custom, and his regal state
 Put forth at full, but still" his strength concealed, always
 Which tempted our attempt, and wrought our fall.
 Henceforth his might we know, and know our own
 So as not either to provoke, or dread
 New war, provoked; our better part remains
 To work in close design, by fraud or guile
 What force effected not: that he no less
 At length from us may find, who overcomes
 By force, hath overcome but half his foe.
 Space may produce new worlds; whereof so rife" common
 There went a fame" in Heav'n that he ere long rumor

Intended to create, and therein plant
 A generation, whom his choice regard
 Should favor equal to the sons of Heaven:
 Thither, if but to pry, shall be perhaps
 Our first eruption,<sup>0</sup> thither or elsewhere: breaking out
 For this infernal pit shall never hold
 Celestial Spirits in bondage, not th' abyss
 Long under darkness cover. But these thoughts
 Full counsel must mature: peace is despaired,
 For who can think submission? War then, war
 Open or understood<sup>0</sup> must be resolved." covert

He spake: and to confirm his words, out flew
 Millions of flaming swords, drawn from the thighs
 Of mighty Cherubim; the sudden blaze
 Far round illumined Hell: highly they raged
 Against the Highest, and fierce with grasped arms
 Clashed on their sounding shields the din of war,<sup>1</sup>
 Hurling defiance toward the vault of Heav'n.

There stood a hill not far whose grisly top
 Belched fire and rolling smoke; the rest entire Shone with a glossy scurf,<sup>0</sup> undoubted sign crust
 That in his womb was hid metallic ore,
 The work of sulphur.<sup>2</sup> Thither winged with speed
 A numerous brigade hastened. As when bands
 Of pioneers<sup>0</sup> with spade and pickax armed military engineers
 Forerun the royal camp, to trench a field,
 Or cast a rampart. Mammon<sup>3</sup> led them on,
 Mammon, the least erected Spirit that fell

From Heav'n, for ev'n in Heav'n his looks and thoughts
 Were always downward bent, admiring more
 The riches of Heav'n's pavement, trodden gold,
 Than aught divine or holy else enjoyed
 In vision beatific: by him first
 Men also, and by his suggestion taught,
 Ransacked the center, and with impious hands
 Rifled the bowels of their mother earth
 For treasures better hid. Soon had his crew
 Opened into the hill a spacious wound
 And digged out ribs of gold. Let none admire<sup>0</sup> wonder
 That riches grow in Hell; that soil may best
 Deserve the precious bane.<sup>0</sup> And here let those poison
 Who boast in mortal things, and wond'ring tell
 Of Babel, and the works of Memphian kings,<sup>4</sup>
 Learn how their greatest monuments of fame,
 And strength and art are easily outdone
 By Spirits reprobate, and in an hour
 What in an age they with incessant toil
 And hands innumerable scarce perform.

1. Like Roman legionnaires, the fallen angels applaud by beating swords on shields.

2. Sulfur and mercury were considered the basic substances of all metals.

3. "Mammon," an abstract word for riches, came to be personified and associated with the god of wealth, Plutus, and so with Pluto, god of the underworld. Cf. Matthew 6.24: "Ye cannot serve God and mammon."

4. The Tower of Babel and the pyramids of Egypt.

- 700 Nigh on the plain in many cells prepared,
 That underneath had veins of liquid fire
 Sluiced from the lake, a second multitude
 With wondrous art founded<sup>0</sup> the massy ore, melted
 Severing<sup>0</sup> each kind, and scummed the bullion dross:<sup>0</sup> separating / boiling dregs
- 705 A third as soon had formed within the ground
 A various mold, and from the boiling cells
 By strange conveyance filled each hollow nook,
 As in an organ from one blast of wind
 To many a row of pipes the soundboard breathes.
- 710 Anon out of the earth a fabric huge
 Rose like an exhalation, with the sound
 Of dulcet symphonies and voices sweet,
 Built like a temple,<sup>5</sup> where pilasters<sup>0</sup> round columns set in a wall
 Were set, and Doric pillars<sup>6</sup> overlaid
- 715 With golden architrave; nor did there want
 Cornice or frieze, with bossy<sup>0</sup> sculptures grav'n;
 The roof was fretted<sup>0</sup> gold. Not Babylon, embossed
 Nor great Alcairo such magnificence richly ornamented
 Equaled in all their glories, to enshrine
- 720 Belus or Serapis<sup>7</sup> their gods, or seat
 Their kings, when Egypt with Assyria strove
 In wealth and luxury. Th' ascending pile
 Stood fixed<sup>0</sup> her stately height, and straight<sup>0</sup> the doors complete / at once
 Opening their brazen folds discover<sup>0</sup> wide reveal
- 725 Within, her ample spaces, o'er the smooth
 And level pavement: from the arched roof
 Pendent by subtle magic many a row
 Of starry lamps and blazing cressets<sup>8</sup> fed
 With naphtha and asphaltus yielded light
- 730 As from a sky. The hasty multitude
 Admiring entered, and the work some praise
 And some the architect: his hand was known
 In Heav'n by many a towered structure high,
 Where sceptered angels held their residence,
- 735 And sat as princes, whom the Supreme King
 Exalted to such power, and gave to rule,
 Each in his hierarchy, the orders bright.
 Nor was his name unheard or unadored
 In ancient Greece and in Ausonian land
- 740 Men called him Mulciber<sup>9</sup> and how he fell
 From Heav'n, they fabled, thrown by angry Jove
 Sheer o'er the crystal battlements: from morn
 To noon he fell, from noon to dewy eve,
 A summer's day; and with the setting sun

5. After melting the gold with fire from the lake and pouring it into molds, the devils cause their building to rise as by magic, to the sounds of marvelous music.

6. Doric pillars are severe and plain. The devils' palace combines classical architectural features with elaborate ornamentation, suggesting, perhaps, St. Peter's in Rome.

7. At Babylon, in Assyria, there were temples to

"Belus" or Baal; at Alcairo (modern Cairo, ancient Memphis), in Egypt, they were to Osiris ("Serapis").

8. Basketlike lamps, hung from the ceiling.

9. Hephaestus, or Vulcan, was sometimes known in "Ausonian land" (Italy) as "Mulciber." The story of Jove's tossing him out of Heaven (see following lines) is told in Book 1 of the Iliad.

745 Dropped from the zenith like a falling star,
 On Lemnos th' Aegean isle: thus they relate,
 Erring; for he with this rebellious rout
 Fell long before; nor aught availed him now
 To have built in Heav'n high tow'rs; nor did he scape

750 By all his engines, but was headlong sent
 With his industrious crew to build in Hell.

Meanwhile the winged heralds by command
 Of sov'reign power, with awful ceremony
 And trumpet's sound throughout the host proclaim

755 A solemn council forthwith to be held

At Pandemonium,<sup>1</sup> the high capitol
 Of Satan and his peers:<sup>0</sup> their summons called
 From every band and squared regiment

nobles

By place<sup>0</sup> or choice<sup>0</sup> the worthiest; they anon

760 With hundreds and with thousands trooping came Attended: all access was thronged, the gates
 And porches wide, but chief the spacious hall
 (Though like a covered field, where champions bold
 Wont ride in armed, and at the soldan's<sup>0</sup> chair

To mortal combat or career with lance)
 Thick swarmed, both on the ground and in the air,
 Brushed with the hiss of rustling wings. As bees
 In springtime, when the sun with Taurus rides,<sup>2</sup>

770 Pour forth their populous youth about the hive
 In clusters; they among fresh dews and flowers
 Fly to and fro, or on the smoothed plank,
 The suburb of their straw-built citadel,
 New rubbed with balm, expatiate and confer<sup>3</sup>

775 Their state affairs. So thick the aery crowd
 Swarmed and were straitened; till the signal giv'n,
 Behold a wonder! They but now who seemed
 In bigness to surpass Earth's giant sons
 Now less than smallest dwarfs, in narrow room

780 Throng numberless, like that Pygmean race
 Beyond the Indian mount,<sup>4</sup> or fairy elves,
 Whose midnight revels, by a forest side
 Or fountain some belated peasant sees,
 Or dreams he sees, while overhead the moon

785 Sits arbitress,<sup>0</sup> and nearer to the earth

At once with joy and fear his heart rebounds.

Thus incorporeal Spirits to smallest forms

790 Reduced their shapes immense, and were at large,
 Though without number still amidst the hall

1. "Pandemonium" (a Miltonic coinage) means literally "all demons," an inversion of "pantheon," "all gods."

2. The sun is in the zodiacal sign of Taurus from about April 19 to May 20.

3. Spread out and discuss. Bee similes were common in epic from Homer on; also, the bees' (royalist) society was often cited in political argument. The simile prepares for the sudden contraction of the devils, who can shrink or dilate at will.

4. The pygmies were supposed to live beyond the Himalayas.

5. The belated peasant's.

Of that infernal court. But far within
 And in their own dimensions like themselves
 The great Seraphic Lords and Cherubim
 75 In close recess and secret conclave sat,
 A thousand demigods on golden seats,
 Frequent and full.<sup>6</sup> After short silence then
 And summons read, the great consult<sup>7</sup> began.

Book 2

High on a throne of royal state, which far
 Outshone the wealth of Ormus and of Ind,<sup>1</sup>
 Or where the gorgeous East with richest hand
 Show'rs on her kings barbaric pearl and gold,
 5 Satan exalted sat, by merit raised
 To that bad eminence; and from despair
 Thus high uplifted beyond hope, aspires
 Beyond thus high, insatiate to pursue
 Vain war with Heav'n, and by success" untaught
 10 His proud imaginations" thus displayed.
 "Powers and Dominions,<sup>2</sup> deities of Heaven,
 For since no deep within her gulf can hold
 Immortal vigor, though oppressed and fall'n,
 I give not Heav'n for lost. From this descent
 15 Celestial Virtues rising, will appear
 More glorious and more dread than from no fall,
 And trust themselves to fear no second fate.
 Me though just right, and the fixed laws of Heav'n
 Did first create your leader, next, free choice,
 20 With what besides, in counsel or in fight,
 Hath been achieved of merit, yet this loss
 Thus far at least recovered, hath much more
 Established in a safe unenvied throne
 Yielded with full consent. The happier state
 25 In Heav'n, which follows dignity, might draw
 Envy from each inferior; but who here
 Will envy whom the highest place exposes
 Foremost to stand against the Thunderer's aim
 Your bulwark, and condemns to greatest share
 30 Of endless pain? Where there is then no good
 For which to strive, no strife can grow up there
 From faction; for none sure will claim in Hell
 Precedence, none, whose portion is so small
 Of present pain, that with ambitious mind
 35 Will covet more. With this advantage then
 To union, and firm faith, and firm accord,
 More than can be in Heav'n, we now return
 To claim our just inheritance of old,

the outcome schemes

6. Crowded together, and in full complement.

7. Consultation, often secret and seditious.

1. India. "Ormus": an island in the Persian Gulf, modern Hormuz, famous for pearls.

2. Angelic orders.

Surer to prosper than prosperity
 Could have assured us;<sup>3</sup> and by what best way,
 Whether of open war or covert guile,<sup>4</sup>
 We now debate; who can advise, may speak."
 He ceased, and next him Moloch, sceptered king
 Stood up, the strongest and the fiercest Spirit
 That fought in Heav'n; now fiercer by despair:
 His trust was with th' Eternal to be deemed Equal in strength, and rather than be less
 Cared not to be at all; with that care lost
 Went all his fear: of God, or Hell, or worse
 He recked<sup>0</sup> not, and these words thereafter spake.
 "My sentence<sup>0</sup> is for open war: of wiles,
 More unexpert,<sup>0</sup> I boast not: them let those Contrive who need, or when they need, not now.
 For while they sit contriving, shall the rest,
 Millions that stand in arms, and longing wait
 The signal to ascend, sit lingering here
 Heav'n's fugitives, and for their dwelling place
 Accept this dark opprobrious den of shame,
 The prison of his tyranny who reigns
 By our delay? No, let us rather choose
 Armed with Hell flames and fury all at once
 O'er Heav'n's high tow'rs to force resistless way,
 Turning our torturers into horrid<sup>0</sup> arms
 Against the Torturer; when to meet the noise
 Of his almighty engine<sup>0</sup> he shall hear
 Infernal thunder, and for lightning see
 Black fire and horror shot with equal rage
 Among his angels; and his throne itself
 Mixed with Tartarean<sup>5</sup> sulfur, and strange fire,
 Flis own invented torments. But perhaps
 The way seems difficult and steep to scale
 With upright wing against a higher foe.
 Let such bethink them, if the sleepy drench<sup>0</sup>
 Of that forgetful<sup>0</sup> lake benumb not still,
 That in our proper<sup>0</sup> motion we ascend
 Up to our native seat: descent and fall
 To us is adverse. Who but felt of late
 When the fierce foe hung on our broken rear
 Insulting,<sup>6</sup> and pursued us through the deep,
 With what compulsion and laborious flight
 We sunk thus low? Th' ascent is easy then;
 Th' event<sup>0</sup> is feared; should we again provoke
 Our stronger, some worse way his wrath may find
 To our destruction: if there be in Hell
 Fear to be worse destroyed: what can be worse
 Than to dwell here, driven out from bliss, condemned

cared judgment
less experienced

bristling, horridifying

3. Note the play on "surer," "prosper," "prosperity," "assured," a favorite device of Milton's.

4. A typical epic convention (in Homer, Virgil, Tasso, and elsewhere) involved councils debating war or peace, with spokesmen on each side. Satan offers only the option of war, open or covert.

5. Tartarus is a classical name for hell.

6. With the Latin sense of stamping on; also, triumphantly scorning.

In this abhorred deep to utter woe;
 Where pain of unextinguishable fire
 Must exercise<sup>0</sup> us without hope of end vex, afflict
 90 The vassals' of his anger, when the scourge
 Inexorably, and the torturing hour
 Calls us to penance? More destroyed than thus
 We should be quite abolished and expire.
 What fear we then? What<sup>0</sup> doubt we to incense why
 95 His utmost ire? which to the height enraged,
 Will either quite consume us, and reduce
 To nothing this essential,<sup>0</sup> happier far essence
 Than miserable to have eternal being;
 Or if our substance be indeed divine,
 100 And cannot cease to be, we are at worst
 On this side nothing;<sup>8</sup> and by proof we feel
 Our power sufficient to disturb his Heav'n,
 And with perpetual inroads to alarm,
 Though inaccessible, his fatal<sup>9</sup> throne:
 105 Which if not victory is yet revenge."
 He ended frowning, and his look, denounced<sup>0</sup> portended.
 Desperate revenge, and battle dangerous
 To less than gods. On th' other side up rose Belial, in act more graceful and humane;<sup>0</sup> civil, polite
 no A fairer person lost not Heav'n; he seemed
 For dignity composed and high exploit:
 But all was false and hollow; though his tongue
 Dropped manna, and could make the worse appear
 The better reason,<sup>1</sup> to perplex and dash<sup>0</sup> confuse
 115 Maturest counsels: for his thoughts were low;
 To vice industrious, but to nobler deeds
 Timorous and slothful: yet he pleased the ear,
 And with persuasive accent thus began.
 "I should be much for open war, O Peers,
 120 As not behind in hate; if what was urged
 Main reason to persuade immediate war,
 Did not dissuade me most, and seem to cast
 Ominous conjecture on the whole success:
 When he who most excels in fact<sup>0</sup> of arms, feat
 125 In what he counsels and in what excels
 Mistrustful, grounds his courage on despair
 And utter dissolution, as the scope
 Of all his aim, after some dire revenge.
 First, what revenge? The tow'rs of Heav'n are filled
 130 With armed watch, that render all access
 Impregnable; oft on the bordering deep
 Encamp their legions, or with obscure wing
 Scout far and wide into the realm of Night,

7. Servants, but perhaps also vessels. See Romans 9.22: "vessels of wrath fitted to destruction."

8. I.e., we cannot be worse off than we are now, and still live.

9. Established by Fate; also, deadly.

1. The Sophists, mercenary teachers of rhetoric in ancient Greece, were denounced by Plato for making "the worse appear / The better reason." "His tongue / Dropped manna": his honeyed words seemed like the manna supplied to the Israelites in the desert.

- Scorning surprise. Or could we break our way
135 By force, and at our heels all Hell should rise
With blackest insurrection, to confound
Heav'n's purest light, yet our great enemy
All incorruptible would on his throne
Sit unpolluted, and th' ethereal mold<sup>2</sup>
140 Incapable of stain would soon expel
Her mischief, and purge off the baser fire
Victorious. Thus repulsed, our final hope
Is flat despair: we must exasperate
Th' almighty victor to spend all his rage,
145 And that must end us, that must be our cure,
To be no more; sad cure; for who would lose,
Though full of pain, this intellectual being,
Those thoughts that wander through eternity,
To perish rather, swallowed up and lost
150 In the wide womb of uncreated night,
Devoid of sense and motion? And who knows,
Let this be good, whether our angry foe
Can give it, or will ever? How he can
Is doubtful; that he never will is sure.
155 Will he, so wise, let loose at once his ire,
Belike<sup>0</sup> through impotence, or unaware, perha-ps
To give his enemies their wish, and end
Them in his anger, whom his anger saves
To punish endless? 'Wherefore cease we then?'
160 Say they who counsel war, 'We are decreed,
Reserved and destined to eternal woe;
Whatever doing, what can we suffer more,
What can we suffer worse?' Is this then worst,
Thus sitting, thus consulting, thus in arms?
165 What when we fled amain,<sup>0</sup> pursued and strook<sup>0</sup> headlong / struck
With Heav'n's afflicting thunder, and besought
The deep to shelter us? This Hell then seemed
A refuge from those wounds. Or when we lay
Chained on the burning lake? That sure was worse.
170 What if the breath that kindled those grim fires
Awaked should blow them into sevenfold rage
And plunge us in the flames? Or from above
Should intermitted<sup>0</sup> vengeance arm again suspended
His red right hand to plague us? What if all 175 Her<sup>0</sup> stores were opened, and this firmament<sup>0</sup> Hell's/sky
Of Hell should spout her cataracts<sup>0</sup> of fire, cascades
Impendent<sup>3</sup> horrors, threat'ning hideous fall
One day upon our heads; while we perhaps
Designing or exhorting glorious war,
180 Caught in a fiery tempest shall be hurled
Each on his rock transfixed, the sport and prey
Of racking whirlwinds, or forever sunk
Under yon boiling ocean, wrapped in chains;

2. Heavenly substance, derived from "ether," the fifth and purest element, thought to be incorrupt-ible.

3. In the Latin sense, hanging down, threatening.

There to converse with everlasting groans,
 185 Unrespited, unpitied, unreprieved,
 Ages of hopeless end; this would be worse.
 War therefore, open or concealed, alike
 My voice dissuades; for what can force or guile<sup>4</sup>
 With him, or who deceive his mind, whose eye
 190 Views all things at one view? He from Heav'n's high
 All these our motions<sup>0</sup> vain, sees and derides;
 Not more almighty to resist our might
 Than wise to frustrate all our plots and wiles.
 Shall we then live thus vile, the race of Heav'n
 195 Thus trampled, thus expelled to suffer here
 Chains and these torments? Better these than worse
 By my advice; since fate inevitable
 Subdues us, and omnipotent decree,
 The victor's will. To suffer, as to do,
 200 Our strength is equal, nor the law unjust
 That so ordains: this was at first resolved,
 If we were wise, against so great a foe
 Contending, and so doubtful what might fall.
 I laugh, when those who at the spear are bold
 205 And vent'rous, if that fail them, shrink and fear
 What yet they know must follow, to endure
 Exile, or ignominy, or bonds, or pain,
 The sentence of their conqueror: This is now
 Our doom; which if we can sustain and bear,
 210 Our Supreme Foe in time may much remit
 His anger, and perhaps thus far removed
 Not mind us not offending, satisfied
 With what is punished; whence these raging fires
 Will slacken, if his breath stir not their flames.
 215 Our purer essence then will overcome
 Their noxious vapor, or inured<sup>0</sup> not feel,
 Or changed at length, and to the place conformed
 In temper and in nature, will receive
 Familiar the fierce heat, and void of pain;
 220 This horror will grow mild, this darkness light,
 Besides what hope the never-ending flight
 Of future days may bring, what chance, what change
 Worth waiting, since our present lot appears
 For happy though but ill, for ill not worst,<sup>5</sup>
 225 If we procure not to ourselves more woe."
 Thus Belial, with words clothed in reason's garb,
 Counseled ignoble ease and peaceful sloth,
 Not peace: and after him thus Mammon spake.
 "Either to disenthroned the King of Heav'n
 230 We war, if war be best, or to regain
 Our own right lost: him to unthroned we then
 May hope when everlasting Fate shall yield
 To fickle Chance, and Chaos judge the strife:

proposalsaccustomed

4. The verb "accomplish" or "achieve" is understood.

5. I.e., from the point of view of happiness, the devils are in an ill state, but it could be worse.

The former vain to hope argues<sup>0</sup> as vain proves
 235 The latter: for what place can be for us
 Within Heav'n's bound, unless Heav'n's Lord supreme
 We overpower? Suppose he should relent
 And publish grace to all, on promise made
 Of new subjection; with what eyes could we 240 Stand in his presence humble, and receive
 Strict laws imposed, to celebrate his throne
 With warbled hymns, and to his Godhead sing
 Forced hallelujahs; while he lordly sits
 Our envied Sov'reign, and his altar breathes
 245 Ambrosial<sup>0</sup> odors and ambrosial flowers, fragrant, immortal
 Our servile offerings. This must be our task
 In Heav'n, this our delight; how wearisome
 Eternity so spent in worship paid
 To whom we hate. Let us not then pursue
 250 By force impossible, by leave obtained
 Unacceptable, though in Heav'n, our state
 Of splendid vassalage,<sup>0</sup> but rather seek servitude
 Our own good from ourselves, and from our own
 Live to ourselves, though in this vast recess,
 255 Free, and to none accountable, preferring
 Hard liberty before the easy yoke
 Of servile pomp. Our greatness will appear
 Then most conspicuous, when great things of small,
 Useful of hurtful, prosperous of adverse
 260 We can create, and in what place soe'er
 Thrive under evil, and work ease out of pain
 Through labor and endurance. This deep world
 Of darkness do we dread? How oft amidst Thick clouds and dark doth Heav'n's all-ruling Sire
 265 Choose to reside, his glory unobscured,
 And with the majesty of darkness round
 Covers his throne; from whence deep thunders roar
 Must'ring their rage, and Heav'n resembles Hell?
 As he our darkness, cannot we his light
 270 Imitate when we please? This desert soil
 Wants<sup>0</sup> not her hidden luster, gems and gold; lacks
 Nor want we skill or art, from whence to raise Magnificence; and what can Heav'n show more?
 Our torments also may in length of time
 275 Become our elements, these piercing fires constitution
 As soft as now severe, our temper<sup>0</sup> changed
 Into their temper; which must needs remove
 The sensible of pain.<sup>6</sup> All things invite
 To peaceful counsels, and the settled state
 280 Of order, how in safety best we may Compose<sup>0</sup> our present evils, with regard come to terms with
 Of what we are and where, dismissing quite
 All thoughts of war: ye have what I advise."
 He scarce had finished, when such murmur filled

6. Pain felt by the senses.

285 Th' assembly, as when hollow rocks retain
 The sound of blust'ring winds, which all night long
 Had roused the sea, now with hoarse cadence lull
 Seafaring men o'erwatched," whose bark by chance worn out from watching
 Or pinnacle" anchors in a craggy bay boat
 290 After the tempest: such applause was heard
 As Mammon ended, and his sentence pleased.
 Advising peace: for such another field" battlefield
 They dreaded worse than Hell: so much the fear
 Of thunder and the sword of Michael<sup>7</sup>
 295 Wrought still within them; and no less desire
 To found this nether empire, which might rise
 By policy," and long process of time, statecraft
 In emulation opposite to Heav'n.
 Which then Beelzebub perceived, than whom,
 300 Satan except, none higher sat, with grave
 Aspect he rose, and in his rising seemed
 A pillar of state; deep on his front" engraven brow
 Deliberation sat and public care;
 And princely counsel in his face yet shone,
 305 Majestic though in ruin: sage he stood
 With Atlantean<sup>8</sup> shoulders fit to bear
 The weight of mightiest monarchies; his look
 Drew audience and attention still as night
 Or summer's noontide air, while thus he spake.
 310 "Thrones and imperial Powers, offspring of Heav'n
 Ethereal Virtues; or these titles<sup>9</sup> now
 Must we renounce, and changing style" be called title
 Princes of Hell? for so the popular vote
 Inclines, here to continue, and build up here
 315 A growing empire. Doubtless! while we dream,
 And know not that the King of Heav'n hath doomed
 This place our dungeon, not our safe retreat
 Beyond his potent arm, to live exempt
 From Heav'n's high jurisdiction, in new league
 320 Banded against his throne, but to remain
 In strictest bondage, though thus far removed,
 Under th' inevitable curb, reserved
 His captive multitude: for he, be sure,
 In height or depth, still first and last will reign
 325 Sole King, and of his kingdom lose no part
 By our revolt, but over Hell extend
 His empire, and with iron scepter rule
 Us here, as with his golden those in Heav'n.
 What" sit we then projecting peace and war? why
 330 War hath determined us,<sup>1</sup> and foiled with loss
 Irreparable; terms of peace yet none
 Vouchsafed" or sought; for what peace will be giv'n granted
 To us enslaved, but custody severe,
 And stripes, and arbitrary punishment

7. The warrior angel, chief of the angelic armies.

8. Worthy of Atlas, the Titan who as a punishment for rebellion was condemned to hold up the heavens on his shoulders.

9. The official titles of angelic orders.

1. i.e., war has decided the question for us, but also limited us.

Inflicted? And what peace can we return,
 But, to our power,<sup>2</sup> hostility and hate,
 Untamed reluctance,<sup>0</sup> and revenge though slow, resistance
 Yet ever plotting how the conqueror least
 May reap his conquest, and may least rejoice
 In doing what we most in suffering feel?
 Nor will occasion want,<sup>0</sup> nor shall we need be lacking
 With dangerous expedition to invade
 Heav'n, whose high walls fear no assault or siege,
 Or ambush from the deep. What if we find
 Some easier enterprise? There is a place
 (If ancient and prophetic fame<sup>0</sup> in Heav'n rumor
 Err not) another world, the happy seat
 Of some new race called Man, about this time
 To be created like to us, though less
 In power and excellence, but favored more
 Of him who rules above; so was his will
 Pronounced among the gods, and by an oath,
 That shook Heav'n's whole circumference, confirmed.
 Thither let us bend all our thoughts, to learn
 What creatures there inhabit, of what mold,
 Or substance, how endued,<sup>0</sup> and what their power, endowed
 And where their weakness, how attempted<sup>0</sup> best, attacked, tempted
 By force or subtlety. Though Heav'n be shut,
 And Heav'n's high arbitrator sit secure
 In his own strength, this place may lie exposed,
 The utmost border of his kingdom, left
 To their defense who hold it:<sup>3</sup> here perhaps
 Some advantageous act may be achieved
 By sudden onset, either with hellfire
 To waste<sup>0</sup> his whole creation, or possess lay waste
 All as our own, and drive as we were driven,
 The puny habitants, or if not drive,
 Seduce them to our party, that their God
 May prove their foe, and with repenting hand
 Abolish his own works.<sup>4</sup> This would surpass
 Common revenge, and interrupt his joy
 In our confusion, and our joy upraise
 In his disturbance; when his darling sons
 Hurl'd headlong to partake with us, shall curse
 Their frail original,<sup>0</sup> and faded bliss, originator, parent
 Faded so soon. Advise<sup>0</sup> if this be worth consider
 Attempting, or to sit in darkness here
 Hatching vain empires." Thus Beelzebub
 Pleaded his devilish counsel, first devised
 By Satan, and in part proposed: for whence,
 But from the author of all ill could spring
 So deep a malice, to confound<sup>0</sup> the race ruin
 Of mankind in one root,<sup>5</sup> and earth with Hell
 To mingle and involve, done all to spite

2. I.e., to the best of our power.

3. To be defended by the occupants.

4. Cf. Genesis 6.7: "And the Lord said, i will destroy man [and all other creatures]; for it repenteth me that I have made them."

5. Adam, the first man, is the "root" of the human race.

- 385 The great Creator? But their spite still serves
 His glory to augment. The bold design
 Pleased highly those infernal States," and joy nobles
 Sparkled in all their eyes; with full assent
 They vote: whereat his speech he thus renews.
- 390 "Well have ye judged, well ended long debate,
 Synod of gods, and like to what ye are,
 Great things resolved, which from the lowest deep
 Will once more lift us up, in spite of fate,
 Nearer our ancient seat; perhaps in view
- 395 Of those bright confines, whence with neighboring arms
 And opportune excursion we may chance
 Reenter Heav'n; or else in some mild zone
 Dwell not unvisited of Heav'n's fair light
 Secure, and at the bright ning orient<sup>0</sup> beam lustrous
- ^∞ Purge off this gloom; the soft delicious air,
 To heal the scar of these corrosive fires
 Shall breathe her balm. But first whom shall we send
 In search of this new world, whom shall we find Sufficient? Who shall tempt<sup>0</sup> with wand'ring feet attempt, venture
- 405 The dark unbottomed infinite abyss
 And through the palpable obscure<sup>6</sup> find out
 His uncouth<sup>0</sup> way, or spread his aery flight unknown
 Upborne with indefatigable wings
 Over the vast abrupt,<sup>7</sup> ere he arrive
- 410 The happy isle? What strength, what art can then Suffice, or what evasion bear him safe
 Through the strict senteries<sup>0</sup> and stations thick sentries
 Of angels watching round? Here he had need
 All circumspection, and we now no less
- 415 Choice<sup>0</sup> in our suffrage; for on whom we send, discrimination
 The weight of all and our last hope relies."
 This said, he sat; and expectation held
 His look suspense,<sup>8</sup> awaiting who appeared
 To second, or oppose, or undertake
- 420 The perilous attempt: but all sat mute,
 Pondering the danger with deep thoughts; and each
 In other's count'nance read his own dismay
 Astonished. None among the choice and prime
 Of those Heav'n-warring champions could be found
- 425 So hardy as to proffer or accept
 Alone the dreadful voyage; till at last
 Satan, whom now transcendent glory raised
 Above his fellows, with monarchical pride
 Conscious of highest worth, unmoved thus spake.
- 430 "O progeny of Heav'n, empyreal Thrones,
 With reason hath deep silence and demur<sup>0</sup> hesitation
 Seized us, though undismayed: long is the way
 And hard, that out of Hell leads up to light;
 Our prison strong, this huge convex of fire,

6. Darkness so thick it can be felt (cf. Exodus 10.21).

7. Chaos, a striking example of sound imitating sense.

8. I.e., he sat waiting in suspense.

- 435 Outrageous to devour, immures us round
 Ninefold,<sup>9</sup> and gates of burning adamant
 Barred over us prohibit all egress.
 These passed, if any pass, the void profound
 Of unessential Night receives him next
- 440 Wide gaping, and with utter loss of being Threatens him, plunged in that abortive gulf.<sup>1</sup>
 If thence he scape into whatever world,
 Or unknown region, what remains him less<sup>o</sup> awaits him except
 Than unknown dangers and as hard escape?
- 445 But I should ill become this throne, O Peers, ·
 And this imperial sov'reignty, adorned
 With splendor, armed with power, if aught proposed
 And judged of public moment,<sup>o</sup> in the shape importance
 Of difficulty or danger could deter
- 450 Me from attempting. Wherefore do I assume
 These royalties, and not refuse to reign,
 Refusing<sup>o</sup> to accept as great a share if I refuse
 Of hazard as of honor, due alike
 To him who reigns, and so much to him due
- 455 Of hazard more, as he above the rest
 High honored sits? Go therefore mighty Powers,
 Terror of Heav'n, though fall'n; intend<sup>o</sup> at home, consider
 While here shall be our home, what best may ease
 The present misery, and render Hell
- 460 More tolerable; if there be cure or charm
 To respite or deceive, or slack the pain
 Of this ill mansion: intermit no watch
 Against a wakeful foe, while I abroad
 Through all the coasts<sup>o</sup> of dark destruction seek districts
- 465 Deliverance for us all: this enterprise
 None shall partake with me." Thus saying rose
 The monarch, and prevented<sup>o</sup> all reply, forestalled
 Prudent, lest from his resolution raised<sup>o</sup> roused
 Others among the chief might offer now
- 470 (Certain to be refused) what erst<sup>o</sup> they feared; formerly
 And so refused might in opinion stand
 His rivals, winning cheap the high repute
 Which he through hazard huge must earn. But they Dreaded not more th' adventure than his voice
- 475 Forbidding; and at once with him they rose;
 Their rising all at once was as the sound
 Of thunder heard remote. Towards him they bend
 With awful<sup>o</sup> reverence prone; and as a god full of awe
 Extol him equal to the Highest in Heav'n:
- 480 Nor failed they to express how much they praised,
 That for the general safety he despised
 His own: for neither do the Spirits damned
 Lose all their virtue; lest bad men should boast

9. Hell's fiery walls and gates have nine thicknesses (see lines 645ff.). "Adamant" (following): a fabulously hard metal.

1. Chaos is a womb in which all potential forms fragment (see lines 895ff.) "Unessential" (line 439): i.e., having no real essence.

Their specious" deeds on earth, which glory excites,
 Or close" ambition varnished o'er with zeal. pretending to worth
     Thus they their doubtful consultations dark secret
 Ended rejoicing in their matchless chief:
 As when from mountaintops the dusky clouds
 Ascending, while the north wind sleeps, o'erspread
 Heav'n's cheerful face, the louring element" threatening sky
 Scowls o'er the darkened landscape snow, or show'r;
 If chance the radiant sun with farewell sweet
 Extend his evening beam, the fields revive,
 The birds their notes renew, and bleating herds
 Attest their joy, that hill and valley rings.
 O shame to men! Devil with devil damned
 Firm concord holds, men only disagree
 Of creatures rational, though under hope
 Of heavenly grace: and God proclaiming peace,
 Yet live in hatred, enmity, and strife
 Among themselves, and levy cruel wars,
 Wasting the earth, each other to destroy:
 As if (which might induce us to accord)
 Man had not hellish foes enow" besides, enough
 That day and night for his destruction wait.
     The Stygian" council thus dissolved; and forth Styx-like, hellish
 In order came the grand infernal peers:
 Midst came their mighty paramount," and seemed supreme ruler
 Alone th' antagonist of Heav'n, nor less
 Than Hell's dread emperor with pomp supreme,
 And godlike imitated state; him round
 A globe" of fiery Seraphim enclosed hand, circle
 With bright emblazonry and horrent<sup>2</sup> arms.
 Then of their session ended they bid cry
 With trumpet's regal sound the great result:
 Toward the four winds four speedy Cherubim
 Put to their mouths the sounding alchemy<sup>3</sup>
 By herald's voice explained; the hollow abyss
 Heard far and wide, and all the host of Hell
 With deaf'ning shout, returned them loud acclaim.
 Thence more at ease their minds and somewhat raised
 By false presumptuous hope, the ranged" powers arrayed in ranks
 Disband, and wand'ring, each his several way
 Pursues, as inclination or sad choice
 Leads him perplexed, where he may likeliest find
 Truce to his restless thoughts, and entertain
 The irksome hours, till his great chief return.
 Part on the plain, or in the air sublime" aloft
 Upon the wing, or in swift race contend,
 As at th' Olympian games or Pythian fields;<sup>4</sup>
 Part curb their fiery steeds, or shun the goal<sup>5</sup>
 With rapid wheels, or fronted" brigades form. confronting

2. Bristling. "Emblazonry": decorated shields.

3. Trumpets (made of the goldlike alloy brass).

4. The Olympic games were held at Olympia, the Pythian games at Delphi. Games celebrating a (usually dead) hero are an epic convention.

5. To drive a chariot as close as possible around a column without hitting it.

As when to warn proud cities war appears
 Waged in the troubled sky, and armies rush
 To battle in the clouds,<sup>6</sup> before each van<sup>o</sup> vanguard
 Prick<sup>o</sup> forth the aery knights, and couch their spears spur
 Till thickest legions close; with feats of arms
 From either end of Heav'n the welkin<sup>o</sup> burns. sky
 Others with vast Typhoean<sup>7</sup> rage more fell<sup>o</sup> fierce
 Rend up both rocks and hills, and ride the air
 In whirlwind; Hell scarce holds the wild uproar.
 As when Alcides from Oechalia crowned
 With conquest, felt th' envenomed robe, and tore
 Through pain up by the roots Thessalian pines,
 And Lichas from the top of Oeta threw
 Into th' Euboic sea.<sup>8</sup> Others more mild,
 Retreated in a silent valley, sing
 With notes angelical to many a harp
 Their own heroic deeds and hapless fall
 By doom of battle; and complain that fate
 Free virtue should enthral to force or chance.
 Their song was partial,<sup>9</sup> but the harmony prejudiced
 (What could it less when Spirits immortal sing?)
 Suspended<sup>o</sup> Hell, and took with ravishment held in suspense
 The thronging audience. In discourse more sweet
 (For eloquence the soul, song charms the sense)
 Others apart sat on a hill retired,
 In thoughts more elevatèd, and reasoned high
 Of providence, foreknowledge, will, and fate,
 Fixed fate, free will, foreknowledge absolute,
 And found no end, in wand'ring mazes lost.
 Of good and evil much they argued then,
 Of happiness and final misery,
 Passion and apathy,<sup>9</sup> and glory and shame,
 Vain wisdom all, and false philosophy:
 Yet with a pleasing sorcery could charm
 Pain for a while or anguish, and excite
 Fallacious hope, or arm th' obdured<sup>o</sup> breast hardened
 With stubborn patience as with triple steel.
 Another part in squadrons and gross<sup>o</sup> bands, solid, dense
 On bold adventure to discover wide
 That dismal world, if any clime perhaps
 Might yield them easier habitation, bend
 Four ways their flying march, along the banks
 Of four infernal rivers that disgorge
 Into the burning lake their baleful streams:<sup>1</sup>
 Abhorred Styx the flood of deadly hate,

6. The appearance of warfare in the skies, reported before several notable battles, portends trouble on earth.

7. Like that of Typhon, the hundred-headed Titan (see 1.199).

8. Wearing a poisoned robe given him in a deception, Hercules ("Alcides") in his dying agonies threw his beloved companion Lichas, along with a good part of Mount Oeta, into the Euboean Sea, near Thermopylae.

9. The Stoic goal of freedom from passion.

1. These four rivers are traditional in hellish geography. Milton distinguishes them by the original meanings of their Greek names: Styx means "hateful," Acheron "woeful," etc. Lethe is "far off" and quite different from the others, oblivion being a desired state in Hell.

Sad Acheron of sorrow, black and deep;
 Cocytus, named of lamentation loud
 580 Heard on the rueful stream; fierce Phlegethon
 Whose waves of torrent fire inflame with rage.
 Far off from these a slow and silent stream,
 Lethe the river of oblivion rolls
 Her wat'ry labyrinth, whereof who drinks,
 585 Forthwith his former state and being forgets,
 Forgets both joy and grief, pleasure and pain.
 Beyond this flood a frozen continent
 Lies dark and wild, beat with perpetual storms
 Of whirlwind and dire hail, which on firm land
 590 Thaws not, but gathers heap,<sup>2</sup> and ruin seems
 Of ancient pile; all else deep snow and ice,
 A gulf profound as that Serbonian bog<sup>3</sup>
 Betwixt Damiata and Mount Casius old,
 Where armies whole have sunk: the parching air
 595 Burns froze,<sup>o</sup> and cold performs th' effect of fire. frozen
 Thither by harpy-footed<sup>4</sup> Furies haled,<sup>o</sup> driven
 At certain revolutions<sup>o</sup> all the damned recurring times
 Are brought: and feel by turns the bitter change
 Of fierce extremes, extremes by change more fierce,
 600 From beds of raging fire to starve<sup>o</sup> in ice make numb
 Their soft ethereal warmth, and there to pine
 Immovable, infixed, and frozen round,
 Periods of time; thence hurried back to fire.
 They ferry over this Lethean sound
 605 Both to and fro, their sorrow to augment,
 And wish and struggle, as they pass, to reach
 The tempting stream, with one small drop to lose
 In sweet forgetfulness all pain and woe,
 All in one moment, and so near the brink;
 610 But fate withstands, and to oppose th' attempt
 Medusa<sup>5</sup> with Gorgonian terror guards
 The ford, and of itself the water flies
 All taste of living wight,<sup>o</sup> as once it fled creature
 The lip of Tantalus.<sup>6</sup> Thus roving on 615 In confused march forlorn, th' advent'rous bands
 With shudd'ring horror pale, and eyes aghast
 Viewed first their lamentable lot, and found
 No rest: through many a dark and dreary vale
 They passed, and many a region dolorous,
 620 O'er many a frozen, many a fiery alp,<sup>o</sup> volcano
 Rocks, caves, lakes, fens, bogs, dens, and shades of death,
 A universe of death, which God by curse
 Created evil, for evil only good,
 Where all life dies, death lives, and nature breeds,

2. In a heap, resembling the ruin of an old building ("ancient pile." next line).

3. Lake Serbonis, once famous for its quicksands, lies near the city of Damiatta ("Damiata," next line), just east of the Nile.

4. Taloned. In Greek mythology the Harpies (monsters with women's faces) carried off individuals to the Furies, who avenged crimes.

5. One of the three Gorgons, women with snaky hair, scaly bodies, and boar's tusks, the sight of whose faces changed men to stone.

6. Tantalus, afflicted with a raging thirst, stood in the middle of a lake, the water of which always receded when he tried to drink (hence, "tantalyze").

Perverse, all monstrous, all prodigious things,
 Abominable, inutterable, and worse
 Than fables yet have feigned, or fear conceived,
 Gorgons and Hydras, and Chimeras<sup>7</sup> dire.

Meanwhile the Adversary<sup>8</sup> of God and man,
 Satan, with thoughts inflamed of highest design,
 Puts on swift wings,<sup>0</sup> and towards the gates of Hell flies swiftly
 Explores his solitary flight; sometimes
 He scours the right-hand coast, sometimes the left,
 Now shaves with level wing the deep, then soars
 Up to the fiery concave<sup>0</sup> tow'ring high. vault
 As when far off at sea a fleet descried
 Hangs on the clouds, by equinoctial<sup>0</sup> winds from the equator
 Close sailing from Bengala,<sup>0</sup> or the isles Bengal
 Of Ternate and Tidore,<sup>9</sup> whence merchants bring Their spicy drugs: they on the trading flood
 Through the wide Ethiopian to the Cape
 Ply stemming nightly toward the pole:<sup>1</sup> so seemed Far off the flying Fiend. At last appear
 Hell bounds high reaching to the horrid roof,
 And thrice threefold the gates; three folds were brass,
 Three iron, three of adamantine rock,
 Impenetrable, impaled with circling fire,
 Yet unconsumed. Before the gates there sat
 On either side a formidable shape;<sup>2</sup>
 The one seemed woman to the waist, and fair,
 But ended foul in many a scaly fold
 Voluminous and vast, a serpent armed
 With mortal sting: about her middle round
 A cry<sup>0</sup> of hellhounds never ceasing barked pack
 With wide Cerberean<sup>3</sup> mouths full loud, and rung
 A hideous peal: yet, when they list,<sup>0</sup> would creep, wish
 If aught disturbed their noise, into her womb,
 And kennel there, yet there still barked and howled,
 Within unseen. Far less abhorred than these Vexed Scylla<sup>4</sup> bathing in the sea that parts
 Calabria from the hoarse Trinacrian shore:
 Nor uglier follow the night-hag,<sup>5</sup> when called
 In secret, riding through the air she comes Lured with the smell of infant blood, to dance
 With Lapland witches, while the laboring<sup>0</sup> moon troubled
 Eclipses at their charms.<sup>0</sup> The other shape, magic

7. The Hydra was a serpent whose multiple heads grew back when severed; the Chimera was a fire-breathing creature, part lion, part dragon, part goat.

8. Satan in Hebrew means "adversary."

9. Two of the Moluccas, or Spice Islands, modern Indonesia.

1. The South Pole. "Ethiopian": the Indian Ocean. "The Cape" is the Cape of Good Hope.

2. The allegorical figures of Sin and Death are founded on James 1.15: "Then when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin: and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death." But the incestuous relations of Sin and Death are Milton's own invention. Physically, Sin is modeled on Virgil's or Ovid's Scylla, with some touches adopted from Spenser's Error. Death is a traditional figure, vague and vast.

3. Like Cerberus, the multiheaded hound of Hell.
 4. Circe, out of jealousy, threw poison into the water where Scylla bathed, in the straits between Calabria and Sicily ("Trinacria," next line); the poison caused Scylla to develop a ring of barking, snapping dogs around her waist.

5. Hecate (three syllables), goddess of sorcery. She attends orgies of witches in Lapland (line 665, famous for witchcraft), drawn by the blood of babies sacrificed for the occasion.

If shape it might be called that shape had none
 Distinguishable in member, joint, or limb,
 Or substance might be called that shadow seemed,
 670 For each seemed either; black it stood as night,
 Fierce as ten Furies, terrible as hell,
 And shook a dreadful dart; what seemed his head
 The likeness of a kingly crown had on.
 Satan was now at hand, and from his seat
 675 The monster moving onward came as fast
 With horrid strides. Hell trembled as he strode.
 Th' undaunted Fiend what this might be admired,<sup>6</sup> wondered Admired, not feared; God and his Son except,
 Created thing naught valued he nor shunned;
 680 And with disdainful look thus first began.
 "Whence and what art thou, execrable shape,
 That dar'st, though grim and terrible, advance
 Thy miscreated front<sup>0</sup> athwart my way misshapen face
 To yonder gates? Through them I mean to pass,
 685 That be assured, without leave asked of thee:
 Retire, or taste<sup>0</sup> thy folly, and learn by proof, experience
 Hell-born, not to contend with Spirits of Heav'n."
 To whom the goblin full of wrath replied:
 "Art thou that traitor angel, art thou he,
 690 Who first broke peace in Heav'n and faith, till then
 Unbroken, and in proud rebellious arms
 Drew after him the third part of Heav'n's sons
 Conjured<sup>0</sup> against the Highest, for which both thou sivorn together
 And they outcast from God, are here condemned
 695 To waste eternal days in woe and pain?
 And reckon'st thou thyself with Spirits of Heav'n,
 Hell-doomed, and breath'st defiance here and scorn,
 Where I reign king, and to enrage thee more,
 Thy king and lord? Back to thy punishment,
 700 False fugitive, and to thy speed add wings,
 Lest with a whip of scorpions I pursue
 Thy ling'ring, or with one stroke of this dart
 Strange horror seize thee, and pangs unfelt before."
 So spake the grisly terror, and in shape,
 705 So speaking and so threat'ning, grew tenfold
 More dreadful and deform: on th' other side
 Incensed with indignation Satan stood
 Unterrified, and like a comet burned
 That fires the length of Ophiuchus<sup>6</sup> huge 710 In th' arctic sky, and from his horrid<sup>0</sup> hair bristling
 Shakes pestilence and war. Each at the head
 Leveled his deadly aim; their fatal hands
 No second stroke intend, and such a frown
 Each cast at th' other, as when, two black clouds
 715 With Heav'n's artillery fraught,<sup>7</sup> come rattling on Over the Caspian,<sup>8</sup> then stand front to front

6. A vast northern constellation, "the Serpent Bearer."

7. Loaded with thunderbolts.

8. The Caspian is a particularly stormy area.

Hov'ring a space, till winds the signal blow
 To join their dark encounter in mid-air:
 So frowned the mighty combatants, that Hell
 720 Grew darker at their frown, so matched they stood;
 For never but once more was either like
 To meet so great a foe.<sup>9</sup> And now great deeds
 Had been achieved, whereof all Hell had rung,
 Had not the snaky sorceress that sat
 725 Fast by Hell gate, and kept the fatal key,
 Ris'n, and with hideous outcry rushed between.
 "O father, what intends thy hand," she cried,
 "Against thy only son?<sup>1</sup> What fury O son,
 Possesses thee to bend that mortal dart
 730 Against thy father's head? And know'st for whom;
 For him who sits above and laughs the while
 At thee ordained his drudge, to execute
 Whate'er his wrath, which he calls justice, bids,
 His wrath which one day will destroy ye both."
 735 She spake, and at her words the hellish pest Forbore, then these to her Satan returned.
 "So strange thy outcry, and thy words so strange
 Thou interposest, that my sudden hand
 Prevented<sup>0</sup> spares to tell thee yet by deeds
 740 What it intends; till first I know of thee,
 What thing thou art, thus double-formed, and why
 In this infernal vale first met thou call'st
 Me father, and that phantasm call'st my son?
 I know thee not, nor ever saw till now
 745 Sight more detestable than him and thee."
 'T' whom thus the portress of Hell gate replied:
 "Hast thou forgot me then, and do I seem
 Now in thine eye so foul, once deemed so fair
 In Heav'n, when at th' assembly, and in sight
 750 Of all the Seraphim with thee combined
 In bold conspiracy against Heav'n's King,
 All on a sudden miserable pain
 Surprised thee, dim thine eyes, and dizzy swum
 In darkness, while thy head flames thick and fast
 755 Threw forth, till on the left side op'ning wide,
 Likest to thee in shape and count'nance bright,
 Then shining heav'nly fair, a goddess armed
 Out of thy head I sprung:<sup>2</sup> amazement seized
 All th' host of Heav'n; back they recoiled afraid
 760 At first, and called me Sin, and for a sign
 Portentous held me; but familiar grown,
 I pleased, and with attractive graces won
 The most averse, thee chiefly, who full oft
 Thysself in me thy perfect image viewing
 765 Becam'st enamored, and such joy thou took'st

forestalled

9. I.e., the Son of God.

1. Sin, Death, and Satan, in their various inter-relations, parody obscenely the relations between

God and the Son, Adam and Eve.

2. As Athena sprang full grown from the head of Zeus.

With me in secret, that my womb conceived
 A growing burden. Meanwhile war arose,
 And fields were fought in Heav'n; wherein remained
 (For what could else) to our almighty foe
 770 Clear victory, to our part loss and rout
 Through all the empyrean: down they fell
 Driv'n headlong from the pitch<sup>o</sup> of Heaven, down summit
 Into this deep, and in the general fall
 I also; at which time this powerful key
 775 Into my hand was giv'n, with charge to keep
 These gates forever shut, which none can pass
 Without my op'ning. Pensive here I sat
 Alone, but long I sat not, till my womb
 Pregnant by thee, and now excessive grown
 780 Prodigious motion felt and rueful throes.
 At last this odious offspring whom thou seest
 Thine own begotten, breaking violent way
 Tore through my entrails, that with fear and pain
 Distorted, all my nether shape thus grew
 785 Transformed: but he my inbred enemy
 Forth issued, brandishing his fatal dart
 Made to destroy: I fled, and cried out 'Death';
 Hell trembled at the hideous name, and sighed
 From all her caves, and back resounded 'Death.'
 790 I fled, but he pursued (though more, it seems, Inflamed with lust than rage) and swifter far,
 Me overtook his mother all dismayed,
 And in embraces forcible and foul
 Engend'ring with me, of that rape begot
 795 These yelling monsters that with ceaseless cry
 Surround me, as thou saw'st, hourly conceived
 And hourly born, with sorrow infinite
 To me, for when they list,<sup>o</sup> into the womb wish
 That bred them they return, and howl and gnaw
 800 My bowels, their repast; then bursting forth
 Afresh with conscious terrors vex me round,
 That rest or intermission none I find.
 Before mine eyes in opposition sits
 Grim Death my son and foe, who sets them on,
 805 And me his parent would full soon devour
 For want of other prey, but that he knows
 His end with mine involved; and knows that I Should prove a bitter morsel, and his bane,<sup>o</sup> poison
 Whenever that shall be; so fate pronounced.
 810 But thou O father, I forewarn thee, shun
 His deadly arrow; neither vainly hope
 To be invulnerable in those bright arms,
 Though tempered heav'nly, for that mortal dint,<sup>o</sup> blow
 Save he who reigns above, none can resist."
 815 She finished, and the subtle Fiend his lore<sup>o</sup> lesson
 Soon learned, now milder, and thus answered smooth.
 "Dear daughter, since thou claim'st me for thy sire,
 And my fair son here show'st me, the dear pledge

Of dalliance had with thee in Heav'n, and joys
 820 Then sweet, now sad to mention, through dire change
 Befall'n us unforeseen, unthought of, know
 I come no enemy, but to set free
 From out this dark and dismal house of pain,
 Both him and thee, and all the heav'nly host
 825 Of Spirits that in our just pretenses<sup>0</sup> armed claims
 Fell with us from on high: from them I go
 This uncouth errand<sup>3</sup> sole, and one for all Myself expose, with lonely steps to tread
 Th' unfounded<sup>0</sup> deep, and through the void immense bottomless
 830 To search with wand'ring quest a place foretold
 Should be, and, by concurring signs, ere now
 Created vast and round, a place of bliss
 In the purlieu<sup>0</sup> of Heav'n, and therein placed outskirts
 A race of upstart creatures, to supply
 835 Perhaps our vacant room, though more removed,
 Lest Heav'n surcharged<sup>0</sup> with potent multitude overcrowded
 Might hap to move new broils:<sup>0</sup> be this or aught controversies
 Than this more secret now designed, I haste
 To know, and this once known, shall soon return,
 840 And bring ye to the place where thou and Death
 Shall dwell at ease, and up and down unseen
 Wing silently the buxom<sup>0</sup> air, embalmed<sup>0</sup> yielding / made fragrant
 With odors; there ye shall be fed and filled
 Immeasurably, all things shall be your prey."
 845 He ceased, for both seemed highly pleased, and Death
 Grinned horrible a ghastly smile, to hear
 His famine<sup>0</sup> should be filled, and blessed his maw<sup>0</sup> ravenous hunger / belly
 Destined to that good hour: no less rejoiced
 His mother bad, and thus bespake her sire.
 850 "The key of this infernal pit by due,
 And by command of Heav'n's all-powerful King
 I keep, by him forbidden to unlock
 These adamantine gates; against all force
 Death ready stands to interpose his dart,
 855 Fearless to be o'ermatched by living might.
 But what owe I to his commands above
 Who hates me, and hath hither thrust me down
 Into this gloom of Tartarus profound,
 To sit in hateful office here confined,
 860 Inhabitant of Heav'n, and heav'nly-born,
 Here in perpetual agony and pain,
 With terrors and with clamors compassed round
 Of mine own brood, that on my bowels feed?
 Thou art my father, thou my author, thou
 865 My being gav'st me; whom should I obey
 But thee, whom follow? Thou wilt bring me soon
 To that new world of light and bliss, among
 The gods who live at ease, where I shall reign

At thy right hand voluptuous,<sup>4</sup> as beseems
Thy daughter and thy darling, without end."

Thus saying, from her side the fatal key,
Sad instrument of all our woe, she took;
And towards the gate rolling her bestial train,<sup>5</sup>
Forthwith the huge portcullis high up drew,
Which but herself not all the Stygian powers<sup>0</sup>
Could once have moved; then in the keyhole turns
Th' intricate wards, and every bolt and bar
Of massy iron or solid rock with ease
Unfastens: on a sudden open fly
With impetuous recoil and jarring sound
Th' infernal doors, and on their hinges grate
Harsh thunder, that the lowest bottom shook
Of Erebus.<sup>0</sup> She opened, but to shut
Excelled<sup>0</sup> her power; the gates wide open stood,
That with extended wings a bannered host
Under spread ensigns<sup>0</sup> marching might pass through
With horse and chariots ranked in loose array;
So wide they stood, and like a furnace mouth
Cast forth redounding<sup>0</sup> smoke and ruddy flame.
Before their eyes in sudden view appear
The secrets of the hoary<sup>0</sup> deep, a dark
Illimitable<sup>0</sup> ocean without bound,
Without dimension, where length, breadth, and height,
And time and place are lost; where eldest Night
And Chaos, ancestors of Nature, hold
Eternal anarchy, amidst the noise
Of endless wars, and by confusion stand.
For Hot, Cold, Moist, and Dry, four champions fierce Strive here for mastery, and to battle bring
Their embryon atoms;<sup>6</sup> they around the flag
Of each his faction, in their several clans,
Light-armed or heavy, sharp, smooth, swift or slow,
Swarm populous, unnumbered as the sands
Of Barca or Cyrene's torrid soil,<sup>7</sup>
Levied to side with warring winds, and poise<sup>8</sup>
Their lighter wings. To whom these most adhere,
He rules a moment; Chaos<sup>9</sup> umpire sits,
And by decision more embroils the fray
By which he reigns: next him high arbiter
Chance governs all. Into this wild abyss,
The womb of Nature and perhaps her grave,
Of neither sea, nor shore, nor air, nor fire,
But all these in their pregnant causes<sup>0</sup> mixed

4. As the Son sits at God's right hand. Sin will at Satan's, a blasphemous parody of the Apostles' Creed and of Paradise Lost 3.250—80.

5. I.e. propelling her yelping offspring.

6. These subatomic qualities combine together in nature to form the four elements, fire, earth, water, and air, but they struggle endlessly in Chaos, where the atoms of these elements remain undeveloped (in "embryo").

7. Cities built on the shifting sands of North Africa.

8. Give weight to. "Levied": both enlisted and raised up.

9. Chaos is both the place where confusion reigns and personified confusion itself.

Confus'dly, and which thus must ever fight,
 Unless th' Almighty Maker them ordain
 His dark materials to create more worlds,
 Into this wild abyss the wary Fiend
 Stood on the brink of Hell and looked a while,
 Pondering his voyage; for no narrow frith<sup>0</sup> channel, firth
 He had to cross. Nor was his ear less pealed<sup>0</sup> dinned
 With noises loud and ruinous (to compare
 Great things with small) than when Bellona<sup>1</sup> storms,
 With all her battering engines bent to raze
 Some capital city; or less than if this frame<sup>0</sup> structure
 Of Heav'n were falling, and these elements
 In mutiny had from her axle torn
 The steadfast earth. At last his sail-broad vans<sup>0</sup> wings
 He spreads for flight, and in the surging smoke
 Uplifted spurns the ground, thence many a league
 As in a cloudy chair ascending rides
 Audacious, but that seat soon failing, meets
 A vast vacuity: all unawares
 Flutt'ring his pennons<sup>2</sup> vain plumb down he drops
 Ten thousand fathom deep, and to this hour
 Down had been falling, had not by ill chance
 The strong rebuff<sup>0</sup> of some tumultuous cloud counterblast
 Instinct<sup>0</sup> with fire and niter<sup>0</sup> hurried him filled / salt-peter
 As many miles aloft: that fury stayed,
 Quenched in a boggy Syrtis,<sup>3</sup> neither sea,
 Nor good dry land: nigh foundered<sup>0</sup> on he fares, drowned
 Treading the crude consistence, half on foot,
 Half flying; behoves<sup>0</sup> him now both oar and sail. befits
 As when a griffin through the wilderness
 With winged course o'er hill or moory<sup>0</sup> dale, marshy
 Pursues the Arimasian, who by stealth
 Had from his wakeful custody purloined
 The guarded gold:<sup>4</sup> so eagerly the Fiend
 O'er bog or steep, through strait, rough, dense, or rare,
 With head, hands, wings, or feet pursues his way,
 And swims or sinks, or wades, or creeps, or flies:
 At length a universal hubbub wild
 Of stunning sounds and voices all confused
 Borne through the hollow dark assaults his ear
 With loudest vehemence: thither he plies,
 Undaunted to meet there whatever Power
 Or Spirit of the nethermost abyss
 Might in that noise reside, of whom to ask
 Which way the nearest coast of darkness lies
 Bordering on light; when straight behold the throne
 Of Chaos, and his dark pavilion spread
 Wide on the wasteful deep; with him enthroned

1. Goddess of war.

2. Useless wings ("pinions").

3. Quicksand in North African gulfs, famous for their shifting sandbars.

4. Griffins, mythical creatures, half-eagle, half-lion, hoarded gold that was stolen from them by the one-eyed Arimaspians.

Sat sable-vested Night, eldest of things,
 The consort of his reign; and by them stood
 Orcus and Ades,<sup>5</sup> and the dreaded name
 Of Demogorgon,<sup>6</sup> Rumor next and Chance,
 And Tumult and Confusion all embroiled.
 And Discord with a thousand various mouths.

T' whom Satan turning boldly, thus. "Ye Powers
 And Spirits of this nethermost abyss,
 Chaos and ancient Night, I come no spy,
 With purpose to explore or to disturb
 The secrets of your realm, but by constraint
 Wand'ring this darksome desert, as my way
 Lies through your spacious empire up to light,
 Alone, and without guide, half lost, I seek
 What readiest path leads where your gloomy bounds

Confine with<sup>0</sup> Heav'n; or if some other place border on
 From your dominion won, th' Ethereal King
 Possesses lately, thither to arrive
 I travel this profound;<sup>0</sup> direct my course; deep pit
 Directed, no mean recompense it brings
 To your behoof,<sup>0</sup> if I that region lost, on your behalf
 All usurpation thence expelled, reduce
 To her original darkness and your sway
 (Which is my present journey)<sup>7</sup> and once more Erect the standard there of ancient Night;
 Yours be th' advantage all, mine the revenge."

Thus Satan; and him thus the anarch<sup>8</sup> old disordered
 With falt'ring speech and visage incomposed<sup>0</sup>
 Answered. "I know thee, stranger, who thou art,
 That mighty leading angel, who of late
 Made head against Heav'n's King, though overthrown.
 I saw and heard, for such a numerous host
 Fled not in silence through the frightened deep
 With ruin upon ruin, rout on rout,
 Confusion worse confounded; and Heav'n gates
 Poured out by millions her victorious bands
 Pursuing. I upon my frontiers here
 Keep residence; if all I can will serve,
 That little which is left so to defend,
 Encroached on still<sup>0</sup> through our intestine broils<sup>0</sup> constantly / civil wars
 Weak'ning the scepter of old Night: first Hell
 Your dungeon stretching far and wide beneath;
 Now lately heaven and earth,<sup>9</sup> another world
 Hung o'er my realm, linked in a golden chain
 To that side Heav'n from whence your legions fell:
 If that way be your walk, you have not far;
 So much the nearer danger; go and speed;
 Havoc and spoil and ruin are my gain."

He ceased; and Satan stayed not to reply,

5. Latin and Greek names of Pluto, god of Hell.

6. A mysterious deity associated with Fate; Milton elsewhere identifies him with Chaos.

7. The purpose of my present journey.

8. Chaos is not monarch of his realm but, appropriately, "anarch," nonruler.

9. The cosmos, with its own "heaven" (not the empyrean, the Heaven of God and the angels).

But glad that now his sea should find a shore,
 With fresh alacrity and force renewed
 Springs upward like a pyramid of fire
 Into the wild expanse, and through the shock
 1015 Of fighting elements, on all sides round
 Environed wins his way; harder beset
 And more endangered, than when Argo passed
 Through Bosphorus betwixt the justling rocks:<sup>1</sup>
 Or when Ulysses on the larboard shunned
 1020 Charybdis, and by th' other whirlpool steered.<sup>2</sup>
 So he with difficulty and labor hard
 Moved on, with difficulty and labor he;
 But he once passed, soon after when man fell,
 Strange alteration! Sin and Death amain<sup>0</sup> at full speed
 1025 Following his track, such was the will of Heav'n,
 Paved after him a broad and beaten way
 Over the dark abyss, whose boiling gulf
 Tamely endured a bridge of wondrous length
 From Hell continued reaching th' utmost orb<sup>3</sup>
 1030 Of this frail world; by which the Spirits perverse
 With easy intercourse pass to and fro
 To tempt or punish mortals, except whom
 God and good angels guard by special grace.
 But now at last the sacred influence
 1035 Of light appears, and from the walls of Heav'n
 Shoots far into the bosom of dim Night
 A glimmering dawn; here Nature first begins
 Her farthest verge,<sup>0</sup> and Chaos to retire threshold
 As from her outmost works a broken foe
 1040 With tumult less and with less hostile din,
 That<sup>0</sup> Satan with less toil, and now with ease so that
 Wafts on the calmer wave by dubious light
 And like a weather-beaten vessel holds<sup>0</sup> makes for Gladly the port, though shrouds and tackle torn;
 1045 Or in the emptier waste, resembling air
 Weighs<sup>0</sup> his spread wings, at leisure to behold balances
 Far off th' empyreal Heav'n, extended wide
 In circuit, undetermined square or round,
 With opal tow'rs and battlements adorned
 1050 Of living sapphire, once his native seat;
 And fast by hanging in a golden chain
 This pendent world,<sup>0</sup> in bigness as a star universe
 Of smallest magnitude close by the moon.
 Thither full fraught with mischievous revenge,
 1055 Accursed, and in a cursed hour, he hies.

1. Jason and his fifty Argonauts, sailing through the Bosphorus to the Black Sea in pursuit of the Golden Fleece, had to pass through the Symplegades, or clashing rocks.

2. Homer's Ulysses, sailing where Italy almost touches Sicily, had to pass between Charybdis, a whirlpool, and Scylla, a monster who devoured six of his men (not another whirlpool, as used here).

3. The bridge ends on the outermost sphere of the ten concentric spheres making up the universe.

Book 3

Hail holy Light, offspring of Heav'n firstborn,
 Or of th' Eternal coeternal beam
 May I express thee unblamed?<sup>1</sup> Since God is light,
 And never but in unapproached light
 Dwelt from eternity, dwelt then in thee,
 Bright effluence of bright essence increate. uncreated, eternal
 Or hear'st thou rather<sup>2</sup> pure ethereal stream,
 Whose fountain who shall tell? Before the sun,
 Before the heavens thou wert, and at the voice
 Of God, as with a mantle didst invest<sup>0</sup> cover
 The rising world of waters dark and deep,
 Won from the void and formless infinite.
 Thee I revisit now with bolder wing,
 Escaped the Stygian pool, though long detained
 In that obscure sojourn, while in my flight
 Through utter and through middle darkness<sup>3</sup> borne
 With other notes than to th' Orphean lyre<sup>4</sup>
 I sung of Chaos and eternal Night,
 Taught by the Heav'nly Muse<sup>5</sup> to venture down
 The dark descent, and up to reascend,
 Though hard and rare: thee I revisit safe,
 And feel thy sov'reign vital lamp; but thou
 Revisit'st not these eyes, that roll in vain
 To find thy piercing ray, and find no dawn;
 So thick a drop serene hath quenched their orbs,
 Or dim suffusion<sup>6</sup> veiled. Yet not the more
 Cease I to wander where the Muses haunt
 Clear spring, or shady grove, or sunny hill,
 Smit with the love of sacred song; but chief
 Thee Sion<sup>7</sup> and the flow'ry brooks beneath
 That wash thy hallowed feet, and warbling flow,
 Nightly I visit: nor sometimes forget<sup>0</sup> always remember
 Those other two equaled with me in fate,<sup>8</sup>
 So were I equaled with them in renown,
 Blind Thamyris and blind Maeonides,
 And Tiresias and Phineus prophets old,<sup>9</sup>
 Then feed on thoughts, that voluntary move
 Harmonious numbers;<sup>0</sup> as the wakeful bird<sup>0</sup> verses/nightingale
 Sings darkling,<sup>0</sup> and in shadiest covert hid Tunes her nocturnal note. Thus with the year in the dark

1. This second proem or invocation (3.1—55) is a hymn to Light, addressed either as the first creature of God or as coeternal with God, with allusion to 1 John 1.5, "God is Light, and in him is no darkness at all."

2. I.e., would you rather be called (a Latinism).

3. Hell is "utter" (i.e., outer) darkness; Chaos is middle darkness.

4. One of the so-called Orphic hymns is "To Night," and Orpheus himself visited the underworld. But Milton's song, Christian and epic, is of a different kind.

5. Urania (though not named until 7.1).

6. Cataract—suffusio nigra. "Drop serene": gutta serena, the medical term for Milton's kind of blindness.

7. The mountain of scriptural inspiration, with its brooks Siloa and Kidron.

8. I.e., blind like me.

9. Thamyris was a blind Thracian poet who lived before Homer; "Maeonides" is an epithet of Homer; Tiresias was the blind prophet of Thebes; Phineus was a blind king and seer (Aeneid 3).

Seasons return, but not to me returns
 Day, or the sweet approach of ev'n or morn,
 Or sight of vernal bloom, or summer's rose,
 Or flocks, or herds, or human face divine;
 But cloud instead, and ever-during<sup>o</sup> dark everlasting
 Surrounds me, from the cheerful ways of men
 Cut off, and for the book of knowledge<sup>o</sup> fair Book of Nature
 Presented with a universal blank
 Of nature's works to me expunged and razed,<sup>o</sup> erased
 And wisdom at one entrance quite shut out.
 So much the rather thou celestial Light
 Shine inward, and the mind through all her powers
 Irradiate, there plant eyes, all mist from thence Purge and disperse, that I may see and tell
 Of things invisible to mortal sight.

Now had the Almighty Father from above,
 From the pure empyrean<sup>o</sup> where he sits Heaven
 High throned above all height, bent down his eye,
 His own works and their works at once to view:
 Above him all the sanctities<sup>o</sup> of Heaven angels
 Stood thick as stars, and from his sight received
 Beatitude past utterance; on his right
 The radiant image of his glory sat,
 His only Son; on earth he first beheld
 Our two first parents, yet the only two
 Of mankind, in the happy garden placed,
 Reaping immortal fruits of joy and love,
 Uninterrupted joy, unrivaled love
 In blissful solitude; he then surveyed
 Hell and the gulf between, and Satan there
 Coasting the wall of Heav'n on this side Night
 In the dun<sup>o</sup> air sublime,<sup>o</sup> and ready now dusky / aloft
 To stoop<sup>o</sup> with wearied wings, and willing feet swoop down
 On the bare outside of this world,<sup>o</sup> that seemed universe
 Firm land embosomed without firmament,<sup>o</sup> atmosphere
 Uncertain which, in ocean or in air.
 Him God beholding from his prospect high,
 Wherein past, present, future he beholds,
 Thus to his only Son foreseeing spake.

"Only begotten Son, seest thou what rage
 Transports our Adversary, whom no bounds
 Prescribed, no bars of Hell, nor all the chains
 Heaped on him there, nor yet the main<sup>o</sup> abyss vast
 Wide interrupt<sup>1</sup> can hold; so bent he seems flow back
 On desperate revenge, that shall redound<sup>o</sup>
 Upon his own rebellious head. And now
 Through all restraint broke loose he wings his way
 Not far off Heav'n, in the precincts of light,
 Directly towards the new-created world,
 And man there placed, with purpose to essay<sup>o</sup> try
 If him by force he can destroy, or worse,

1. Forming a wide breach between Heaven and Hell.

By some false guile pervert; and shall pervert;
 For man will hearken to his glozing<sup>0</sup> lies, flattering
 And easily transgress the sole command,
 95 Sole pledge of his obedience: so will fall
 He and his faithless progeny: whose fault?
 Whose but his own? Ingrate, he had of me
 All he could have; I made him just and right,
 Sufficient to have stood, though free to fall.
 100 Such I created all th' ethereal Powers
 And Spirits, both them who stood and them who failed;
 Freely they stood who stood, and fell who fell.
 Not free, what proof could they have giv'n sincere
 Of true allegiance, constant faith or love,
 105 Where only what they needs must do, appeared,
 Not what they would? What praise could they receive?
 What pleasure I from such obedience paid,
 When will and reason (reason also is choice)
 Useless and vain, of freedom both despoiled,
 no Made passive both, had served necessity,
 Not me. They therefore as to right belonged,
 So were created, nor can justly accuse
 Their Maker, or their making, or their fate,
 As if predestination overruled
 us Their will, disposed by absolute decree
 Or high foreknowledge; they themselves decreed
 Their own revolt, not I: if I foreknew,
 Foreknowledge had no influence on their fault,
 Which had no less proved certain unforeknown.<sup>2</sup>
 120 So without least impulse or shadow of fate,
 Or aught by me immutably foreseen,
 They trespass, authors to themselves in all
 Both what they judge and what they choose; for so
 I formed them free, and free they must remain,
 125 Till they enthrall themselves: I else must change
 Their nature, and revoke the high decree
 Unchangeable, eternal, which ordained
 Their freedom, they themselves ordained their fall.
 The first sort<sup>3</sup> by their own suggestion fell,
 130 Self-tempted, self-depraved: man falls deceived
 By the other first: man therefore shall find grace,
 The other none: in mercy and justice both,
 Through Heav'n and earth, so shall my glory excel,
 But mercy first and last shall brightest shine."
 135 Thus while God spake, ambrosial<sup>0</sup> fragrance filled fragrant, immortal
 All Heav'n, and in the blessed Spirits elect<sup>0</sup> unfallen
 Sense of new joy ineffable<sup>0</sup> diffused: inexpressible
 Beyond compare the Son of God was seen
 Most glorious, in him all his Father shone
 140 Substantially expressed, and in his face
 Divine compassion visibly appeared,
 Love without end, and without measure grace,

2. I.e., if I had not foreknown it.

3. Satan and his crew.

- Which uttering thus he to his Father spake.
 "O Father, gracious was that word which closed
 145 Thy sov'reign sentence, that man should find grace;
 For which both Heav'n and earth shall high extol
 Thy praises, with th' innumerable sound
 Of hymns and sacred songs, wherewith thy throne
 Encompassed shall resound thee ever blessed.
 150 For should man finally be lost, should man
 Thy creature late so loved, thy youngest son
 Fall circumvented thus by fraud, though joined
 With his own folly? That be from thee far,
 That far be from thee, Father, who art judge
 155 Of all things made, and judgest only right.<sup>4</sup>
 Or shall the Adversary thus obtain
 His end, and frustrate thine, shall he fulfill
 His malice, and thy goodness bring to naught,
 Or proud return though to his heavier doom,
 160 Yet with revenge accomplished, and to Hell
 Draw after him the whole race of mankind,
 By him corrupted? Or wilt thou thyself
 Abolish thy creation, and unmake,
 For him, what for thy glory thou hast made?
 165 So should thy goodness and thy greatness both
 Be questioned and blasphemed<sup>0</sup> without defense." profaned.
 To whom the great Creator thus replied.
 "O Son, in whom my soul hath chief delight,
 Son of my bosom, Son who art alone
 170 My Word, my wisdom, and effectual might,<sup>5</sup>
 All hast thou spoken as my thoughts are, all
 As my eternal purpose hath decreed:
 Man shall not quite be lost, but saved who will,
 Yet not of will in him, but grace in me
 175 Freely vouchsafed;<sup>0</sup> once more I will renew bestowed
 His lapsed powers, though forfeit and enthralled
 By sin to foul exorbitant desires;
 Upheld by me, yet once more he shall stand
 On even ground against his mortal foe,
 180 By me upheld, that he may know how frail
 His fall'n condition is, and to me owe
 All his deliv'rance, and to none but me.
 Some I have chosen of peculiar grace
 Elect above the rest;<sup>6</sup> so is my will:
 185 The rest shall hear me call, and oft be warned<sup>0</sup> warned about
 Their sinful state, and to appease betimes
 Th' incensed Deity, while offered grace
 Invites; for I will clear their senses dark,

4. The Son echoes (or rather foreshadows) Abraham pleading with the Lord to spare Sodom: "That be far from thee to do after this manner, to slay the righteous with the wicked . . . that be far from thee: Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?" (Genesis 18.25).

5. God's speech is rhythmic and sometimes rhymed.

6. In this speech, Milton's God rejects the Calvinist doctrine that he had from the beginning predestined the damnation or salvation of each individual soul; he claims rather that grace sufficient for salvation is offered to all, enabling everyone, if they choose to do so, to believe and persevere. He does, however, assert his right to give special grace to some.

What may suffice, and soften stony hearts
 190 To pray, repent, and bring obedience due.
 To prayer, repentance, and obedience due,
 Though but endeavored with sincere intent,
 Mine ear shall not be slow, mine eye not shut.
 And I will place within them as a guide
 195 My umpire conscience, whom if they will hear,
 Light after light well used they shall attain,<sup>7</sup>
 And to the end persisting, safe arrive.
 This my long sufferance and my day of grace
 They who neglect and scorn, shall never taste;
 200 But hard be hardened, blind be blinded more,
 That they may stumble on, and deeper fall;
 And none but such from mercy I exclude.
 But yet all is not done; man disobeying,
 Disloyal breaks his fealty, and sins
 205 Against the high supremacy of Heav'n,
 Affecting<sup>0</sup> Godhead, and so losing all, aspiring to
 To expiate his treason hath naught left, consecrated
 But to destruction sacred and devote,<sup>0</sup>
 He with his whole posterity must die,
 210 Die he or justice must; unless for him
 Some other able, and as willing, pay
 The rigid satisfaction, death for death.
 Say heav'nly Powers, where shall we find such love,
 Which of ye will be mortal to redeem
 215 Man's mortal crime,<sup>8</sup> and just th' unjust to save,
 Dwells in all Heaven charity so dear?"
 He asked, but all the heav'nly choir stood mute,<sup>9</sup>
 And silence was in Heav'n; on man's behalf
 Patron or intercessor none appeared,
 220 Much less that durst upon his own head draw
 The deadly forfeiture, and ransom set.
 And now without redemption all mankind
 Must have been lost, adjudged to death and Hell
 By doom severe, had not the Son of God,
 225 In whom the fullness dwells of love divine,
 His dearest mediation<sup>0</sup> thus renewed. intercession
 "Father, thy word is passed, man shall find grace;
 And shall grace not find means, that finds her way,
 The speediest of thy winged messengers,
 230 To visit all thy creatures, and to all
 Comes unprevented,<sup>0</sup> unimplored, unsought, unanticipated
 Happy for man, so coming; he her aid
 Can never seek, once dead in sins and lost;
 Atonement for himself or offering meet,<sup>0</sup> fitting
 235 Indebted and undone, hath none to bring:
 Behold me then, me for him, life for life
 I offer, on me let thine anger fall;

7. By using the light of conscience well they will gain more light.

8. "Mortal" means "human" in line 214, but

"deadly" in line 215.

9. Compare the devils in the Great Consult, 2.420-26.

Account me man; I for his sake will leave
 Thy bosom, and this glory next to thee
 240 Freely put off, and for him lastly die
 Well pleased, on me let Death wreak all his rage;
 Under his gloomy power I shall not long
 Lie vanquished; thou hast giv'n me to possess
 Life in myself forever, by thee I live,
 245 Though now to Death I yield, and am his due
 All that of me can die, yet that debt paid,
 Thou wilt not leave me in the loathsome grave
 His prey, nor suffer my unspotted soul
 Forever with corruption there to dwell;
 250 But I shall rise victorious, and subdue
 My vanquisher, spoiled of his vaunted spoil;
 Death his death's wound shall then receive, and stoop
 Inglorious, of his mortal sting disarmed.
 I through the ample air in triumph high 255 Shall lead Hell captive maugre<sup>0</sup> Hell, and show in spite of The powers of darkness bound. Thou at the sight
 Pleased, out of Heaven shalt look down and smile,
 While by thee raised I ruin<sup>1</sup> all my foes,
 Death last, and with his carcass glut the grave:
 260 Then with the multitude of my redeemed
 Shall enter Heaven long absent, and return,
 Father, to see thy face, wherein no cloud
 Of anger shall remain, but peace assured,
 And reconciliation; wrath shall be no more
 265 Thenceforth, but in thy presence joy entire."
 His words here ended, but his meek aspect
 Silent yet spake, and breathed immortal love
 To mortal men, above which only shone
 Filial obedience: as a sacrifice
 270 Glad to be offered, he attends the will
 Of his great Father. Admiration<sup>0</sup> seized wonder
 All Heav'n, what this might mean, and whither tend Wond'ring; but soon th' Almighty thus replied:
 "O thou in Heav'n and earth the only peace
 275 Found out for mankind under wrath, O thou
 My sole complacence!<sup>0</sup> well thou know'st how dear pleasure, delight
 To me are all my works, nor man the least
 Though last created, that for him I spare
 Thee from my bosom and right hand, to save,
 280 By losing thee a while, the whole race lost.
 Thou therefore whom<sup>2</sup> thou only canst redeem,
 Their nature also to thy nature join;
 And be thyself man among men on earth,
 Made flesh, when time shall be, of virgin seed,
 285 By wondrous birth: be thou in Adam's room
 The head of all mankind, though Adam's son.<sup>3</sup>

1. In the Latin sense, throw down.

2. The antecedent of "whom" is, loosely construed, the "their nature" that follows it.

3. The Son of God, who long antedates the creation of Adam and who is actually the first created being (3.383), is later incarnated in Jesus Christ; he is called Second Adam and Son of Man by reason of his descent from the first man, Adam. Cf. 1

As in him perish all men, so in thee
 As from a second root shall be restored,
 As many as are restored, without thee none.
 290 His crime makes guilty all his sons; thy merit
 Imputed shall absolve them who renounce
 Their own both righteous and unrighteous deeds,
 And live in thee transplanted, and from thee
 Receive new life.<sup>4</sup> So man, as is most just,
 295 Shall satisfy for man, be judged and die,
 And dying rise, and rising with him raise
 His brethren, ransomed with his own dear life.
 So heav'nly love shall outdo hellish hate,
 Giving to death, and dying to redeem,
 300 So dearly to redeem what hellish hate
 So easily destroyed, and still destroys
 In those who, when they may, accept not grace.
 Nor shalt thou by descending to assume
 Man's nature, lessen or degrade thine own.
 305 Because thou hast, though throned in highest bliss
 Equal to God, and equally enjoying
 Godlike fruition,<sup>0</sup> quitted all to save pleasurable possession
 A world from utter loss, and hast been found
 By merit more than birthright Son of God,<sup>5</sup>
 310 Found worthiest to be so by being good,
 Far more than great or high; because in thee
 Love hath abounded more than glory abounds.
 Therefore thy humiliation shall exalt
 With thee thy manhood also to this throne;
 315 Here shalt thou sit incarnate, here shalt reign
 Both God and man, Son both of God and man,
 Anointed<sup>6</sup> universal King; all power
 I give thee, reign forever, and assume Thy merits; under thee as Head Supreme 320 Thrones, Princedoms, Powers, Dominions<sup>7</sup> I reduce:
 All knees to thee shall bow, of them that bide
 In Heaven, or earth, or under earth in Hell;
 When thou attended gloriously from Heav'n
 Shalt in the sky appear, and from thee send 325 The summoning Archangels to proclaim
 Thy dread tribunal: forthwith from all winds<sup>0</sup> directions
 The living, and forthwith the cited<sup>0</sup> dead summoned
 Of all past ages to the general doom<sup>0</sup> judgment
 Shall hasten, such a peal shall rouse their sleep.
 330 Then all thy saints assembled, thou shalt judge
 Bad men and angels, they arraigned<sup>0</sup> shall sink accursed
 Beneath thy sentence; Hell, her numbers full,
 Thenceforth shall be forever shut. Meanwhile

Corinthians 15.22: "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."

4. The merit of Christ attributed vicariously ("imputed") to human beings frees from original sin those who renounce their own deeds, good and bad, and hope to be saved by faith.

5. A heterodox doctrine, that Christ was Son of God by merit. Compare with Satan (2.5).

6. In Hebrew "Messiah" means "the anointed one."

7. Orders of angels.

The world shall burn, and from her ashes spring
 335 New heav'n" and earth, wherein the just shall dwell,<sup>8</sup> sky, cosmos
 And after all their tribulations long
 See golden days, fruitful of golden deeds,
 With joy and love triumphing, and fair truth.
 Then thou thy regal scepter shalt lay by,
 340 For regal scepter then no more shall need,<sup>0</sup> be needed
 God shall be all in all. But all ye gods,<sup>0</sup> angels
 Adore him, who to compass all this dies,
 Adore the Son, and honor him as me."
 No sooner had th' Almighty ceased, but all
 345 The multitude of angels with a shout
 Loud as from numbers without number, sweet
 As from blest voices, uttering joy, Heav'n rung<sup>9</sup>
 With jubilee, and loud hosannas filled
 Th' eternal regions: lowly reverent
 350 Towards either throne<sup>1</sup> they bow, and to the ground
 With solemn adoration down they cast
 Their crowns inwove with amarant<sup>2</sup> and gold,
 Immortal amarant, a flow'r which once
 In Paradise, fast by the Tree of Life
 355 Began to bloom, but soon for man's offense
 To Heav'n removed where first it grew, there grows,
 And flow'rs aloft shading the Fount of Life,
 And where the river of bliss through midst of Heav'n
 Rolls o'er Elysian<sup>3</sup> flow'rs her amber stream;
 360 With these that never fade the Spirits elect
 Bind their resplendent locks inwreathed with beams,
 Now in loose garlands thick thrown off, the bright
 Pavement that like a sea of jasper shone
 Impurpled with celestial roses smiled.
 365 Then crowned again their golden harps they took,
 Harps ever tuned, that glittering by their side
 Like quivers hung, and with preamble sweet
 Of charming symphony they introduce
 Their sacred song, and waken raptures high;
 370 No voice exempt,<sup>0</sup> no voice but well could join excluded
 Melodious part, such concord is in Heav'n.
 Thee Father first they sung omnipotent,
 Immutable, immortal, infinite,
 Eternal King; thee Author of all being,
 375 Fountain of light, thyself invisible
 Amidst the glorious brightness where thou sitt'st
 Throned inaccessible, but<sup>0</sup> when thou shad'st except
 The full blaze of thy beams, and through a cloud
 Drawn round about thee like a radiant shrine,<sup>4</sup>

8. Milton's description of the Last Judgment draws on several biblical texts, including Matthew 24.30–31 and 25.31–32; the account of the burning and re-creation of the heavens and earth is from 2 Peter 3.12–13.

9. "Multitude" (line 345) is the subject of the sentence, "rung" the verb, and "Heav'n" the object.

I. Thrones of God and the Son.

2. In Greek, "unfading," a legendary immortal flower.

3. Milton draws freely, for his Christian Heaven, on descriptions of the classical paradisaical place, the Elysian Fields.

4. The turn from theological debate to images that evoke a more mystical aspect of God.

380 Dark with excessive bright thy skirts appear,
 Yet dazzle Heav'n, that brightest Seraphim
 Approach not, but with both wings veil their eyes.
 Thee next they sang of all creation first,<sup>5</sup>
 Begotten Son, Divine Similitude,

385 In whose conspicuous count'nance, without cloud
 Made visible, th' Almighty Father shines,
 Whom else no creature can behold;<sup>6</sup> on thee
 Impressed th' effulgence of his glory abides,
 Transfused on thee his ample spirit rests.

390 He Heav'n of heavens and all the Powers therein
 By thee created, and by thee threw down
 Th' aspiring Dominations.<sup>7</sup> Thou that day
 Thy Father's dreadful thunder didst not spare,
 Nor stop thy flaming chariot wheels, that shook

395 Heav'n's everlasting frame, while o'er the necks
 Thou drov'st of warring angels disarrayed.
 Back from pursuit thy Powers<sup>8</sup> with loud acclaim
 Thee only extolled, Son of thy Father's might,
 To execute fierce vengeance on his foes,

angels

400 Not so on man; him through their malice fall'n,
 Father of mercy and grace, thou didst not doom
 So strictly, but much more to pity incline:
 No sooner did thy dear and only Son
 Perceive thee purposed not to doom<sup>9</sup> frail man

judge

405 So strictly, but much more to pity inclined,
 He to appease thy wrath, and end the strife
 Of mercy and justice in thy face discerned,
 Regardless of the bliss wherein he sat
 Second to thee, offered himself to die

410 For man's offense. O unexampled love,
 Love nowhere to be found less than divine!
 Hail Son of God, Savior of men, thy name
 Shall be the copious matter of my<sup>8</sup> song
 Henceforth, and never shall my harp thy praise

 Dark, waste, and wild, under the frown of Night

 Of Chaos blust'ring round, inclement sky;
 Save on that side which from the wall of Heav'n

5. The Son is not eternal, as in Trinitarian doctrine, but rather, God's first creation.

6. If it were not for the Son who is God's image, no creature could see God.

7. The rebel angels.

8. Either Milton here quotes the angels singing as a single chorus, or he associates himself with their song, or both.

9. Satan is on the outermost of the ten concentric spheres that make up the cosmos.

Though distant far some small reflection gains

 New Babels, had they wherewithal, would build:
 Others came single; he who to be deemed

1. Imaus, a ridge of mountains beyond the modern Himalayas, runs north through Asia from modern Afghanistan to the Arctic Circle.

2. Both the Ganges and the Hydaspes (a tributary of the Indus) rise from the mountains of northern India. Sericana (line 438) is a region in northwest China.

3. Milton's Paradise of Fools (named in line 496) was inspired by Ariosto's Limbo of Vanity in Orlando Furioso (Book 34, lines 73ff.); Milton's region is reserved for deluded victims of misplaced devotion, chiefly Roman Catholics.

4. Holy men like Enoch and Elijah, transported to Heaven while yet alive. (Genesis 5.24; 2 Kings 2.11-12).

5. Giants, born of unnatural marriages between the "sons of God" and the daughters of men (Genesis 6.4), are creatures unkindly mixed.

6. Shinar, the plain of Babel (Genesis 11.2-9); the Tower of Babel is an emblem of human pride and folly.

 Fly o'er the backside<sup>0</sup> of the world far off rump
 Into a limbo large and broad, since called
 The Paradise of Fools, to few unknown
 Long after, now unpeopled, and untrod;
 All this dark globe the Fiend found as he passed,
 And long he wandered, till at last a gleam
 Of dawning light turned thitherward in haste
 His traveled<sup>0</sup> steps; far distant he descries travel-weary
 Ascending by degrees<sup>0</sup> magnificent steps
 Up to the wall of Fleaven a structure high,
 At top whereof, but far more rich appeared
 The work as of a kingly palace gate
 With frontispiece<sup>0</sup> of diamond and gold pediment
 Embellished; thick with sparkling orient<sup>0</sup> gems lustrous
 The portal shone, inimitable on earth,
 By model, or by shading pencil drawn.
 The stairs were such as whereon Jacob saw
 Angels ascending and descending, bands
 Of guardians bright, when he from Esau fled
 To Padan-Aram in the field of Luz,
 Dreaming by night under the open sky,

7. I.e., it would take too long to name them. Both Empedocles and Cleombrotus foolishly carried piety to the point of suicide.

8. Religious paraphernalia. The white friars are Carmelites; the black, Dominicans; and the gray, Franciscans.

9. Place where Christ was crucified.

1. Some try to trick God into granting them salvation by wearing on their deathbeds the garb of various religious orders.

2. Milton follows their souls through the spheres of the moon and sun, the five then-known planets, the fixed stars, and the sphere responsible for the "trepidation" (a periodic corrective shudder of the cosmos), up to the primum mobile, or prime mover. The next step seems to be the empyreal Heaven.

3. The dress of religious orders, together with (next lines) saints' relics, rosary beads, various kinds of pardon for sins, and papal decrees ("bulls").

515 And waking cried, "This is the gate of Heav'n."<sup>4</sup>
 Each stair mysteriously was meant, nor stood
 There always, but drawn up to Heav'n sometimes Viewless," and underneath a bright sea flowed invisible
 Of jasper, or of liquid pearl, whereon
 520 Who after came from earth, sailing arrived,
 Wafted by angels, or flew o'er the lake
 Rapt in a chariot drawn by fiery steeds.<sup>5</sup>
 The stairs were then let down, whether to dare
 The Fiend by easy ascent, or aggravate
 525 His sad exclusion from the doors of bliss.
 Direct against which opened from beneath,
 Just o'er the blissful seat of Paradise,
 A passage down to th' earth, a passage wide,<sup>6</sup>
 Wider by far than that of aftertimes
 530 Over Mount Zion, and, though that were large,
 Over the Promised Land to God so dear,
 By which, to visit oft those happy tribes,
 On high behests his angels to and fro
 Passed frequent, and his eye with choice<sup>0</sup> regard discriminating
 535 From Paneas the fount of Jordan's flood
 To Beersaba, where the Holy Land
 Borders on Egypt and the Arabian shore;<sup>7</sup>
 So wide the op'ning seemed, where bounds were set
 To darkness, such as bound the ocean wave.
 540 Satan from hence now on the lower stair
 That scaled by steps of gold to Heaven gate
 Looks down with wonder at the sudden view
 Of all this world at once. As when a scout
 Through dark and desert ways with peril gone
 545 All night; at last by break of cheerful dawn
 Obtains<sup>0</sup> the brow of some high-climbing hill, gains
 Which to his eye discovers unaware
 The goodly prospect of some foreign land
 First seen, or some renowned metropolis
 550 With glistering spires and pinnacles adorned,
 Which now the rising sun gilds with his beams.
 Such wonder seized, though after Heaven seen,
 The Spirit malign, but much more envy seized
 At sight of all this world beheld so fair.
 555 Round he surveys, and well might, where he stood
 So high above the circling canopy
 Of night's extended shade; from eastern point
 Of Libra to the fleecy star that bears
 Andromeda far off Atlantic seas<sup>8</sup>
 560 Beyond th' horizon; then from pole to pole

4. The story of Jacob's vision is summarized from Genesis 28.1—19; the stairs of the ladder (next line) allegorically ("mysteriously") represent stages of spiritual growth.

5. Elijah was wafted to heaven in a chariot.

6. A passage through the crystalline spheres, otherwise impenetrable.

7. From Paneas (or Dan) in northern Palestine to Beersaba, or Beersheba, near the Egyptian border—the entire land of Israel.

8. In the zodiac, Libra is diametrically opposite Aries, or the Ram ("the fleecy star"), which seems to carry the constellation Andromeda on its back,

He views in breadth, and without longer pause
 Down right into the world's first region throws
 His flight precipitant, and winds with ease
 Through the pure marble<sup>0</sup> air his oblique way sparkling
 565 Amongst innumerable stars, that shone
 Stars distant, but nigh hand seemed other worlds,
 Or other worlds they seemed, or happy isles,
 Like those Hesperian gardens famed of old,
 Fortunate fields, and groves and flow'ry vales,<sup>9</sup>
 570 Thrice happy isles, but who dwelt happy there
 He stayed not to inquire: above them all
 The golden sun in splendor likest Heaven
 Allured his eye: thither his course he bends
 Through the calm firmament;<sup>0</sup> but up or down sky
 575 By center, or eccentric, hard to tell,
 Or longitude,<sup>1</sup> where the great luminary
 Aloof the vulgar constellations thick,
 That from his lordly eye keep distance due,
 Dispenses light from far; they as they move
 580 Their starry dance in numbers that compute
 Days, months, and years, towards his all-cheering lamp
 Turn swift their various motions, or are turned
 By his magnetic beam, that gently warms
 The universe, and to each inward part
 585 With gentle penetration, though unseen,
 Shoots invisible virtue<sup>0</sup> even to the deep: influence, strength
 So wondrously was set his station bright.
 There lands the Fiend, a spot like which perhaps Astronomer in the sun's lucent orb
 590 Through his glazed optic tube yet never saw.<sup>2</sup>
 The place he found beyond expression bright,
 Compared with aught on earth, metal or stone;
 Not all parts like, but all alike informed
 With radiant light, as glowing iron with fire;
 595 If metal, part seemed gold, part silver clear;
 If stone, carbuncle most or chrysolite,<sup>3</sup>
 Ruby or topaz, to the twelve that shone
 In Aaron's breastplate,<sup>4</sup> and a stone besides
 Imagined rather oft than elsewhere seen,<sup>5</sup>
 600 That stone, or like to that which here below
 Philosophers in vain so long have sought,<sup>6</sup>
 In vain, though by their powerful art they bind
 Volatile Hermes, and call up unbound
 In various shapes old Proteus from the sea,

9. The gardens of the Hesperides and the "fortunate isles" of Greek mythology, classical versions of paradise, lay far out in the Atlantic.

1. The passage leaves open whether the sun or the earth is at the center of the cosmos.

2. Galileo first observed sunspots through his telescope in 1609.

3. Any green stone. "Carbuncle": any red stone.

4. In Exodus 28.15–20, Aaron's "breastplate" is described as decorated with twelve different gems, of which Milton lists the first four.

5. I.e., elsewhere imagined more often than seen.

6. Alchemists had identified the "philosophers" stone with the itrim on Aaron's breastplate (Exodus 28.30); that stone reputedly could heal all diseases, restore paradise, and transmute base metals to gold.

Drained through a limbec to his native form.<sup>7</sup>
 What wonder then if fields and regions here
 Breathe forth elixir pure,<sup>8</sup> and rivers run
 Potable<sup>0</sup> gold, when with one virtuous<sup>0</sup> touch drinhtahle / powerful
 Th' arch-chemic<sup>o</sup> sun so far from us remote chief alchemist
 Produces with terrestrial humor<sup>0</sup> mixed earth's moisture
 Here in the dark so many precious things
 Of color glorious and effect so rare?
 Here matter new to gaze the Devil met
 Undazzled, far and wide his eye commands,
 For sight no obstacle found here, nor shade,
 But all sunshine, as when his beams at noon
 Culminate from th' equator, as they now
 Shot upward still direct, whence no way round
 Shadow from body opaque can fall,<sup>9</sup> and the air,
 Nowhere so clear, sharpened his visual ray
 To objects distant far,<sup>1</sup> whereby he soon
 Saw within ken<sup>o</sup> a glorious angel stand, range of vision
 The same whom John saw also in the sun:<sup>2</sup>
 His back was turned, but not his brightness hid;
 Of beaming sunny rays, a golden tiar<sup>o</sup> tiara, crown
 Cirled his head, nor less his locks behind
 Illustrious<sup>0</sup> on his shoulders fledge<sup>0</sup> with wings lustrous / feathered
 Lay waving round; on some great charge employed
 He seemed, or fixed in cogitation deep.
 Glad was the Spirit impure; as now in hope
 To find who might direct his wand'ring flight
 To Paradise the happy seat of man,
 His journey's end and our beginning woe.
 But first he casts<sup>0</sup> to change his proper shape, contrives
 Which else might work him danger or delay:
 And now a stripling Cherub he appears,
 Not of the prime,<sup>3</sup> yet such as in his face
 Youth smiled celestial, and to every limb
 Suitable grace diffused, so well he feigned;
 Under a coronet his flowing hair
 In curls on either cheek played, wings he wore
 Of many a colored plume sprinkled with gold,
 His habit fit for speed succinct,<sup>0</sup> and held close-fitting
 Before his decent<sup>0</sup> steps a silver wand. comely
 He drew not nigh unheard; the angel bright,
 Ere he drew nigh, his radiant visage turned,
 Admonished by his ear, and straight<sup>0</sup> was known immediately
 Th' Archangel Uriel, one of the sev'n

7. "Hermes": the winged god and the element mercury, which evaporated readily ("volatile"). "Proteus": the shape-shifting sea god, a symbol of matter. Alchemists would "bind" (solidify) mercury and dissolve or refine matter to its "native form" in a vessel (alembic, "limbec").

8. The liquid form of the philosopher's stone. "Here": in the sun.

9. Before the Fall (and the consequent tipping of the earth's axis) the sun at noon, on the equator, never cast a shadow. "Culminate": reach their zenith.

1. The eye was thought to emit a beam into the object perceived.

2. "I saw an angel standing in the sun" (Revelation 19.17).

3. Not yet in the prime of life.

Who in God's presence, nearest to his throne<sup>4</sup>
 650 Stand ready at command, and are his eyes
 That run through all the heav'ns, or down to th' earth
 Bear his swift errands over moist and dry,
 O'er sea and land: him Satan thus accosts:
 "Uriel, for thou of those sev'n Spirits that stand
 655 In sight of God's high throne, gloriously bright,
 The first art wont<sup>o</sup> his great authentic<sup>o</sup> will used / authoritative
 Interpreter through highest Heav'n to bring,
 Where all his sons thy embassy attend;
 And here art likeliest by supreme decree
 660 Like honor to obtain, and as his eye
 To visit oft this new creation round;
 Unspeakable desire to see, and know
 All these his wondrous works, but chiefly man,
 His chief delight and favor,<sup>o</sup> him for whom favorite
 665 All these his works so wondrous he ordained,
 Hath brought me from the choirs of Cherubim
 Alone thus wand'ring. Brightest Seraph tell
 In which of all these shining orbs hath man
 His fixed seat, or fixed seat hath none,
 670 But all these shining orbs his choice to dwell;
 That I may find him, and with secret gaze,
 Or open admiration him behold
 On whom the great Creator hath bestowed
 Worlds, and on whom hath all these graces poured;
 675 That both in him and all things, as is meet,<sup>o</sup> fitting
 The Universal Maker we may praise;
 Who justly hath driv'n out his rebel foes
 To deepest Hell, and to repair that loss
 Created this new happy race of men
 680 To serve him better: wise are all his ways."
 So spake the false dissembler unperceived;
 For neither man nor angel can discern
 Hypocrisy, the only evil that walks
 Invisible, except to God alone,
 685 By his permissive will, through Heav'n and earth:
 And oft though wisdom wake, suspicion sleeps
 At wisdom's gate, and to simplicity
 Resigns her charge, while goodness thinks no ill
 Where no ill seems: which now for once beguiled
 690 Uriel, though regent of the sun, and held
 The sharpest-sighted Spirit of all in Heav'n;
 Who to the fraudulent impostor foul
 In his uprightness answer thus returned:
 "Fair angel, thy desire which tends<sup>o</sup> to know inclines
 695 The works of God, thereby to glorify
 The great Work-Master, leads to no excess
 That reaches blame, but rather merits praise
 The more it seems excess, that led thee hither
 From thy empyreal mansion thus alone,

4. Uriel—in Hebrew, "light" (or "fire") of God—is the angel named first (in 2 Esdras 4.1—5. apocrypha) among the seven angels who stood before God's throne.

700 To witness with thine eyes what some perhaps
 Contented with report hear only in Heav'n:
 For wonderful indeed are all his works,
 Pleasant to know, and worthiest to be all
 Had in remembrance always with delight;
 705 But what created mind can comprehend
 Their number, or the wisdom infinite
 That brought them forth, but hid their causes deep.
 I saw when at his word the formless mass,
 This world's material mold,<sup>5</sup> came to a heap: substance
 710 Confusion heard his voice, and wild uproar
 Stood ruled, stood vast infinitude confined;
 Till at his second bidding darkness fled,
 Light shone, and order from disorder sprung:
 Swift to their several quarters hasted then
 715 The cumbrous elements, earth, flood, air, fire,
 And this ethereal quintessence<sup>5</sup> of Heav'n
 Flew upward, spirited with various forms,
 That rolled orbicular/<sup>6</sup> and turned to stars
 Numberless, as thou seest, and how they move;
 720 Each had his place appointed, each his course,
 The rest in circuit walls this universe.
 Look downward on that globe whose hither side
 With light from hence, though but reflected, shines;
 That place is earth the seat of man, that light
 725 His day, which else as th' other hemisphere
 Night would invade, but there the neighboring moon
 (So call that opposite fair star) her aid
 Timely interposes, and her monthly round
 Still ending, still renewing through mid-Heav'n,
 730 With borrowed light her countenance triform<sup>7</sup>
 Hence<sup>8</sup> fills and empties to enlighten th' earth,
 And in her pale dominion checks the night.
 That spot to which I point is Paradise,
 Adam's abode, those lofty shades his bow'r.
 735 Thy way thou canst not miss, me mine requires."
 Thus said, he turned, and Satan bowing low,
 As to superior Spirits is wont in Heav'n,
 Where honor due and reverence none neglects,
 Took leave, and toward the coast of earth beneath,
 740 Down from th' ecliptic,<sup>9</sup> sped with hoped success, the sun's orbit
 Throws his steep flight in many an airy wheel,
 Nor stayed, till on Niphates' top<sup>9</sup> he lights.

Book 4

O for that warning voice, which he who saw
 Th' Apocalypse, heard cry in Heaven aloud,

5. The fifth element, of which the incorruptible heavenly bodies were made.

6. The spherical shape of the stars and their orbits. "Spirited with various forms": presided over or inhabited by various angelic spirits or intelligences (Plato, Timaeus 41E).

7. The moon was said to have a triple nature: Luna in Heaven. Diana on earth, and Hecate in Hell.

8. From here (the sun).

9. A mountain in Assyria.

Then when the Dragon, put to second rout,
 Came furious down to be revenged on men,
 5 "Woe to the inhabitants on earth!"<sup>1</sup> that now,
 While time was, our first parents had been warned
 The coming of their secret foe, and scaped
 Haply<sup>0</sup> so scaped his mortal<sup>0</sup> snare; for now perha-ps/deadly
 Satan, now first inflamed with rage, came down,
 10 The tempter ere<sup>o</sup> th' accuser of mankind, before being
 To wreak<sup>0</sup> on innocent frail man his loss avenge
 Of that first battle, and his flight to Hell:
 Yet not rejoicing in his speed, though bold,
 Far off and fearless, nor with cause to boast,
 15 Begins his dire attempt, which nigh the birth
 Now rolling, boils in his tumultuous breast,
 And like a devilish engine back recoils
 Upon himself; horror and doubt distract
 His troubled thoughts, and from the bottom stir
 20 The Hell within him, for within him Hell
 He brings, and round about him, nor from Hell
 One step no more than from himself can fly
 By change of place: now conscience wakes despair
 That slumbered, wakes the bitter memory
 25 Of what he was, what is, and what must be Worse; of worse deeds worse sufferings must ensue.
 Sometimes towards Eden which now in his view
 Lay pleasant, his grieved look he fixes sad,
 Sometimes towards Heav'n and the full-blazing sun,
 30 Which now sat high in his meridian tow'r:<sup>2</sup>
 Then much revolving,<sup>0</sup> thus in sighs began. pondering
 "O thou that with surpassing glory crowned,<sup>3</sup>
 Look'st from thy sole dominion like the god
 Of this new world: at whose sight all the stars
 35 Hide their diminished heads; to thee I call,
 But with no friendly voice, and add thy name
 O sun, to tell thee how I hate thy beams
 That bring to my remembrance from what state
 I fell, how glorious once above thy sphere;
 40 Till pride and worse ambition threw me down
 Warring in Heav'n against Heav'n's matchless King:
 Ah wherefore! he deserved no such return
 From me, whom he created what I was
 In that bright eminence, and with his good
 45 Upbraided<sup>4</sup> none, nor was his service hard.
 What could be less than to afford him praise,
 The easiest recompense, and pay him thanks,
 How due! yet all his good proved ill in me,
 And wrought but malice; lifted up so high
 50 I 'sdained<sup>0</sup> subjection, and thought one step higher disdained

1. John of Patmos, in Revelation 12:3–12, hears such a cry during a second war in Heaven, between the Dragon and the angels.

2. At midday, the height of noon.

3. Milton's nephew, Edward Phillips, said that this soliloquy was written "several years before the poem was begun," and was intended to begin a drama on the topic, Adam Unparadised.

4. Reproached (James 1.5).

Would set me highest, and in a moment quit pay
 The debt immense of endless gratitude,
 So burthensome still<sup>0</sup> paying, still to owe; always
 Forgetful what from him I still received,
 And understood not that a grateful mind
 By owing owes not, but still pays, at once
 Indebted and discharged; what burden then?
 O had his powerful destiny ordained
 Me some inferior angel, I had stood angel
 Then happy; no unbounded hope had raised
 Ambition. Yet why not? some other Power<sup>0</sup>
 As great might have aspired, and me though mean
 Drawn to his part; but other Powers as great Fell not, but stand unshaken, from within
 Or from without, to all temptations armed.
 Hadst thou<sup>5</sup> the same free will and power to stand?
 Thou hadst: whom hast thou then or what to accuse,
 But Heav'n's free love dealt equally to all?
 Be then his love accursed, since love or hate,
 To me alike, it deals eternal woe.
 Nay cursed be thou; since against his thy will Chose freely what it now so justly rues.
 Me miserable!<sup>6</sup> which way shall I fly
 Infinite wrath, and infinite despair?
 Which way I fly is Hell; myself am Hell;<sup>7</sup>
 And in the lowest deep a lower deep
 Still threat'ning to devour me opens wide,
 To which the Hell I suffer seems a Heav'n.
 O then at last relent! is there no place
 Left for repentance, none for pardon left?
 None left but by submission; and that word
 Disdain forbids me, and my dread of shame
 Among the Spirits beneath, whom I seduced
 With other promises and other vaunts
 Than to submit, boasting I could subdue
 Th' Omnipotent. Ay me, they little know
 How dearly I abide<sup>0</sup> that boast so vain, pay the penalty for Under what torments inwardly I groan:
 While they adore me on the throne of Hell,
 With diadem and scepter high advanced
 The lower still I fall, only supreme
 In misery; such joy ambition finds.
 But say I could repent and could obtain
 By act of grace<sup>8</sup> my former state; how soon
 Would heighth recall high thoughts, how soon unsay
 What feigned submission swore: ease would recant
 Vows made in pain, as violent<sup>0</sup> and void. forced
 For never can true reconcilement grow
 Where wounds of deadly hate have pierced so deep:

5. Compare Satan's address to himself here with Adam's soliloquy in parallel circumstances (10.758ff.).

6. A Latinism, me miserum!

7. Compare Satan's earlier claim that "the mind is its own place" (1.254).

8. The technical term for a formal pardon.

100 Which would but lead me to a worse relapse,
 And heavier fall: so should I purchase dear
 Short intermission bought with double smart.
 This knows my punisher; therefore as far
 From granting he, as I from begging peace:
 105 All hope excluded thus, behold instead
 Of us outcast, exiled, his new delight,
 Mankind created, and for him this world.
 So farewell hope, and with hope farewell fear,
 Farewell remorse: all good to me is lost;
 110 Evil be thou my good; by thee at least Divided empire with Heav'n's King I hold
 By thee, and more than half perhaps will reign;
 As man ere long, and this new world shall know."
 Thus while he spake, each passion dimmed his face
 115 us Thrice changed with pale,<sup>9</sup> ire, envy, and despair, pallor
 Which marred his borrowed visage, and betrayed
 Him counterfeit, if any eye beheld.
 For heav'nly minds from such distempers foul
 Are ever clear. Whereof he soon aware,
 120 Each perturbation smoothed with outward calm,
 Artificer of fraud; and was the first
 That practiced falsehood under saintly show,
 Deep malice to conceal, couched<sup>0</sup> with revenge: hidden
 Yet not enough had practiced to deceive
 125 Uriel once warned; whose eye pursued him down
 The way he went, and on th' Assyrian mount<sup>0</sup> Niphates
 Saw him disfigured, more than could befall
 Spirit of happy sort: his gestures fierce
 He marked and mad demeanor, then alone,
 130 As he supposed, all unobserved, unseen.
 So on he fares, and to the border comes
 Of Eden, where delicious Paradise,<sup>9</sup>
 Now nearer, crowns with her enclosure green,
 As with a rural mound the champaign head<sup>0</sup> open summit
 135 Of a steep wilderness, whose hairy sides
 With thicket overgrown, grotesque<sup>1</sup> and wild,
 Access denied; and overhead up grew
 Insuperable height of loftiest shade,
 Cedar, and pine, and fir, and branching palm,
 140 A sylvan scene, and as the ranks ascend
 Shade above shade, a woody theater<sup>2</sup>
 Of stateliest view. Yet higher than their tops
 The verdurous wall of Paradise up sprung:
 Which to our general sire gave prospect large
 145 Into his nether empire neighboring round.
 And higher than that wall a circling row
 Of goodliest trees loaden with fairest fruit.
 Blossoms and fruits at once of golden hue
 Appeared, with gay enameled<sup>0</sup> colors mixed: bright

9. Paradise is a delightful ("delicious") garden on top of a steep hill situated in the east of the land of Eden.

1. Characterized by interwoven, tangled vines and branches.

2. As if in a Greek amphitheater, the trees are set row on row.

On which the sun more glad impressed his beams
 Than in fair evening cloud, or humid bow,<sup>o</sup> rainbow
 When God hath show'ed the earth; so lovely seemed
 That landscape: and of pure now purer air<sup>3</sup>
 Meets his approach, and to the heart inspires<sup>o</sup> infuses
 Vernal delight and joy, able to drive<sup>o</sup> drive out
 All sadness but despair: now gentle gales
 Fanning their odoriferous<sup>o</sup> wings dispense fragrance-bearing
 Native perfumes, and whisper whence they stole
 Those balmy spoils. As when to them who sail
 Beyond the Cape of Hope,<sup>o</sup> and now are past
 Mozambic, off at sea northeast winds blow Cape of Good Hope
 Sabean odors from the spicy shore
 Of Araby the Blest,<sup>4</sup> with such delay
 Well pleased they slack their course, and many a league
 Cheered with the grateful<sup>o</sup> smell old Ocean smiles. pleasing
 So entertained those odorous sweets the Fiend
 Who came their bane,<sup>o</sup> though with them better pleased poison
 Than Asmodeus with the fishy fume,
 That drove him, though enamored, from the spouse
 Of Tobit's son, and with a vengeance sent
 From Media post to Egypt, there fast bound.<sup>1</sup>
 Now to th'ascent of that steep savage<sup>o</sup> hill wooded, wild
 Satan had journeyed on, pensive and slow;
 But further way found none, so thick entwined,
 As one continued brake,<sup>o</sup> the undergrowth thicket
 Of shrubs and tangling bushes had perplexed
 All path of man or beast that passed that way:
 One gate there only was, and that looked east
 On th' other side: which when th' arch-felon saw
 Due entrance he disdained, and in contempt,
 At one slight bound high overleaped all bound
 Of hill or highest wall, and sheer within Lights on his feet. As when a prowling wolf,
 Whom hunger drives to seek new haunt for prey,
 Watching where shepherds pen their flocks at eve
 In hurdled cotes<sup>o</sup> amid the field secure, pens of woven reeds
 Leaps o'er the fence with ease into the fold:
 Or as a thief bent to unhoard the cash
 Of some rich burgher, whose substantial doors,
 Cross-barred and bolted fast, fear no assault,
 In at the window climbs, or o'er the tiles;
 So clomb<sup>o</sup> this first grand thief into God's fold: climbed
 So since into his church lewd hirelings<sup>6</sup> climb.
 Thence up he flew, and on the Tree of Life,
 The middle tree and highest there that grew,
 Sat like a cormorant;<sup>7</sup> yet not true life
 Thereby regained, but sat devising death

3. The air becomes still purer.

4. Arabia Felix (modern Yemen). "Sabean": the biblical Sheba.

5. The Apocryphal book of Tobit tells of Tobias, Tobit's son, who married Sara and avoided the fate of her previous seven husbands (killed on their wedding night by the demon Asmodeus) by following the instructions of the angel Raphael and making a fishy smell to drive him off; Asmodeus then fled to Egypt, where Raphael bound him.

6. Base men interested only in money; Milton would have clergymen not paid by required tithes or by the state, to ensure their purity of motive.

7. A sea bird, noted for gluttony.

To them who lived; nor on the virtue<sup>0</sup> thought power
 Of that life-giving plant, but only used
 200 For prospect,<sup>0</sup> what well used had been the pledge as a lookout
 Of immortality. So little knows
 Any, but God alone, to value right
 The good before him, but perverts best things
 To worst abuse, or to their meanest use.
 205 Beneath him with new wonder now he views
 To all delight of human sense exposed
 In narrow room nature's whole wealth, yea more,
 A heav'n on earth: for blissful Paradise
 Of God the garden was, by him in the east
 210 Of Eden planted; Eden stretched her line
 From Auran eastward to the royal tow'rs
 Of great Seleucia, built by Grecian kings,
 Or where the sons of Eden long before
 Dwelt in Telassar:<sup>8</sup> in this pleasant soil
 215 His far more pleasant garden God ordained;
 Out of the fertile ground he caused to grow
 All trees of noblest kind for sight, smell, taste;
 And all amid them stood the Tree of Life,
 High eminent, blooming ambrosial<sup>0</sup> fruit divinely fragrant
 220 Of vegetable gold; and next to life
 Our death the Tree of Knowledge grew fast by,
 Knowledge of good bought dear by knowing ill.
 Southward through Eden went a river large,<sup>9</sup>
 Nor changed his course, but through the shaggy hill
 225 Passed underneath engulfed, for God had thrown
 That mountain as his garden mold<sup>0</sup> high raised rich earth
 Upon the rapid current, which through veins
 Of porous earth with kindly<sup>0</sup> thirst up drawn, natural
 Rose a fresh fountain, and with many a rill
 230 Watered the garden; thence united fell
 Down the steep glade, and met the nether flood,
 Which from his darksome passage now appears,
 And now divided into four main streams,
 Runs diverse, wand'ring many a famous realm
 235 And country whereof here needs no account,
 But rather to tell how, if art could tell,
 How from that sapphire fount the crisped<sup>0</sup> brooks wavy, rippling
 Rolling on orient pearl and sands of gold,
 With mazy error' under pendent shades
 240 Ran nectar, visiting each plant, and fed
 Flow'rs worthy of Paradise which not nice<sup>0</sup> art fastidious
 In beds and curious knots, but nature boon<sup>0</sup> bounteous
 Poured forth profuse on hill and dale and plain,
 Both where the morning sun first warmly smote
 245 The open field, and where the unpierced shade
 Embrowned<sup>0</sup> the noontide bow'rs. Thus was this place, darkened

8. Auran is the province of Hauran on the eastern border of Israel. Selucia, a powerful city on the Tigris, near modern Baghdad, was founded by one of Alexander's generals ("built by Grecian kings").

Telassar is another Near Eastern kingdom.
9. The Tigris (identified at 9.71) flowed under the hill.

1. From Latin errare, wandering.

A happy rural seat of various view,<sup>2</sup>
 Groves whose rich trees wept odorous gums and balm,
 Others whose fruit burnished with golden rind
 Hung amiable,<sup>0</sup> Hesperian fables true,<sup>3</sup> lovely
 If true, here only, and of delicious taste:
 Betwixt them lawns, or level downs,<sup>0</sup> and flocks uplands
 Grazing the tender herb, were interposed,
 Or palmy hillock, or the flow'ry lap
 Of some irriguous<sup>0</sup> valley spread her store, well-watered
 Flow'rs of all hue, and without thorn the rose:
 Another side, umbrageous<sup>0</sup> grots and caves shady
 Of cool recess, o'er which the mantling<sup>0</sup> vine enveloping
 Lays forth her purple grape, and gently creeps
 Luxuriant; meanwhile murmuring waters fall
 Down the slope hills, dispersed, or in a lake,
 That to the fringed bank with myrtle crowned,
 Her crystal mirror holds, unite their streams.
 The birds their choir apply; airs,<sup>4</sup> vernal airs,
 Breathing the smell of field and grove, attune
 The trembling leaves, while universal Pan<sup>5</sup>
 Knit<sup>0</sup> with the Graces and the Hours in dance clasping hands
 Led on th' eternal spring. Not that fair field
 Of Enna, where Proserpine gathering flow'rs
 Herself a fairer flow'r by gloomy Dis
 Was gathered, which cost Ceres all that pain
 To seek her through the world; nor that sweet grove
 Of Daphne by Orontes, and th' inspired
 Castalian spring, might with this Paradise
 Of Eden strive;<sup>6</sup> nor that Nyseian isle
 Girt with the river Triton, where old Cham,
 Whom Gentiles Ammon call and Libyan Jove,
 Hid Amalthea and her florid<sup>0</sup> son wine-flnshed
 Young Bacchus from his stepdame Rhea's eye;<sup>7</sup>
 Nor where Abassin kings their issue guard,
 Mount Amara,<sup>8</sup> though this by some supposed
 True Paradise under the Ethiop line<sup>0</sup> equator
 By Nilus'° head, enclosed with shining rock, Nile's
 A whole day's journey high, but wide remote
 From this Assyrian garden,<sup>0</sup> where the Fiend Eden
 Saw undelighted all delight, all kind
 Of living creatures new to sight and strange:
 Two of far nobler shape erect and tall,
 Godlike erect, with native honor clad

2. Like a country estate, with a variety of prospects.

3. These were real golden apples, by contrast to those feigned golden apples of the Hesperides, fabled paradisaal islands in the Western Ocean.

4. Both breezes and melodies. "Their choir apply": practice their songs.

5. The god of all nature—pain in Greek means "all."

6. Milton compares Paradise with famous beauty spots of antiquity. Enna in Sicily was a lovely meadow from which Proserpine was kidnapped by

"gloomy Dis" (i.e., Pluto); her mother Ceres sought her throughout the world. The grove of Daphne, near Antioch and the Orontes River in the Near East, had a spring called "Castalia" after the Muses' fountain near Parnassus.

7. The isle of Nysa in the river Triton in Tunisia was where Ammon (an Egyptian god, identified with Cham, or Ham, the son of Noah) hid Bacchus, his child by Amalthea (who later became the god of wine), away from the eyes of his wife Rhea.

8. Atop Mount Amara, the "Abassin" (Abyssinian) king had a splendid palace in a paradisaal garden.

290 In naked majesty seemed lords of all,
 And worthy seemed, for in their looks divine
 The image of their glorious Maker shone,
 Truth, wisdom, sanctitude severe and pure,
 Severe but in true filial freedom placed;
 295 Whence true authority in men;<sup>9</sup> though both
 Not equal, as their sex not equal seemed;
 For contemplation he and valor formed,
 For softness she and sweet attractive grace,
 He for God only, she for God in him:<sup>1</sup>
 300 His fair large front<sup>0</sup> and eye sublime declared forehead
 Absolute rule; and hyacinthine<sup>2</sup> locks
 Hound from his parted forelock manly hung
 Clust'ring, but not beneath his shoulders broad:
 She as a veil down to the slender waist
 305 Her unadorned golden tresses wore
 Disheveled, but in wanton<sup>0</sup> ringlets waved unrestrained
 As the vine curls her tendrils,<sup>3</sup> which implied
 Subjection, but required<sup>0</sup> with gentle sway,<sup>0</sup> requested/persuasion
 And by her yielded, by him best received,
 310 Yielded with coy<sup>o</sup> submission, modest pride,
 And sweet reluctant amorous delay. shyly reserved
 Nor those mysterious parts were then concealed,
 Then was not guilty shame, dishonest<sup>0</sup> shame unchaste
 Of nature's works, honor dishonorable,
 315 Sin-bred, how have ye troubled all mankind
 With shows instead, mere shows of seeming pure,
 And banished from man's life his happiest life,
 Simplicity and spotless innocence.
 So passed they naked on, nor shunned the sight
 320 Of God or angel, for they thought no ill:
 So hand in hand they passed, the loveliest pair
 That ever since in love's embraces met,
 Adam the goodliest man of men since born
 His sons, the fairest of her daughters Eve.
 325 Under a tuft of shade that on a green
 Stood whispering soft, by a fresh fountain side
 They sat them down, and after no more toil
 Of their sweet gard'ning labor than sufficed
 To recommend cool Zephyr,<sup>4</sup> and made ease
 330 More easy, wholesome thirst and appetite
 More grateful, to their supper fruits they fell,
 Nectarine<sup>0</sup> fruits which the compliant boughs sweet as nectar
 Yielded them, sidelong as they sat recline
 On the soft downy bank damasked with flow'rs:
 335 The savory pulp they chew, and in the rind
 Still as they thirsted scoop the brimming stream;

9. This phrase underscores Milton's idea that true freedom involves obedience to natural superiors (i.e., God).

1. The phrase has as its context 1 Corinthians 1 1.3: "The head of every man is Christ; and the head of the woman is the man."

2. A classical metaphor for hair curled in the form of hyacinth petals, and perhaps also implying dark or flowing.

3. Eve's hair is curly, abundant, not subjected to rigid control, like the vegetation in Paradise.

4. I.e., to make a cool breeze welcome.

Nor gentle purpose,<sup>0</sup> nor endearing smiles
 Wanted," nor youthful dalliance as beseems
 Fair couple, linked in happy nuptial league,
 Alone as they. About them frisking played
 All beasts of th' earth, since wild, and of all chase"
 In wood or wilderness, forest or den;
 Sporting the lion ramped,<sup>0</sup> and in his paw
 Dandled the kid; bears, tigers, ounces,<sup>0</sup> pards<sup>0</sup> ^
 Gamboled before them; th' unwieldy elephant
 To make them mirth used all his might, and wreathed
 His lithe proboscis;<sup>0</sup> close the serpent sly
 Insinuating,<sup>0</sup> wove with Gordian twine
 His braided train,<sup>5</sup> and of his fatal guile
 Gave proof unheeded; others on the grass
 Couched, and now filled with pasture gazing sat,
 Or bedward ruminating:<sup>0</sup> for the sun
 Declined was hastening now with prone<sup>0</sup> career
 To th' Ocean Isles,<sup>0</sup> and in th' ascending scale
 Of Heav'n the stars that usher evening rose:
 When Satan still in gaze, as first he stood,
 Scarce thus at length failed speech recovered sad.
 "O Hell! what do mine eyes with grief behold,
 Into our room of bliss thus high advanced
 Creatures of other mold, earth-born perhaps,
 Not Spirits, yet to heav'nly Spirits bright
 Little inferior; whom my thoughts pursue
 With wonder, and could love, so lively shines
 In them divine resemblance, and such grace
 The hand that formed them on their shape hath poured.
 Ah gentle pair, ye little think how nigh
 Your change approaches, when all these delights
 Will vanish and deliver ye to woe,
 More woe, the more your taste is now of joy;
 Happy, but for so happy<sup>0</sup> ill secured
 Long to continue, and this high seat your heav'n
 111 fenced for Heav'n to keep out such a foe
 As now is entered; yet no purposed foe
 To you whom I could pity thus forlorn
 Though I unpitied: league with you I seek,
 And mutual amity so strait,<sup>0</sup> so close,
 That I with you must dwell, or you with me
 Henceforth; my dwelling haply<sup>0</sup> may not please
 Like this fair Paradise, your sense, yet such Accept your Maker's work; he gave it me,
 Which I as freely give; Hell shall unfold,
 To entertain you two, her widest gates,
 And send forth all her kings; there will be room,
 Not like these narrow limits, to receive
 Your numerous offspring; if no better place,
 Thank him who puts me loath to this revenge

5. Checkered body. "Gordian twine": cords as convoluted as the Gordian knot that Alexander the Great had to cut with his sword.

On you who wrong me not for<sup>o</sup> him who wronged. in place of
 And should I at your harmless innocence
 Melt, as I do, yet public reason just,
 390 Honor and empire with revenge enlarged
 By conquering this new world, compels me now
 To do what else though damned I should abhor."<sup>6</sup>
 So spake the Fiend, and with necessity,
 The tyrant's plea, excused his devilish deeds.
 395 Then from his lofty stand on that high tree
 Down he alights among the sportful herd
 Of those four-footed kinds, himself now one,
 Now other, as their shape served best his end
 Nearer to view his prey, and unespied
 400 To mark what of their state he more might learn
 By word or action marked: about them round
 A lion now he stalks with fiery glare,
 Then as a tiger, who by chance hath spied
 In some purlieu<sup>o</sup> two gentle fawns at play, outskirts of a forest
 405 Straight<sup>o</sup> couches close, then rising changes oft at once
 His couchant watch, as one who chose his ground
 Whence rushing he might surest seize them both
 Gripped in each paw: when Adam first of men
 To first of women Eve thus moving speech
 410 Turned him all ear to hear new utterance flow:
 "Sole partner and sole<sup>o</sup> part of all these joys, chief
 Dearer thyself than all; needs must the Power
 That made us, and for us this ample world
 Be infinitely good, and of his good
 415 As liberal and free as infinite,
 That raised us from the dust and placed us here
 In all this happiness, who at his hand
 Have nothing merited, nor can perform
 Aught whereof he hath need, he who requires 420 From us no other service than to keep
 This one, this easy charge, of all the trees
 In Paradise that bear delicious fruit
 So various, not to taste that only Tree
 Of Knowledge, planted by the Tree of Life,
 425 So near grows death to life, whate'er death is,
 Some dreadful thing no doubt; for well thou know'st
 God hath pronounced it death to taste that Tree,
 The only sign of our obedience left
 Among so many signs of power and rule
 430 Conferred upon us, and dominion giv'n
 Over all other creatures that possess
 Earth, air, and sea. Then let us not think hard
 One easy prohibition, who enjoy
 Free leave so large to all things else, and choice
 435 Unlimited of manifold delights:
 But let us ever praise him, and extol
 His bounty, following our delightful task

6. Satan's excuse—reason of state, public interest, empire, etc.—is called "the tyrant's plea" in line 394.

To prune these growing plants, and tend these flow'rs,
 Which were it toilsome, yet with thee were sweet."
 440 To whom thus Eve replied. "O thou for whom
 And from whom I was formed flesh of thy flesh,
 And without whom am to no end, my guide
 And head, what thou hast said is just and right.
 For we to him indeed all praises owe,
 445 And daily thanks, I chiefly who enjoy
 So far the happier lot, enjoying thee
 Preeminent by so much odds,<sup>0</sup> while thou advantage
 Like consort to thyself canst nowhere find.
 That day I oft remember, when from sleep
 450 I first awaked, and found myself reposed<sup>0</sup> resting
 Under a shade on flowers, much wond'ring where
 And what I was, whence thither brought, and how.
 Not distant far from thence a murmuring sound
 Of waters issued from a cave and spread
 455 Into a liquid plain, then stood unmoved
 Pure as th' expanse of Heav'n; I thither went
 With unexperienced thought, and laid me down
 On the green bank, to look into the clear
 Smooth lake, that to me seemed another sky.
 460 As I bent down to look, just opposite,
 A shape within the wat'ry gleam appeared
 Bending to look on me, I started back,
 It started back, but pleased I soon returned,
 Pleased it returned as soon with answering looks 465 Of sympathy and love; there I had fixed
 Mine eyes till now, and pined with vain<sup>o</sup> desire,<sup>7</sup> futile
 Had not a voice thus warned me, 'What thou seest,
 What there thou seest fair creature is thyself,
 With thee it came and goes: but follow me,
 470 And I will bring thee where no shadow stays<sup>0</sup> hinders
 Thy coming, and thy soft embraces, he
 Whose image thou art, him thou shall enjoy
 Inseparably thine, to him shalt bear
 Multitudes like thyself, and thence be called 475 Mother of human race': what could I do,
 But follow straight<sup>0</sup> invisibly thus led? at once
 Till I espied thee, fair indeed and tall,
 Under a platan,<sup>0</sup> yet methought less fair, plane tree
 Less winning soft, less amiably mild,
 480 Than that smooth wat'ry image; back I turned,
 Thou following cried'st aloud, 'Return fair Eve,
 Whom fli'st thou? Whom thou fli'st, of him thou art,
 His flesh, his bone; to give thee being I lent
 Out of my side to thee, nearest my heart
 485 Substantial life, to have thee by my side
 Henceforth an individual<sup>0</sup> solace dear; inseparable, distinct
 Part of my soul I seek thee, and thee claim

7. Eve's experience reprises (but with significant differences) the story of Narcissus, who fell in love with his own reflection and was transformed into a flower.

My other half: with that thy gentle hand
 Seized mine, I yielded, and from that time see 490 How beauty is excelled by manly grace
 And wisdom, which alone is truly fair."
 So spake our general mother, and with eyes
 Of conjugal attraction unreproved,
 And meek surrender, half embracing leaned
 495 On our first father, half her swelling breast
 Naked met his under the flowing gold
 Of her loose tresses hid: he in delight
 Both of her beauty and submissive charms
 Smiled with superior love, as Jupiter
 500 On Juno smiles, when he impregns<sup>o</sup> the clouds impregrates
 That shed May flowers; and pressed her matron lip
 With lasses pure: aside the Devil turned
 For envy, yet with jealous leer malign
 Eyed them askance, and to himself thus plained.<sup>o</sup> complained 505 "Sight hateful, sight tormenting! thus these two Imparadised in one another's arms
 The happier Eden, shall enjoy their fill
 Of bliss on bliss, while I to Hell am thrust,
 Where neither joy nor love, but fierce desire,
 510 Among our other torments not the least,
 Still<sup>o</sup> unfulfilled with pain of longing pines; always
 Yet let me not forget what I have gained
 From their own mouths; all is not theirs it seems:
 One fatal tree there stands of Knowledge called,
 515 Forbidden them to taste: knowledge forbidden?
 Suspicious, reasonless. Why should their Lord
 Envy<sup>o</sup> them that? Can it be sin to know, begrudge
 Can it be death? And do they only stand
 By ignorance, is that their happy state,
 520 The proof of their obedience and their faith?
 O fair foundation laid whereon to build
 Their ruin! Hence I will excite their minds
 With more desire to know, and to reject
 Envious commands, invented with design
 525 To keep them low whom knowledge might exalt
 Equal with gods; aspiring to be such.
 They taste and die: what likelier can ensue?
 But first with narrow search I must walk round
 This garden, and no corner leave unspied;
 530 A chance, but chance<sup>8</sup> may lead where I may meet
 Some wand'ring Spirit of Heav'n, by fountain side,
 Or in thick shade retired, from him to draw
 What further would be learnt. Live while ye may,
 Yet happy pair; enjoy, till I return,
 535 Short pleasures, for long woes are to succeed."
 So saying, his proud step he scornful turned,
 But with sly circumspection, and began
 Through wood, through waste, o'er hill, o'er dale his roam." act of wandering

8. Ail opportunity, even if only by luck.

Meanwhile in utmost longitude, where heav'n<sup>0</sup> the sty
 540 With earth and ocean meets, the setting sun
 Slowly descended, and with right aspect
 Against the eastern gate of Paradise
 Leveled his evening rays.<sup>9</sup> It was a rock
 Of alabaster,<sup>1</sup> piled up to the clouds,
 545 Conspicuous far, winding with one ascent
 Accessible from earth, one entrance high;
 The rest was craggy cliff, that overhung
 Still as it rose, impossible to climb.
 Betwixt these rocky pillars Gabriel<sup>2</sup> sat
 550 Chief of th' angelic guards, awaiting night;
 About him exercised heroic games
 Th' unarmed youth of Heav'n, but nigh at hand
 Celestial armory, shields, helms, and spears
 Hung high with diamond flaming, and with gold.
 555 Thither came Uriel, gliding through the even
 On a sunbeam, swift as a shooting star
 In autumn thwarts<sup>0</sup> the night, when vapors fired passes across Impress the air, and shows the mariner
 From what point of his compass to beware
 560 Impetuous winds:<sup>3</sup> he thus began in haste.
 "Gabriel, to thee thy course by lot hath giv'n
 Charge and strict watch that to this happy place
 No evil thing approach or enter in;
 This day at height of noon came to my sphere
 565 A Spirit, zealous, as he seemed, to know
 More of th' Almighty's works, and chiefly man
 God's latest image: I describ'd<sup>0</sup> his way descried, observed
 Bent all on speed, and marked his airy gait;<sup>0</sup> path
 But in the mount that lies from Eden north,
 570 Where he first lighted, soon discerned his looks
 Alien from Heav'n, with passions foul obscured:
 Mine eye pursued him still, but under shade<sup>0</sup> trees
 Lost sight of him; one of the banished crew
 I fear, hath ventured from the deep, to raise 575 New troubles; him thy care must be to find."
 To whom the winged warrior thus returned:
 "Uriel, no wonder if thy perfect sight,
 Amid the sun's bright circle where thou sitt'st,
 See far and wide. In at this gate none pass
 580 The vigilance here placed, but such as come
 Well known from Heav'n; and since meridian hour<sup>0</sup> noon
 No creature thence: if Spirit of other sort,
 So minded, have o'erleaped these earthy bounds
 On purpose, hard thou know'st it to exclude 585 Spiritual substance with corporeal bar.
 But if within the circuit of these walks,
 In whatsoever shape he lurk, of whom

9. Setting in the west, the sun struck the eastern gate from the inside, at a ninety-degree angle.

1. White, translucent marble veined with colors.

2. In Hebrew, "strength of God." A tradition (cf.

1 Enoch 20.7) gave Gabriel charge of Paradise.

3. Shooting stars were thought to indicate by the direction of their fall the source of oncoming storms. "Vapors fired": heat lightning.

Thou tell'st, by morrow dawning I shall know."
 So promised he, and Uriel to his charge
 580 Returned on that bright beam, whose point now raised
 Bore him slope downward to the sun now fall'n
 Beneath th' Azores; whether the prime orb,
 Incredible how swift, had thither rolled Diurnal,<sup>0</sup> or this less voluble<sup>0</sup> earth daily / swift-turning 595 By shorter flight to th' east,<sup>4</sup> had left him there
 Arraying with reflected purple and gold
 The clouds that on his western throne attend.
 Now came still evening on, and twilight gray
 Had in her sober livery all things clad;
 600 Silence accompanied, for beast and bird,
 They to their grassy couch, these to their nests
 Were slunk, all but the wakeful nightingale;
 She all night long her amorous descant<sup>0</sup> sung; melody
 Silence was pleased: now glowed the firmament
 605 With living sapphires: Hesperus<sup>5</sup> that led
 The starry host, rode brightest, till the moon
 Rising in clouded majesty, at length
 Apparent<sup>0</sup> queen unveiled her peerless light,
 And o'er the dark her silver mantle threw. clearly seen
 610 When Adam thus to Eve: "Fair consort, th' hour
 Of night, and all things now retired to rest
 Mind us of like repose, since God hath set
 Labor and rest, as day and night to men
 Successive, and the timely dew of sleep
 615 Now falling with soft slumbrous weight inclines
 Our eyelids; other creatures all day long
 Rove idle unemployed, and less need rest;
 Man hath his daily work of body or mind
 Appointed, which declares his dignity,
 620 And the regard of Heav'n on all his ways;
 While other animals unactive range,
 And of their doings God takes no account.
 Tomorrow ere fresh morning streak the east
 With first approach of light, we must be ris'n,
 625 And at our pleasant labor, to reform
 Yon flow'ry arbors, yonder alleys green,
 Our walk at noon, with branches overgrown,
 That mock our scant manuring,<sup>0</sup> and require cultivating
 More hands than ours to lop their wanton<sup>0</sup> growth: luxuriant
 630 Those blossoms also, and those dropping gums,
 That lie bestrown unsightly and unsmooth,
 Ask riddance,<sup>0</sup> if we mean to tread with ease;
 Meanwhile, as nature wills, night bids us rest."
 To whom thus Eve with perfect beauty adorned.
 635 "My author and disposer, what thou bidd'st
 Unargued I obey; so God ordains,

4. Here and elsewhere Milton leaves open the question of whether the sun moves around the earth, or vice versa.

5. Called Venus when it appears in the evening sky.

God is thy law, thou mine: to know no more
 Is woman's happiest knowledge and her praise.
 With thee conversing I forget all time.
 640 All seasons<sup>0</sup> and their change, all please alike. times of day
 Sweet<sup>6</sup> is the breath of morn, her rising sweet,
 With charm<sup>7</sup> of earliest birds; pleasant the sun
 When first on this delightful land he spreads
 His orient<sup>0</sup> beams, on herb, tree, fruit, and flow'r, lustrious, eastern 645 Glist'ring with dew; fragrant the fertile earth
 After soft showers; and sweet the coming on
 Of grateful evening mild, then silent night
 With this her solemn bird<sup>0</sup> and this fair moon, the nightingale
 And these the gems of heav'n, her starry train:
 650 But neither breath of morn when she ascends
 With charm of earliest birds, nor rising sun
 On this delightful land, nor herb, fruit, flow'r,
 Glist'ring with dew, nor fragrance after showers,
 Nor grateful evening mild, nor silent night
 655 With this her solemn bird, nor walk by moon,
 Or glittering starlight without thee is sweet.
 But wherefore all night long shine these, for whom
 This glorious sight, when sleep hath shut all eyes?"
 To whom our general ancestor replied.
 660 "Daughter of God and man, accomplished<sup>8</sup> Eve,
 Those have their course to finish, round the earth,
 By morrow evening, and from land to land
 In order, though to nations yet unborn,

 Her old possession, and extinguish life

 Millions of spiritual creatures walk the earth

 All these with ceaseless praise his works behold

 Of echoing hill or thicket have we heard
 Celestial voices to the midnight air,
 Sole, or responsive each to other's note
 Singing their great Creator: oft in bands

6. With this embedded lyric, beginning here, Eve displays her literary talents in an elegant love song, sonnetlike and replete with striking rhetorical figures of circularity and repetition.

7. Blended singing of many birds.

8. Having many talents and achievements; perfect, complete.

9. The stars were thought to have their own occult influence, and also to moderate that of the sun.

 With heav'nly touch of instrumental sounds

 Thus talking hand in hand alone they passed

 Of thickest covert was inwoven shade

 Nor Faunus<sup>2</sup> haunted. Here in close recess

 Partakers, and uncropped falls to the ground.
 But thou hast promised from us two a race

1. Mark the watches of the night; also, perform musical "divisions," elaborate melodic passages.

2. Forest and field divinities of classical mythology-

3. Presiding over marriage and generation.

4. Pandora (the name means "all gifts") was an artificial woman, molded of clay, bestowed by the gods on Epimetheus, brother of Prometheus (who angered Jove by stealing fire from heaven). She brought a box that foolish Epimetheus opened, releasing all the ills of the human race, leaving only hope inside. The brothers were sons of Iapetus, whom Milton identifies with Japhet, Noah's third son. The Eve-Pandora parallel was often noted.

To fill the earth, who shall with us extol
 Thy goodness infinite, both when we wake,

 Adam from his fair spouse, nor Eve the rites surmise

 Whatever hypocrites austerely talk

 Defaming as impure what God declares
 Pure, and commands to some, leaves free to all.
 Our Maker bids increase,<sup>7</sup> who bids abstain
 But our destroyer, foe to God and man?

 Of human offspring, sole propriety<sup>0</sup> private property

 By thee adulterous lust was driv'n from men
 Among the bestial herds to range, by thee

 Relations dear, and all the charities<sup>0</sup> loves

 Far be it, that I should write thee sin or blame,
 Or think thee unbecoming holiest place,

 Whose bed is undefiled and chaste pronounced,
 Present, or past, as saints and patriarchs used.<sup>8</sup>
 Here Love his golden shafts employs,<sup>9</sup> here lights
 His constant lamp, and waves his purple wings,
 765 Reigns here and revels; not in the bought smile
 Of harlots, loveless, joyless, unendeared,
 Casual fruition, nor in court amours,
 Mixed dance, or wanton masque, or midnight ball,
 Or serenade, which the starved<sup>0</sup> lover sings deprived

 These lulled by nightingales embracing slept,
 And on their naked limbs the flow'ry roof

5. Like many Puritans, Milton objected to set forms of prayer, so Adam and Eve pray spontaneously (therefore sincerely), but also, paradoxically, together. Their prayer develops variations on Psalm 104.20-24.

6. Ephesians 5.32 calls the union of man and woman a "mystery" paralleling that of Christ and the church.

7. Genesis 1.28: "Be fruitful and multiply, and replenish the earth."

8. Throughout history ("present or past"), Old and New Testament worthies have "used" matrimony as a noble estate.

9. The "golden shafts" (arrows) of Cupid produce true love, his lead-tipped arrows, hate.

1. Know enough to be content with what you know.

2. The conical shadow cast by the earth has moved halfway up to its zenith, so it is 9 p.m., the end of the first three-hour watch.

And from their ivory port the Cherubim
 Forth issuing at th' accustomed hour stood armed
 To their night watches in warlike parade,
 When Gabriel to his next in power thus spake:
 "Uzziel,<sup>3</sup> half these draw off, and coast° the south skirt
 With strictest watch; these other wheel<sup>4</sup> the north,
 Our circuit meets full west." As flame they part
 Half wheeling to the shield, half to the spear.
 From these, two strong and subtle Spirits he called
 That near him stood, and gave them thus in charge:
 "Ithuriel and Zephon,<sup>5</sup> with winged speed
 Search through this garden, leave unsearched no nook,
 But chiefly where those two fair creatures lodge, from
 Now laid perhaps asleep secure of° harm.
 This evening from the sun's decline arrived one who
 Who° tells of some infernal Spirit seen
 Hitherward bent who could have thought? escaped
 The bars of Hell, on errand bad no doubt:
 Such where ye find, seize fast, and hither bring."
 So saying, on he led his radiant files,
 Dazzling the moon; these to the bower direct
 In search of whom they sought: him there they found
 Squat like a toad, close at the ear of Eve;
 Assaying<sup>6</sup> by his devilish art to reach attempting
 The organs of her fancy,<sup>6</sup> and with them forge
 Illusions as he list,<sup>6</sup> phantasms and dreams; pleased
 Or if, inspiring<sup>6</sup> venom, he might taint breathing
 Th' animal spirits that from pure blood arise
 Like gentle breaths from rivers pure, thence arise
 At least distempered,<sup>6</sup> discontented thoughts, disordered
 Vain hopes, vain aims, inordinate desires
 Blown up with high conceits<sup>6</sup> engend'ring pride. notions
 Him thus intent Ithuriel with his spear
 Touched lightly; for no falsehood can endure
 Touch of celestial temper,<sup>7</sup> but returns
 Of force to its own likeness: up he starts
 Discovered and surprised. As when a spark
 Lights on a heap of nitrous powder,<sup>8</sup> laid
 Fit for the tun some magazine to store
 Against a rumored war, the smutty<sup>6</sup> grain black
 With sudden blaze diffused, inflames the air:
 So started up in his own shape the Fiend.
 Back stepped those two fair angels half amazed
 So sudden to behold the grisly king;
 Yet thus, unmoved with fear, accost him soon:
 "Which of those rebel Spirits adjudged to Hell
 Com'st thou, escaped thy prison; and transformed,

3. Hebrew, "my strength is God."

4. "Wheel": turn to (military term); "shield" (line 785) is left, "spear" is right.

5. Hebrew, "a looking out." "Ithuriel": Hebrew, "discovery of God."

6. The faculty of forming mental images.

7. Anything, like the spear, made ("tempered") in Heaven.

8. Alights or kindles ("lights") gunpowder ("nitrous powder"), ready (next lines) to be stored in some barrel ("tun") laid up in some storehouse ("magazine"), in preparation for ("against") rumors of war.

Why sat'st thou like an enemy in wait
Here watching at the head of these that sleep?"

"Know ye not then," said Satan, filled with scorn,
"Know ye not me? Ye knew me once no mate
For you, there sitting where ye durst not soar;
Not to know me argues<sup>0</sup> yourselves unknown,
The lowest of your throng; or if ye know,
Why ask ye, and superfluous begin
Your message, like to end as much in vain?"

proves

To whom thus Zephon, answering scorn with scorn:
"Think not, revolted Spirit, thy shape the same,
Or undiminished brightness, to be known
As when thou stood'st in Heav'n upright and pure;
That glory then, when thou no more wast good,
Departed from thee, and thou resembl'st now
Thy sin and place of doom obscure<sup>0</sup> and foul.
But come, for thou, be sure, shalt give account
To him who sent us, whose charge is to keep
This place inviolable, and these from harm."

dark

So spake the Cherub, and his grave rebuke
Severe in youthful beauty, added grace
Invincible: abashed the Devil stood,
And felt how awful<sup>0</sup> goodness is, and saw
Virtue in her shape how lovely, saw, and pined<sup>0</sup>
His loss; but chiefly to find here observed
His luster visibly impaired; yet seemed Undaunted. "If I must contend," said he,
"Best with the best, the sender not the sent,
Or all at once; more glory will be won,
Or less be lost." "Thy fear," said Zephon bold,
"Will save us trial what the least can do Single<sup>0</sup> against thee wicked, and thence weak."

*awe-inspiring
mourned*

The Fiend replied not, overcome with rage;
But like a proud steed reined, went haughty on,
Champing his iron curb: to strive or fly
He held it vain; awe from above had quelled
His heart, not else dismayed. Now drew they nigh
The western point, where those half-rounding guards
Just met, and closing stood in squadron joined Awaiting next command. To whom their chief Gabriel from the front thus called aloud:

in single combat

"O friends, I hear the tread of nimble feet
Hasting this way, and now by glimpse discern
Ithuriel and Zephon through the shade,<sup>0</sup>
And with them comes a third of regal port,<sup>0</sup>
But faded splendor wan;<sup>0</sup> who by his gait
And fierce demeanor seems the Prince of Hell,
Not likely to part hence without contest;
Stand firm, for in his look defiance lours."<sup>0</sup> trees bearing faint, dark

He scarce had ended, when those two approached
And brief related whom they brought, where found,
How busied, in what form and posture couched.

frowns

To whom with stern regard thus Gabriel spake:

"Why hast thou, Satan, broke the bounds prescribed
 To thy transgressions, and disturbed the charge" responsibility

880 Of others, who approve not to transgress
 By thy example, but have power and right
 To question thy bold entrance on this place;
 Employed it seems to violate sleep, and those Whose dwelling God hath planted here in bliss?"

885 To whom thus Satan, with contemptuous brow:
 "Gabriel, thou hadst in Heav'n th' esteem" of wise, reputation of being
 And such I held thee; but this question asked
 Puts me in doubt. Lives there who loves his pain?
 Who would not, finding way, break loose from Hell,

890 Though thither doomed? Thou wouldst thyself, no doubt,
 And boldly venture to whatever place
 Farthest from pain, where thou mightst hope to change" exchange
 Torment with ease, and soonest recompense
 Dole" with delight, which in this place I sought; pain, grief

895 To thee no reason, who know'st only good,
 But evil hast not tried: and wilt object<sup>9</sup>
 His will who bound us? Let him surer bar
 His iron gates, if he intends our stay
 In that dark durance:" thus much what was asked.<sup>1</sup> confinement

900 The rest is true, they found me where they say;
 But that implies not violence or harm."
 Thus he in scorn. The warlike angel moved,
 Disdainfully half smiling thus replied:
 "O loss of one in Heav'n to judge of wise,

905 Since Satan fell, whom folly overthrew,<sup>2</sup>
 And now returns him from his prison scaped,
 Gravely in doubt whether to hold them wise
 Or not, who ask what boldness brought him hither
 Unlicensed from his bounds in Hell prescribed;

910 So wise he judges it to fly from pain
 However," and to scape his punishment. howsoever
 So judge thou still, presumptuous, till the wrath,
 Which thou incurr'st by flying, meet thy flight
 Sevenfold, and scourge that wisdom back to Hell,

915 Which taught thee yet no better, that no pain
 Can equal anger infinite provoked.
 But wherefore thou alone? Wherefore with thee
 Came not all Hell broke loose? Is pain to them
 Less pain, less to be fled, or thou than they 920 Less hardy to endure? Courageous chief,

 The first in flight from pain, hadst thou alleged
 To thy deserted host this cause of flight,
 Thou surely hadst not come sole fugitive."
 To which the Fiend thus answered frowning stern:

925 "Not that I less endure, or shrink from pain, Insulting angel, well thou know'st I stood" withstood
 Thy fiercest, when in battle to thy aid

9. Put forward as an objection.

1. I.e., thus much (answers) what was asked.

2. Irony: "O what a loss to Heaven to lose such a judge of wisdom as Satan, whose folly led to his fall."

The blasting volleyed thunder made all speed
 And seconded thy else not dreaded spear.
 But still thy words at random, as before,
 Argue thy inexperience what behoves
 From<sup>0</sup> hard assays<sup>0</sup> and ill successes past after / attempts
 A faithful leader, not to hazard all
 Through ways of danger by himself untried.
 I therefore, I alone first undertook
 To wing the desolate abyss, and spy
 This new-created world, whereof in Hell
 Fame<sup>0</sup> is not silent, here in hope to find rumor
 Better abode, and my afflicted powers<sup>0</sup> downcast armies
 To settle here on earth, or in midair;<sup>3</sup>
 Though for possession put<sup>o</sup> to try once more forced
 What thou and thy gay<sup>o</sup> legions dare against; showy
 Whose easier business were to serve their Lord
 High up in Heav'n, with songs to hymn his throne,
 And practiced distances to cringe, not fight."<sup>4</sup>

To whom the warrior angel soon replied:
 "To say and straight unsay, pretending first
 Wise to fly pain, professing next the spy,
 Argues no leader, but a liar traced,<sup>0</sup> found out
 Satan, and couldst thou faithful add? O name,
 O sacred name of faithfulness profaned!
 Faithful to whom? To thy rebellious crew?
 Army of fiends, fit body to fit head;
 Was this your discipline and faith engaged,
 Your military obedience, to dissolve
 Allegiance to th' acknowledged Power Supreme?
 And thou sly hypocrite, who now wouldst seem
 Patron of liberty, who more than thou
 Once fawned, and cringed, and servilely adored
 Heav'n's awful Monarch?<sup>5</sup> Wherefore but in hope
 To dispossess him, and thyself to reign?
 But mark what I areed<sup>o</sup> thee now, avaunt;<sup>0</sup> advise / be gone
 Fly thither whence thou fledd'st: if from this hour
 Within these hallowed limits thou appear,
 Back to th' infernal pit I drag thee chained,
 And seal thee so, as henceforth not to scorn
 The facile<sup>0</sup> gates of Hell too slightly barred."
easily moved

So threatened he, but Satan to no threats
 Gave heed, but waxing<sup>0</sup> more in rage replied: growing
 "Then when I am thy captive talk of chains,
 Proud limitary<sup>6</sup> Cherub, but ere then Far heavier load thyself expect to feel
 From my prevailing arm, though Heaven's King
 Ride on thy wings, and thou with thy compeers,
 Used to the yoke, draw'st his triumphant wheels
 In progress through the road of heav'n star-paved."

3. Satan will become "prince of the power of the air" (Ephesians 2.2).

4. Satan contemptuously parallels the angels' courtly deference ("distances") before God's throne and keeping a safe distance from battle.

"Cringe": bow or kneel in fear or servility.

5. See 5.617 for Satan's "servile" adoration on the day of the Son's exaltation, when he "seemed well pleased" but was not.

6. Frontier guard, also, one of limited authority.

While thus he spake, th' angelic squadron bright
 Turned fiery red, sharp'ning in mooned horns<sup>7</sup>
 Their phalanx, and began to hem him round
 980 With ported<sup>8</sup> spears, as thick as when a field
 Of Ceres<sup>9</sup> ripe for harvest waving bends
 Her bearded grove of ears, which way the wind
 Sways them; the careful plowman doubting stands
 Lest on the threshing floor his hopeful sheaves
 985 Prove chaff. On th' other side Satan alarmed<sup>0</sup> called to arms
 Collecting all his might dilated stood,
 Like Tenerife or Atlas<sup>1</sup> unremoved:<sup>0</sup> unremovable
 His stature reached the sky, and on his crest
 Sat Horror plumed; nor wanted in his grasp 990 What seemed both spear and shield: now dreadful deeds
 Might have ensued, nor only Paradise
 In this commotion, but the starry cope<sup>o</sup> vault
 Of Heav'n perhaps, or all the elements
 At least had gone to wrack, disturbed and torn 995 With violence of this conflict, had not soon
 Th' Eternal to prevent such horrid fray
 Hung forth in Heav'n his golden scales, yet seen
 Betwixt Astraea and the Scorpion sign,<sup>2</sup>
 Wherein all things created first he weighed,
 1000 The pendulous round earth with balanced air
 In counterpoise, now ponders all events,
 Battles and realms: in these he put two weights
 The sequel each of parting and of fight;<sup>3</sup>
 The latter quick up flew, and kicked the beam;
 1005 Which Gabriel spying, thus bespake the Fiend:
 "Satan, I know thy strength, and thou know'st mine,
 Neither our own but giv'n; what folly then
 To boast what arms can do, since thine no more
 Than Heav'n permits, nor mine, though doubled now
 1010 To trample thee as mire: for proof look up,
 And read thy lot in yon celestial sign
 Where thou art weighed, and shown how light, how weak,<sup>4</sup>
 If thou resist." The Fiend looked up and knew
 His mounted scale aloft: nor more; but fled
 1015 Murmuring, and with him fled the shades of night.

Book 5

Now Morn her rosy steps in th' eastern clime
 Advancing, sowed the earth with orient pearl,<sup>0</sup> sparkling dew

7. A crescent-shaped military formation.

8. Held slantwise in front.

9. Roman goddess of grain; here, the grain itself. A Homeric simile compares an excited army to windswept corn (Iliad 2.147—50).

1. A mountain in Morocco. "Tenerife": a mountain in the Canary Islands.

2. The zodiac sign Libra, represented by a pair of scales, is between Virgo (identified with Astraea, goddess of Justice, who fled the earth at the end of the Golden Age) and Scorpio.

3. In several classical epic similes the fates of opposing heroes are weighed in scales by the gods, but here God "ponders" (weighs the consequences of) all events, including parting or fighting. Battle, desired by Satan, proves lighter ("kicked the beam," line 1004).

4. Cf. Daniel 5.27: "Thou art weighed in the balances, and art found wanting."

When Adam waked, so custom'd, for his sleep
 Was aery light, from pure digestion bred,
 And temperate vapors bland,<sup>0</sup> which th' only sound gentle, balmy
 Of leaves and fuming rills, Aurora's fan,<sup>1</sup>
 Lightly dispersed, and the shrill matin<sup>0</sup> song morning
 Of birds on every bough; so much the more
 His wonder was to find unawaken'd Eve
 With tresses discomposed, and glowing cheek,
 As through unquiet rest: he on his side
 Leaning half-raised, with looks of cordial<sup>0</sup> love heartfelt
 Hung over her enamored, and beheld
 Beauty, which whether waking or asleep,
 Shot forth peculiar<sup>0</sup> graces; then with voice its own
 Mild, as when Zephyrus on Flora<sup>2</sup> breathes,
 Her hand soft touching, whispered thus: "Awake
 My fairest, my espous'd, my latest found,
 Heav'n's last best gift, my ever new delight,
 Awake, the morning shines, and the fresh field
 Calls us, we lose the prime, to mark how spring
 Our tended plants, how blows<sup>0</sup> the citron grove, blooms
 What drops the myrrh, and what the balmy reed,<sup>0</sup> balsam
 How nature paints her colors, how the bee
 Sits on the bloom extracting liquid sweet."<sup>3</sup>

Such whispering waked her, but with startled eye
 On Adam, whom embracing, thus she spake:

"O sole in whom my thoughts find all repose,
 My glory, my perfection, glad I see
 Thy face, and morn returned, for I this night,
 Such night till this I never pass'd, have dream'd,
 If dream'd, not as I oft am wont,<sup>0</sup> of thee, accustomed
 Works of day past, or morrow's next design,
 But of offense and trouble, which my mind
 Knew never till this irksome night. Methought
 Close at mine ear one call'd me forth to walk
 With gentle voice, I thought it thine; it said,
 'Why sleep'st thou Eve? Now is the pleasant time,
 The cool, the silent, save where silence yields
 To the night-warbling bird, that now awake
 Tunes sweetest his love-labored song; now reigns
 Full-orbed the moon, and with more pleasing light
 Shadowy sets off the face of things, in vain,
 If none regard; heav'n wakes with all his eyes,<sup>0</sup> stars
 Whom to behold but thee, nature's desire,
 In whose sight all things joy, with ravishment
 Attracted by thy beauty still<sup>0</sup> to gaze.' continually
 I rose as at thy call, but found thee not;
 To find thee I directed then my walk;
 And on, me thought, alone I pass'd through ways

1. Rustling leaves and streams ("rills") stirred by Aurora, goddess of the dawn.

2. Zephyrus is god of the gentle west wind, Flora goddess of flowers.

3. Adam sings a morning love song (aubade) to Eve, which works variations on Song of Solomon

2.10—12: "Rise up, my love, my fair one, and come away. . . . The flowers appear on the earth; the time of the singing of birds is come." Compare Satan's serenade (5.38^17), a parody of Adam's aubade and the Song of Solomon. "Prime" (line 21): first hour of the day.

- That brought me on a sudden to the tree
 Of interdicted knowledge: fair it seemed,
 Much fairer to my fancy than by day;
 And as I wond'ring looked, beside it stood

 This said he paused not, but with vent'rous arm

 Taste this, and be henceforth among the gods
 Thyself a goddess, not to earth confined,
 But sometimes in the air, as we, sometimes
- so Ascend to Heav'n, by merit thine, and see
 What life the gods live there, and such live thou.'
 So saying, he drew nigh, and to me held,
 Even to my mouth of that same fruit held part
 Which he had plucked; the pleasant savory smell
- 85 So quickened appetite, that I, methought,
 Could not but taste. Forthwith up to the clouds
 With him I flew, and underneath beheld
 The earth outstretched immense, a prospect wide
 And various: wond'ring at my flight and change
- 90 To this high exaltation: suddenly
 My guide was gone, and I, methought, sunk down,
 And fell asleep; but O how glad I waked
 To find this but a dream!" Thus Eve her night
 Related, and thus Adam answered sad.<sup>o</sup> gravely, soberly
- 95 "Best image of myself and dearer half,
 The trouble of thy thoughts this night in sleep
 Affects me equally; nor can I like
 This uncouth<sup>o</sup> dream, of evil sprung I fear; strange, unpleasant
 Yet evil whence? In thee can harbor none,

 Are many lesser faculties<sup>5</sup> that serve

4. I.e., does envy or some other barrier ("reserve") forbid your being tasted?

5. Adam's explanation of the dream (lines 100—116) summarizes the orthodox faculty psychology

Reason as chief; among these fancy next
 Her office holds; of all external things,
 Which the five watchful senses represent,
 105 She forms imaginations," aery shapes, images
 Which reason joining or disjoining, frames
 All what we affirm or what deny, and call
 Our knowledge or opinion; then retires
 Into her private cell when nature rests.
 110 Oft in her absence mimic fancy wakes
 To imitate her; but misjoining shapes,
 Wild work produces oft, and most in dreams,
 111 matching words and deeds long past or late.
 Some such resemblances methinks I find us Of our last evening's talk in this thy dream,<sup>6</sup>
 But with addition strange; yet be not sad.
 Evil into the mind of god<sup>7</sup> or man
 May come and go, so unapproved,<sup>8</sup> and leave
 No spot or blame behind: which gives me hope
 120 That what in sleep thou didst abhor to dream,
 Waking thou never wilt consent to do.
 Be not disheartened then, nor cloud those looks
 That wont to be<sup>9</sup> more cheerful and serene usually are
 Than when fair morning first smiles on the world,
 125 And let us to our fresh employments rise
 Among the groves, the fountains, and the flow'rs
 That open now their choicest bosomed smells
 Reserved from night, and kept for thee in store."
 So cheered he his fair spouse, and she was cheered,
 130 But silently a gentle tear let fall
 From either eye, and wiped them with her hair;
 Two other precious drops that ready stood,
 Each in their crystal sluice, he ere they fell
 Kissed as the gracious signs of sweet remorse
 135 And pious awe, that feared to have offended.
 So all was cleared, and to the field they haste.
 But first from under shady arborous<sup>0</sup> roof, consisting of trees
 Soon as they forth were come to open sight
 Of day-spring,<sup>9</sup> and the sun, who scarce up risen daybreak
 140 With wheels yet hov'ring o'er the ocean brim,
 Shot parallel to the earth his dewy ray,
 Discovering in wide landscape all the east
 Of Paradise and Eden's happy plains,
 Lowly they bowed adoring, and began
 145 Their orisons,<sup>9</sup> each morning duly paid prayers
 In various style, for neither various style
 Nor holy rapture<sup>0</sup> wanted they to praise ecstasy
 Their Maker, in fit strains pronounced or sung and dream theory of Milton's time—one among many kinds of knowledge with which unfallen man was endowed.

6. Adam recalls his own words in 4.411–39.

7. Probably "angel" as elsewhere, but perhaps God, whose omniscience must encompass knowledge of evil as well as good.

8. If not willed (approved of) or not acted on (put to the proof).

9. In a variety of styles or forms of speech and song, which harmonize together but are at the same time impromptu, spontaneous, and ecstatic.

Flowed from their lips, in prose or numerous<sup>0</sup> verse,
 More tuneable<sup>0</sup> than needed lute or harp
 To add more sweetness, and they thus began:
 "These are thy glorious works, Parent of good,<sup>1</sup>
 Almighty, thine this universal frame,
 Thus wondrous fair; thyself how wondrous then!
 Unspeakable, who sitt'st above these heavens,
 To us invisible or dimly seen
 In these thy lowest works, yet these declare
 Thy goodness beyond thought, and power divine:
 Speak ye who best can tell, ye sons of light,
 Angels, for ye behold him, and with songs
 And choral symphonies,<sup>0</sup> day without night,
 Circle his throne rejoicing, ye in Heav'n,
 On earth join all ye creatures to extol
 Him first, him last, him midst, and without end.
 Fairest of stars, - last in the train<sup>0</sup> of night,
 If better thou belong not to the dawn,
 Sure pledge of day, that crown'st the smiling morn
 With thy bright cirlet, praise him in thy sphere
 While day arises, that sweet hour of prime.
 Thou sun, of this great world both eye and soul,
 Acknowledge him thy greater, sound his praise
 In thy eternal course, both when thou climb'st,
 And when high noon hast gained, and when thou fall'st.
 Moon, that now meet'st the orient sun, now fli'st
 With the fixed stars, fixed in their orb that flies,
 And ye five other wand'ring fires that move
 In mystic dance not without song,<sup>3</sup> resound
 His praise, who out of darkness called up light.
 Air, and ye elements the eldest birth
 Of nature's womb, that in quaternion<sup>4</sup> run
 Perpetual circle, multiform, and mix
 And nourish all things, let your ceaseless change
 Vary to our great Maker still<sup>0</sup> new praise.
 Ye mists and exhalations that now rise
 From hill or steaming lake, dusky or gray,
 Till the sun paint your fleecy skirts with gold,
 In honor to the world's great Author rise,
 Whether to deck with clouds the uncolored sky,
 Or wet the thirsty earth with falling showers,
 Rising or falling still advance his praise.
 His praise ye winds, that from four quarters blow,
 Breathe soft or loud; and wave your tops, ye pines,
 With every plant, in sign of worship wave.
 Fountains and ye, that warble, as ye flow,
 Melodious murmurs, warbling tune his praise.
 Join voices all ye living souls: ye birds,

1. Their morning hymn works variations on Psalms 148, 104, and 19, as well as the canticle "Benedicite."

2. Venus, the morning star and (as Hesperus) the evening star.

3. The planets, unlike the fixed stars, change their relative positions; their motion produces the music of the spheres, audible to unfallen humans.

4. The fourfold changing relationship of the four elements.

- That singing up to heaven gate ascend,
 Bear on your wings and in your notes his praise.
- 200 Ye that in waters glide, and ye that walk
 The earth, and stately tread, or lowly creep;
 Witness if I be silent, morn or even,
 To hill, or valley, fountain, or fresh shade
 Made vocal by my song, and taught his praise.
- 205 Hail universal Lord, be bounteous still<sup>0</sup> always
 To give us only good; and if the night
 Have gathered aught of evil or concealed,
 Disperse it, as now light dispels the dark."
 So prayed they innocent, and to their thoughts
- 210 Firm peace recovered soon and wonted calm.
 On to their morning's rural work they haste
 Among sweet dews and flow'rs; where any row
 Of fruit trees over-woody<sup>0</sup> reached too far too bushy
 Their pampered boughs, and needed hands to check

 To wed her elm;<sup>5</sup> she spoused about him twines
 Her marriageable arms, and with her brings
 Her dow'r th' adopted clusters, to adorn
 His barren leaves. Them thus employed beheld

 Raphael, the sociable Spirit, that deigned
 To travel with Tobias, and secured
 His marriage with the seven-times-wedded maid.<sup>6</sup>
 "Raphael," said he, "thou hear'st what stir on earth

 Hath raised in Paradise, and how disturbed
 This night the human pair, how he designs
 In them at once to ruin all mankind.
 Go therefore, half this day as friend with friend

 To respite his day labor with repast,
 Or with repose; and such discourse bring on,
 As may advise him of his happy state,

 Left to his own free will, his will though free,
 Yet mutable; whence warn him to beware
 He swerve not too secure:<sup>0</sup> tell him withal overconfident
 His danger, and from whom, what enemy

 But by deceit and lies; this let him know,

 So spake th' Eternal Father, and fulfilled

5. A familiar emblem of matrimony, the elm symbolizing masculine strength, and the vine, feminine fruitfulness, softness, and sweetness; note, however, the matriarchal implications of "adopted clusters" (line 218).

6. Raphael (in Hebrew, "health of God") was the adviser of Tobias in winning his wife (see 4.168—71 and note).

All justice: nor delayed the winged saint angel
 After his charge received; but from among Thousand celestial ardors,<sup>7</sup> where he stood
 Veiled with his gorgeous wings, up springing light
 Flew through the midst of Heav'n; th' angelic choirs
 On each hand parting, to his speed gave way
 Through all th' empyreal road; till at the gate
 Of Heav'n arrived, the gate self-opened wide
 On golden hinges turning, as by work<sup>o</sup> mechanism
 Divine the sov'reign Architect had framed.
 From hence, no cloud, or, to obstruct his sight,
 Star interposed, however small he sees,
 Not unconform to other shining globes,
 Earth and the gard'n of God, with cedars crowned
 Above all hills. As when by night the glass<sup>o</sup> telescope
 Of Galileo, less assured, observes
 Imagined lands and regions in the moon:
 Or pilot from amidst the Cyclades
 Delos or Samos first appearing kens<sup>o</sup> discerns
 A cloudy spot.<sup>8</sup> Down thither prone<sup>o</sup> in flight bent forward
 He speeds, and through the vast ethereal sky
 Sails between worlds and worlds, with steady wing
 Now on the polar wings, then with quick fan
 Winnows the buxom air; till within soar
 Of tow'ring eagles,<sup>9</sup> to all the fowls he seems
 A phoenix, gazed by all, as that sole bird
 When to enshrine his relics in the sun's
 Bright temple, to Egyptian Thebes he flies.<sup>1</sup>
 At once on th' eastern cliff of Paradise
 He lights, and to his proper shape returns
 A Seraph winged; six wings he wore, to shade
 His lineaments<sup>o</sup> divine; the pair that clad parts of the body
 Each shoulder broad, came mantling<sup>o</sup> o'er his breast draping
 With regal ornament; the middle pair
 Girt like a starry zone<sup>o</sup> his waist, and round belt
 Skirted his loins and thighs with downy gold
 And colors dipped in Heav'n; the third his feet
 Shadowed from either heel with feathered mail<sup>2</sup>
 Sky-tinctured grain.<sup>o</sup> Like Maia's son<sup>3</sup> he stood, dye
 And shook his plumes, that heav'nly fragrance filled
 The circuit wide. Straight<sup>o</sup> knew him all the bands at once
 Of angels under watch; and to his state,<sup>o</sup> rank
 And to his message<sup>o</sup> high in honor rise; mission
 For on some message high they guessed him bound.
 Their glittering tents he passed, and now is come

7. Bright spirits burning in love; the Hebrew seraph means "to burn."

8. The Cyclades are a circular group of islands in the south Aegean Sea; the two islands seen as "spots" from within the archipelago are Delos (the traditional center but famous for having floated adrift) and Samos (outside the group).

9. Raphael sails with steady wing, turns at the pole, beats ("fans") with his wings the yielding ("buxom") air, and then comes within range of the eagle's soaring flight.

1. The phoenix was a mythical, unique ("sole") bird that lived five hundred years, was consumed by fire, and was reborn from the ashes, which it then carried to the temple of the sun at Heliopolis in Egypt.

2. Plumage suggesting scale armor.

3. Mercury, messenger of the gods.

Into the blissful field; through groves of myrrh,
 And flow'ring odors, cassia, nard, and balm;<sup>4</sup>
 A wilderness of sweets; for nature here
 295 Wantoned<sup>0</sup> as in her prime, and played<sup>0</sup> at will reveled / acted out
 Her virgin fancies, pouring forth more sweet,
 Wild above rule or art; enormous<sup>0</sup> bliss. immense, beyond rule
 Him through the spicy forest onward come
 Adam discerned, as in the door he sat<sup>5</sup>
 300 Of his cool bow'r, while now the mounted sun
 Shot down direct his fervid rays, to warm
 Earth's inmost womb, more warmth than Adam needs;
 And Eve within, due<sup>0</sup> at her hour prepared fittingly
 For dinner savory fruits, of taste to please
 305 True appetite and not disrelish thirst,
 Of nectarous drafts between, from milky stream,
 Berry or grape: to whom thus Adam called:
 "Haste hither Eve, and worth thy sight behold
 Eastward among those trees, what glorious shape
 310 Comes this way moving; seems another morn
 Ris'n on mid-noon; some great behest from Heav'n
 To us perhaps he brings, and will vouchsafe
 This day to be our guest. But go with speed,
 And what thy stores contain, bring forth and pour
 315 Abundance, fit to honor and receive
 Our heav'nly stranger; well we may afford
 Our givers their own gifts, and large bestow
 From large bestowed, where nature multiplies
 Her fertile growth, and by disburd'ning grows
 320 More fruitful, which instructs us not to spare."
 To whom thus Eve. "Adam, earth's hallowed mold,<sup>6</sup>
 Of God inspired, small store will serve, where store,<sup>7</sup>
 All seasons, ripe for use hangs on the stalk;
 Save what by frugal storing firmness gains
 325 To nourish, and superfluous moist consumes:
 But I will haste and from each bough and brake
 Each plant and juiciest gourd will pluck such choice
 To entertain our angel guest, as he
 Beholding shall confess that here on earth
 330 God hath dispensed his bounties as in Heav'n."
 So saying, with dispatchful looks in haste
 She turns, on hospitable thoughts intent
 What choice to choose for delicacy best,
 What order, so contrived as not to mix
 335 Tastes, not well joined, inelegant, but bring Taste after taste upheld<sup>0</sup> with kindest<sup>0</sup> change, maintained / most natural
 Bestirs her then, and from each tender stalk
 Whatever earth all-bearing mother yields
 In India east or west, or middle shore

4. "Odors": aromatic substances; "cassia": cinnamon; "nard": spikenard; "balm": balsam—all were used to make perfumed ointments.

5. Raphael's visit to Adam is modeled on Abraham's entertainment of three angels (Genesis 18.1-16).

6. Revered shape of earth's substance. The name "Adam" signifies red earth.

7. A great quantity. "Small store": few stored foods.

In Pontus or the Punic coast,<sup>8</sup> or where Alcinous reigned, fruit of all kinds, in coat,
 Rough, or smooth-rined, or bearded husk, or shell
 She gathers, tribute large, and on the board
 Heaps with unsparing hand; for drink the grape
 She crushes, inoffensive must, and meaths<sup>9</sup>
 From many a berry, and from sweet kernels pressed
 She tempers<sup>0</sup> dulcet creams, nor these to hold
 Wants<sup>0</sup> her fit vessels pure, then strews the ground
 With rose and odors from the shrub unfumed.<sup>1</sup>
 Meanwhile our primitive<sup>0</sup> great sire, to meet
 His godlike guest, walks forth, without more train<sup>0</sup>
 Accompanied than with his own complete
 Perfections, in himself was all his state,<sup>0</sup>
 More solemn<sup>0</sup> than the tedious pomp that waits
 On princes, when their rich retinue long
 Of horses led, and grooms besmeared with gold
 Dazzles the crowd, and sets them all agape.
 Nearer his presence Adam though not awed,
 Yet with submissive approach and reverence meek,
 As to a superior nature, bowing low,

Thus said: "Native of Heav'n, for other place:
 None can than Heav'n such glorious shape contain;
 Since by descending from the thrones above,
 Those happy places thou hast deigned<sup>0</sup> a while
 To want,<sup>0</sup> and honor these, vouchsafe with us
 Two only, who yet by sov'reign gift possess
 This spacious ground, in yonder shady bow'r
 To rest, and what the garden choicest bears
 To sit and taste, till this meridian<sup>0</sup> heat
 Be over, and the sun more cool decline."

Whom thus the angelic Virtue<sup>2</sup> answered mild:
 "Adam, I therefore came, nor art thou such Created, or such place hast here to dwell,
 As may not oft invite, though Spirits of Heav'n
 To visit thee; lead on then where thy bow'r
 O'ershades; for these mid-hours, till evening rise
 I have at will." So to the sylvan lodge
 They came, that like Pomona's<sup>3</sup> arbor smiled
 With flow'rets decked<sup>0</sup> and fragrant smells; but Eve
 Undecked, save with herself more lovely fair
 Than wood nymph, or the fairest goddess feigned
 Of three that in Mount Ida naked strove,<sup>4</sup>
 Stood to entertain her guest from Heav'n; no veil
 She needed, virtue-proof,<sup>0</sup> no thought infirm

8. The "middle shore" includes Pontus, the south coast of the Black Sea, famous for nuts and fruits, and the "Punic" (Carthaginian) coast of North Africa on the Mediterranean, famous for figs; the gardens of Alcinous (next line) are described in the Odyssey 7.113–21 as perpetually fruitful.

9. Meads, drinks sweetened with honey. "Must": unfermented fruit juice.

1. Naturally scented, not burned for incense.

2. Milton uses these angelic titles freely, in the Protestant manner, not as designations of the nine traditional orders (Raphael was called "Seraph" at line 277).

3. The Roman goddess of fruit trees.

4. On Mount Ida, Venus, Juno, and Minerva "strove" naked for the title of the most beautiful; Paris awarded the prize (the apple of discord) to Venus, which led to the rape of Helen and the Trojan War.

Altered her cheek. On whom the Angel "Hail"
Bestowed, the holy salutation used
Long after to blest Mary, second Eve.<sup>5</sup>

"Hail mother of mankind, whose fruitful womb
Shall fill the world more numerous with thy sons
Than with these various fruits the trees of God
Have heaped this table." Raised of grassy turf
Their table was, and mossy seats had round,
And on her ample square from side to side
All autumn piled, though spring and autumn here
Danced hand in hand. A while discourse they hold;
No fear lest dinner cool; when thus began
Our author:<sup>0</sup> "Heav'nly stranger, please to taste
These bounties which our Nourisher, from whom
All perfect good unmeasured out, descends,
To us for food and for delight hath caused
The earth to yield; unsavory food perhaps
To spiritual natures; only this I know,
That one Celestial Father gives to all."

Tasting concoct, digest, assimilate,<sup>7</sup>
And corporeal to incorporeal turn.
For know, whatever was created, needs
To be sustained and fed; of elements

Earth and the sea feed air, the air those fires

Whence in her visage round those spots, unpurged

Nor doth the moon no nourishment exhale
From her moist continent to higher orbs.<sup>9</sup>
The sun that light imparts to all, receives
From all his alimentaP recompense
In humid exhalations, and at even

5. Cf. the angel's words to Mary announcing that she would bear a son, Jesus (Luke 1.28): "Hail, thou that art highly favored, the Lord is with thee: blessed art thou among women."

6. Milton's angels ("intelligential substances") require real food, even as "rational" men do (see below, lines 430-38). As a monist (believer that all creation is of one matter), Milton denied the more common (dualistic) idea that angels are pure spirit, holding instead that they are of a very highly refined material substance.

7. Three stages in digestion.

8. Here Raphael describes lunar spots as stillundigested vapors (in keeping with his exposition of the universal need of nourishment); in 1.287-91 he referred to moon spots in Galileo's terms, as landscape features.

9. A double negative: the moon does exhale such nourishment to other planets.

1. Milton explains evaporation as the sun dining off moisture exhaled from the oceans.

2. Ambrosia is the food and nectar the drink of the classical gods; Milton adds "pearly grain" (line 430), like the manna showered on the Israelites in the desert (Exodus 16.14-15).

We brush mellifluous<sup>0</sup> dews, and find the ground
 Covered with pearly grain; yet God hath here
 Varied his bounty so with new delights,
 As may compare with Heaven; and to taste
 Think not I shall be nice.<sup>0</sup> So down they sat,
 And to their viands fell, nor seemingly<sup>0</sup>
 The angel, nor in mist, the common gloss<sup>0</sup>
 Of theologians, but with keen dispatch
 Of real hunger, and concoctive<sup>0</sup> heat
 To transubstantiate;<sup>3</sup> what redounds, transpires
 Through Spirits with ease; nor wonder, if by fire
 Of sooty coal the empiric<sup>0</sup> alchemist
 Can turn, or holds it possible to turn
 Metals of drossiest ore to perfect gold
 As from the mine. Meanwhile at table Eve
 Ministered naked, and their flowing cups
 With pleasant liquors crowned.<sup>0</sup> O innocence
 Deserving Paradise! if ever, then,
 Then had the Sons of God excuse t' have been
 Enamored at that sight,<sup>4</sup> but in those hearts
 Love unlibidinous<sup>0</sup> reigned, nor jealousy
 Was understood, the injured lover's hell.

Thus when with meats and drinks they had sufficed,
 Not burdened nature, sudden mind arose
 In Adam, not to let th' occasion pass
 Given him by this great conference to know
 Of things above his world, and of their being
 Who dwell in Heav'n, whose excellence he saw
 Transcend his own so far, whose radiant forms
 Divine effulgence,<sup>0</sup> whose high power so far
 Exceeded human, and his wary speech
 Thus to th' empyreal minister he framed:
 "Inhabitant with God, now know I well
 Thy favor, in this honor done to man,
 Under whose lowly roof thou hast vouchsafed
 To enter and these earthly fruits to taste,
 Food not of angels, yet accepted so,
 As that more willingly thou couldst not seem
 At Heav'n's high feasts t' have fed: yet what compare?"

To whom the winged hierarch<sup>0</sup> replied:
 "O Adam, one Almighty is, from whom
 All things proceed, and up to him return,
 If not depraved from good, created all
 Such to perfection, one first matter all,<sup>5</sup>

3. In common theological use, transubstantiation is the Roman Catholic doctrine that the bread and wine of the Eucharist become the body and blood of Christ. Milton vigorously denied that doctrine, but he describes the angels' transforming of earthly food into their more highly refined spiritual substance as a true transubstantiation. The excess ("what redounds") is exhaled ("transpires") through angelic pores.

4. Genesis 6.2 tells of the marriage of "the daughters of men" with "the sons of God," usually identified as sons of Seth, but a patristic tradition (alluded to here) identifies them as angels.

5. Milton held that the universe was created out of Chaos, not out of nothing: the primal matter of Chaos had its origin in God, who subsequently created all things from that matter (see 7.168–73, 210–42). This materialist "monism" denies sharp distinctions between angels and men, spirit and matter: all beings are of one substance, of varying degrees of refinement and life.

Endued with various forms, various degrees
 Of substance, and in things that live, of life;

 Wonder not then, what God for you saw good
 If I refuse not, but convert, as you,
 To proper<sup>0</sup> substance; time may come when men our own
 With angels may participate, and find

 505 Can comprehend, incapable<sup>0</sup> of more." unable to contain
 To whom the patriarch of mankind replied:
 "O favorable Spirit, propitious guest,
 Well hast thou taught the way that might direct
 Our knowledge, and the scale of nature set
 510 From center to circumference, whereon
 In contemplation of created things
 By steps we may ascend to God. But say,
 What meant that caution joined, 'If ye be found Obedient'? Can we want<sup>0</sup> obedience then lack

6. Milton's version of the chain of being qualifies natural hierarchy by allowing for movement up or down; beings may become increasingly spiritual ("more spiritous") or increasingly gross (as the rebel angels do), depending on their moral choices—"nearer tending."

7. The plant figure—root, stalk, leaves, flowers, and fruit—provides an illustration of the dynamism of being in the universe and further explains why Raphael can eat the fruit. Such food is then transformed (next lines) into various orders of "spirits"—"vital," "animal," and "intellectual" (fluids in the blood that sustain life, sensation, motion, and finally intellect and its functions, "fancy," "understanding," and "reason"), indicating that the soul is also material.

8. Traditionally, on the dualist assumption that angels are pure spirit and humans a combination of matter and spirit, angelic intuition (immediate apprehension of truth) was absolutely distinguished from human "discourse" of reason (arguing from premises to conclusions). Milton, denying that assumption, makes the distinction only relative, a matter of "degree" (line 490).

- 515 To him, or possibly his love desert
 Who formed us from the dust, and placed us here
 Full to the utmost measure of what bliss
 Human desires can seek or apprehend?"
 To whom the angel: "Son of Heav'n and earth,
- 520 Attend: that thou art happy, owe" to God; attribute
 That thou continu'st such, owe to thyself,
 That is, to thy obedience; therein stand.
 This was that caution giv'n thee; be advised.
 God made thee perfect, not immutable;<sup>9</sup> unchangeable
- 525 And good he made thee, but to persevere
 He left it in thy power, ordained thy will
 By nature free, not overruled by fate
 Inextricable, or strict necessity;
 Our voluntary service he requires,
- 530 Not our necessitated, such with him
 Finds no acceptance, nor can find, for how
 Can hearts, not free, be tried whether they serve
 Willing or no, who will but what they must
 By destiny, and can no other choose?
- 535 Myself and all th' angelic host that stand
 In sight of God enthroned, our happy state
 Hold, as you yours, while our obedience holds;
 On other surety<sup>0</sup> none; freely we serve, guarantee
 Because we freely love, as in our will
- 540 To love or not; in this we stand or fall:
 And some are fall'n, to disobedience fall'n,
 And so from Heav'n to deepest Hell; O fall
 From what high state of bliss into what woe!"
 To whom our great progenitor: "Thy words
- 545 Attentive, and with more delighted ear,
 Divine instructor, I have heard, than when Cherubic songs<sup>0</sup> by night from neighboring hills songs of Cherubim
 Aerial music send: nor knew I not<sup>9</sup>
 To be both will and deed created free;
- 550 Yet that we never shall forget to love
 Our Maker, and obey him whose command
 Single, is yet<sup>o</sup> so just, my constant thoughts also Assured me, and still assure: though what thou tell'st
 Hath passed in Heav'n, some doubt within me move,
- 555 But more desire to hear, if thou consent,
 The full relation, which must needs be strange,
 Worthy of sacred silence to be heard;
 And we have yet large<sup>o</sup> day, for scarce the sun ample
 Hath finished half his journey, and scarce begins
- 560 His other half in the great zone of Heav'n."
 Thus Adam made request, and Raphael
 After short pause assenting, thus began:
 "High matter<sup>1</sup> thou enjoin'st me, O prime of men,

9. A double negative; i.e., "I did know."

1. Raphael's account of the war in Heaven is an epic device, a narrative of past action; it is also a mini-epic itself, with traditional battles, challenges, and single combats. As an "epic" poet treating sacred matter, Raphael confronts a narrative challenge similar to Milton's own.

Sad task and hard, for how shall I relate
565 To human sense th' invisible exploits
Of warring Spirits; how without remorse
The ruin of so many glorious once
And perfect while they stood; how last unfold
The secrets of another world, perhaps 570 Not lawful to reveal? Yet for thy good
This is dispensed, and what surmounts the reach
Of human sense, I shall delineate so,
By lik'ning spiritual to corporal forms,
As may express them best, though what if earth
575 Be but the shadow of Heav'n, and things therein
Each to other like, more than on earth is thought?
"As yet this world was not, and Chaos wild
Reigned where these heav'ns now roll, where earth now rests
Upon her center poised, when on a day
580 (For time, though in eternity, applied
To motion, measures all things durable
By present, past, and future)<sup>2</sup> on such day
As Heav'n's great year<sup>3</sup> brings forth, th' empyreal host
Of angels by imperial summons called,
585 Innumerable before th' Almighty's throne
Forthwith from all the ends of Heav'n appeared
Under their hierarchs<sup>0</sup> in orders bright. leaders
Ten thousand thousand ensigns high advanced,
Standards, and gonfalons<sup>0</sup> twixt van and rear banners
590 Stream in the air, and for distinction serve
Of hierarchies, of orders, and degrees;
Or in their glittering tissues<sup>0</sup> bear emblazed cloth
Holy memorials, acts of zeal and love
Recorded eminent. Thus when in orbs
595 Of circuit<sup>0</sup> inexpressible they stood, circumference
Orb within orb, the Father Infinite,
By whom in bliss embosomed sat the Son,
Amidst as from a flaming mount, whose top
Brightness had made invisible, thus spake:
600 "Hear all ye angels, progeny of Light,
Thrones, Dominations, Princedoms, Virtues, Powers,
Hear my decree, which unrevoked shall stand.
This day I have begot whom I declare
My only Son, and on this holy hill
605 Him have anointed,"<sup>1</sup> whom ye now behold
At my right hand; your head I him appoint;
And by myself have sworn to him shall bow
All knees in Heav'n, and shall confess him Lord:
Under his great vicegerent<sup>5</sup> reign abide

2. Countering a long philosophical tradition, Milton asserts the existence of time in Heaven, before the creation of the universe.

3. Plato and others defined the "great year" as the cycle completed when all the heavenly bodies simultaneously return to the positions they held at the cycle's beginning.

4. Cf. Psalm 2.7: "I will declare the decree: . . .

Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten thee." The episode refers to the exaltation of the Son as King, not his actual begetting, since he is elsewhere described as "of all creation first" (3.383) and as God's agent in creating the angels and everything else.

5. Vice-regent, one appointed by the supreme ruler (here, God) to wield his authority.

United as one individual<sup>0</sup> soul indivisible
 Forever happy: him who<sup>0</sup> disobeys whoever
 Me disobeys, breaks union, and that day
 Cast out from God and blessed vision, falls
 Into utter<sup>0</sup> darkness, deep engulfed, his place outer, total
 Ordained without redemption, without end.'
 "So spake th' Omnipotent, and with his words
 All seemed well pleased, all seemed, but were not all.
 That day, as other solemn<sup>0</sup> days, they spent ceremonial
 In song and dance about the sacred hill,
 Mystical dance, which yonder starry sphere
 Of planets and of fixed<sup>0</sup> in all her wheels fixed stars
 Resembles nearest, mazes intricate,
 Eccentric,<sup>0</sup> intervolv'd,<sup>0</sup> yet regular off center / intertwined
 Then most, when most irregular they seem:
 And in their motions harmony divine
 So smooths her charming tones,<sup>6</sup> that God's own ear
 Listens delighted. Evening now approached
 (For we have also our evening and our morn,
 We ours for change delectable, not need)
 Forthwith from dance to sweet repast they turn
 Desirous; all in circles as they stood,
 Tables are set, and on a sudden piled
 With angels' food, and rubied nectar flows
 In pearl, in diamond, and massy gold,
 Fruit of delicious vines, the growth of Heav'n.
 On flow'rs reposed, and with fresh flow'rets crowned,
 They eat, they drink, and in communion sweet
 Quaff immortality and joy, secure
 Of surfeit where full measure only bounds
 Excess, before th' all-bounteous King, who show'ed
 With copious hand, rejoicing in their joy.
 Now when ambrosial<sup>0</sup> night with clouds exhaled fragrant
 From that high mount of God, whence light and shade
 Spring both, the face of brightest Heav'n had changed
 To grateful<sup>0</sup> twilight (for night comes not there
 In darker veil) and roseate<sup>0</sup> dews disposed pleasing rose-scented
 All but the unsleeping eyes of God to rest,
 Wide over all the plain, and wider far
 Than all this globous earth in plain outspread,
 (Such are the courts of God) th' angelic throng
 Dispersed in bands and files their camp extend
 By living streams among the trees of life,
 Pavilions numberless, and sudden reared,
 Celestial tabernacles, where they slept
 Fanned with cool winds, save those who in their course
 Melodious hymns about the sov'reign throne
 Alternate all night long: but not so waked
 Satan, so call him now, his former name
 Is heard no more in Heav'n; he of the first,

6. The movements of the angels in their dance produce harmony, like those of the planets in the Pythagorean theory of the music of the spheres.

If not the first Archangel, great in power,
 In favor and preeminence, yet fraught
 With envy against the Son of God, that day
 Honored by his great Father, and proclaimed
 Messiah<sup>7</sup> King anointed, could not bear
 Through pride that sight, and thought himself impaired.
 Deep malice thence conceiving and disdain,
 Soon as midnight brought on the dusky hour
 Friendliest to sleep and silence, he resolved
 With all his legions to dislodge,<sup>8</sup> and leave
 Unworshipped, unobeyed the throne supreme Contemptuous, and his next subordinate<sup>8</sup>
 Awak'ning, thus to him in secret spake:

leave camp

" 'Sleep'st thou companion dear, what sleep can close
 Thy eyelids? and remember'st what decree
 Of yesterday, so late hath passed the lips
 Of Heav'n's Almighty. Thou to me thy thoughts
 Wast wont," I mine to thee was wont to impart;
 Both waiting we were one; how then can now
 Thy sleep dissent? New laws thou seest imposed;
 New laws from him who reigns, new minds<sup>0</sup> may raise
 In us who serve, new counsels, to debate
 What doubtful may ensue, more in this place
 To utter is not safe. Assemble thou
 Of all those myriads which we lead the chief;
 Tell them that by command, ere yet dim night
 Her shadowy cloud withdraws, I am to haste,
 And all who under me their banners wave,
 Homeward with flying march where we possess
 The quarters of the north, there to prepare
 Fit entertainment to receive our King
 The great Messiah, and his new commands,
 Who speedily through all the hierarchies
 Intends to pass triumphant, and give laws.'

"So spake the false Archangel, and infused
 Bad influence into th' unwary breast
 Of his associate; he together calls,
 Or several one by one, the regent powers,
 Under him regent, tells, as he was taught,
 That the Most High commanding, now ere night,
 Now ere dim night had disencumbered Heav'n,
 The great hierarchal standard was to move;
 Tells the suggested<sup>0</sup> cause, and casts between Ambitious words and jealousies, to sound<sup>0</sup>
 Or taint integrity; but all obeyed
 The wonted signal, and superior voice
 Of their great potentate<sup>0</sup> for great indeed

 His count'nance as the morning star that guides
 The starry flock, allured them, and with lies

7. Hebrew, "anointed."

8. His original name in Heaven is lost (1.356—63), but he will come to be known as Beelzebub.

Drew after him the third part of Heav'n's host:
 Meanwhile, th' Eternal Eye, whose sight discerns
 Abstrusest<sup>o</sup> thoughts, from forth his holy mount
 And from within the golden lamps that burn
 Nightly before him, saw without their light
 Rebellion rising, saw in whom, how spread
 Among the sons of morn, what multitudes
 Were banded to oppose his high decree;
 And smiling to his only Son thus said:

most secret

"Son, thou in whom my glory I behold
 In full resplendence, heir of all my might,
 Nearly it now concerns us to be sure
 Of our omnipotence, and with what arms
 We mean to hold what anciently we claim
 Of deity or empire, such a foe
 Is rising, who intends to erect his throne
 Equal to ours, throughout the spacious north;
 Nor so content, hath in his thought to try
 In battle, what our power is, or our right.
 Let us advise, and to this hazard draw
 With speed what force is left, and all employ
 In our defense, lest unawares we lose
 This our high place, our sanctuary, our hill.'

"To whom the Son with calm aspect and clear
 Lightning divine, ineffable, serene,
 Made answer: 'Mighty Father, thou thy foes
 Justly hast in derision, and secure
 Laugh'st at their vain designs and tumults vain,<sup>9</sup>
 Matter to me of glory, whom their hate
 Illustrates,<sup>o</sup> when they see all regal power
 Giv'n me to quell their pride, and in event<sup>o</sup>
 Know whether I be dextrous to subdue
 Thy rebels, or be found the worst in Heav'n.'

*makes illustrious

"So spake the Son, but Satan with his powers<sup>o</sup>
 Far was advanced on winged speed, an host
 Innumerable as the stars of night,
 Or stars of morning, dewdrops, which the sun
 Impearls on every leaf and every flower.
 Regions they passed, the mighty regencies<sup>o</sup>
 Of Seraphim and Potentates and Thrones
 In their triple degrees, regions to<sup>o</sup> which
 All thy dominion, Adam, is no more
 Than what this garden is to all the earth,
 And all the sea, from one entire globose<sup>o</sup>
 Stretched into longitude<sup>o</sup> which having passed
 At length into the limits<sup>o</sup> of the north
 They came, and Satan to his royal seat
 High on a hill, far blazing, as a mount
 Raised on a mount, with pyramids and tow'rs
 From diamond quarries hewn, and rocks of gold,
 The palace of great Lucifer (so call

 Affecting<sup>0</sup> all equality with God, arrogating
 In imitation of that mount whereon
 -65 Messiah was declared in sight of Heav'n,
 The Mountain of the Congregation called;
 For thither he assembled all his train,
 Pretending so commanded to consult
 About the great reception of their King,
 770 Thither to come, and with calumnious art
 Of counterfeited truth thus held their ears:
     " 'Thrones, Dominations, Princedoms, Virtues, Powers,
     If these magnificent titles yet remain
     Not merely titular, since by decree
 775 Another now hath to himself engrossed<sup>0</sup> monopolized
     All power, and us eclipsed under the name
     Of King anointed, for whom all this haste
     Of midnight march, and hurried meeting here,
     This only to consult how we may best
 780 With what may be devised of honors new Receive him coming to receive from us
     Knee-tribute yet unpaid, prostration vile,
     Too much to one, but double how endured,
     To one and to his image now proclaimed?
 785 But what if better counsels might erect
     Our minds and teach us to cast off this yoke?
     Will ye submit your necks, and choose to bend
     The supple knee? Ye will not, if I trust
     To know ye right, or if ye know yourselves
 790 Natives and sons of Heav'n possessed before
     By none, and if not equal all, yet free,
     Equally free; for orders and degrees
     Jar not with liberty, but well consist.
     Who can in reason then or right assume 795 Monarchy over such as live by right
     His equals,<sup>1</sup> if in power and splendor less,
     In freedom equal? or can introduce
     Law and edict on us, who without law
     Err not, much less for this to be our Lord,
 800 And look for adoration to th' abuse
     Of those imperial titles which assert
     Our being ordained to govern, not to serve?'
     "Thus far his bold discourse without control<sup>0</sup> hindrance
     Had audience, when among the Seraphim
 805 Abdiel,<sup>2</sup> than whom none with more zeal adored
     The Deity, and divine commands obeyed,
     Stood up, and in a flame of zeal severe
     The current of his fury thus opposed:
     " 'O argument blasphemous, false and proud!

1. Satan here paraphrases the republican theory against earthly monarchy like that urged by Milton in his Tenure of Kings and Magistrates (1649); see p. 1748. Abdiel, however, insists (lines 809-41) that the argument from equality cannot pertain to God and the angels.

2. Hebrew, "servant of God."

810 Words which no ear ever to hear in Heav'n
 Expected, least of all from thee, ingrate,
 In place thyself so high above thy peers.
 Canst thou with impious obloquy condemn
 The just decree of God, pronounced and sworn,
 sis That to his only Son by right endued
 With regal scepter, every soul in Heav'n
 Shall bend the knee, and in that honor due
 Confess him rightful King? Unjust thou says't,
 Flatly unjust, to bind with laws the free,
 820 And equal over equals to let reign,
 One over all with unsucceeded<sup>o</sup> power. without successor
 Shalt thou give law to God, shalt thou dispute
 With him the points of liberty, who made
 Thee what thou art, and formed the pow'rs of Heav'n
 825 Such as he pleased, and circumscribed their being?
 Yet by experience taught we know how good,
 And of our good, and of our dignity
 Flow provident he is, how far from thought
 To make us less, bent rather to exalt
 830 Our happy state under one head more near United. But to grant it thee unjust,
 That equal over equals monarch reign:
 Thyself though great and glorious dost thou count,
 Or all angelic nature joined in one,
 835 Equal to him begotten Son, by whom
 As by his Word the mighty Father made
 All things, ev'n thee, and all the Spirits of Heav'n
 By him created in their bright<sup>n</sup> degrees, illustrious
 Crowned them with glory, and to their glory named
 840 Thrones, Dominations, Princedoms, Virtues, Powers,
 Essential Powers, nor by his reign obscured,
 But more illustrious made, since he the head
 One of our number thus reduced becomes,<sup>3</sup>
 His laws our laws, all honor to him done
 845 Returns our own. Cease then this impious rage,
 And tempt not these; but hasten to appease
 Th' incensed Father and th' incensed Son,
 While pardon may be found in time besought.'
 "So spake the fervent angel, but his zeal
 850 None seconded, as out of season judged,
 Or singular and rash, whereat rejoiced
 Th' Apostate," and more haughty thus replied. religious renegade
 'That we were formed then say'st thou? and the work
 Of secondary hands, by task transferred 855 From Father to his Son? Strange point and new!
 Doctrine which we would know whence learnt: who saw
 When this creation was? Remember'st thou
 Thy making, while the Maker gave thee being?

3. Abdiel suggests that the Son's appointment as the angels' king is something like an "incarnation" for them.

We know no time when we were not as now;
 860 Know none before us, self-begot, self-raised,
 By our own quick'ning power, when fatal course<sup>o</sup> the course of fate
 Had circled his full orb, the birth mature
 Of this our native Heav'n, ethereal sons.<sup>11</sup>
 Our puissance<sup>o</sup> is our own, our own right hand power
 865 Shall teach us highest deeds, by proof to try
 Who is our equal: then thou shalt behold
 Whether by supplication we intend
 Address, and to begirt th' Almighty throne
 Beseeching or besieging. This report,
 870 These tidings carry to th' anointed King;
 And fly, ere evil intercept thy flight.'
 "He said, and as the sound of waters deep
 Hoarse murmur echoed to his words applause
 Through the infinite host, nor less for that 875 The flaming Seraph fearless, though alone
 Encompassed round with foes, thus answered bold:
 " 'O alienate from God, O Spirit accurst,
 Forsaken of all good; I see thy fall
 Determined, and thy hapless crew involved
 880 In this perfidious fraud, contagion spread
 Both of thy crime and punishment: henceforth
 No more be troubled how to quit the yoke
 Of God's Messiah; those indulgent laws
 Will not be now vouchsafed, other decrees
 885 Against thee are gone forth without recall;
 That golden scepter which thou didst reject
 Is now an iron rod to bruise and break
 Thy disobedience. Well thou didst advise,
 Yet not for thy advice or threats I fly
 890 These wicked tents devoted,<sup>o</sup> lest the wrath doomed
 Impendent,<sup>o</sup> raging into sudden flame impending
 Distinguish not: for soon expect to feel
 His thunder on thy head, devouring fire.
 Then who created thee lamenting learn,
 895 When who can uncreate thee thou shalt know.'
 "So spake the Seraph Abdiel faithful found,
 Among the faithless, faithful only he;
 Among innumerable false, unmoved,
 Unshaken, unseduced, unterrified
 900 His loyalty he kept, his love, his zeal;
 Nor number, nor example with him wrought
 To swerve from truth, or change his constant mind
 Though single. From amidst them forth he passed,
 Long way through hostile scorn, which he sustained
 905 Superior, nor of violence feared aught;<sup>o</sup> anything
 And with retorted scorn his back he turned
 On those proud tow'rs to swift destruction doomed."

4. Satan's (illogical) argument is that since the angels cannot remember their creation, they created themselves. Cf. Adam's comment on his recollection of origins (8.250—51, 270—79).

Book 6

All night the dreadless angel<sup>1</sup> unpursued
 Through Heav'n's wide champaign<sup>0</sup> held his way, till Morn, plain
 Waked by the circling Hours,<sup>2</sup> with rosy hand
 Unbarred the gates of light. There is a cave
 5 Within the mount of God, fast<sup>0</sup> by his throne, close
 Where light and darkness in perpetual round
 Lodge and dislodge by turns, which makes through Heav'n
 Grateful vicissitude,<sup>0</sup> like day and night; delightful change
 Light issues forth, and at the other door
 io Obsequious<sup>0</sup> darkness enters, till her hour compliant
 To veil the Heav'n, though darkness there might well
 Seem twilight here; and now went forth the Morn
 Such as in highest Heav'n, arrayed in gold
 Emyreal;<sup>0</sup> from before her vanished night, heavenly
 15 Shot through with orient beams: when all the plain
 Covered with thick embattled<sup>0</sup> squadrons bright, in battle array
 Chariots and flaming arms, and fiery steeds
 Reflecting blaze on blaze, first met his view:
 War he perceived, war in procinct,<sup>0</sup> and found preparation
 20 Already known what he for news had thought
 To have reported: gladly then he mixed
 Among those friendly Powers who him received
 With joy and acclamations loud, that one
 That of so many myriads fall'n, yet one
 25 Returned not lost: on to the sacred hill
 They led him high applauded, and present
 Before the seat supreme; from whence a voice:
 From midst a golden cloud thus mild was heard.
 " 'Servant of God,<sup>3</sup> well done, well hast thou fought
 30 The better fight, who single hast maintained
 Against revolted multitudes the cause
 Of truth, in word mightier than they in arms;
 And for the testimony of truth hast borne
 Universal reproach, far worse to bear
 35 Than violence: for this was all thy care
 To stand approved in sight of God, though worlds
 Judged thee perverse: the easier conquest now
 Remains thee, aided by this host of friends,
 Back on thy foes more glorious to return
 40 Than scorned thou didst depart, and to subdue
 By force, who reason for their law refuse,
 Right reason<sup>0</sup> for their law, and for their King upright, true reason
 Messiah, who by right of merit reigns.
 Go Michael of celestial armies prince,
 45 And thou in military prowess next
 Gabriel, lead forth to battle these my sons<sup>0</sup> angels

1. I.e., Abdiel.

2. Daughters of Jove, who control the seasons and guard the gates of Heaven. "Morn": Aurora, goddess of dawn.

3. The literal meaning (Hebrew) of the name Abdiel.

Invincible, lead forth my armed saints
 By thousands and by millions ranged for fight;
 Equal in number to that godless crew
 Rebellious,<sup>4</sup> them with fire and hostile arms
 Fearless assault, and to the brow of Heav'n
 Pursuing drive them out from God and bliss,
 Into their place of punishment, the gulf
 Of Tartarus,<sup>0</sup> which ready opens wide Hell
 His fiery chaos to receive their fall.<sup>1</sup>
 "So spake the Sov'reign Voice, and clouds began
 To darken all the hill, and smoke to roll
 In dusky wreaths reluctant<sup>0</sup> flames, the sign writhing
 Of wrath awaked: nor with less dread the loud began to Ethereal trumpet from on high gan<sup>o</sup> blow:
 At which command the powers militant,
 That stood for Heav'n, in mighty quadrate<sup>5</sup> joined
 Of union irresistible, moved on
 In silence their bright legions, to the sound
 Of instrumental harmony that breathed
 Heroic ardor to advent'rous deeds
 Under their godlike leaders, in the cause
 Of God and his Messiah. On they move
 Indissolubly firm; nor obvious<sup>0</sup> hill, standing in the way
 Nor strait'ning vale,<sup>6</sup> nor wood, nor stream divides
 Their perfect ranks; for high above the ground
 Their march was, and the passive air upbore
 Their nimble tread; as when the total kind
 Of birds in orderly array on wing
 Came summoned over Eden to receive
 Their names of thee; so over many a tract
 Of Heav'n they marched, and many a province wide
 Tenfold the length of this terrene:<sup>0</sup> at last earth, terrain
 Far in th' horizon to the north appeared
 From skirt to skirt a fiery region, stretched
 In battailous<sup>0</sup> aspect, and nearer view warlike
 Bristled with upright beams<sup>0</sup> innumerable shafts
 Of rigid spears, and helmets thronged, and shields
 Various, with boastful argument<sup>0</sup> portrayed, heraldic devices
 The banded powers of Satan hasting on
 With furious expedition;<sup>0</sup> for they weened<sup>0</sup> speed / thought
 That selfsame day by fight, or by surprise
 To win the mount of God, and on his throne
 To set the envier of his state, the proud
 Aspirer, but their thoughts proved fond<sup>0</sup> and vain foolish
 In the mid-way: though strange to us it seemed
 At first, that angel should with angel war,
 And in fierce hosting<sup>7</sup> meet, who wont<sup>0</sup> to meet were accustomed
 So oft in festivals of joy and love

4. God sends out only an equal force to match the one-third of the angelic host that rebelled, not the two-thirds that remained loyal.

5. A square military formation.

6. A narrow valley would force other armies to march in a file.

7. Hostile encounter.

Unanimous, as sons of one great Sire
 Hymning th' Eternal Father: but the shout
 Of battle now began, and rushing sound
 Of onset ended soon each milder thought.
 High in the midst exalted as a god
 Th' Apostate in his sun-bright chariot sat
 Idol of majesty divine, enclosed
 With flaming Cherubim, and golden shields;
 Then lighted from his gorgeous throne, for now
 Twixt host<sup>0</sup> and host but narrow space was left,
 A dreadful interval, and front to front<sup>0</sup>
 Presented stood in terrible array
 Of hideous length: before the cloudy van,"
 On the rough edge of battle<sup>0</sup> ere it joined,
 Satan with vast and haughty strides advanced,
 Came tow'ring, armed in adamant and gold;
 Abdiel that sight endured not, where he stood
 Among the mightiest, bent on highest deeds,
 And thus his own undaunted heart explores:
 " 'O Heav'n! that such resemblance of the Highest Should yet remain, where faith and realty<sup>0</sup>
 Remain not; wherefore should not strength and might
 There fail where virtue fails, or weakest prove
 Where boldest; though to sight<sup>0</sup> unconquerable?
 His puissance,<sup>0</sup> trusting in th' Almighty's aid,
 I mean to try, whose reason I have tried<sup>0</sup>
 Unsound and false; nor is it aught but just,
 That he who in debate of truth hath won,
 Should win in arms, in both disputes alike
 Victor; though brutish that contest and foul,
 When reason hath to deal with force, yet so
 Most reason is that reason overcome.'
 "So pondering, and from his armed peers
 Forth stepping opposite, halfway he met
 His daring foe, at this prevention<sup>0</sup> more
 Incensed, and thus securely<sup>0</sup> him defied:
 " 'Proud, art thou met? Thy hope was to have reached
 The height of thy aspiring unopposed,
 The throne of God unguarded, and his side
 Abandoned at the terror of thy power
 Or potent tongue; fool, not to think how vain
 Against the Omnipotent to rise in arms;
 Who out of smallest things could without end
 Have raised incessant armies to defeat
 Thy folly; or with solitary hand
 Reaching beyond all limit at one blow
 Unaided could have finished thee, and whelmed
 Thy legions under darkness; but thou seest
 All are not of thy train; there be<sup>o</sup> who faith
 Prefer, and piety<sup>0</sup> to God, though then
 To thee not visible, when I alone
 Seemed in thy world erroneous to dissent

From all: my sect<sup>8</sup> thou seest, now learn too late
 How few sometimes may know, when thousand err.'
 "Whom the grand Foe with scornful eye askance
 150 Thus answered. 'Ill for thee, but in wished hour
 Of my revenge, first sought for thou return'st
 From flight, seditious angel, to receive
 Thy merited reward, the first assay
 Of this right hand provoked, since first that tongue
 155 Inspired with contradiction durst oppose
 A third part of the gods, in synod met
 Their deities to assert, who while they feel Vigor divine within them, can allow Omnipotence to none. But well thou com'st
 160 Before thy fellows, ambitious to win
 From me some plume, that thy success<sup>9</sup> may show
 Destruction to the rest: this pause between (Unanswered lest thou boast)<sup>1</sup> to let thee know;
 At first I thought that liberty and Heav'n
 165 To heav'nly souls had been all one;<sup>o</sup> but now one and the same
 I see that most through sloth had rather serve,
 Minist'ring Spirits, trained up in feast and song;
 Such hast thou armed, the minstrelsy<sup>2</sup> of Heav'n,
 Servility<sup>o</sup> with freedom to contend, bondage, obsequiousness
 170 As both their deeds compared this day shall prove.'
 "To whom in brief thus Abdiel stern replied:
 Apostate, still thou err'st, nor end wilt find
 Of erring, from the path of truth remote:
 Unjustly thou deprav'st<sup>o</sup> it with the name vilify
 175 Of servitude to serve whom God ordains,
 Or nature; God and nature bid the same,
 When he who rules is worthiest, and excels
 Them whom he governs. This is servitude,
 To serve th' unwise, or him who hath rebelled
 180 Against his worthier, as thine now serve thee,
 Thyself not free, but to thyself enthralled;<sup>3</sup>
 Yet lewdly<sup>o</sup> dar'st our minist'ring upbraid. ignorantly, basely
 Reign thou in Hell thy kingdom, let me serve
 In Heav'n God ever blest, and his divine
 185 Behests obey, worthiest to be obeyed;
 Yet chains in Hell, not realms expect: meanwhile
 From me returned, as erst<sup>o</sup> thou saidst, from flight, formerly
 This greeting on thy impious crest receive.'

8. The term carries political resonance, since the national English church, Anglican or (during the revolution) Presbyterian, sought to suppress and persecute the sects who separated from it (Baptists, Quakers, Socinians, and others), often denouncing them as heretics. Satan claims that a "synod" (line 156, term for a Presbyterian assembly) has proclaimed the truth of the rebel angels' case; Abdiel insists that truth may rather reside (as here) with a single "dissenter" or a sect of a few.

9. The outcome of your action. "Plume": token of victory.

1. I.e., lest thou boast that I did not answer your argument.

2. Satan's contemptuous pun links together the loyal angels' service ("Minist'ring," line 167) with their song, likened to the street songs of minstrels.

3. Abdiel cites the "natural law" principle that rule rightly belongs to the best or worthiest, and that tyrants are enslaved to their own passions.

"So saying, a noble stroke he lifted high,
 190 Which hung not, but so swift with tempest fell
 On the proud crest of Satan, that no sight,
 Nor motion of swift thought, less could his shield
 Such ruin intercept: ten paces huge
 He back recoiled; the tenth on bended knee
 195 His massy spear upstayed; as if on earth
 Winds under ground or waters forcing way
 Sidelong, had pushed a mountain from his seat
 Half sunk with all his pines. Amazement seized
 The rebel Thrones,<sup>4</sup> but greater rage to see 200 Thus foiled their mightiest: ours joy filled, and shout,
 Presage of victory and fierce desire
 Of battle: whereat Michael bid sound
 Th' Archangel trumpet; through the vast of Heav'n
 It sounded, and the faithful armies rung
 205 Hosanna to the Highest: nor stood at gaze
 The adverse legions, nor less hideous joined
 The horrid shock: now storming fury rose,
 And clamor such as heard in Heav'n till now
 Was never, arms on armor clashing brayed<sup>5</sup>
 210 Horrible discord, and the madding<sup>0</sup> wheels whirling madly
 Of brazen chariots raged; dire was the noise
 Of conflict; overhead the dismal<sup>0</sup> hiss dreadfid
 Of fiery darts in flaming volleys flew,
 And flying vaulted either host with fire.
 215 So under fiery cope<sup>o</sup> together rushed sky
 Both battles main,<sup>6</sup> with ruinous assault
 And inextinguishable rage; all Heav'n
 Resounded, and had earth been then, all earth
 Had to her center shook. What wonder? when 220 Millions of fierce encount'ring angels fought
 On either side, the least of whom could wield
 These elements,<sup>7</sup> and arm him with the force
 Of all their regions: how much more of power
 Army against army numberless to raise 225 Dreadful combustion<sup>o</sup> warring, and disturb, tumult
 Though not destroy, their happy native seat;
 Had not th' Eternal King Omnipotent
 From his stronghold of Heav'n high overruled
 And limited their might; though numbered such 230 As each divided legion might have seemed
 A numerous host, in strength each armed hand
 A legion; led in fight, yet leader seemed
 Each warrior single as in chief,<sup>8</sup> expert
 When to advance, or stand, or turn the sway<sup>o</sup> force
 235 Of battle, open when, and when to close

4. Here as elsewhere Milton uses the name of one angelic order to stand for all. But the choice of "Thrones" here carries political resonance, linking monarchs with rebels against God's kingdom.

5. Made a harsh, jarring sound.

6. The principal body of an army, as opposed to the van, rear, and wing.

7. The four elements—fire, air, water, earth—that constitute the several "regions" (next line) of planet earth.

8. I.e., the angelic legions had leaders, yet each single warrior seemed like such a leader.

The ridges<sup>0</sup> of grim war; no thought of flight, ranks
 None of retreat, no unbecoming deed
 That argued fear; each on himself relied,
 As<sup>o</sup> only in his arm the moment<sup>9</sup> lay as if 240 Of victory; deeds of eternal fame
 Were done, but infinite: for wide was spread
 That war and various; sometimes on firm ground
 A standing fight, then soaring on main<sup>o</sup> wing strong, powerful
 Tormented" all the air; all air seemed then agitated
 245 Conflicting fire: long time in even scale
 The battle hung; till Satan, who that day
 Prodigious power had shown, and met in arms
 No equal, ranging through the dire attack
 Of fighting Seraphim confused, at length
 250 Saw where the sword of Michael smote, and felled
 Squadrons at once; with huge two-handed sway
 Brandished aloft the horrid edge came down
 Wide-wasting; such destruction to withstand
 He hasted, and opposed the rocky orb
 255 Of tenfold adamant, his ample shield<sup>1</sup>
 A vast circumference: at his approach
 The great Archangel from his warlike toil
 Surceased, and glad as hoping here to end
 Intestine war<sup>o</sup> in Heav'n, the Arch-Foe subdued civil war
 260 Or captive dragged in chains, with hostile frown
 And visage all inflamed first thus began:
 " Author of evil, unknown till thy revolt,
 Unnamed in Heav'n, now plenteous, as thou seest
 These acts of hateful strife, hateful to all,
 265 Though heaviest by just measure on thyself
 And thy adherents: how hast thou disturbed
 Heav'n's blessed peace, and into nature brought Misery, uncreated till the crime
 Of thy rebellion! how hast thou instilled
 270 Thy malice into thousands, once upright
 And faithful, now proved false! But think not here
 To trouble holy rest; Heav'n casts thee out
 From all her confines. Heav'n the seat of bliss
 Brooks<sup>0</sup> not the works of violence and war. endures
 275 Hence then, and evil go with thee along
 Thy offspring, to the place of evil, Hell,
 Thou and thy wicked crew; there mingle<sup>0</sup> broils, concoct
 Ere this avenging sword begin thy doom,
 Or some more sudden vengeance winged from God
 280 Precipitate thee with augmented pain.'
 "So spake the Prince of Angels; to whom thus
 The Adversary: 'Nor think thou with wind
 Of airy threats to awe whom yet with deeds
 Thou canst not. Hast thou turned the least of these 285 To flight, or if to fall, but that they rise

9. Weight that will tip the scales.

I. Satan's shield is a rockdike ("rocky") circle, made of impenetrable "adamant" (probably diamond), ten layers thick.

Unvanquished, easier to transact with me
 That thou shouldst hope, imperious, and with threats
 To chase me hence?<sup>2</sup> Err not that so shall end
 The strife which thou call'st evil, but we style
 290 The strife of glory: which we mean to win,
 Or turn this Heav'n itself into the Hell
 Thou fablest, here however to dwell free,
 If not to reign: meanwhile thy utmost force,
 And join him named Almighty to thy aid,
 295 I fly not, but have sought thee far and nigh.<sup>1</sup>
     "They ended parle,<sup>o</sup> and both addressed<sup>o</sup> for      fight      parley / prepared
 Unspeakable; for who, though with the tongue
 Of angels, can relate, or to what things
 Liken on earth conspicuous, that may lift
 300 Human imagination to such height
 Of godlike power: for likest gods they seemed,
 Stood they or moved, in stature, motion, arms
 Fit to decide the empire of great Heav'n.
 Now waved their fiery swords, and in the air
 305 Made horrid circles; two broad suns their shields
 Blazed opposite, while Expectation stood<sup>3</sup>
 In horror; from each hand with speed retired
 Where erst<sup>o</sup> was thickest fight, th' angelic throng,      ever
 And left large field, unsafe within the wind
 310 Of such commotion, such as to set forth
 Great things by small, if nature's concord broke,
 Among the constellations war were sprung,
 Two planets rushing from aspect malign
 Of fiercest opposition in midsky,
 315 Should combat, and their jarring spheres confound.<sup>4</sup>
 Together both with next to almighty arm,
 Uplifted imminent one stroke they aimed
 That might determine,<sup>o</sup> and not need repeat,<sup>o</sup>      end / repetition
 As not of power,<sup>5</sup> at once; nor odds<sup>o</sup> appeared      inequality
 320 In Michael or swift prevention;<sup>o</sup> but the sword      anticipation
 Of Michael from the armory of God
 Was giv'n him tempered so, that neither keen
 Nor solid might resist that edge: it met
 The sword of Satan with steep force to smite
 325 Descending, and in half cut sheer, nor stayed,
 But with swift wheel reverse, deep ent'ring shared<sup>o</sup>      cut off
 All his right side; then Satan first knew pain,
 And writhed him to and fro convolved;<sup>o</sup> so sore      contorted
 The griding<sup>o</sup> sword with discontinuous<sup>o</sup> wound      keenly cutting / gaping
 330 Passed through him, but th' ethereal substance closed
 Not long divisible, and from the gash
 A stream of nectarous humor issuing flowed

2. I.e., Have you made even the least of my followers flee, or seen them fall and fail to rise, that you would hope "imperiously" to deal ("transact") otherwise with me, driving me off by mere threats? "Err not" (following): don't falsely suppose.

3. Personifying the angels' apprehension.

4. An epic simile comparing the clash of these armies ("great things") with war among the planets, in which two planets clashing together from diametrically opposed positions ("aspect malign"), would cast the planetary system and its music ("jarring spheres") into confusion ("confound").

5. I.e., because they would not have power to repeat the blow.

Sanguine," such as celestial Spirits may bleed, blood-red
 And all his armor stained erewhile so bright.
 335 Forthwith on all sides to his aid was run
 By angels many and strong, who interposed
 Defense, while others bore him on their shields
 Back to his chariot, where it stood retired
 From off the files of war; there they him laid
 340 Gnashing for anguish and despite and shame
 To find himself not matchless, and his pride
 Humbled by such rebuke, so far beneath
 His confidence to equal God in power.
 Yet soon he healed; for Spirits that live throughout 345 Vital in every part, not as frail man
 In entrails, heart or head, liver or reins," kidneys
 Cannot but by annihilating die;
 Nor in their liquid texture mortal wound
 Receive, no more than can the fluid air:
 350 All heart they live, all head, all eye, all ear,
 All intellect, all sense, and as they please,
 They limb themselves,<sup>6</sup> and color, shape, or size
 Assume, as likes" them best, condense or rare. pleases
 "Meanwhile in other parts like deeds deserved
 355 Memorial, where the might of Gabriel fought,
 And with fierce ensigns pierced the deep array
 Of Moloch furious king,<sup>7</sup> who him defied,
 And at his chariot wheels to drag him bound
 Threatened, nor from the Holy One of Heav'n
 360 Refrained his tongue blasphemous; but anon
 Down clov'n to the waist, with shattered arms
 And uncouth" pain fled bellowing. On each wing unfamiliar
 Uriel and Raphael his vaunting foe,
 Though huge, and in a rock of diamond armed,
 365 Vanquished Adramelech, and Asmadai,<sup>8</sup>
 Two potent Thrones, that to be less than gods
 Disdained, but meaner thoughts learned in their flight,
 Mangled with ghastly wounds through plate and mail.
 Nor stood unmindful Abdiel to annoy" injure
 370 The atheist" crew, but with redoubled blow impious
 Ariel and Arioch, and the violence
 Of Ramiel<sup>9</sup> scorched and blasted overthrew.
 I might relate of thousands, and their names
 Eternize here on earth; but those elect
 375 Angels contented with their fame in Heav'n
 Seek not the praise of men: the other sort
 In might though wondrous and in acts of war,
 Nor of renown less eager, yet by doom
 Canceled from Heav'n and sacred memory,
 380 Nameless in dark oblivion let them dwell.

6. I.e., provide themselves with limbs. "Condense or rare" (line 353): dense or airy.

7. With his companies ("ensigns") he pierced Moloch's troops in their dense formation ("deep array").

8. Asmodeus, a Persian god (cf. 4.167—71). "Adramelech": "king of fire," a god worshipped at Samaria with human sacrifice.

9. "Ariel": "lion of God." "Arioch": "lionlike." "Ramiel": "thunder of God."

For strength from truth divided and from just,
 Illaudable,<sup>0</sup> naught merits but dispraise unworthy of praise
 And ignominy, yet to glory aspires
 Vainglorious, and through infamy seeks fame:
 Therefore eternal silence be their doom.

"And now their mightiest quelled, the battle swerved,<sup>1</sup>
 With many an inroad gored; deformed rout
 Entered, and foul disorder; all the ground
 With shivered armor strown, and on a heap
 Chariot and charioteer lay overturned
 And fiery foaming steeds; what<sup>0</sup> stood, recoiled those who O'erwearied, through the faint Satanic host
 Defensive scarce,<sup>2</sup> or with pale fear surprised,<sup>0</sup> seized unexpectedly
 Then first with fear surprised and sense of pain
 Fled ignominious, to such evil brought
 By sin of disobedience, till that hour
 Not liable to fear or flight or pain.
 Far otherwise th' inviolable saints
 In cubic phalanx<sup>0</sup> firm advanced entire, formation
 Invulnerable, impenetrably armed:
 Such high advantages their innocence
 Gave them above their foes, not to have sinned,
 Not to have disobeyed; in fight they stood
 Unwearied, unobnoxious<sup>0</sup> to be pained not liable
 By wound, though from their place by violence moved.

"Now night her course began, and over Heav'n
 Inducing darkness, grateful truce imposed,
 And silence on the odious din of war:
 Under her cloudy covert both retired,
 Victor and vanquished: on the foughten field
 Michael and his angels prevalent<sup>0</sup> victorious
 Encamping, placed in guard their watches round,
 Cherubic waving fires: on th' other part
 Satan with his rebellious disappeared,
 Far in the dark dislodged,<sup>0</sup> and void of rest, shifted quarters
 His potentates to council called by night;
 And in the midst thus undismayed began:

" 'O now in danger tried, now known in arms
 Not to be overpowered, companions dear,
 Found worthy not of liberty alone,
 Too mean pretense,<sup>0</sup> but what we more affect,<sup>3</sup> low aim
 Honor, dominion, glory, and renown,
 Who have sustained one day in doubtful<sup>0</sup> fight, indecisive
 (And if one day, why not eternal days?)
 What Heaven's Lord had powerfullest to send Against us from about his throne, and judged
 Sufficient to subdue us to his will,
 But proves not so: then fallible, it seems,
 Of future<sup>0</sup> we may deem him, though till now in the future
 Omniscient thought. True is, less firmly armed,

1. I.e., the army gave way.
 2. Scarcely defending themselves.

3. Aspire to.

Some disadvantage we endured and pain,
 Till now not known, but known as soon contemned,<sup>4</sup>
 Since now we find this our empyreal form
 Incapable of mortal injury
 Imperishable, and though pierced with wound,
 Soon closing, and by native vigor healed.
 Of evil then so small as easy think
 The remedy; perhaps more valid<sup>0</sup> arms,
 Weapons more violent, when next we meet,
 May serve to better us, and worse<sup>0</sup> our foes,
 Or equal what between us made the odds,
 In nature none: if other hidden cause
 Left them superior, while we can preserve
 Unhurt our minds, and understanding sound,
 Due search and consultation will disclose.'

powerfulinjure

"He sat; and in th' assembly next upstood
 Nisroch,<sup>5</sup> of Principalities the prime;
 As one he stood escaped from cruel fight,
 Sore toiled, his riven arms to havoc hewn,<sup>6</sup>
 And cloudy in aspect thus answering spake:
 'Deliverer from new lords, leader to free
 Enjoyment of our right as gods; yet hard
 For gods, and too unequal work we find
 Against unequal arms to fight in pain,
 Against unpained, impassive;<sup>6</sup> from which evil
 Ruin must needs ensue; for what avails
 Valor or strength, though matchless, quelled with pain
 Which all subdues, and makes remiss<sup>0</sup> the hands
 Of mightiest. Sense of pleasure we may well
 Spare out of life perhaps, and not repine,
 But live content, which is the calmest life:
 But pain is perfect misery, the worst
 Of evils, and excessive, overturns
 All patience. He who therefore can invent
 With what more forcible we may offend<sup>0</sup>
 Our yet unwounded enemies, or arm
 Ourselves with like defense, to me<sup>0</sup> deserves
 No less than for deliverance what we owe.'<sup>7</sup>

cut to piecesslack, weakattackin my opinion

"Whereto with look composed Satan replied.
 'Not uninvented that, which thou aright
 Believ'st so main<sup>0</sup> to our success, I bring;
 Which of us who beholds the bright surface
 Of this ethereal mold<sup>0</sup> whereon we stand,
 This continent of spacious Heav'n, adorned
 With plant, fruit, flow'r ambrosial, gems and gold,

 In motion or in alt:<sup>o</sup> him soon they met halt
 Under spread ensigns moving nigh, in slow
 But firm battalion; back with speediest sail
 535 Zophiel,<sup>2</sup> of Cherubim the swiftest wing,
 Came flying, and in mid-air aloud thus cried:
 " 'Arm, warriors, arm for fight, the foe at hand,
 Whom fled we thought, will save us long pursuit
 This day, fear not his flight; so thick a cloud
 540 He comes, and settled in his face I see
 Sad<sup>o</sup> resolution and secure:<sup>o</sup> let each sober / confident
 His adamantine" coat gird well, and each of hardest metal
 Fit well his helm, gripe fast his orb'd shield,
 Borne ev'n<sup>o</sup> or high, for this day will pour down,
 545 If I conjecture<sup>o</sup> aught, no drizzling shower,
 But rattling storm of arrows barbed with fire.'
 So warned he them aware themselves, and soon
 In order, quit of all impediment;<sup>o</sup> hindrance
 Instant without disturb<sup>o</sup> they took alarm, disorder
 550 And onward move embattled;<sup>o</sup> when behold in hattle order
 Not distant far the heavy pace the foe
 Approaching gross<sup>o</sup> and huge; in hollow cube
 Training<sup>o</sup> his devilish enginry, impaled<sup>o</sup> compact
 On every side with shadowing squadrons deep, haiding/fenced in 555 To hide the fraud. At interview<sup>o</sup> both stood at mutual view
 A while, but suddenly at head appeared
 Satan: and thus was heard commanding loud:
 " 'Vanguard, to right and left the front unfold;
 That all may see who hate us, how we seek 560 Peace and composure,<sup>o</sup> and with open breast agreement
 Stand ready to receive them, if they like
 Our overture,<sup>3</sup> and turn not back perverse;
 But that I doubt, however witness Heaven,
 Heav'n witness thou anon, while we discharge
 565 Freely our part: ye who appointed stand
 Do as you have in charge, and briefly touch
 What we propound, and loud that all may hear.'
 "So scoffing in ambiguous words, he scarce
 Had ended; when to right and left the front
 570 Divided, and to either flank retired.
 Which to our eyes discovered new and strange,
 A triple-mounted<sup>o</sup> row of pillars laid in three rows
 On wheels (for like to pillars most they seemed
 Or hollowed bodies made of oak or fir
 575 With branches lopped, in wood or mountain felled)
 Brass, iron, stony mold,<sup>o</sup> had not their mouths matter
 With hideous orifice gaped on us wide,

2. Hebrew, "spy of God."

3. A pun on "offer to negotiate" and "opening" (aperture), the hole or muzzle of the cannon. The passage is full of puns: e.g., "perverse" (line 562, peevish, turned the wrong way), "discharge" (line 564), "charge," "touch," "propound," "loud" (lines 566—67), "hollow" (line 578).

Portending hollow truce; at each behind
 A Seraph stood, and in his hand a reed
 Stood waving tipped with fire; while we suspense,<sup>0</sup> m suspense
 Collected stood within our thoughts amused,<sup>0</sup> puzzled
 Not long, for sudden all at once their reeds
 Put forth, and to a narrow vent applied
 With nicest<sup>0</sup> touch. Immediate in a flame, most exact
 But soon obscured with smoke, all Heav'n appeared,
 From those deep-throated engines belched,<sup>4</sup> whose roar
 Emboweled<sup>0</sup> with outrageous noise the air, disemboweled
 And all her entrails tore, disgorging foul
 Their devilish glut, chained<sup>5</sup> thunderbolts and hail
 Of iron globes, which on the victor host
 Leveled, with such impetuous fury smote,
 That whom they hit, none on their feet might stand,
 Though standing else as rocks, but down they fell
 By thousands, Angel on Archangel rolled,
 The sooner for their arms; unarmed they might
 Have easily as Spirits evaded swift
 By quick contraction or remove; but now
 Foul dissipation<sup>0</sup> followed and forced rout; dispersal
 Nor served it to relax their serried files.<sup>6</sup>
 What should they do? If on they rushed, repulse Repeated, and indecent<sup>0</sup> overthrow shameful
 Doubled, would render them yet more despised,
 And to their foes a laughter; for in view
 Stood ranked of Seraphim another row
 In posture to displode<sup>0</sup> their second dire<sup>0</sup> explode / volley
 Of thunder: back defeated to return
 They worse abhorred. Satan beheld their plight,
 And to his mates thus in derision called:
 " 'O friends, why come not on these victors proud?
 Erewhile they fierce were coming, and when we,
 To entertain them fair with open front<sup>0</sup> candid face
 And breast,<sup>0</sup> (what could we more?) propounded<sup>7</sup> terms heart
 Of composition, straight they changed their minds,
 Flew off, and into strange vagaries<sup>0</sup> fell, eccentric motions
 As they would dance, yet for a dance they seemed Somewhat extravagant and wild, perhaps
 For joy of offering peace: but I suppose
 If our proposals once again were heard
 We should compel them to a quick result.'
 "To whom thus Belial in like gamesome mood:
 'Leader, the terms we sent were terms of weight,
 Of hard contents, and full of force urged home,
 Such as we might perceive amused them<sup>8</sup> all,
 And stumbled many: who receives them right,

4. See the sustained debased imagery relating to bodily functions, e.g., "belched," "emboweled," "entrails."

5. Chainshot, which was linked cannonballs.

6. I.e., nor did it do any good ("served it") to loosen up ("relax") their rows pressed close together ("serried files").

7. More puns, on "propounded," "terms of composition," "flew off."

8. A pun on "held their attention" and "bewildered them." Belial also puns on (among other terms) "stumbled" ("nonplussed" and "tripped up") and "understand" ("comprehend" and "prop up").

Had need from head to foot well understand;
 Not understood, this gift they have besides,
 They show us when our foes walk not upright."
 "So they among themselves in pleasant<sup>0</sup> vein jesting
 Stood scoffing, heightened in their thoughts beyond
 All doubt of victory, Eternal Might
 To match with their inventions they presumed
 So easy, and of his thunder made a scorn,
 And all his host derided, while they<sup>0</sup> stood the good angels
 A while in trouble; but they stood not long,
 Rage prompted them at length, and found them arms
 Against such hellish mischief fit to oppose.
 Forthwith (behold the excellence, the power,
 Which God hath in his mighty angels placed)
 Their arms away they threw, and to the hills
 (For earth hath this variety from Heav'n
 Of pleasure situate in hill and dale)
 Light as the lightning glimpse they ran, they flew,
 From their foundations loos'ning to and fro
 They plucked the seated hills with all their load,<sup>9</sup>
 Rocks, waters, woods, and by the shaggy tops
 Uplifting bore them in their hands: amaze,<sup>0</sup> astonishment, panic
 Be sure, and terror seized the rebel host,
 When coming towards them so dread they saw
 The bottom of the mountains upward turned,
 Till on those cursed engines' triple-row
 They saw them whelmed, and all their confidence
 Under the weight of mountains buried deep,
 Themselves invaded<sup>0</sup> next, and on their heads attacked
 Main<sup>0</sup> promontories flung, which in the air great, solid
 Came shadowing, and oppressed<sup>0</sup> whole legions armed. pressed down
 Their armor helped their harm, crushed in and bruised
 Into their substance pent,<sup>0</sup> which wrought them pain closely confined
 Implacable, and many a dolorous groan,
 Long struggling underneath, ere they could wind
 Out of such prison, though Spirits of purest light,
 Purest at first, now gross by sinning grown.
 The rest in imitation to like arms
 Betook them, and the neighboring hills uptore;
 So hills amid the air encountered hills
 Hurl'd to and fro with jaculation<sup>0</sup> dire, hurling
 That underground they fought in dismal shade;
 Infernal noise; war seemed a civil<sup>0</sup> game humane, refined
 To<sup>0</sup> this uproar; horrid confusion heaped compared to
 Upon confusion rose: and now all Heav'n
 Had gone to wrack, with ruin overspread,
 Had not th' Almighty Father where he sits
 Shrined in his sanctuary of Heav'n secure,
 Consulting<sup>0</sup> on the sum of things, foreseen
 This tumult, and permitted all, advised:<sup>0</sup> considering deliberately

9. The hurling of hills as missiles is taken from the war between the Olympian gods and the Giants, in Hesiod's Theogony.

675 That his great purpose he might so fulfill,
 To honor his anointed Son avenged
 Upon his enemies, and to declare
 All power on him transferred: whence to his Son
 Th' assessor<sup>1</sup> of his throne he thus began:

680 " 'Effulgence<sup>0</sup> of my glory, Son beloved, radiance
 Son in whose face invisible is beheld
 Visibly,<sup>2</sup> what by Deity I am,
 And in whose hand what by decree I do,
 Second Omnipotence,<sup>3</sup> two days are passed,

685 Two days, as we compute the days of Heav'n,
 Since Michael and his powers went forth to tame
 These disobedient; sore hath been their fight,
 As likeliest was, when two such foes met armed;
 For to themselves I left them, and thou know'st,

690 Equal in their creation they were formed,
 Save what sin hath impaired, which yet hath wrought
 Insensibly,<sup>0</sup> for I suspend their doom; imperceptively
 Whence in perpetual fight they needs must last
 Endless, and no solution will be found:

695 War wearied hath performed what war can do,
 And to disordered rage let loose the reins,
 With mountains as with weapons armed, which makes Wild work in Heav'n, and dangerous to the main.<sup>0</sup> whole continent
 Two days are therefore passed, the third is thine;

700 For thee I have ordained it, and thus far
 Have suffered,<sup>0</sup> that the glory may be thine permitted
 Of ending this great war, since none but thou
 Can end it. Into thee such virtue and grace
 Immense I have transfused, that all may know

705 In Heav'n and Hell thy power above compare,
 And this perverse commotion governed thus,
 To manifest thee worthiest to be heir
 Of all things, to be heir and to be King
 By sacred unction,<sup>0</sup> thy deserved right. anointing

710 Go then thou mightiest in thy Father's might,
 Ascend my chariot, guide the rapid wheels
 That shake Heav'n's basis, bring forth all my war,<sup>0</sup> instruments of war
 My bow and thunder, my almighty arms
 Gird on, and sword upon thy puissant thigh;

715 Pursue these sons of darkness, drive them out
 From all Heav'n's bounds into the utter<sup>0</sup> deep: outer
 There let them learn, as likes them, to despise
 God and Messiah his anointed<sup>4</sup> King.'

720 "He said, and on his Son with rays direct Shone full, he all his Father full expressed Ineffably<sup>0</sup> into his face received, inexpressibly
 And thus the Filial Godhead answering spake:

1. One who sits beside, an associate.

2. Cf. Colossians 1.15: "Who is the image of the invisible God."

3. Two omnipotences are a logical impossibility; the phrase underscores Milton's view that the Son receives all power from the Father. Cf. John 5.19,

"The Son can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do," which Milton cites in Christian Doctrine 1.5 to argue that the Son derives all power from the Father.

4. The literal meaning of "messiah."

" O Father, O Supreme of heav'nly Thrones,
 First, highest, holiest, best, thou always seek'st
 725 To glorify thy Son, I always thee,
 As is most just; this I my glory account,
 My exaltation, and my whole delight,
 That thou in me well pleased, declar'st thy will Fulfilled, which to fulfill is all my bliss.
 730 Scepter and power, thy giving, I assume,
 And gladlier shall resign, when in the end
 Thou shalt be all in all, and I in thee
 Forever, and in me all whom thou lov'st:
 But whom thou hat'st, I hate, and can put on 735 Thy terrors, as I put thy mildness on,
 Image of thee in all things; and shall soon,
 Armed with thy might, rid Heav'n of these rebelled,
 To their prepared ill mansion driven down
 To chains of darkness, and th' undying worm,
 740 That from thy just obedience could revolt,
 Whom to obey is happiness entire.
 Then shall thy saints unmixed, and from th' impure
 Far separate, circling thy holy mount
 Unfeigned hallelujahs to thee sing,
 745 Hymns of high praise, and I among them chief.'
 So said, he o'er his scepter bowing, rose
 From the right hand of Glory where he sat,
 And the third sacred morn began to shine
 Dawning through Heav'n: forth rushed with whirlwind sound
 750 The chariot of Paternal Deity,
 Flashing thick flames, wheel within wheel undrawn,
 Itself instinct with<sup>o</sup> spirit, but convoyed animated by
 By four Cherubic shapes, four faces each<sup>5</sup>
 Had wondrous, as with stars their bodies all
 755 And wings were set with eyes, with eyes the wheels
 Of beryl, and careering fires between;<sup>6</sup>
 Over their heads a crystal firmament,
 Whereon a sapphire throne, inlaid with pure
 Amber, and colors of the show'ry arch.<sup>o</sup> rainbow
 760 He in celestial panoply all armed
 Of radiant urim,<sup>7</sup> work divinely wrought,
 Ascended, at his right hand Victory
 Sat eagle-winged, beside him hung his bow
 And quiver with three-bolted thunder stored,<sup>8</sup>
 765 And from about him fierce effusion" rolled co-pious emission
 Of smoke and bickering<sup>o</sup> flame, and sparkles dire; flickering
 Attended with ten thousand thousand saints,
 He onward came, far off his coming shone,
 And twenty thousand<sup>9</sup> (I their number heard)

5. The Son's living chariot, with its four-faced Cherubim—the faces being man, lion, ox, and eagle—is taken from Ezekiel 1 (especially 1.10) and 10.

6. Cf. Ezekiel 10.12: "And their whole body, and their backs, and their hands, and their wings, and the wheels, were full of eyes round about, even the wheels that they four had."

7. Gems worn by Aaron in his "breastplate of judgment" (Exodus 28.30).

8. Jove's bird was the eagle; his weapon was the thunderbolt.

9. Cf. Psalm 68.17: "The chariots of God are twenty thousand, even thousands of angels: the Lord is among them."

Chariots of God, half on each hand were seen:
 He on the wings of Cherub rode sublime<sup>0</sup> lifted up
 On the crystalline sky, in sapphire throned,
 Illustrious<sup>0</sup> far and wide, but by his own shining
 First seen: them unexpected joy surprised,
 When the great ensign of Messiah blazed
 Aloft by angels borne, his sign in Heav'n:
 Under whose conduct Michael soon reduced<sup>0</sup> led back
 His army, circumfused<sup>0</sup> on either wing, spread around
 Under their Head embodied all in one.
 Before him Power Divine his way prepared;
 At his command the uprooted hills retired
 Each to his place, they heard his voice and went Obsequious,<sup>0</sup> Heav'n his wonted face renewed, dutiful
 And with fresh flow'rets hill and valley smiled.
 This saw his hapless foes but stood obdured,<sup>0</sup> hardened
 And to rebellious fight rallied their powers
 Insensate, hope conceiving from despair.
 In heav'nly Spirits could such perverseness dwell?
 But to convince the proud what signs avail,
 Or wonders move th' obdurate to relent?
 They hardened more by what might most reclaim,
 Grieving<sup>0</sup> to see his glory, at the sight aggrieved
 Took envy, and aspiring to his height,
 Stood re-embattled<sup>1</sup> fierce, by force or fraud
 Weening<sup>0</sup> to prosper, and at length prevail thinking
 Against God and Messiah, or to fall
 In universal ruin last, and now
 To final battle drew; disdainful flight,
 Or faint retreat; when the great Son of God
 To all his host on either hand thus spake:
 " 'Stand still in bright array ye saints, here stand
 Ye angels armed, this day from battle rest;<sup>2</sup>
 Faithful hath been your warfare, and of God
 Accepted, fearless in his righteous cause,
 And as ye have received, so have ye done
 Invincibly; but of this cursed crew
 The punishment to other hand belongs,
 Vengeance is his,<sup>3</sup> or whose he sole appoints;
 Number to this day's work is not ordained
 Nor multitude, stand only and behold
 God's indignation on these godless poured
 By me, not you but me they have despised,
 Yet envied; against me is all their rage,
 Because the Father, t' whom in Heav'n supreme Kingdom and power and glory appertains,
 Hath honored me according to his will.
 Therefore to me their doom he hath assigned;
 That they may have their wish, to try with me
 In battle which the stronger proves, they all,

1. Drawn up again in battle formation.

2. Echoes Moses' words when God destroyed the Egyptians in the Red Sea (Exodus 14.13): "Fear ye not, stand still, and see the salvation of the Lord, which he will shew to you to day."

3. Cf. Romans 12.19: "Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord."

- 820 Or I alone against them, since by strength
 They measure all, of other excellence
 Not emulous," nor care who them excels;
 Nor other strife with them do I vouchsafe."
desirous of rivaling
grant
- "So spake the Son, and into terror changed
 825 His count'nance too severe to be beheld
 And full of wrath bent on his enemies.
 At once the Four<sup>4</sup> spread out their starry wings
 With dreadful shade contiguous, and the orbs
 Of his fierce chariot rolled, as with the sound
 830 Of torrent floods, or of a numerous host.
 He on his impious foes right onward drove,
 Gloomy as night; under his burning wheels
 The steadfast empyrean shook throughout,
 All but the throne itself of God. Full soon
 835 Among them he arrived; in his right hand
 Grasping ten thousand thunders, which he sent
 Before him, such as in their souls infixed
 Plagues; they astonished<sup>0</sup> all resistance lost,
 All courage; down their idle weapons dropped;
 840 O'er shields and helms, and helmed heads he rode
 Of Thrones and mighty Seraphim prostrate,
 That wished the mountains now might be again
 Thrown on them as a shelter from his ire.
 Nor less on either side tempestuous fell
 845 His arrows, from the fourfold-visaged Four,
 Distinct" with eyes, and from the living wheels,
 Distinct alike with multitude of eyes;
 One spirit in them ruled, and every eye
 Glared lightning, and shot forth pernicious<sup>0</sup> fire
 850 Among th' accursed, that withered all their strength,
 And of their wonted" vigor left them drained,
 Exhausted, spiritless, afflicted, fall'n.
 Yet half his strength he put not forth, but checked
 His thunder in mid-volley, for he meant
 855 Not to destroy, but root them out of Heav'n:
 The overthrown he raised, and as a herd
 Of goats or timorous flock together thronged
 Drove them before him thunderstruck, pursued
 With terrors and with furies to the bounds
 860 And crystal wall of Heav'n, which op'ning wide,
 Rolled inward, and a spacious gap disclosed
 Into the wasteful<sup>0</sup> deep; the monstrous sight
 Strook them with horror backward, but far worse
 Urged them behind; headlong themselves they threw 865 Down from the verge of Heav'n, eternal wrath
 Rurnt after them to the bottomless pit.
 "Hell heard th' unsufferable noise, Hell saw
 Heav'n ruining<sup>0</sup> from Heav'n, and would have fled
 Affrighted; but strict fate had cast too deep
 870 Her dark foundations, and too fast had bound.
 Nine days they fell; confounded Chaos roared,

struck with fearadorneddeadlyaccustomeddesolatefalling headlong

And felt tenfold confusion in their fall
 Through his wild anarchy, so huge a rout<sup>o</sup> defeated army
 Encumbered<sup>o</sup> him with ruin: Hell at last burdened
 875 Yawning received them whole, and on them closed,
 Hell their fit habitation fraught with fire
 Unquenchable, the house of woe and pain.
 Disburdened Heav'n rejoiced, and soon repaired
 Her mural<sup>o</sup> breach, returning whence it rolled. in the wall
 880 Sole "victor from th' expulsion of his foes
 Messiah his triumphal chariot turned:
 To meet him all his saints, who silent stood
 Eyewitnesses of his almighty acts,
 With jubilee<sup>o</sup> advanced; and as they went, joyful shouts
 885 Shaded with branching palm, each order bright
 Sung triumph, and him sung victorious King,
 Son, Heir, and Lord, to him dominion giv'n,
 Worthiest to reign: he celebrated rode
 Triumphant through mid-Heav'n, into the courts
 890 And temple of his mighty Father throned
 On high: who into glory him received,
 Where now he sits at the right hand of bliss.
 "Thus measuring things in Heav'n by things on earth
 At thy request, and that thou may'st beware
 895 By what is past, to thee I have revealed
 What might have else to human race been hid;
 The discord which befell, and war in Heav'n
 Among th' angelic powers,<sup>o</sup> and the deep fall armies
 Of those too high aspiring, who rebelled
 900 With Satan, he who envies now thy state,
 Who now is plotting how he may seduce
 Thee also from obedience, that with him
 Bereaved of happiness thou may'st partake
 His punishment, eternal misery;
 905 Which would be all his solace and revenge,
 As a despite<sup>o</sup> done against the Most High,
 Thee once to gain companion of his woe. malicious act
 But listen not to his temptations, warn
 Thy weaker;<sup>5</sup> let it profit thee to have heard
 910 By terrible example the reward
 Of disobedience; firm they might have stood,
 Yet fell; remember, and fear to transgress."

Book 7

Descend from Heav'n Urania,<sup>1</sup> by that name
 If rightly thou art called, whose voice divine
 Following, above th' Olympian hill I soar,
 Above the flight of Pegasean wing.<sup>2</sup>

5. Eve, who is, however, present for this story.
 1. Urania, the Greek Muse of astronomy, had been made into the Muse of Christian poetry by du Bartas and other religious poets. Milton, however, constructs another derivation for her (line

5ff.). Milton begins Book 7 with a third proem (lines 1-39).

2. Pegasus, the flying horse of inspired poetry, suggests (in connection with Bellerophon, line 18) Mil-
 ton's sense of perilous audacity in writing this poem.

The meaning, not the name I call: for thou
 Nor of the muses nine, nor on the top
 Of old Olympus dwell'st, but heav'nly born
 Before the hills appeared, or fountain flowed,
 Thou with eternal Wisdom<sup>3</sup> didst converse,<sup>0</sup> associate Wisdom thy sister, and with her didst play
 In presence of th' Almighty Father, pleased
 With thy celestial song. Up led by thee
 Into the Heav'n of Heav'ns I have presumed,
 An earthly guest, and drawn empyreal air,
 Thy temp'ring;<sup>0</sup> with like safety guided down made suitable by thee
 Return me to my native element:
 Lest from this flying steed unreined (as once Bellerophon,<sup>4</sup> though from a lower clime)<sup>0</sup> region
 Dismounted, on th' Aleian field I fall
 Erroneous<sup>0</sup> there to wander and forlorn. straying
 Half yet remains unsung, but narrower bound
 Within the visible diurnal sphere;<sup>5</sup>
 Standing on earth, not rapt<sup>0</sup> above the pole, transported, enraptured
 More safe I sing with mortal voice, unchanged
 To hoarse or mute, though fall'n on evil days,
 On evil days though fall'n, and evil tongues;
 In darkness, and with dangers compassed round,<sup>6</sup>
 And solitude; yet not alone, while thou
 Visit'st my slumbers nightly, or when morn
 Purples the east: still govern thou my song,
 Urania, and fit audience find, though few.
 But drive far off the barbarous dissonance
 Of Bacchus and his revelers, the race
 Of that wild rout that tore the Thracian bard
 In Rhodope, where woods and rocks had ears
 To rapture, till the savage clamor drowned
 Both harp and voice;<sup>7</sup> nor could the Muse defend
 Her son.<sup>8</sup> So fail not thou, who thee implores:
 For thou art heav'nly, she an empty dream.

Say goddess, what ensued when Raphael,
 The affable Archangel, had forewarned
 Adam by dire example to beware
 Apostasy, by what befell in Heaven
 To those apostates, lest the like befall

3. In Proverbs 8:24–31 Wisdom tells of her activities before the Creation: "Then I was by him [God], as one brought up with him: and I was daily his delight, rejoicing always before him." Milton describes "eternal Wisdom" as a daughter of God (personification of his wisdom) and devises a myth in which the Muse of divine poetry ("celestial song," line 12) is Wisdom's "sister"—also, thereby, originating from God.

4. Bellerophon incurred the gods' anger when he tried to fly to heaven upon Pegasus; Zeus sent an insect to sting the horse, and Bellerophon fell down to the "Aleian field" (plain of error), where he wandered alone and blind until his death.

5. The universe, which appears to rotate daily.

6. After the Restoration of Charles II (May 1660) and until the passage of the Act of Oblivion

(August 1660), Milton was in danger of death and dismemberment (like Orpheus, lines 34–35); several of his republican colleagues were hanged, disembowelled, and quartered for their part in the revolution and regicide.

7. The music of the "Thracian bard" Orpheus, type of the poet, charmed even "woods and rocks," but his song was drowned out by the Bacchantes, a "wild rout" of screaming women who murdered and dismembered him and threw his body parts into the Hebrus River, which rises in the "Rhodope" mountains. Milton fears that a similar "barbarous dissonance" unleashed by the Restoration will drown out his voice and threaten his life.

8. Orpheus's mother is Calliope, Muse of epic poetry.

In Paradise to Adam or his race,
 Charged not to touch the interdicted tree,
 If they transgress, and slight that sole command,
 So easily obeyed amid the choice
 Of all tastes else<sup>0</sup> to please their appetite, besides
 Though wand'ring. He with his consorted<sup>0</sup> Eve wedded
 The story heard attentive, and was filled
 With admiration,<sup>0</sup> and deep muse to hear amazement
 Of things so high and strange, things to their thought
 So unimaginable as hate in Heav'n,
 And war so near the peace of God in bliss
 With such confusion: but the evil soon
 Driv'n back redounded<sup>0</sup> as a flood on those flowed back
 From whom it sprung, impossible to mix
 With blessedness. Whence Adam soon repealed<sup>0</sup> abandoned
 The doubts that in his heart arose: and now
 Led on, yet sinless, with desire to know
 What nearer might concern him, how this world
 Of Heav'n and earth conspicuous<sup>0</sup> first began, visible
 When, and whereof created, for what cause,
 What within Eden or without was done
 Before his memory, as one whose drouth<sup>0</sup> thirst
 Yet scarce allayed still eyes the current<sup>0</sup> stream, flowing
 Whose liquid murmur heard new thirst excites,
 Proceeded thus to ask his heav'nly guest:
 "Great things, and full of wonder in our ears,
 Far differing from this world, thou hast revealed
 Divine interpreter, by favor sent Down from the empyrean to forewarn
 Us timely of what might else<sup>0</sup> have been our loss, otherwise
 Unknown, which human knowledge could not reach:
 For which to the Infinitely Good we owe
 Immortal thanks, and his admonishment
 Receive with solemn purpose to observe purpose
 Immutably his sov'reign will, the end<sup>0</sup>
 Of what we are. But since thou hast vouchsafed
 Gently for our instruction to impart
 Things above earthly thought, which yet concerned
 Our knowing, as to Highest Wisdom seemed,
 Deign to descend now lower, and relate
 What may no less perhaps avail us known,
 How first began this Heav'n which we behold
 Distant so high, with moving fires adorned
 Innumerable, and this which yields or fills
 All space, the ambient<sup>0</sup> air wide interfused yielding
 Embracing round this florid<sup>0</sup> earth, what cause flimvery
 Moved the Creator in his holy rest
 Through all eternity so late to build
 In Chaos,<sup>9</sup> and the work begun, how soon

9. Adam's question about God's actions before the Creation was often cited as an example of presumptuous and dangerous speculation, especially when, as here, it implies mutability in God. But in Milton's Eden, error that is not deliberate is not sinful.

Absolved," if unforbid thou may'st unfold finished
 What we, not to explore the secrets ask
 Of his eternal empire, but the more
 To magnify<sup>0</sup> his works, the more we know. glorify
 And the great light of day yet wants to run
 Much of his race though steep, suspense" in Heav'n attentive, suspended
 Held by thy voice, thy potent voice he hears,
 And longer will delay to hear thee tell
 His generation,<sup>0</sup> and the rising birth creation
 Of nature from the unapparent<sup>1</sup> deep:
 Or if the star of evening and the moon
 Haste to thy audience, night with her will bring Silence, and sleep list'ning to thee will watch,<sup>0</sup> stay awake
 Or we can bid his absence, till thy song
 End, and dismiss thee ere the morning shine."
 Thus Adam his illustrious guest besought:
 And thus the godlike angel answered mild:
 "This also thy request with caution asked
 Obtain: though to recount almighty works
 What words or tongue of Seraph can suffice,
 Or heart of man suffice to comprehend?
 Yet what thou canst attain, which best may serve
 To glorify the Maker, and infer<sup>0</sup> make, render
 Thee also happier, shall not be withheld
 Thy hearing, such commission from above
 I have received, to answer thy desire
 Of knowledge within bounds; beyond abstain
 To ask, nor let thine own inventions<sup>0</sup> hope speculations
 Things not revealed, which th' invisible King,
 Only omniscient, hath suppressed in night,
 To none communicable in earth or Heaven:
 Enough is left besides to search and know.
 But knowledge is as food, and needs no less
 Her temperance over appetite, to know
 In measure what the mind may well contain,
 Oppresses else with surfeit, and soon turns
 Wisdom to folly, as nourishment to wind.
 "Know then, that after Lucifer from Heav'n
 (So call him, brighter once amidst the host
 Of angels, than that star the stars among)<sup>2</sup>
 Fell with his flaming legions through the deep
 Into his place, and the great Son returned
 Victorious with his saints, th' Omnipotent
 Eternal Father from his throne beheld
 Their multitude, and to his Son thus spake:
 " 'At least our envious foe hath failed, who thought
 All like himself rebellious, by whose aid
 This inaccessible high strength, the seat
 Of Deity supreme, us dispossessed,<sup>3</sup>

1. Invisible, because dark and without form.

2. I.e., Lucifer (Satan) was once brighter among the angels than the star bearing his name is among the stars.

3. I.e., once he had dispossessed us.

He trusted to have seized, and into fraud<sup>0</sup> deception, error
 Drew many, whom their place knows here no more;
 145 Yet far the greater part have kept, I see,
 Their station, Heav'n yet populous retains Number sufficient to possess her realms
 Though wide, and this high temple to frequent
 With ministeries due and solemn rites:
 150 But lest his heart exalt him in the harm
 Already done, to have dispeopled Heav'n,
 My damage fondly<sup>0</sup> deemed, I can repair foolishly
 That detriment, if such it be to lose
 Self-lost, and in a moment will create
 155 Another world, out of one man a race
 Of men innumerable, there to dwell,
 Not here, till by degrees of merit raised
 They open to themselves at length the way
 Up hither, under long obedience tried,
 160 And earth be changed to Heav'n and Heav'n to earth,
 One kingdom, joy and union without end.
 Meanwhile inhabit lax,<sup>o</sup> ye Powers of Heav'n;
 And thou my Word, begotten Son, by thee spread out
 This I perform, speak thou, and be it done:<sup>4</sup>
 165 My overshadowing Spirit and might with thee
 I send along, ride forth, and bid the deep
 Within appointed bounds be heav'n and earth,
 Boundless the deep, because I am who fill
 Infinitude, nor vacuous the space,
 no Though I uncircumscribed myself retire,
 And put not forth my goodness, which is free
 To act or not,<sup>5</sup> necessity and chance
 Approach not me, and what I will is fate.'
 "So spake th' Almighty and to what he spake
 175 His Word, the Filial Godhead, gave effect.
 Immediate are the acts of God, more swift
 Than time or motion, but to human ears
 Cannot without process of speech be told,
 So told as earthly notion" can receive.<sup>6</sup> human understanding
 180 Great triumph and rejoicing was in Heav'n
 When such was heard declared the Almighty's will;
 'Glory' they sung to the Most High, 'good will
 To future men, and in their dwellings peace:
 Glory to him whose just avenging ire
 185 Had driven out th' ungodly from his sight
 And th' habitations of the just; to him
 Glory and praise, whose wisdom had ordained
 Good out of evil to create, instead
 Of Spirits malign a better race to bring

4. God identifies himself as Creator, the Son as his agent to speak his creating Word.

5. Milton's God creates out of Chaos, not out of nothing; the matter of Chaos emanated from God, and Chaos is therefore "infinite" because God fills it even while he withholds his "goodness" (creating power) from it. Neither necessity nor chance affect in any way God's freely willed creative act.

6. Raphael explains the principle of accommodation, whereby God's acts are said to be translated into terms humans can understand: here, a six-day creation. This principle allows for an escape from biblical literalism.

Into their vacant room, and thence diffuse
 His good to worlds and ages infinite.
 So sang the hierarchies: meanwhile the Son
 On his great expedition now appeared,
 Girt with omnipotence, with radiance crowned
 Of majesty divine, sapience<sup>0</sup> and love wisdom
 Immense, and all his Father in him shone.
 About his chariot numberless were poured
 Cherub and Seraph, Potentates and Thrones,
 And Virtues, winged Spirits, and chariots winged,
 From the armory of God, where stand of old
 Myriads between two brazen mountains lodged
 Against<sup>0</sup> a solemn day, harnessed at hand, in preparation for Celestial equipage; and now came forth
 Spontaneous, for within them spirit lived,
 Attendant on their Lord: Heav'n opened wide
 Her ever-during<sup>0</sup> gates, harmonious sound lasting
 On golden hinges moving, to let forth
 The King of Glory<sup>7</sup> in his powerful Word
 And Spirit coming to create new worlds.
 On heav'nly ground they stood, and from the shore
 They viewed the vast immeasurable abyss
 Outrageous<sup>0</sup> as a sea, dark, wasteful, wild, enormous, violent
 Up from the bottom turned by furious winds
 And surging waves, as mountains to assault
 Heav'n's height, and with the center mix the pole.
 " 'Silence, ye troubled waves, and thou deep, peace,'
 Said then th' Omnific<sup>0</sup> Word, 'your discord end': all-creating
 "Nor stayed, but on the wings of Cherubim
 Uplifted, in paternal glory rode
 Far into Chaos, and the world unborn;
 For Chaos heard his voice: him all his train
 Followed in bright procession to behold
 Creation, and the wonders of his might.
 Then stayed the fervid<sup>0</sup> wheels, and in his hand burning
 He took the golden compasses, prepared
 In God's eternal store, to circumscribe
 This universe, and all created things:
 One foot he centered, and the other turned
 Round through the vast profundity obscure,
 And said, 'Thus far extend, thus far thy bounds,
 This be thy just<sup>0</sup> circumference O world.'
 Thus God the heav'n<sup>0</sup> created, thus the earth, exact
 Matter unformed and void: darkness profound the sky
 Covered th' abyss: but on the wat'ry calm
 His brooding wings the Spirit of God outspread,
 And vital virtue<sup>0</sup> infused, and vital warmth power
 Throughout the fluid mass, but downward purged
 The black tartareous cold infernal dregs<sup>8</sup>

7. Cf. Psalm 24.9: "Lift up your heads, O ye gates; even lift them up, ye everlasting doors; and the King of glory<sup>7</sup> shall come in."

8. Crusty, gritty stuff left over from the elements infused with life that make up the universe; it is associated with Hell ("infernal," "tartarous") and presumably used in its composition.

Adverse to life: then founded, then conglobed
 Like things to like, the rest to several place
 Disparted, and between spun out the air,
 And earth self-balanced on her center hung.

" 'Let there be light,' said God,<sup>9</sup> and forthwith light
 Ethereal, first of things, quintessence<sup>1</sup> pure
 Sprung from the deep, and from her native east
 To journey through the airy gloom began,
 Sphered in a radiant cloud, for yet the sun
 Was not; she in a cloudy tabernacle
 Sojourned the while. God saw the light was good;
 And light from darkness by the hemisphere
 Divided: light the day, and darkness night
 He named. Thus was the first day ev'n and morn:<sup>2</sup>
 Nor passed uncelebrated, nor unsung
 By the celestial choirs, when orient light
 Exhaling<sup>0</sup> first from darkness they beheld;
 Birthday of heav'n<sup>0</sup> and earth; with joy and shout
 The hollow universal orb they filled,
 And touched their golden harps, and hymning praised
 God and his works, Creator him they sung,
 Both when first evening was, and when first morn.

"Again, God said, 'Let there be firmament
 Amid the waters, and let it divide
 The waters from the waters': and God made
 The firmament, expanse of liquid,<sup>0</sup> pure,
 Transparent, elemental air diffused
 In circuit to the uttermost convex<sup>0</sup>
 Of this great round:<sup>0</sup> partition firm and sure,
 The waters underneath from those above
 Dividing: for as earth, so he the world
 Built on circumfluous<sup>0</sup> waters calm, in wide
 Crystalline ocean, and the loud misrule
 Of Chaos far removed, lest fierce extremes
 Contiguous might distemper the whole frame:<sup>1</sup>
 And heav'n<sup>0</sup> he named the firmament: so ev'n
 And morning chorus sung the second day.

 Main<sup>0</sup> ocean flowed, not idle, but with warm
 Prolific humor<sup>0</sup> soft'ning all her globe,
 Fermented the great mother to conceive,
 Sate with genial<sup>0</sup> moisture, when God said,

9. God's creating words, here and later, are quoted from Genesis 1—2, but Milton freely elaborates the creatures' responses to those words.

1. Ether was thought to be a fifth element or "quintessence," the substance of the celestial bodies above the moon.

2. One twenty-four-hour period measured in the Hebrew manner from sundown to sundown.

3. Disturb the order and mixture of the elements and the created "frame" of the universe.

4. The earth is at first the "embryo" enveloped in a "womb of waters" and is then herself the "great mother" (line 281), made ready ("fermented") to conceive and bear every other being.

Emergent, and their broad bare backs upheave
 Into the clouds, their tops ascend the sky:
 So high as heaved the tumid<sup>0</sup> hills, SO low
 Down sunk a hollow bottom broad and deep, swollen
 Capacious bed of waters: thither they Hasted with glad precipitance,<sup>0</sup> uprolled headlongfall
 As drops on dust conglobing from the dry;
 Part rise in crystal wall, or ridge direct<sup>0</sup> surge forward
 For haste; such flight the great command impressed
 On the swift floods: as armies at the call
 Of trumpet (for of armies thou hast heard)
 Troop to their standard, so the wat'ry throng,
 Wave rolling after wave, where way they found,
 If steep, with torrent rapture,<sup>0</sup> if through plain, force
 Soft-ebbing; nor withstood them rock or hill,
 But they, or<sup>0</sup> underground, or circuit wide whether
 With serpent error<sup>0</sup> wand'ring, found their way, winding course
 And on the washy ooze deep channels wore;
 Easy, ere God had bid the ground be dry,
 All but within those banks, where rivers now
 Stream, and perpetual draw their humid train.<sup>0</sup> following
 The dry land, earth, and the great receptacle
 Of congregated waters he called seas:
 And saw that it was good, and said, 'Let th' earth
 Put forth the verdant grass, herb yielding seed,
 And fruit tree yielding fruit after her kind;
 Whose seed is in herself upon the earth.'
 He scarce had said, when the bare earth, till then
 Desert and bare, unsightly, unadorned,
 Brought forth the tender grass, whose verdure clad
 Her universal face with pleasant green,
 Then herbs of every leaf, that sudden flow'ring
 Op'ning their various colors, and made gay blossomed
 Her bosom smelling sweet: and these scarce blown,<sup>0</sup>
 Forth flourished thick the clust'ring vine, forth crept hard as horn
 The swelling gourd, up stood the corny<sup>0</sup> reed low-growing
 Embattled in her field: add the humble<sup>0</sup> shrub, tangled
 And bush with frizzled hair implicit:<sup>0</sup> last
 Rose as in dance the stately trees, and spread
 Their branches hung with copious fruit; or gemmed<sup>0</sup> put forth buds
 Their blossoms: with high woods the hills were crowned,
 With tufts the valleys and each fountain side,
 With borders long the rivers. That earth now
 Seemed like to Heav'n, a seat where gods might dwell,
 Or wander with delight, and love to haunt
 Her sacred shades: though God had yet not rained
 Upon the earth, and man to till the ground
 None was, but from the earth a dewy mist
 Went up and watered all the ground, and each
 Plant of the field, which ere it was in the earth
 God made, and every herb, before it grew
 On the green stem; God saw that it was good:
 So ev'n and morn recorded the third day.

"Again th' Almighty spake: 'Let there be lights
 High in th' expanse of heaven" to divide the sky
 The day from night; and let them be for signs,
 For seasons, and for days, and circling years,
 And let them be for lights as I ordain

 And set them in the firmament of heav'n

 And light from darkness to divide. God saw,
 Surveying his great work, that it was good;
 For of celestial bodies first the sun
 A mighty sphere he framed, unlightsome first,
 Though of ethereal mold:" then formed the moon fashioned from ether
 Globose, and every magnitude of stars,
 And sowed with stars the heav'n thick as a field:
 Of light by far the greater part he took,
 Transplanted from her cloudy shrine,<sup>5</sup> and placed
 In the sun's orb, made porous to receive
 And drink the liquid light, firm to retain
 Her gathered beams, great palace now of light.
 Hither as to their fountain other stars

 And hence the morning planet gilds her horns;<sup>6</sup>

 First in his east the glorious lamp was seen,
 Regent of day, and all th' horizon round
 Invested with bright rays, jocund" to run merry

 Dawn, and the Pleiades<sup>7</sup> before him danced

 But grateful to acknowledge whence his good

 Directed in devotion, to adore
 And worship God supreme, who made him chief
 Of all his works: therefore th' Omnipotent
 Eternal Father (for where is not he Present) thus to his Son audibly spake:
 " Let us make now man in our image, man
 In our similitude, and let them rule
 Over the fish and fowl of sea and air,
 Beast of the field, and over all the earth,
 And every creeping thing that creeps the ground.'
 This said, he formed thee, Adam, thee O man
 Dust of the ground, and in thy nostrils breathed
 The breath of life; in his own image he Created thee, in the image of God

2. The ant will become the symbol of a frugal and self-governing republic ("pattern of just equality") with the "popular" (populous, plebian) tribes of common people ("commonalty") joined in rule (lines 486—89); Milton made it such a symbol in his prose tract The Ready and Easy Way. Bees here (lines 489—93) suggest delightful ease but are not yet (as in 1.768—75) a symbol of monarchy and associated with Hell.

3. See 8.342-54, and Genesis 2.19-20.

4. Sea serpents were so described in Aeneid 2.203-7.

5. Both "stand erect" and "elevate his condition": his erect stance was understood to signify that he was created for Heaven.

6. Both "be in harmony" and "communicate."

- Express,<sup>0</sup> and thou becam'st a living soul. exact, manifest
 Male he created thee, but thy consort
 530 Female for race; then blessed mankind, and said,
 'Be fruitful, multiply, and fill the earth,
 Subdue it, and throughout dominion hold
 Over fish of the sea, and fowl of the air,
 And every living thing that moves on the earth.'
 535 Wherever thus created, for no place
 Is yet distinct by name, thence,<sup>0</sup> as thou know'st from there
 He brought thee into this delicious<sup>0</sup> grove, delightful
 This garden, planted with the trees of God,
 Delectable both to behold and taste;
 540 And freely all their pleasant fruit for food
 Gave thee, all sorts are here that all th' earth yields,
 Variety without end; but of the tree
 Which tasted works knowledge of good and evil,
 Thou may'st not; in the day thou eat'st, thou di'st;
 545 Death is the penalty imposed, beware,
 And govern well thy appetite, lest Sin
 Surprise thee, and her black attendant Death.
 Here finished he, and all that he had made
 Viewed, and behold all was entirely good;
 550 So ev'n and morn accomplished the sixth day:
 Yet not till the Creator from his work
 Desisting, though unwearied, up returned
 Up to the Heav'n of Heav'ns his high abode,
 Thence to behold his new-created world
 555 Th' addition of his empire, how it showed
 In prospect from his throne, how good, how fair,
 Answering his great Idea.<sup>7</sup> Up he rode Followed with acclamation and the sound
 Symphonious of ten thousand harps that tuned<sup>0</sup> performed
 560 Angelic harmonies: the earth, the air
 Resounded (thou remember'st, for thou heard'st),
 The heav'ns and all the constellations rung,
 The planets in their stations list'ning stood,
 While the bright pomp<sup>0</sup> ascended jubilant. triumphal procession
 565 " 'Open, ye everlasting gates,' they sung,
 'Open, ye Heav'ns, your living doors; let in
 The great Creator from his work returned
 Magnificent,<sup>8</sup> his six days' work, a world;
 Open, and henceforth oft; for God will deign
 570 To visit oft the dwellings of just men
 Delighted, and with frequent intercourse
 Thither will send his winged messengers
 On errands of supernal<sup>0</sup> grace.' So sung heavenly
 The glorious train ascending: he through Heav'n,
 575 That opened wide her blazing<sup>0</sup> portals, led radiant
 To God's eternal house direct the way,

7. Eternal archetype or pattern, as in Plato: concept in the mind of God.

8. Cf. Psalm 24.7: "Lift up your heads, O ye gates; and be ye lift up, ye everlasting doors; and the King of glory shall come in."

A broad and ample road, whose dust is gold
 And pavement stars, as stars to thee appear,
 Seen in the galaxy, that Milky Way
 580 Which nightly as a circling zone<sup>0</sup> thou seest belt
 Powdered with stars. And now on earth the seventh
 Evening arose in Eden, for the sun
 Was set, and twilight from the east came on,
 Forerunning night; when at the holy mount
 585 Of Heav'n's high-seated top, th' imperial throne
 Of Godhead, fixed forever firm and sure,
 The Filial Power arrived, and sat him down
 With his great Father, for he<sup>9</sup> also went Invisible, yet stayed (such privilege 590 Hath Omnipresence) and the work ordained,<sup>0</sup> ordered, enacted
 Author and end of all things, and from work
 Now resting, blessed and hallowed the sev'nth day,
 As resting on that day from all his work,
 But not in silence holy kept; the harp
 595 Had work and rested not, the solemn pipe,
 And dulcimer, all organs<sup>0</sup> of sweet stop, wind instruments
 All sounds on fret<sup>1</sup> by string or golden wire
 Tempered<sup>0</sup> soft tunings, intermixed with voice brought into harmony
 Choral<sup>0</sup> or unison: of incense clouds in parts
 600 Fuming from golden censers hid the mount.
 "Creation and the six days' acts they sung:
 'Great are thy works, Jehovah, infinite
 Thy power; what thought can measure thee or tongue
 Relate thee; greater now in thy return
 605 Than from the giant<sup>2</sup> angels; thee that day
 Thy thunders magnified; but to create
 Is greater than created to destroy.
 Who can impair thee, Mighty King, or bound
 Thy empire? Easily the proud attempt
 610 Of Spirits apostate and their counsels vain
 Thou hast repelled, while impiously they thought
 Thee to diminish, and from thee withdraw
 The number of thy worshippers. Who seeks
 To lessen thee, against his purpose serves
 615 To manifest the more thy might: his evil
 Thou usest, and from thence creat'st more good.
 Witness this new-made world, another heav'n
 From Heaven gate not far, founded in view
 On the clear hyaline,<sup>3</sup> the glassy sea;
 620 Of amplitude almost immense,<sup>0</sup> with stars immeasurable
 Numerous, and every star perhaps a world
 Of destined habitation; but thou know'st
 Their seasons: among these the seat of men,
 Earth with her nether ocean circumfused,<sup>0</sup> surrounded, bathed

9. The Father.

1. Bar on the fingerboard of a stringed instrument.
"Dulcimer": the Hebrew bagpipe (Daniel 3.5).2. The allusion implies that the myth of the Giants' revolt against Jove is a classical type or version of the angels' rebellion.

3. From the Greek word for glass (Revelation 4.6), the waters above the firmament as contrasted with the "nether ocean" (line 624), the earth's seas.

625 Their pleasant dwellingplace. Thrice happy men,
 And sons of men, whom God hath thus advanced,
 Created in his image, there to dwell
 And worship him, and in reward to rule
 Over his works, on earth, in sea, or air,
 630 And multiply a race of worshippers
 Holy and just: thrice happy if they know
 Their happiness, and persevere upright.'
 "So sung they, and the empyrean rung,
 With hallelujahs:<sup>4</sup> thus was Sabbath kept.
 635 And thy request think now fulfilled, that asked
 How first this world and face of things began,
 And what before thy memory was done
 From the beginning, that posterity
 Informed by thee might know; if else thou seek'st
 640 Aught, not surpassing human measure, say."

Book 8

The angel ended, and in Adam's ear
 So charming<sup>0</sup> left his voice, that he a while spell-binding
 Thought him still speaking, still stood fixed to hear;
 Then as new-waked thus gratefully replied:<sup>1</sup>
 5 "What thanks sufficient, or what recompense
 Equal have I to render thee, divine
 Historian, who thus largely hast allayed
 The thirst I had of knowledge, and vouchsafed
 This friendly condescension to relate
 10 Things else by me unsearchable, now heard
 With wonder, but delight, and, as is due,
 With glory attributed to the high
 Creator; something yet of doubt remains,
 Which only thy solution<sup>0</sup> can resolve. explanation
 15 When I behold this goodly frame,<sup>0</sup> this world the universe
 Of heav'n and earth consisting, and compute
 Their magnitudes, this earth a spot, a grain,
 An atom, with the firmament compared
 And all her numbered<sup>0</sup> stars, that seem to roll numerous 20 Spaces incomprehensible (for such
 Their distance argues and their swift return
 Diurnal)<sup>0</sup> merely to officiate<sup>0</sup> light daily / supply
 Round this opacous<sup>0</sup> earth, this punctual<sup>0</sup> spot, dark / pointlike
 One day and night; in all their vast survey
 25 Useless besides; reasoning I oft admire,<sup>0</sup> wonder
 How Nature wise and frugal could commit
 Such disproportions, with superfluous hand
 So many nobler bodies to create,
 Greater so manifold,<sup>0</sup> to this one use, so much greater

4. Hebrew, "praise the Lord."

1. When Milton divided Book 7 of the ten-book version of 1667 into the present Books 7 and 8, he replaced a line reading "To whom thus Adam gratefully replied" with these introductory lines,

For aught appears,<sup>0</sup> and on their orbs impose as it seems
 Such restless revolution day by day
 Repeated, while the sedentary<sup>0</sup> earth, motionless
 That better might with far less compass<sup>0</sup> move, circular course
 Served by more noble than herself, attains
 Her end without least motion, and receives,
 As tribute such a sumless<sup>0</sup> journey brought incalculable
 Of incorporeal<sup>0</sup> speed, her warmth and light; like that of spirits
 Speed, to describe whose swiftness number fails."

So spake our sire, and by his count'nance seemed Ent'ring on studious thoughts abstruse, which Eve
 Perceiving where she sat retired in sight,
 With lowliness majestic from her seat,
 And grace that won who saw to wish her stay,
 Rose, and went forth among her fruits and flow'rs,
 To visit<sup>0</sup> how they prospered, bud and bloom, see
 Her nursery;<sup>2</sup> they at her coming sprung
 And touched by her fair tendance gladlier grew.
 Yet went she not as not with such discourse
 Delighted, or not capable her ear
 Of what was high: such pleasure she reserved,
 Adam relating, she sole auditress;
 Her husband the relater she preferred
 Before the angel, and of him to ask
 Chose rather;<sup>3</sup> he, she knew, would intermix
 Grateful<sup>0</sup> digressions, and solve high dispute gratifying
 With conjugal caresses, from his lip
 Not words alone pleased her. O when meet now
 Such pairs, in love and mutual honor joined?
 With goddess-like demeanor forth she went;
 Not unattended, for on her as queen
 A pomp<sup>0</sup> of winning Graces<sup>4</sup> waited still, procession
 And from about her shot darts of desire
 Into all eyes to wish her still in sight.
 And Raphael now to Adam's doubt proposed Benevolent and facile<sup>0</sup> thus replied. easy, affable

"To ask or search I blame thee not, for heav'n
 Is as the book of God before thee set,
 Wherein to read his wondrous works, and learn
 His seasons, hours, or days, or months, or years:
 This to attain, whether heav'n move or earth,
 Imports not, if thou reckon right; the rest<sup>5</sup>
 From man or angel the great Architect
 Did wisely to conceal, and not divulge
 His secrets to be scanned<sup>0</sup> by them who ought judged critically
 Rather admire;<sup>0</sup> or if they list to try marvel
 Conjecture, he his fabric<sup>0</sup> of the heav'ns design

2. Her garden, where she "nurses" her flowers and plants.

3. The emphasis on choice suggests that Eve is not bound in Eden by the Pauline directive (1 Corinthians 14.34—35) that women refrain from speaking in church and instead learn at home from their husbands, but she voluntarily and for her own pleasure observes this hierarchical decorum.

4. The Graces attended on Venus.

5. Presumably, God's ways with other worlds and other creatures inhabiting them (if any).

Hath left to their disputes, perhaps to move
 His laughter at their quaint opinions wide<sup>6</sup> wide of the mark
 Hereafter, when they come to model heav'n
 And calculate the stars, how they will wield
 The mighty frame, how build, unbuild, contrive
 To save appearances,<sup>6</sup> how gird the sphere
 With centric and eccentric scribbled o'er,
 Cycle and epicycle,<sup>7</sup> orb in orb:
 Already by thy reasoning this I guess,
 Who art to lead thy offspring, and supposest
 That bodies bright and greater should not serve
 The less not bright, nor heav'n such journeys run,
 Earth sitting still, when she alone receives
 The benefit: consider first, that great
 Or bright infers<sup>0</sup> not excellence: the earth implies
 Though, in comparison of heav'n, so small,
 Nor glistering, may of solid good contain
 More plenty than the sun that barren shines,
 Whose virtue on itself works no effect,
 But in the fruitful earth; there first received
 His beams, unactive<sup>0</sup> else, their vigor find. ineffective
 Yet not to earth are those bright luminaries
 Officious,<sup>0</sup> but to thee earth's habitant. attentive, dutiful
 And for the heav'n's wide circuit, let it speak
 The Maker's high magnificence, who built
 So spacious, and his line stretched out so far;
 That man may know he dwells not in his own;
 An edifice too large for him to fill,
 Lodged in a small partition, and the rest
 Ordained for uses to his Lord best known.
 The swiftness of those circles<sup>0</sup> attribute, orbits
 Though numberless,<sup>0</sup> to his omnipotence, innumerable
 That to corporeal substances could add
 Speed almost spiritual;<sup>0</sup> me thou think'st not slow, that of angels
 Who since the morning hour set out from Heav'n
 Where God resides, and ere midday arrived
 In Eden, distance inexpressible
 By numbers that have name. But this I urge,
 Admitting motion in the heav'ns, to show
 Invalid that which thee to doubt it moved;
 Not that I so affirm, though so it seem
 To thee who hast thy dwelling here on earth.<sup>8</sup>
 God to remove his ways from human sense,
 Placed heav'n from earth so far, that earthly sight,

6. To find ways of explaining discrepancies between their hypotheses and observed facts.

7. In the Ptolemaic system, observed irregularities in the motion of heavenly bodies were first explained by hypothesizing eccentric orbits, then by adding epicycles, which were smaller orbits whose centers ride on the circumference of the main eccentric circles and carry the planets. The Copernican system also had some recourse to epicycles.

8. Raphael declines to "reveal" astronomical truth to Adam, leaving that matter open to human scientific speculation. He suggests here that Adam's Ptolemaic assumptions result from his earthbound perspective, and he implies that angels see the universe in different terms. In the following lines (122–58) he sets forth advanced scientific notions Adam had not imagined: not only Copernican astronomy but multiple universes and other inhabited planets.

If it presume, might err in things too high,
 And no advantage gain. What if the sun
 Be center to the world, and other stars
 By his attractive virtue<sup>0</sup> and their own

125 Incited, dance about him various rounds?"
 Their wand'ring course now high, now low, then hid,
 Progressive, retrograde,<sup>0</sup> or standing still,

130 Insensibly three different motions move?<sup>1</sup>
 Which else to several spheres thou must ascribe,
 Moved contrary with thwart obliquities,<sup>2</sup>
 Or save the sun his labor, and that swift
 Nocturnal and diurnal rhomb<sup>3</sup> supposed,

135 Invisible else above all stars, the wheel
 Of day and night; which needs not thy belief,
 If earth industrious of herself fetch day
 Traveling east, and with her part averse
 From the sun's beam meet night, her other part

140 Still luminous by his ray. What if that light
 Sent from her through the wide transpicuous<sup>0</sup> air,
 To the terrestrial moon be as a star
 Enlight'ning her by day, as she by night
 This earth? Reciprocal, if land be there,

145 Fields and inhabitants: her spots thou seest
 As clouds, and clouds may rain, and rain produce
 Fruits in her softened soil, for some to eat
 Allotted there; and other suns perhaps
 With their attendant moons thou wilt descry

150 Communicating male<sup>0</sup> and female<sup>0</sup> light,
 Which two great sexes animate<sup>0</sup> the world,
 Stored in each orb perhaps with some that live.
 For such vast room in nature unpossessed
 By living soul, desert and desolate,

155 Only to shine, yet scarce to contribute
 Each orb a glimpse of light, conveyed so far
 Down to this habitable,<sup>0</sup> which returns
 Light back to them, is obvious to dispute.<sup>0</sup>

But whether thus these things, or whether not,

160 Whether the sun predominant in heav'n
 Rise on the earth, or earth rise on the sun,
 He from the east his flaming road begin,
 Or she from west her silent course advance
 With inoffensive" pace that spinning sleeps

165 On her soft axle, while she paces ev'n,
 And bears thee soft with the smooth air along,
 Solicit" not thy thoughts with matters hid,

magnetism
circles

baclzivard

trans-parent

original / reflected endow with life

inhabited place
open to dispute

unobstructed, harmless

9. Mercury, Venus, Mars, Jupiter, Saturn, and the moon. In the Ptolemaic system the "seventh" is the sun; in the Copernican, earth.

1. Copernicus described the three motions as daily, annual, and "motion in declination" whereby the earth's axis swerved so as always to point in the same direction.

2. Oblique paths that cross each other.

3. Wheel, that is, the primum mobile, which (if we accept the Ptolemaic system and "save the sun his labor") revolves around the universe every twenty-four hours, carrying the planets and their spheres with it.

Leave them to God above, him serve and fear;
 Of other creatures, as him pleases best,
 170 Wherever placed, let him dispose: joy thou
 In what he gives to thee, this Paradise
 And thy fair Eve; heav'n is for thee too high
 To know what passes there; be lowly wise:
 Think only what concerns thee and thy being;
 175 Dream not of other worlds, what creatures there
 Live, in what state, condition, or degree,
 Contented that thus far hath been revealed
 Not of earth only but of highest Heav'n."
 To whom thus Adam cleared of doubt, replied:
 180 "How fully hast thou satisfied me, pure
 Intelligence<sup>o</sup> of Heav'n, angel serene, spirit
 And freed from intricacies, taught to live
 The easiest way, nor with perplexing thoughts
 To interrupt the sweet of life, from which 185 God hath bid dwell far off all anxious cares,
 And not molest us, unless we ourselves
 Seek them with wand'ring thoughts, and notions vain.
 But apt the mind or fancy is to rove
 Unchecked, and of her roving is no end;
 190 Till warned, or by experience taught, she learn,
 That not to know at large of things remote
 From use, obscure and subtle, but to know
 That which before us lies in daily life,
 Is the prime wisdom; what is more, is fume," vapor
 195 Or emptiness, or fond impertinence,<sup>o</sup> foolish irrelevance
 And renders us in things that most concern
 Unpracticed, unprepared, and still to seek.<sup>o</sup> always searching
 Therefore from this high pitch let us descend
 A lower flight, and speak of things at hand
 200 Useful, whence haply<sup>o</sup> mention may arise perhaps
 Of something not unseasonable to ask
 By sufferance,<sup>o</sup> and thy wonted<sup>o</sup> favor deigned. permission / usual
 Thee I have heard relating what was done
 Ere my remembrance: now hear me relate
 205 My story, which perhaps thou hast not heard;
 And day is yet not spent; till then thou seest
 How subtly to detain thee I devise,
 Inviting thee to hear while I relate,
 Fond,<sup>o</sup> were it not in hope of thy reply: foolish
 210 For while I sit with thee, I seem in Heav'n,
 And sweeter thy discourse is to my ear
 Than fruits of palm tree pleasantest to thirst
 And hunger both, from labor, at the hour
 Of sweet repast; they satiate, and soon fill,
 215 Though pleasant, but thy words with grace divine
 Imbued, bring to their sweetness no satiety."
 To whom thus Raphael answered heav'nly meek:
 "Nor are thy lips ungraceful, sire of men,
 Nor tongue ineloquent; for God on thee
 220 Abundantly his gifts hath also poured

Inward and outward both, his image fair:
 Speaking or mute all comeliness and grace
 Attends thee, and each word, each motion forms.
 Nor less think we in Heav'n of thee on earth
 Than of our fellow-servant, and inquire
 Gladly into the ways of God with man:
 For God we see hath honored thee, and set
 On man his equal love: say therefore on;
 For I that day was absent, as befell,
 Bound on a voyage uncouth<sup>0</sup> and obscure, strange
 Far on excursion toward the gates of Hell;
 Squared in full legion (such command we had)
 To see that none thence issued forth a spy,
 Or enemy, while God was in his work,
 Lest he incensed at such eruption bold,
 Destruction with creation might have mixed.
 Not that they durst without his leave attempt,
 But us he sends upon his high behests
 For state,<sup>0</sup> as sov'reign King, and to inure<sup>0</sup> ceremony/strengthen
 Our prompt obedience. Fast we found, fast shut
 The dismal gates, and barricadoed strong;
 But long ere our approaching heard within
 Noise, other than the sound of dance or song,
 Torment, and loud lament, and furious rage.
 Glad we returned up to the coasts of light
 Ere Sabbath evening: so we had in charge.
 But thy relation now; for I attend,
 Pleased with thy words no less than thou with mine."
 So spake the godlike Power, and thus our sire:
 "For man to tell how human life began
 Is hard; for who himself beginning knew?<sup>4</sup>
 Desire with thee still longer to converse
 Induced me. As new-waked from soundest sleep
 Soft on the flow'ry herb I found me laid
 In balmy sweat, which with his beams the sun
 Soon dried, and on the reeking<sup>0</sup> moisture fed. steaming
 Straight toward heav'n my wond'ring eyes I turned,
 And gazed a while the ample sky, till raised
 By quick instinctive motion up I sprung
 As thitherward endeavoring, and upright
 Stood on my feet; about me round I saw
 Hill, dale, and shady woods, and sunny plains,
 And liquid lapse<sup>0</sup> of murmuring streams; by these, flow
 Creatures that lived, and moved, and walked, or flew,
 Birds on the branches warbling; all things smiled,
 With fragrance and with joy my heart o'erflowed.
 Myself I then perused, and limb by limb
 Surveyed, and sometimes went,<sup>0</sup> and sometimes ran walked
 With supple joints, as lively vigor led:
 But who I was, or where, or from what cause,

4. Compare Satan's inability to remember his origins (5.856—63), from which he infers self-creation, whereas Adam infers a Maker (line 278).

Knew not; to speak I tried, and forthwith spake,
 My tongue obeyed and readily could name
 Whate'er I saw.<sup>5</sup> 'Thou sun,' said I, 'fair light,
 And thou enlightened earth, so fresh and gay,
 275 Ye hills and dales, ye rivers, woods, and plains,
 And ye that live and move, fair creatures, tell,
 Tell, if ye saw, how came I thus, how here?
 Not of myself; by some great Maker then,
 In goodness and in power preeminent;
 280 Tell me, how may I know him, how adore,
 From whom I have that thus I move and live,
 And feel that I am happier than I know.'
 While thus I called, and strayed I knew not whither,
 From where I first drew air, and first beheld
 285 This happy light, when answer none returned,
 On a green shady bank profuse of flow'rs
 Pensive I sat me down; there gentle sleep
 First found me, and with soft oppression seized
 My drowsed sense, untroubled, though I thought
 290 I then was passing to my former state
 Insensible, and forthwith to dissolve:
 When suddenly stood at my head a dream,
 Whose inward apparition gently moved
 My fancy to believe I yet had being,
 295 And lived: one came, methought, of shape divine,
 And said, 'Thy mansion<sup>0</sup> wants<sup>0</sup> thee, Adam, rise,
 First man, of men innumerable ordained
 First father, called by thee I come thy guide
 To the garden of bliss, thy seat<sup>0</sup> prepared.'
 300 So saying, by the hand he took me raised,
 And over fields and waters, as in air
 Smooth sliding without step, last led me up
 A woody mountain whose high top was plain,
 A circuit wide, enclosed, with goodliest trees
 305 Planted, with walks, and bowers, that what I saw
 Of earth before scarce pleasant seemed. Each tree
 Load'n with fairest fruit, that hung to the eye
 Tempting, stirred in me sudden appetite
 To pluck and eat; whereat I waked, and found
 310 Before mine eyes all real, as the dream
 Had lively<sup>0</sup> shadowed: here had new begun
 My wand'ring, had not he who was my guide
 Up hither, from among the trees appeared,
 Presence Divine. Rejoicing, but with awe
 315 In adoration at his feet I fell
 Submiss:<sup>0</sup> he reared me, and 'Whom thou sought'st I am,'
 Said mildly, 'Author of all this thou seest
 Above, or round about thee or beneath.
 This Paradise I give thee, count it thine
 320 To till and keep,<sup>0</sup> and of the fruit to eat:
 Of every tree that in the garden grows

5. Adam's ability to name the creatures was said to signify his intuitive understanding of their natures.

Eat freely with glad heart; fear here no dearth:
 But of the tree whose operation<sup>0</sup> brings action
 Knowledge of good and ill, which I have set
 The pledge of thy obedience and thy faith,
 Amid the garden by the Tree of Life,
 Remember what I warn thee, shun to taste,
 And shun the bitter consequence: for know,
 The day thou eat'st thereof, my sole command
 Transgressed, inevitably thou shalt die;
 From that day mortal, and this happy state
 Shalt lose, expelled from hence into a world
 Of woe and sorrow.<sup>6</sup> Sternly he pronounced
 The rigid interdiction,<sup>0</sup> which resounds prohibition
 Yet dreadful in mine ear, though in my choice
 Not to incur; but soon his clear aspect<sup>0</sup> untroubled expression
 Returned and gracious purpose<sup>0</sup> thus renewed: speech
 'Not only these fair bounds, but all the earth
 To thee and to thy race I give; as lords
 Possess it, and all things that therein live,
 Or live in sea, or air, beast, fish, and fowl.
 In sign whereof each bird and beast behold
 After their kinds; I bring them to receive
 From thee their names, and pay thee fealty
 With low subjection; understand the same
 Of fish within their wat'ry residence,
 Not hither summoned, since they cannot change
 Their element to draw the thinner air.'
 As thus he spake, each bird and beast behold
 Approaching two and two, these<sup>0</sup> cowering low
 With blandishment,<sup>0</sup> each bird stooped on his wing. the beasts
 I named them, as they passed, and understood flattering gesture
 Their nature, with such knowledge God endued
 My sudden apprehension:<sup>7</sup> but in these
 I found not what methought I wanted still;
 And to the heav'nly Vision thus presumed:
 " 'O by what name, for thou above all these,
 Above mankind, or aught than mankind higher,
 Surpassest far my naming,<sup>8</sup> how may I
 Adore thee, Author of this universe,
 And all this good to man, for whose well-being
 So amply, and with hands so liberal
 Thou hast provided all things: but with me
 I see not who partakes. In solitude
 What happiness, who can enjoy alone,
 Or all enjoying, what contentment find?'
 Thus I presumptuous; and the Vision bright,
 As with a smile more brightened, thus replied:
 " 'What call'st thou solitude? Is not the earth

6. Compare God's commands to Adam (Genesis 1.28-30, 2.16-17) with Milton's elaboration here.
 7. Adam had already begun naming the sun and features of the earth (lines 272-74), but here he names (and thereby shows he understands) all living creatures.

8. Adam reasons, as the Scholastics did, from the creatures to the fact of a Creator, but he cannot name (and so indicates that he cannot understand) God, except as God reveals himself.

 Their language and their ways? They also know,<sup>0</sup> have understanding
 And reason not contemptibly; with these
- 375 Find pastime, and bear rule; thy realm is large.<sup>1</sup>
 So spake the Universal Lord, and seemed
 So ordering. I with leave of speech implored,
 And humble deprecation thus replied:
 "Let not my words offend thee, Heav'nly Power,
- 380 My Maker, be propitious while I speak.
 Hast thou not made me here thy substitute,
 And these inferior far beneath me set?
 Among unequals what society
 Can sort,<sup>0</sup> what harmony or true delight? agree

 Tedious alike. Of fellowship I speak
- 390 Such as I seek, fit to partake<sup>0</sup> partake of
 All rational delight, wherein the brute
 Cannot be human consort; they rejoice
 Each with their kind, lion with lioness;
 So fitly them in pairs thou hast combined;

 So well converse, nor with the ox the ape;
 Worse then can man with beast, and least of all.<sup>1</sup>
 "Whereto th' Almighty answered, not displeas'd:

 How have I then with whom to hold converse

9. As with poorly matched musical instruments, Adam's string is too taut ("intense") and the animals' is too slack ("remiss") to be in harmony ("suit").

1. God is absolutely perfect, man only relatively so ("in degree"), and thereby needs companionship with a fit mate to assuage ("solace") the "defects" arising from solitude.

Shouldst propagate, already infinite;
 And through all numbers absolute, though One;
 But man by number is to manifest

 Thus I emboldened spake, and freedom used

 This answer from the gracious Voice Divine:
 " Thus far to try thee, Adam, I was pleased,
 And find thee knowing not of beasts alone,
 Which thou hast rightly named, but of thyself,
 Expressing well the spirit within thee free,
 My image, not imparted to the brute,
 Whose fellowship therefore unmeet<sup>0</sup> for thee unsuitable
 Good reason was thou freely shouldst dislike,
 And be so minded still. I, ere thou spak'st,
 Knew it not good for man to be alone,
 And no such company as then thou saw'st
 Intended thee, for trial only brought,
 To see how thou couldst judge of fit and meet:
 What next I bring shall please thee, be assured,
 Thy likeness, thy fit help, thy other self,
 Thy wish, exactly to thy heart's desire.<sup>3</sup>
 "He ended, or I heard no more, for now

 Though sleeping, where I lay, and saw the shape
 Still glorious before whom awake I stood;
 Who stooping opened my left side, and took
 From thence a rib, with cordial<sup>0</sup> spirits warm, from the heart
 And lifeblood streaming fresh; wide was the wound,
 But suddenly with flesh filled up and healed:
 The rib he formed and fashioned with his hands;

2. God, "though One," (line 421), contains all numbers, but man has to remedy the "imperfection" of being single (line 423) by procreating and thereby multiplying his single and thereby "defective" image (line 425).

3. Compare the account in Genesis 2.18 with Milton's elaboration,

- 470 Under his forming hands a creature grew,<sup>4</sup>
 Manlike, but different sex, so lovely fair
 That what seemed fair in all the world seemed now
 Mean, or in her summed up, in her contained
 And in her looks, which from that time infused
- 475 Sweetness into my heart, unfelt before,
 And into all things from her air<sup>o</sup> inspired mien, look
 The spirit of love and amorous delight.
 She disappeared, and left me dark, I waked
 To find her, or forever to deplore
- 480 Her loss, and other pleasures all abjure:
 When out of hope, behold her, not far off,
 Such as I saw her in my dream, adorned
 With what all earth or heaven could bestow
 To make her amiable:<sup>o</sup> on she came, lovely
- 485 Led by her heav'nly Maker, though unseen,<sup>5</sup>
 And guided by his voice, nor uninformed
 Of nuptial sanctity and marriage rites:
 Grace was in all her steps, Heav'n in her eye,
 In every gesture dignity and love.
- 490 I overjoyed could not forbear aloud:
 "This turn hath made amends; thou hast fulfilled
 Thy words, Creator bounteous and benign,
 Giver of all things fair, but fairest this
 Of all thy gifts, nor enviest.<sup>o</sup> I now see given reluctantly
- 495 Bone of my bone, flesh of my flesh, my self
 Before me; woman is her name, of man

 Father and mother, and to his wife adhere;
 And they shall be one flesh, one heart, one soul.<sup>6</sup>
- 500 "She heard me thus, and though divinely brought,
 Yet innocence and virgin modesty,
 Her virtue and the conscience<sup>o</sup> of her worth consciousness
 That would be wooed, and not unsought be won,
 Not obvious,<sup>o</sup> not obtrusive,<sup>o</sup> but retired, bold /forward
- 505 The more desirable, or to say all,
 Nature herself, though pure of sinful thought,
 Wrought in her so that, seeing me, she turned;
 I followed her, she what was honor knew,
 And with obsequious<sup>o</sup> majesty approved compliant
- 510 My pleaded reason. To the nuptial bow'r
 I led her blushing like the morn: all heav'n,
 And happy constellations on that hour
 Shed their selectest influence; the earth
 Gave sign of gratulation,<sup>o</sup> and each hill; rejoicing, congratulation
- 515 Joyous the birds; fresh gales and gentle airs<sup>7</sup>
 Whispered it to the woods, and from their wings
 Flung rose, flung odors from the spicy shrub,
 Disporting,<sup>o</sup> till the amorous bird of night<sup>o</sup> frollicking / nightingale

7. Both breezes and melodies. "Gales": winds.

Sung spousal, and bid haste the evening star<sup>o</sup> Venus
 On his hill top, to light the bridal lamp.
 Thus I have told thee all my state, and brought
 My story to the sum of earthly bliss
 Which I enjoy, and must confess to find
 In all things else delight indeed, but such
 As used or not, works in the mind no change,
 Nor vehement desire, these delicacies
 I mean of taste, sight, smell, herbs, fruits, and flow'rs,
 Walks, and the melody of birds; but here
 Far otherwise, transported<sup>o</sup> I behold, enraptured
 Transported touch; here passion first I felt,
 Commotion<sup>o</sup> strange, in all enjoyments else mental agitation
 Superior and unmoved, here only weak
 Against the charm of beauty's powerful glance.
 Or<sup>o</sup> nature failed in me, and left some part either
 Not proof enough such object to sustain,<sup>o</sup> withstand
 Or from my side subducting,<sup>o</sup> took perhaps subtracting
 More than enough; at least on her bestowed
 Too much of ornament, in outward show
 Elaborate, of inward less exact.
 For well I understand in the prime end
 Of nature her th' inferior, in the mind
 And inward faculties, which most excel,
 In outward also her resembling less
 His image who made both, and less expressing
 The character of that dominion giv'n
 O'er other creatures; yet when I approach
 Her loveliness, so absolute<sup>o</sup> she seems perfect, independent
 And in herself complete, so well to know
 Her own, that what she wills to do or say,
 Seems wisest, virtuousest, discreetest, best;
 All higher knowledge in her presence falls
 Degraded, wisdom in discourse with her
 Loses discount'nanced,<sup>o</sup> and like folly shows; disconcerted, abashed
 Authority and reason on her wait,
 As one intended first, not after made
 Occasionally;<sup>o</sup> and to consummate all, incidentally
 Greatness of mind and nobleness their seat
 Build in her loveliest, and create an awe
 About her, as a guard angelic placed."
 To whom the angel with contracted brow:
 "Accuse not nature, she hath done her part;
 Do thou but thine, and be not diffident<sup>o</sup> mistrustful
 Of wisdom, she deserts thee not, if thou
 Dismiss not her, when most thou need'st her nigh,
 By attributing overmuch to things
 Less excellent, as thou thyself perceiv'st.
 For what admir'st thou, what transports thee so,
 An outside? Fair no doubt, and worthy well
 Thy cherishing, thy honoring, and thy love,
 Not thy subjection: weigh with her thyself;
 Then value: oftentimes nothing profits more

Than self-esteem, grounded on just and right
 Well managed; of that skill the more thou know'st,
 The more she will acknowledge thee her head,<sup>8</sup>
 575 And to realities yield all her shows:
 Made so adorn for thy delight the more,
 So awful,<sup>0</sup> that with honor thou may'st love awe-inspiring
 Thy mate, who sees when thou art seen least wise.
 But if the sense of touch whereby mankind
 580 Is propagated seem such dear delight
 Beyond all other, think the same vouchsafed
 To cattle and each beast; which would not be
 To them made common and divulged,<sup>0</sup> if aught imparted generally
 Therein enjoyed were worthy to subdue
 585 The soul of man, or passion in him move.
 What higher in her society thou find'st
 Attractive, human, rational, love still;
 In loving thou dost well, in passion not,
 Wherein true love consists not; love refines
 590 The thoughts, and heart enlarges, hath his seat
 In reason, and is judicious, is the scale<sup>9</sup>
 By which to heav'nly love thou may'st ascend,
 Not sunk in carnal pleasure, for which cause
 Among the beasts no mate for thee was found."
 595 To whom thus half abashed Adam replied.
 "Neither her outside formed so fair, nor aught
 In procreation common to all kinds
 (Though higher of the genial<sup>1</sup> bed by far,
 And with mysterious reverence I deem)
 600 So much delights me, as those graceful acts,
 Those thousand decencies<sup>0</sup> that daily flow fitting acts
 From all her words and actions, mixed with love
 And sweet compliance, which declare unfeigned
 Union of mind, or in us both one soul;

 More grateful than harmonious sound to the ear.
 Yet these subject not; I to thee disclose
 What inward thence I feel, not therefore foiled,<sup>0</sup> overcome
 Who meet with various objects, from the sense
 610 Variously representing;<sup>2</sup> yet still free
 Approve the best, and follow what I approve.
 To love thou blam'st me not, for love thou say'st
 Leads up to Heav'n, is both the way and guide;
 Bear with me then, if lawful what I ask;
 615 Love not the heav'nly Spirits, and how their love
 Express they, by looks only, or do they mix
 Irradiance, virtual or immediate<sup>0</sup> touch?" actual

8. See I Corinthians 11.3: "the head of every man is Christ; and the head of the woman is the man; and the head of Christ is God."

9. The ladder of love, a Neoplatonic concept for the movement from sensual love to higher forms, and ultimately to love of God (see Castiglione's Courtier, p. 646).

1. Both "nuptial" and "generative." Adam takes respectful issue with the apparent denigration of human sex in Raphael's account of the Neoplatonic ladder, which prompts his question about angelic sex (lines 61 5—17).

2. I.e., various objects, variously represented to me by my senses.

- To whom the angel with a smile that glowed
 Celestial rosy red, love's proper hue,<sup>3</sup>
 620 Answered. "Let it suffice thee that thou know'st
 Us happy, and without love no happiness.
 Whatever pure thou in the body enjoy'st
 (And pure thou wert created) we enjoy
 In eminence,<sup>0</sup> and obstacle find none higher degree
- 625 Of membrane, joint, or limb, exclusive bars:
 Easier than air with air, if Spirits embrace,
 Total they mix, union of pure with pure
 Desiring; nor restrained conveyance need
 As flesh to mix with flesh, or soul with soul.
- 630 But I can now no more; the parting sun
 Beyond the earth's green cape and verdant isles
 Hesperian sets,<sup>4</sup> my signal to depart.
 Be strong, live happy, and love, but first of all
 Him whom to love is to obey, and keep
- 635 His great command; take heed lest passion sway
 Thy judgment to do aught, which else free will
 Would not admit;<sup>0</sup> thine and of all thy sons permit
 The weal or woe in thee is placed; beware.
 I in thy persevering shall rejoice,
- 640 And all the blest: stand fast; to stand or fall
 Free in thine own arbitrament<sup>0</sup> it lies. determination
 Perfect within, no outward aid require;<sup>0</sup> depend on
 And all temptation to transgress repel."
 So saying, he arose; whom Adam thus
- 645 Followed with benediction. "Since to part,
 Go heavenly guest, ethereal messenger,
 Sent from whose sov'reign goodness I adore.
 Gentle to me and affable hath been
 Thy condescension, and shall be honored ever
- 650 With grateful memory: thou to mankind
 Be good and friendly still,<sup>0</sup> and oft return." always
 So parted they, the angel up to Heav'n
 From the thick shade, and Adam to his bow'r.

- No more of talk where God or angel guest

 To sit indulgent, and with him partake

of his perceptive inference about angelic love.

1. In this fourth proem (lines 1–47), after signaling his change from pastoral to tragic mode (lines 1–6), Milton emphasizes tragic elements in several classical epics: Achilles pursuing Hector three times around the wall of Troy before killing him (Iliad 22); Turnus fighting Aeneas over the loss of his betrothed Lavinia, and then killed by Aeneas; Odysseus ("the Greek") and Aeneas ("Cytherea's son," i.e., Venus's son) tormented ("perplexed") by Neptune (Poseidon) and Juno, respectively.

2. Milton does not here invoke the Muse but testifies to her customary nightly visits. Milton's nephew reports that he often awoke in the morning with lines of poetry fully formed in his head, ready to dictate them to a scribe.

3. Cloth coverings for horses; "tilting furniture": equipment for jousting; "impresses quaint": cunningly designed heraldic devices on shields; "caparisons": ornamental trappings or armor for horses. After rejecting the classical epic subjects, Milton here rejects the familiar topics of romance.

4. For a heroic poem. He proceeds to recap worries he has voiced before: that the times might not be receptive to such poems ("age too late"), that the "cold Climate" of England or his own advanced age might "damp" (benumb, dampen) his "intended wing / Depressed" (poetic flights held down, kept from soaring).

Of Hesperus,<sup>5</sup> whose office is to bring

 On man's destruction, maugre what might hap

 By night he fled, and at midnight returned
 From compassing the earth, cautious of day,
 Since Uriel regent of the sun descried
 His entrance, and forewarned the Cherubim
 That kept their watch; thence full of anguish driv'n,
 The space of seven continued nights he rode
 With darkness, thrice the equinoctial line<sup>0</sup> equator
 He circled, four times crossed the car of Night
 From pole to pole, traversing each colure;<sup>8</sup>
 On the eighth returned, and on the coast averse<sup>0</sup> turned away
 From entrance on Cherubic watch, by stealth

 Where Tigris at the foot of Paradise

 Downward as far Antarctic; and in length

 At Darien, thence to the land where flows

8. The colures are two great circles that intersect at right angles at the poles. By circling the globe from east to west at the equator and then over the north and south poles, Satan can remain in darkness, keeping the earth between himself and the sun. "Car of Night" (line 65): the earth's shadow, imagined as the chariot of the goddess Night.

9. The Black Sea. Satan's journey (lines 77–82) takes him from there to the Sea of Azov in Russia ("Maeotis"), beyond the river "Ob" in Siberia, which flows into the Arctic Ocean, then south to Antarctica; thence west from "Orontes" (a river in Syria) across the Atlantic to "Darien" (the Isthmus of Panama), then across the Pacific and Asia to India where the "Ganges" and "Indus" rivers [low. 1.  From servitude inglorious well-nigh half

2. Like Adam (8.15ff.) and Eve (4.657-58) but not Raphael (8.114-78), Satan assumes a Ptolemaic universe centered on the earth and human-kind.

3. Graduated in steps ("gradual," line 112) from vegetable to animal to rational forms (souls); cf. 5.469-90.

4. Adam. "This" (line 132): the universe.

Th' angelic name, and thinner left the throng
 Of his adorers. He to be avenged,
 And to repair his numbers thus impaired,
 Whether such virtue<sup>0</sup> spent of old now failed power
 More angels to create, if they at least
 Are his created, or to spite us more,
 Determined to advance into our room
 A creature formed of earth, and him endow,
 Exalted from so base original,<sup>0</sup> origin
 With Heav'nly spoils, our spoils: what he decreed
 He effected; man he made, and for him built
 Magnificent this world, and earth his seat,
 Him lord pronounced, and, O indignity!
 Subjected to his service angel wings,
 And flaming ministers to watch and tend
 Their earthy charge: of these the vigilance
 I dread, and to elude, thus wrapped in mist
 Of midnight vapor glide obscure, and pry
 In every bush and brake, where hap<sup>o</sup> may find luck
 The serpent sleeping, in whose mazy folds
 To hide me, and the dark intent I bring.
 O foul descent! that I who erst contended
 With gods to sit the highest, am now constrained
 Into a beast, and mixed with bestial slime,
 This essence to incarnate and imbrute,<sup>5</sup>
 That to the height of deity aspired;
 But what will not ambition and revenge
 Descend to? Who aspires must down as low
 As high he soared, obnoxious<sup>0</sup> first or last exposed
 To basest things. Revenge, at first though sweet,
 Bitter ere long back on itself recoils;
 Let it; I reckon<sup>0</sup> not, so it light well aimed,
 Since higher I fall short, on him who next care
 Provokes my envy, this new favorite
 Of Heav'n, this man of clay, son of despite,
 Whom us the more to spite his Maker raised
 From dust: spite then with spite is best repaid."
 So saying, through each thicket dank or dry,
 Like a black mist low creeping, he held on
 His midnight search, where soonest he might find
 The serpent: him fast sleeping soon he found
 In labyrinth of many a round self-rolled,
 Flis head the midst, well stored with subtle wiles:
 Not yet in horrid shade or dismal den,
 Nor nocent<sup>0</sup> yet, but on the grassy herb harmful, guilty
 Fearless unfeared he slept: in at his mouth
 The Devil entered, and his brutal<sup>0</sup> sense, animal
 In heart or head, possessing soon inspired
 With act intelligential: but his sleep
 Disturbed not, waiting close<sup>0</sup> th' approach of morn. hidden

5. Satan "imbruting" himself in a snake parodies, grotesquely, the Son's incarnation in human form, as Christ.

Now whenas sacred light began to dawn
 In Eden on the humid flow'rs, that breathed
 Their morning incense, when all things that breathe,
 From th' earth's great altar send up silent praise
 To the Creator, and his nostrils fill
 With grateful<sup>0</sup> smell, forth came the human pair
 And joined their vocal worship to the choir
 Of creatures wanting<sup>0</sup> voice; that done, partake
 The season, prime<sup>0</sup> for sweetest scents and airs:
 Then commune how that day they best may ply
 Their growing work; for much their work outgrew
 The hands' dispatch of two gard'ning so wide.
 And Eve first to her husband thus began:

pleasinglackingbest

"Adam, well may we labor still<sup>0</sup> to dress
 This garden, still to tend plant, herb, and flow'r,
 Our pleasant task enjoined, but till more hands
 Aid us, the work under our labor grows,
 Luxurious<sup>0</sup> by restraint; what we by day
 Lop overgrown, or prune, or prop, or bind,
 One night or two with wanton<sup>0</sup> growth derides,
 Tending to wild. Thou therefore now advise
 Or hear what to my mind first thoughts present,
 Let us divide our labors, thou where choice
 Leads thee, or where most needs, whether to wind
 The woodbine round this arbor, or direct
 The clasping ivy where to climb, while I
 In yonder spring<sup>0</sup> of roses intermixed
 With myrtle, find what to redress<sup>0</sup> till noon:
 For while so near each other thus all day
 Our task we choose, what wonder if so near Looks intervene and smiles, or object new Casual discourse draw on, which intermits<sup>0</sup>
 Our day's work brought to little, though begun
 Early, and th' hour of supper comes unearned."

continuallyluxuriantunrestrainedgrowthset uprightinterrupts

To whom mild answer Adam thus returned:
 "Sole Eve, associate sole,<sup>6</sup> to me beyond
 Compare above all living creatures dear,
 Well hast thou motioned,<sup>0</sup> well thy thoughts employed
 How we might best fulfill the work which here
 God hath assigned us, nor of me shalt pass
 Unpraised: for nothing lovelier can be found
 In woman, than to study household good,
 And good works in her husband to promote.<sup>7</sup>
 Yet not so strictly hath our Lord imposed
 Labor, as to debar us when we need
 Refreshment, whether food, or talk between,
 Food of the mind, or this sweet intercourse
 Of looks and smiles, for smiles from reason flow,
 To brute denied, and are of love the food,
 Love not the lowest end of human life.

proposed

6. Adam puns on "sole" as "unrivaled" and "only" (cf. 4.411).

7. Adam's compliments resemble the praises of a good wife in Proverbs 31.

For not to irksome toil, but to delight
 He made us, and delight to reason joined.
 These paths and bowers doubt not but our joint hands
 245 Will keep from wilderness with ease, as wide
 As we need walk, till younger hands ere long
 Assist us: but if much converse perhaps
 Thee satiate, to short absence I could yield.
 For solitude sometimes is best society,
 250 And short retirement urges sweet return.
 But other doubt possesses me, lest harm
 Befall thee severed from me; for thou know'st
 What hath been warned us, what malicious foe
 Envyng our happiness, and of his own
 255 Despairing, seeks to work us woe and shame
 By sly assault; and somewhere nigh at hand
 Watches, no doubt, with greedy hope to find
 His wish and best advantage, us asunder,
 Hopeless to circumvent us joined, where each
 260 To other speedy aid might lend at need;
 Whether his first design be to withdraw
 Our fealty<sup>o</sup> from God, or to disturb allegiance
 Conjugal love, than which perhaps no bliss
 Enjoyed by us excites his envy more;
 265 Or<sup>o</sup> this, or worse, leave not the faithful side whether
 That gave thee being, still shades thee and protects.
 The wife, where danger or dishonor lurks,
 Safest and seemliest by her husband stays,
 Who guards her, or with her the worst endures."
 270 To whom the virgin<sup>8</sup> majesty of Eve,
 As one who loves, and some unkindness meets,
 With sweet austere composure thus replied.
 "Offspring of Heav'n and earth, and all earth's lord,
 That such an enemy we have, who seeks 275 Our ruin, both by thee informed I learn,
 And from the parting angel overheard
 As in a shady nook I stood behind,
 Just then returned at shut of evening flow'rs.<sup>9</sup>
 But that thou shouldst my firmness therefore doubt
 280 To God or thee, because we have a foe
 May tempt it, I expected not to hear.
 His violence thou fear'st not, being such,
 As we, not capable of death or pain,
 Can either not receive, or can repel.
 285 His fraud is then thy fear, which plain infers
 Thy equal fear that my firm faith and love
 Can by his fraud be shaken or seduced;
 Thoughts, which how found they harbor in thy breast,
 Adam, misthought oP her to thee so dear?" misapplied to

8. The term here means unspotted or peerless; Milton has insisted at the end of Books 4 and 8 that Adam and Eve have sex.

9. Somewhat confusing, since Eve heard the full story of the war in Heaven and Raphael's earlier warnings; Raphael's parting words (8.630-43) overheard by Eve do not specifically mention Satan but warn Adam to resist his passion for Eve. He does, however, reiterate the charge to obey the "great command" and repel temptation.

To whom with healing words Adam replied.
 "Daughter of God and man, immortal Eve,
 For such thou art, from sin and blame entire:<sup>0</sup>
 Not diffident<sup>0</sup> of thee do I dissuade
 Thy absence from my sight, but to avoid
 Th' attempt itself, intended by our foe.
 For he who tempts, though in vain, at least asperses<sup>0</sup>
 The tempted with dishonor foul, supposed
 Not incorruptible of faith, not proof
 Against temptation: thou thyself with scorn
 And anger wouldst resent the offered wrong,
 Though ineffectual found; misdeem not then,
 If such affront I labor to avert
 From thee alone, which on us both at once
 The enemy, though bold, will hardly dare,
 Or daring, first on me th' assault shall light.
 Nor thou his malice and false guile contemn;<sup>0</sup>
 Subtle he needs must be, who could seduce
 Angels, nor think superfluous others' aid.
 I from the influence of thy looks receive
 Access<sup>0</sup> in every virtue, in thy sight
 More wise, more watchful, stronger, if need were
 Of outward strength; while shame, thou looking on,
 Shame to be overcome or overreached<sup>0</sup>
 Would utmost vigor raise, and raised unite.
 Why shouldst not thou like sense within thee feel
 When I am present, and thy trial choose
 With me, best witness of thy virtue tried."
 So spake domestic Adam in his care
 And matrimonial love; but Eve, who thought
 Less<sup>0</sup> attributed to her faith sincere,
 Thus her reply with accent sweet renewed.
 "If this be our condition, thus to dwell
 In narrow circuit straitened<sup>0</sup> by a foe,
 Subtle or violent, we not endued
 Single with like defense, wherever met,
 How are we happy, still<sup>0</sup> in fear of harm?
 But harm precedes not sin: only our foe
 Tempting affronts us with his foul esteem
 Of our integrity: his foul esteem
 Sticks no dishonor on our front,<sup>0</sup> but turns
 Foul on himself; then wherefore shunned or feared
 By us? who rather double honor gain
 From his surmise proved false, find peace within,
 Favor from Heav'n, our witness from th' event.<sup>0</sup>
 And what is faith, love, virtue unassayed
 Alone, without exterior help sustained?<sup>1</sup>
 Let us not then suspect our happy state
 Left so imperfect by the Maker wise,
 As not secure to single<sup>0</sup> or combined.
 Frail is our happiness, if this be so,

1. Compare and contrast Areopagitica, p. 1816.

And Eden were no Eden thus exposed."
 To whom thus Adam fervently replied.
 "O woman, best are all things as the will
 Of God ordained them, his creating hand
345 Nothing imperfect or deficient left
 Of all that he created, much less man,
 Or aught that might his happy state secure,
 Secure from outward force; within himself
 The danger lies, yet lies within his power:
350 Against his will he can receive no harm.
 But God left free the will, for what obeys
 Reason, is free, and reason he made right,<sup>2</sup>
 But bid her well beware, and still erect,<sup>0</sup> ever-alert
 Lest by some fair appearing good surprised
355 She dictate false, and misinform the will
 To do what God expressly hath forbid.
 Not then mistrust, but tender love enjoins,
 That I should mind<sup>o</sup> thee oft, and mind thou me. remind, pay heed to
 Firm we subsist,<sup>0</sup> yet possible to swerve, stand, exist
360 Since reason not impossibly may meet
 Some specious<sup>o</sup> object by the foe suborned, deceptively attractive
 And fall into deception unaware,
 Not keeping strictest watch, as she was warned.
 Seek not temptation then, which to avoid
365 Were better, and most likely if from me
 Thou sever not: trial will come unsought.
 Wouldst thou approve<sup>o</sup> thy constancy, approve prove
 First thy obedience; th' other who can know,
 Not seeing thee attempted, who attest?
370 But if thou think, trial unsought may find Us both securer<sup>o</sup> than thus warned thou seem'st, overconfident
 Go; for thy stay, not free, absents thee more;
 Go in thy native innocence, rely
 On what thou hast of virtue, summon all,
375 For God towards thee hath done his part, do thine."
 So spake the patriarch of mankind, but Eve
 Persisted, yet submissive, though last, replied:
 "With thy permission then, and thus forewarned
 Chiefly by what thy own last reasoning words
380 Touched only, that our trial, when least sought,
 May find us both perhaps far less prepared,
 The willinger I go, nor much expect
 A foe so proud will first the weaker seek;
 So bent, the more shall shame him his repulse."
385 Thus saying, from her husband's hand her hand
 Soft she withdrew, and like a wood nymph light<sup>3</sup>
 Oread or Dryad, or of Delia's train,
 Betook her to the groves, but Delia's self
 In gait surpassed and goddess-like deport,<sup>0</sup> bearing

2. Right reason, a classical concept accommodated to Christian thought, is the God-given power to apprehend truth and moral law.

3. Light-footed, with overtones of "fickle" or "frivolous." "Oread" (next line): a mountain nymph. "Dryad": a wood nymph. "Delia": Diana, born on the isle of Delos, hunted with a "train" of nymphs.

4. Having no experience of fire, not needed in Paradise. Milton may be alluding to the guilt of Prometheus, who stole fire from heaven.

5. These goddesses, like Eve, are associated with agriculture (lines 393—96)—Pales, with flocks and pastures; Pomona, with fruit trees; Ceres, with harvests—and the latter two foreshadow Eve's situation. Pomona was chased by the wood god

"Vertumnus" in many guises before surrendering to him; Ceres was impregnated by Jove with Proserpina—later carried off to Hades by Pluto.

6. I.e., which they had cultivated or planted for their pleasure.

7. The conceit of the flower-gatherer who is herself gathered evokes the story of Proserpina, to whom it was applied in 4.269—71.

 Or<sup>o</sup> of revived Adonis, or renowned either
 Alcinous, host of old Laertes' son,
 Or that, not mystic, where the sapient king
 Held dalliance with his fair Egyptian spouse.<sup>8</sup>
 Much he the place admired, the person more.
 As one who long in populous city pent,
 Where houses thick and sewers annoy<sup>0</sup> the air, make noisome, befoul
 Forth issuing on a summer's morn to breathe
 Among the pleasant villages and farms
 Adjoined, from each thing met conceives delight,
 The smell of grain, or tedded grass, or kine,<sup>9</sup>
 Or dairy, each rural sight, each rural sound;
 If chance with nymph-like step fair virgin pass,
 What pleasing seemed, for<sup>o</sup> her now pleases more, because of
 She most, and in her look sums all delight.
 Such pleasure took the Serpent to behold
 This flow'ry plat,<sup>0</sup> the sweet recess<sup>0</sup> of Eve plot / retreat
 Thus early, thus alone; her heav'nly form
 Angelic, but more soft, and feminine,
 Her graceful innocence, her every air<sup>o</sup>
 Of gesture or least action overawed
 His malice, and with rapine sweet<sup>1</sup> bereaved
 His fierceness of the fierce intent it brought:
 That space the Evil One abstracted<sup>0</sup> stood withdrawn
 From his own evil, and for the time remained
 Stupidly good,<sup>0</sup> of enmity disarmed, good because stupefied
 Of guile, of hate, of envy, of revenge;
 But the hot hell that always in him burns,
 Though in mid-Heav'n, soon ended his delight,
 And tortures him now more, the more he sees
 Of pleasure not for him ordained: then soon
 Fierce hate he recollects, and all his thoughts
 Of mischief gratulating,<sup>0</sup> thus excites: greeting
 "Thoughts, whither have ye led me, with what sweet
 Compulsion thus transported to forget
 What hither brought us, hate, not love, nor hope
 Of Paradise for Hell, hope here to taste
 Of pleasure, but all pleasure to destroy,
 Save what is in destroying, other joy
 To me is lost. Then let me not let pass
 Occasion which now smiles, behold alone
 The woman, opportune<sup>0</sup> to all attempts, open
 Her husband, for I view far round, not nigh,

8. The gardens of Adonis were beauty spots named for the lovely youth loved by Venus, killed by a boar, and subsequently revived; Odysseus ("Laertes' son") was entertained by Alcinous in his beautiful gardens; Solomon ("the sapient king") entertained his "fair Egyptian spouse," the Queen of Sheba, in a real garden (not "mystic," or "feigned," as the others were).

9. Cattle. "Tedded": spread out to dry, like hay.

1. From Latin rapere, to seize, the root of both "rape" and "rapture," underscoring the paradox of the ravisher (temporarily) ravished.

Whose higher intellectual more I shun,
 And strength, of courage haughty," and of limb exalted Heroic built, though of terrestrial" mold, earthly
 Foe not formidable, exempt from wound,
 I not; so much hath Hell debased, and pain
 Enfeebled me, to what I was in Heav'n.

 Not terrible," though terror be in love terrifying
 And beauty, not" approached by stronger hate, unless
 Hate stronger, under show of love well feigned,

So spake the Enemy of mankind, enclosed
 In serpent, inmate bad, and toward Eve
 Addressed his way, not with indented" wave, zigzag
 Prone on the ground, as since, but on his rear,
 Circular base of rising folds, that tow'rd

 With burnished neck of verdant" gold, erect green

 Floated redundant:" pleasing was his shape, in swelling waves
 And lovely, never since of serpent kind
 Lovelier, not those that in Ilyria changed
 Hermione and Cadmus, or the god
 In Epidaurus;<sup>2</sup> nor to which transformed
 Ammonian Jove, or Capitoline was seen,
 He with Olympias, this with her who bore
 Scipio, the height of Rome.<sup>3</sup> With tract" oblique
 At first, as one who sought access, but feared
 To interrupt, sidelong he works his way.
 As when a ship by skillful steersman wrought
 Nigh river's mouth or foreland, where the wind
 Veers oft, as oft so steers, and shifts her sail;
 So varied he, and of his tortuous train"
 Curled many a wanton" wreath in sight of Eve, twisting length
 To lure her eye; she busied heard the sound luxuriant, sportive
 Of rustling leaves, but minded not, as used
 To such disport before her through the field,
 From every beast, more duteous at her call,
 Than at Circean call the herd disguised.<sup>4</sup>
 He bolder now, uncalled before her stood;
 But as in gaze admiring: oft he bowed
 His turret crest, and sleek enameled" neck, multicolored
 Fawning, and licked the ground whereon she trod.
 His gentle dumb expression turned at length
 The eye of Eve to mark his play; he glad
 Of her attention gained, with serpent tongue

2. The legendary founder of Thebes, Cadmus, and his wife Harmonia (Milton's "Hermione") were changed to serpents when they went to Ilyria in old age; Aesculapius, god of healing, sometimes came forth as a serpent from his temple in Epidaurus.

3. Jupiter Ammon ("Ammonian Jove") made love to Olympias in the form of a snake and sired Alexander the Great; the Jupiter worshipped in Rome ("Capitoline"), also in serpent form, sired Scipio Africanus, the savior and great leader ("height") of Rome.

4. Circe, in the Odyssey, transformed men to beasts and was attended by an obedient herd.

Organic, or impulse of vocal air,<sup>5</sup>
His fraudulent temptation thus began.

"Wonder not, sov'reign mistress, if perhaps
Thou canst, who art sole wonder, much less arm
Thy looks, the heav'n of mildness, with disdain,
Displeas'd that I approach thee thus, and gaze
Insatiate, I thus single, nor have feared
Thy awful<sup>0</sup> brow, more awful thus retired.
Fairest resemblance of thy Maker fair,
Thee all things living gaze on, all things thine
By gift, and thy celestial beauty adore
With ravishment beheld, there best beheld
Where universally admired; but here
In this enclosure wild, these beasts among,
Beholders rude, and shallow to discern
Half what in thee is fair, one man except,
Who sees thee? (and what is one?) who shouldst be seen
A goddess among gods, adored and served
By angels numberless, thy daily train."<sup>6</sup>

awe-inspiring

So gloz'd<sup>0</sup> the Tempter, and his proem<sup>0</sup> tuned;
Into the heart of Eve his words made way,
Though at the voice much marveling; at length
Not unamazed she thus in answer spake.
"What may this mean? Language of man pronounced
By tongue of brute, and human sense expressed?
The first at least of these I thought denied
To beasts, whom God on their creation day
Created mute to all articulate sound;
The latter I demur,<sup>0</sup> for in their looks
Much reason, and in their actions oft appears.
Thee, Serpent, subtlest beast of all the field
I knew, but not with human voice endued;<sup>0</sup>
Redouble then this miracle, and say,
How cam'st thou speakable<sup>0</sup> of mute, and how
To me so friendly grown above the rest
Of brutal kind, that daily are in sight?
Say, for such wonder claims attention due."

To whom the guileful Tempter thus replied:
"Empress of this fair world, resplendent Eve,
Easy to me it is to tell thee all
What thou command'st, and right thou shouldst be obeyed:
I was at first as other beasts that graze
The trodden herb, of abject thoughts and low,
As was my food, nor aught but food discerned
Or sex, and apprehended nothing high:
Till on a day roving the field, I chanced
A goodly tree far distant to behold
Loaden with fruit of fairest colors mixed,
Ruddy and gold: I nearer drew to gaze;
When from the boughs a savory odor blown,

5. Satan either used the actual tongue of the serpent or impressed the air with his own voice.

6. Satan's entire speech is couched in the extravagant praises of the Petrarchan love convention.

- 580 Grateful to appetite, more pleased my sense

 To satisfy the sharp desire I had

 Semblance, and in thy beauty's heav'nly ray
 United I beheld; no fair<sup>0</sup> to thine beauty
 Equivalent or second, which compelled
- 610 Me thus, though importune<sup>0</sup> perhaps, to come inopportunately
 And gaze, and worship thee of right declared
 Sov'reign of creatures, universal dame."<sup>9</sup>
 So talked the spirited' sly snake; and Eve
 Yet more amazed unwary thus replied:
- 615 "Serpent, thy overpraising leaves in doubt
 The virtue<sup>0</sup> of that fruit, in thee first proved: power
 But say, where grows the tree, from hence how far?
 For many are the trees of God that grow
 In Paradise, and various, yet unknown
- 620 To us, in such abundance lies our choice,
 As leaves a greater store of fruit untouched,
 Still hanging incorruptible, till men
 Grow up to their provision,<sup>2</sup> and more hands
 Help to disburden nature of her birth."
- 625 To whom the wily adder, blithe and glad:

7. According to Pliny, serpents ate fennel to aid in shedding their skins and to sharpen their eyesight; folklore had it that they drank the milk of sheep and goats.

8. There is no precedent in Genesis or the interpretative tradition for Satan's powerfully persuasive argument by analogy based on the snake's supposed experience of attaining to reason and speech by eating the forbidden fruit.

9. Satan continues his Petrarchan language of courtship.

1. Both inspired by and possessed by an evil spirit, Satan.

2. I.e., until the numbers of the human race are such as to consume the food God has provided.

"Empress, the way is ready, and not long,
 Beyond a row of myrtles, on a flat,
 Fast by° a fountain, one small thicket past close by
 Of blowing myrrh and balm;<sup>3</sup> if thou accept 630 My conduct,<sup>0</sup> I can bring thee thither soon." guidance
 "Lead then," said Eve. He leading swiftly rolled
 In tangles, and made intricate seem straight,
 To mischief swift. Hope elevates, and joy
 Brightens his crest, as when a wand'ring fire,<sup>0</sup> will-o'-the-wisp
 635 Compact<sup>0</sup> of unctuous<sup>0</sup> vapor, which the night composed / oily
 Condenses, and the cold environs round,
 Kindled through agitation to a flame,
 Which oft, they say, some evil spirit attends,
 Flowering and blazing with delusive light,
 640 Misleads th' amazed<sup>0</sup> night-wanderer from his way bewildered
 To bogs and mires, and oft through pond or pool,
 There swallowed up and lost, from succor far.
 So glistered the dire snake, and into fraud
 Led Eve our credulous mother, to the tree
 645 Of prohibition, root of all our woe;
 Which when she saw, thus to her guide she spake:
 "Serpent, we might have spared our coming hither,
 Fruitless to me, though fruit be here to excess,
 The credit of whose virtue<sup>0</sup> rest with thee, power
 650 Wondrous indeed, if cause of such effects.
 But of this tree we may not taste nor touch;
 God so commanded, and left that command
 Sole daughter of his voice;<sup>4</sup> the rest, we live
 Law to ourselves, our reason is our law."
 655 To whom the Tempter guilefully replied:
 "Indeed? hath God then said that of the fruit
 Of all these garden trees ye shall not eat,
 Yet lords declared of all in earth or air?"
 To whom thus Eve yet sinless: "Of the fruit
 660 Of each tree in the garden we may eat,
 But of the fruit of this fair tree amidst
 The garden, God hath said, 'Ye shall not eat
 Thereof, nor shall ye touch it, lest ye die.'"<sup>5</sup>
 She scarce had said, though brief, when now more bold
 665 The Tempter, but with show of zeal and love
 To man, and indignation at his wrong,
 New part puts on, and as to passion moved,
 Fluctuates disturbed, yet comely, and in act
 Raised,<sup>6</sup> as of some great matter to begin.
 670 As when of old some orator renowned
 In Athens or free Rome, where eloquence
 Flourished, since mute, to some great cause addressed,

3. Blooming trees that exude the aromatic gums myrrh and balm (balsam).

4. God's only direct commandment (in Hebrew, Bath Kul, "daughter of a voice" from heaven). Otherwise (see following), they follow the moral law of nature, known to them perfectly by their unfallen reason, "our reason is our law."

5. Eve's formulation indicates her "sufficient" understanding of the prohibition and the conditions of life in Eden. See 3.98-101.

6. Drawn up to full dignity. Satan as the snake takes on the role of a Greek or Roman orator defending liberty (lines 670-72), a Demosthenes or a Cicero.

Stood in himself collected, while each part,
 Motion, each act won audience ere the tongue,
 675 Sometimes in height began, as no delay
 Of preface brooking<sup>7</sup> through his zeal of right.
 So standing, moving, or to high upgrown
 The Tempter all impassioned thus began:
 "O sacred, wise, and wisdom-giving plant,
 680 Mother of science,<sup>0</sup> now I feel thy power
 Within me clear, not only to discern
 Things in their causes, but to trace the ways
 Of highest agents, deemed however wise.
 Queen of this universe, do not believe
 685 Those rigid threats of death; ye shall not die:
 How should ye? By the fruit? It gives you life
 To knowledge.<sup>8</sup> By the Threat'ner? Look on me,
 Me who have touched and tasted, yet both live,
 And life more perfect have attained than fate
 690 Meant me, by vent'ring higher than my lot.
 Shall that be shut to man, which to the beast
 Is open? Or will God incense his ire
 For such a petty trespass, and not praise
 Rather your dauntless virtue,<sup>0</sup> whom the pain
 695 Of death denounced,<sup>0</sup> whatever thing death be,
 Deterred not from achieving what might lead
 To happier life, knowledge of good and evil;
 Of good, how just?<sup>9</sup> Of evil, if what is evil
 Be real, why not known, since easier shunned?
 700 God therefore cannot hurt ye, and be just;
 Not just, not God; not feared then,<sup>1</sup> nor obeyed:
 Your fear itself of death removes the fear.
 Why then was this forbid? Why but to awe,
 Why but to keep ye low and ignorant,
 705 His worshippers; he knows that in the day
 Ye eat thereof, your eyes that seem so clear,
 Yet are but dim, shall perfectly be then
 Opened and cleared, and ye shall be as gods,<sup>2</sup>
 Knowing both good and evil as they know.
 710 That ye should be as gods, since I as man,
 Internal man, is but proportion meet,
 I of brute human, ye of human gods.<sup>3</sup>
 So ye shall die perhaps, by putting off
 Human, to put on gods, death to be wished,
 715 Though threatened, which no worse than this can bring.
 And what are gods that man may not become
 As they, participating<sup>0</sup> godlike food?
 The gods are first, and that advantage use

7. Bursting into the middle of his speech without a preface, and "upgrown" to the impassioned high style ("high") at once (lines 675-78).

8. I.e., life as well as knowledge, and a better life enhanced by knowledge, which Satan in the snake presents as a magical property of the tree.

9. I.e., how can it be just to forbid the knowledge of good?

1. Satan's sophism invites atheism: if God forbids knowledge of good and evil he is not just, therefore not God, therefore his threat of death need not be feared.

2. Hereafter, Satan speaks of "gods," not God.

3. Satan invites the aspiration to divinity, based on analogy to the supposed experience of the snake.

On our belief, that all from them proceeds;
 720 I question it, for this fair earth I see,
 Warmed by the sun, producing every kind,
 Them nothing: if they all<sup>o</sup> things, who enclosed produce all
 Knowledge of good and evil in this tree,
 That whoso eats thereof, forthwith attains
 725 Wisdom without their leave? And wherein lies
 Th' offense, that man should thus attain to know?
 What can your knowledge hurt him, or this tree
 Impart against his will if all be his?
 Or is it envy, and can envy dwell
 730 In heav'nly breasts? These, these and many more Causes import<sup>o</sup> your need of this fair fruit. prove Goddess humane,<sup>4</sup> reach then, and freely taste."
 He ended, and his words replete with guile
 Into her heart too easy entrance won:
 735 Fixed on the fruit she gazed, which to behold
 Might tempt alone, and in her ears the sound
 Yet rung of his persuasive words, impregnated<sup>o</sup> impregnated
 With reason, to her seeming, and with truth;
 Meanwhile the hour of noon drew on, and waked
 740 An eager appetite, raised by the smell
 So savory of that fruit, which with desire,
 Inclinal now grown to touch or taste,
 Solicited her longing eye; yet first
 Pausing a while, thus to herself she mused:
 745 "Great are thy virtues,<sup>o</sup> doubtless, best of fruits, powers
 Though kept from man, and worthy to be admired,
 Whose taste, too long forborne, at first assay<sup>o</sup> try
 Gave elocution to the mute, and taught
 The tongue not made for speech to speak thy praise:
 750 Thy praise he also who forbids thy use,
 Conceals not from us, naming thee the Tree
 Of Knowledge, knowledge both of good and evil;
 Forbids us then to taste, but his forbidding
 Commends thee more, while it infers<sup>o</sup> the good implies
 755 By thee communicated, and our want:<sup>o</sup> lack
 For good unknown, sure is not had, or had
 And yet unknown, is as not had at all.
 In plain<sup>o</sup> then, what forbids he but to know, in plain words
 Forbids us good, forbids us to be wise?
 760 Such prohibitions bind not. But if death
 Bind us with after-bands,<sup>o</sup> what profits then later bonds
 Our inward freedom? In the day we eat
 Of this fair fruit, our doom is, we shall die.
 How dies the serpent? He hath eat'n and lives,
 765 And knows, and speaks, and reasons, and discerns,
 Irrational till then. For us alone
 Was death invented? Or to us denied
 This intellectual food, for beasts reserved?
 For beasts it seems: yet that one beast which first

4. Both "human" and "gracious" or "kindly."

Hath tasted, envies<sup>0</sup> not, but brings with joy
 The good befall'n him, author unsuspect,<sup>5</sup>
 Friendly to man, far from deceit or guile.
 What fear I then, rather what know to fear
 Under this ignorance of good and evil,
 Of God or death, of law or penalty?
 Here grows the cure of all, this fruit divine,
 Fair to the eye, inviting to the taste,
 Of virtue<sup>0</sup> to make wise: what hinders then
 To reach, and feed at once both body and mind?"

begrudgespower

So saying, her rash hand in evil hour
 Forth reaching to the fruit, she plucked, she eat.<sup>6</sup>
 Earth felt the wound, and nature from her seat
 Sighing through all her works gave signs of woe,
 That all was lost. Back to the thicket slunk
 The guilty serpent, and well might, for Eve
 Intent now wholly on her taste, naught else
 Regarded, such delight till then, as seemed,
 In fruit she never tasted, whether true
 Or fancied so, through expectation high
 Of knowledge, nor was godhead from her thought.
 Greedily she engorged without restraint.
 And knew not eating death:<sup>7</sup> satiate at length,
 And heightened as with wine, jocund<sup>0</sup> and boon,<sup>0</sup>
 Thus to herself she pleasingly began:

merry/jolly

"O sov'reign, virtuous, precious of all trees
 In Paradise, of operation blest
 To sapience, hitherto obscured, infamed,<sup>8</sup>
 And thy fair fruit let hang, as to no end
 Created; but henceforth my early care,
 Not without song, each morning, and due praise
 Shall tend thee, and the fertile burden ease
 Of thy full branches offered free to all;
 Till dieted by thee I grow mature
 In knowledge, as the gods who all things know;
 Though others envy what they cannot give;
 For had the gift been theirs,<sup>9</sup> it had not here
 Thus grown. Experience, next to thee I owe,
 Best guide; not following thee, I had remained
 In ignorance, thou open'st wisdom's way,
 And giv'st access, though secret<sup>0</sup> she retire.
 And I perhaps am secret;<sup>0</sup> Heav'n is high,
 High and remote to see from thence distinct
 Each thing on earth; and other care perhaps
 May have diverted from continual watch
 Our great Forbidder, safe with all his spies
 About him. But to Adam in what sort<sup>0</sup>
 Shall I appear? Shall I to him make known

*hidden

5. An authority or informant beyond suspicion.

6. Ate: an accepted past tense, pronounced et.

7. I.e., she is eating death and doesn't know it, or experience it yet, but also, punning, death is eating her too.

8. Slandered. "Sapience": both knowledge and tasting (Latin sapere).

9. Like Satan, Eve now conflates gods and God, ascribing envy but also lack of power to "them."

As yet my change, and give him to partake
 Full happiness with me, or rather not,
 But keep the odds<sup>0</sup> of knowledge in my power advantage
 Without copartner? so to add what wants<sup>0</sup> lacks
 In female sex, the more to draw his love,
 And render me more equal, and perhaps,
 A thing not undesirable, sometime
 Superior; for inferior who is free?<sup>1</sup>
 This may be well: but what if God have seen,
 And death ensue? Then I shall be no more,
 And Adam wedded to another Eve,
 Shall live with her enjoying, I extinct;
 A death to think. Confirmed then I resolve,
 Adam shall share with me in bliss or woe:
 So dear I love him, that with him all deaths
 I could endure, without him live no life."
 So saying, from the tree her step she turned,
 But first low reverence done, as to the power
 That dwelt within,<sup>2</sup> whose presence had infused knowledge-producing
 Into the plant sciential<sup>0</sup> sap, derived
 From nectar, drink of gods. Adam the while Waiting desirous her return, had wove
 Of choicest flow'rs a garland to adorn
 Her tresses, and her rural labors crown,
 As reapers oft are wont<sup>0</sup> their harvest queen. accustomed
 Great joy he promised to his thoughts, and new Solace in her return, so long delayed;
 Yet oft his heart, divine of<sup>3</sup> something ill, foreboding
 Misgave him; he the falt'ring measure<sup>0</sup> felt; heartbeat
 And forth to meet her went, the way she took
 That morn when first they parted; by the Tree
 Of Knowledge he must pass; there he her met,
 Scarce from the tree returning; in her hand
 A bough of fairest fruit that downy smiled,
 New gathered, and ambrosial<sup>0</sup> smell diffused. fragrant
 To him she hasted, in her face excuse
 Came prologue,<sup>3</sup> and apology to prompt,
 Which with bland<sup>0</sup> words at will she thus addressed. mild, coaxing
 "Hast thou not wondered, Adam, at my stay?
 Thee I have missed, and thought it long, deprived
 Thy presence, agony of love till now
 Not felt, nor shall be twice, for never more
 Mean I to try, what rash untried I sought,
 The pain of absence from thy sight. But strange
 Hath been the cause, and wonderful to hear:
 This tree is not as we are told, a tree
 Of danger tasted,<sup>0</sup> nor to evil unknown if tasted
 Op'ning the way, but of divine effect
 To open eyes, and make them gods who taste;

1. Cf. Satan, 1.248-63, 5.790-97.

2. Eve ends with idolatry, worship of the tree.

3. I.e., excuse came like the prologue in a play.

and apology (justification, self-defense) served as prompter.

And hath been tasted such: the serpent wise,
 Or<sup>o</sup> not restrained as we, or not obeying, either
 Hath eaten of the fruit, and is become,
 Not dead, as we are threatened, but thenceforth
 Endued with human voice and human sense,
 Reasoning to admiration,<sup>o</sup> and with me wonderfully well
 Persuasively<sup>o</sup> hath so prevailed, that I by-persuasion
 Have also tasted, and have also found
 Th' effects to correspond, opener mine eyes,
 Dim erst,<sup>o</sup> dilated spirits, ampler heart, before
 And growing up to godhead; which for thee
 Chiefly I sought, without thee can despise.
 For bliss, as thou hast part, to me is bliss,
 Tedious, unshared with thee, and odious soon.
 Thou therefore also taste, that equal lot
 May join us, equal joy, as equal love;
 Lest thou not tasting, different degree<sup>o</sup> rank
 Disjoin us, and I then too late renounce
 Deity for thee, when fate will not permit."<sup>4</sup>
 Thus Eve with count'nance blithe her story told;
 But in her cheek distemper<sup>5</sup> flushing glowed.
 On th' other side, Adam, soon as he heard
 The fatal trespass done by Eve, amazed,<sup>o</sup> stunned
 Astonied<sup>o</sup> stood and blank, while horror chill petrified
 Ran through his veins, and all his joints relaxed;
 From his slack hand the garland wreathed for Eve
 Down dropped, and all the faded roses shed:
 Speechless he stood and pale, till thus at length
 First to himself he inward silence broke:
 "O fairest of creation, last and best
 Of all God's works, creature in whom excelled
 Whatever can to sight or thought be formed,
 Holy, divine, good, amiable, or sweet!
 How art thou lost, how on a sudden lost,
 Defaced, deflow'ed, and now to death devote?<sup>o</sup> doomed
 Rather how hast thou yielded to transgress
 The strict forbiddance, how to violate
 The sacred<sup>o</sup> fruit forbidd'n! Some cursed fraud consecrated
 Of enemy hath beguiled thee, yet unknown,
 And me with thee hath ruined, for with thee
 Certain my resolution is to die;
 How can I live without thee, how forgo
 Thy sweet converse and love so dearly joined,
 To live again in these wild woods forlorn?
 Should God create another Eve, and I
 Another rib afford, yet loss of thee
 Would never from my heart; no no, I feel
 The link of nature draw me: flesh of flesh,
 Bone of my bone thou art,<sup>6</sup> and from thy state
 Mine never shall be parted, bliss or woe."

4. Compare Eve in soliloquy, lines 817—33.

5. I.e., disorder arising from disturbance of the balance of humors in the body, intoxication.

6. Adam echoes Genesis 2.23—24.

So having said, as one from sad dismay
 Recomforted, and after thoughts disturbed
 Submitting to what seemed remediless,
 920 Thus in calm mood his words to Eve he turned:
     "Bold deed thou hast presumed, advent'rous Eve,
 And peril great provoked, who thus hast dared
 Had it been only coveting to eye
 That sacred fruit, sacred<sup>0</sup> to abstinence, set apart
 925 Much more to taste it under ban to touch.
 But past who can recall, or done undo?
 Not God omnipotent, nor fate; yet so
 Perhaps thou shalt not die, perhaps the fact<sup>0</sup> deed
 Is not so heinous now, foretasted fruit,
 930 Profaned first by the serpent, by him first
 Made common and unhallowed ere our taste;
 Nor yet on him found deadly, he yet lives,
 Lives, as thou saidst, and gains to live as man
 Higher degree of life, inducement strong
 935 To us, as likely tasting to attain
 Proportional ascent, which cannot be
 But to be gods, or angels demigods.
 Nor can I think that God, Creator wise,
 Though threat'ning, will in earnest so destroy
 940 Us his prime creatures, dignified so high,
 Set over all his works, which in our fall,
 For us created, needs with us must fail,
 Dependent made; so God shall uncreate,
 Be frustrate, do, undo, and labor lose,
 945 Not well conceived of God, who though his power
 Creation could repeat, yet would be loath
 Us to abolish, lest the Adversary<sup>0</sup> Satan
 Triumph and say; 'Fickle their state whom God
 Most favors, who can please him long? Me first 950 He ruined, now mankind; whom will he next?'
 Matter of scorn, not to be given the Foe.
 However I with thee have fixed my lot,
 Certain<sup>0</sup> to undergo like doom; if death
 Consort<sup>0</sup> with thee, death is to me as life; resolved
 955 So forcible within my heart I feel
 The bond of nature draw me to my own,
 My own in thee, for what thou art is mine;
 Our state cannot be severed, we are one,
 One flesh; to lose thee were to lose myself."
 960 So Adam, and thus Eve to him replied:
 "O glorious trial of exceeding<sup>7</sup> love,
 Illustrious evidence, example high!
 Engaging me to emulate, but short
 Of thy perfection, how shall I attain,
 965 Adam, from whose dear side I boast me sprung,
 And gladly of our union hear thee speak,
 One heart, one soul in both; whereof good proof

7. The word, which Eve intends as praise, carries the implication of "excessive."

This day affords, declaring thee resolved,
 Rather than death or aught<sup>0</sup> than death more dread anything other
 Shall separate us, linked in love so dear,
 To undergo with me one guilt, one crime,
 If any be, of tasting this fair fruit,
 Whose virtue,<sup>0</sup> for of good still good proceeds, power
 Direct, or by occasion<sup>0</sup> hath presented indirectly
 This happy trial of thy love, which else
 So eminently never had been known.
 Were it<sup>0</sup> I thought death menaced would ensue<sup>0</sup> if/ residtfrom
 This my attempt, I would sustain alone
 The worst, and not persuade thee, rather die
 Deserted, than oblige<sup>0</sup> thee with a fact<sup>0</sup> hind/deed
 Pernicious to thy peace, chiefly assured
 Remarkably so late of thy so true,
 So faithful love unequaled;<sup>8</sup> but I feel
 Far otherwise th' event,<sup>0</sup> not death, but life result
 Augmented, opened eyes, new hopes, new joys,
 Taste so divine, that what of sweet before
 Hath touched my sense, flat seems to this, and harsh.
 On my experience, Adam, freely taste,
 And fear of death deliver to the winds."
 So saying, she embraced him, and for joy
 Tenderly wept, much won that he his love
 Had so ennobled, as of choice to incur
 Divine displeasure for her sake, or death.
 In recompense (for such compliance bad
 Such recompense best merits) from the bough
 She gave him of that fair enticing fruit
 With liberal hand: he scrupled not to eat
 Against his better knowledge, not deceived,<sup>9</sup>
 But fondly<sup>0</sup> overcome with female charm. foolishly
 Earth trembled from her entrails, as again
 In pangs, and nature gave a second groan;
 Sky loured, and muttering thunder, some sad drops
 Wept at completing of the mortal sin
 Original;<sup>1</sup> while Adam took no thought,
 Eating his fill, nor Eve to iterate<sup>0</sup> repeat
 Her former trespass feared, the more to soothe
 Him with her loved society, that now
 As with new wine intoxicated both
 They swim in mirth, and fancy that they feel
 Divinity within them breeding wings
 Wherewith to scorn the earth: but that false fruit
 Far other operation first displayed,
 Carnal desire inflaming, he on Eve
 Began to cast lascivious eyes, she him
 As wantonly repaid; in lust they burn:

8. I.e., since I have so recently been assured of your unparalleled love.

9. Cf. 1 Timothy 2:14: "And Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived was in the transgression."

1. The theological doctrine that all Adam's descendants are stained by Adam's sin and are thereby subject to physical death and (unless saved by grace) to damnation.

Till Adam thus 'gan Eve to dalliance move:

"Eve, now I see thou art exact of taste,
 And elegant, of sapience<sup>2</sup> no small part,
 Since to each meaning savor we apply,
 And palate call judicious; I the praise
 Yield thee, so well this day thou hast purveyed.<sup>0</sup>
 Much pleasure we have lost, while we abstained
 From this delightful fruit, nor known till now
 True relish, tasting; if such pleasure be
 In things to us forbidden, it might be wished,
 For this one tree had been forbidden ten.
 But come, so well refreshed, now let us play,
 As meet<sup>0</sup> is, after such delicious fare;
 For never did thy beauty since the day
 I saw thee first and wedded thee, adorned
 With all perfections, so inflame my sense
 With ardor to enjoy thee, fairer now
 Than ever, bounty of this virtuous tree."

So said he, and forbore not glance or toy<sup>o</sup>
 Of amorous intent, well understood
 Of<sup>o</sup> Eve, whose eye darted contagious fire.
 Her hand he seized, and to a shady bank,
 Thick overhead with verdant roof embow'ed
 He led her nothing loath; flow'rs were the couch,
 Pansies, and violets, and asphodel,
 And hyacinth, earth's freshest softest lap.
 There they their fill of love and love's disport
 Took largely, of their mutual guilt the seal,
 The solace of their sin, till dewy sleep
 Oppressed them, wearied with their amorous play.
 Soon as the force of that fallacious fruit,
 That with exhilarating vapor bland<sup>o</sup>
 About their spirits had played, and inmost powers
 Made err, was now exhaled, and grosser sleep
 Bred of unkindly fumes,<sup>o</sup> with conscious dreams
 Encumbered,<sup>o</sup> now had left them, up they rose
 As from unrest, and each the other viewing,
 Soon found their eyes how opened, and their minds
 How darkened; innocence, that as a veil
 Had shadowed them from knowing ill, was gone,
 Just confidence, and native righteousness,
 And honor from about them, naked left
 To guilty shame: he<sup>o</sup> covered, but his robe
 Uncovered more. So rose the Danite strong
 Herculean Samson from the harlot-lap
 Of Philistean Dalilah, and waked
 Shorn of his strength,<sup>3</sup> they destitute and bare
 Of all their virtue: silent, and in face
 Confounded long they sat, as stricken mute,

2. Adam commends Eve for her fine ("exact") and discriminating ("elegant") taste, as a part of "sapience," which means both "taste" and "wisdom."

3. Samson, of the tribe of Dan, told the "harlot"

Philistine Delilah that the secret of his strength (like that of Hercules) lay in his hair; she sheared it off while he slept, and when he awoke he was easily captured and blinded by his enemies.

1065 Till Adam, though not less than Eve abashed,
 At length gave utterance to these words constrained:<sup>0</sup> forced

"O Eve, in evil<sup>4</sup> hour thou didst give ear
 To that false worm, of whomsoever taught
 To counterfeit man's voice, true in our fall,
 1070 False in our promised rising; since our eyes
 Opened we find indeed, and find we know
 Both good and evil, good lost and evil got,<sup>5</sup>
 Bad fruit of knowledge, if this be to know,
 Which leaves us naked thus, of honor void,
 1075 Of innocence, of faith, of purity,
 Our wonted<sup>0</sup> ornaments now soiled and stained, accustomed
 And in our faces evident the signs
 Of foul concupiscence;<sup>6</sup> whence evil store;
 Even shame, the last of evils; of the first
 1080 Be sure then. How shall I behold the face
 Henceforth of God or angel, erst with joy
 And rapture so oft beheld? Those heav'nly shapes
 Will dazzle now this earthly, with their blaze
 Insufferably bright. O might I here loss In solitude live savage, in some glade
 Obscured, where highest woods impenetrable
 To star or sunlight, spread their umbrage<sup>0</sup> broad, shadow, foliage
 And brown as evening: cover me ye pines,
 Ye cedars, with innumerable boughs
 1090 Hide me, where I may never see them more.
 But let us now, as in bad plight, devise
 What best may for the present serve to hide
 The parts of each from other, that seem most
 To shame obnoxious,<sup>0</sup> and unseemliest seen, exposed 1095 Some tree whose broad smooth leaves together sewed,
 And girded on our loins, may cover round
 Those middle parts, that this newcomer, shame,
 There sit not, and reproach us as unclean."
 So counseled he, and both together went 1100 Into the thickest wood, there soon they chose
 The fig tree,<sup>7</sup> not that kind for fruit renowned,
 But such as at this day to Indians known
 In Malabar or Deccan spreads her arms
 Branching so broad and long, that in the ground
 1105 The bended twigs take root, and daughters grow
 About the mother tree, a pillared shade
 High overarched, and echoing walks between;
 There oft the Indian herdsman shunning heat
 Shelters in cool, and tends his pasturing herds
 1110 At loopholes cut through thickest shade: those leaves

4. Adam's bitter pun—Eve, evil—repudiates the actual etymology of Eve, "life," which Adam will later reaffirm (11.159-61).

5. Milton, like most commentators, derives the tree's name from the event (4.222, 11.84-89).

6. The theological term for the unruly human passions and desires seen as one effect of the Fall, a sign of abundance ("store") of evils. If "shame" (see following lines) is the "last" evil, the "first" is probably the guiltiness that produces it, according to Milton's Christian Doctrine (1.12).

7. The banyan, or Indian fig, has small leaves, but the account Milton draws on from Gerard's Herbal (1597) contains the details of lines 1104-11; Malabar and Deccan (line 1103) are in southern India.

They gathered, broad as Amazonian targe,<sup>0</sup> shields
 And with what skill they had, together sewed,
 To gird their waist, vain covering if to hide
 Their guilt and dreaded shame. O how unlike 1115 To that first naked glory. Such of late
 Columbus found th' American so girt
 With feathered cincture,<sup>0</sup> naked else and wild, belt
 Among the trees on isles and woody shores.
 Thus fenced, and as they thought, their shame in part
 1120 Covered, but not at rest or ease of mind,
 They sat them down to weep, nor only tears
 Rained at their eyes, but high winds worse within Began to rise, high passions, anger, hate,
 Mistrust, suspicion, discord, and shook sore
 ii25 Their inward state of mind, calm region once
 And full of peace, now tossed and turbulent:
 For understanding ruled not, and the will
 Heard not her lore, both in subjection now
 To sensual appetite, who from beneath
 1130 Usurping over sov'reign reason claimed
 Superior sway: from thus distempered breast,<sup>8</sup>
 Adam, estranged<sup>0</sup> in look and altered style,
 Speech intermitted<sup>0</sup> thus to Eve renewed: unlike himself
     "Would thou hadst hearkened to my words, and stayed interrupted
 1135 With me, as I besought thee, when that strange
 Desire of wand'ring this unhappy morn,
 I know not whence possessed thee; we had then
 Remained still happy, not as now, despoiled
 Of all our good, shamed, naked, miserable.
 1140 Let none henceforth seek needless cause to approve<sup>0</sup> prove
 The faith they owe; when earnestly they seek Such proof, conclude, they then begin to fail."
     To whom soon moved with touch of blame thus Eve:
 i 145 "What words have passed thy lips, Adam severe,
 Imput'st thou that to my default, or will
 Of wand'ring, as thou call'st it, which who knows
 But might as ill have happened thou being by,
 Or to thyself perhaps: hadst thou been there,
 Or here th' attempt, thou couldst not have discerned
 1150 Fraud in the serpent, speaking as he spake;
 No ground of enmity between us known,
 Why he should mean me ill, or seek to harm.
 Was I to have never parted from thy side?
 As good have grown there still a lifeless rib.
 1155 Being as I am, why didst not thou the head
 Command me absolutely not to go,
 Going into such danger as thou saidst?
 Too facile<sup>0</sup> then thou didst not much gainsay,<sup>0</sup> easy, mild / oppose Nay didst permit, approve, and fair dismiss.
 ii60 Hadst thou been firm and fixed in thy dissent,

8. The immediate psychological effects of the Fall are evident in the subjection of reason to the lower faculties of sensual appetite.

Neither had I transgressed, nor thou with me."
 To whom then first incensed Adam replied.
 "Is this the love, is this the recompense
 Of mine to thee, ingrateful Eve, expressed<sup>0</sup> demonstrated ii65 Immutable when thou wert lost, not I,
 Who might have lived and joyed immortal bliss,
 Yet willingly chose rather death with thee:
 And am I now upbraided, as the cause
 Of thy transgressing? not enough severe,
 1170 It seems, in thy restraint: what could I more?
 I warned thee, I admonished thee, foretold
 The danger, and the lurking enemy
 That lay in wait; beyond this had been force,
 And force upon free will hath here no place.
 ii75 But confidence then bore thee on, secure<sup>0</sup> self-assured
 Either to meet no danger, or to find
 Matter of glorious trial; and perhaps
 I also erred in overmuch admiring
 What seemed in thee so perfect, that I thought ii80 No evil durst attempt thee, but I rue
 That error now, which is become my crime,
 And thou th' accuser. Thus it shall befall
 Him who to worth in women overtrusting
 Lets her will rule; restraint she will not brook,<sup>0</sup> accept ii85 And left to herself, if evil thence ensue,
 She first his weak indulgence will accuse."
 Thus they in mutual accusation spent
 The fruitless hours, but neither self-condemning,
 And of their vain contest appeared no end.

Book 10

Meanwhile the heinous and spiteful act
 Of Satan done in Paradise, and how
 He in the serpent had perverted Eve,
 Her husband she, to taste the fatal fruit,
 5 Was known in Heav'n; for what can scape the eye
 Of God all-seeing, or deceive his heart
 Omniscient, who in all things wise and just,
 Hindered not Satan to attempt the mind
 Of man, with strength entire, and free will armed,
 10 Complete<sup>0</sup> to have discovered and repulsed fully equipped
 Whatever wiles of foe or seeming friend.
 For still they knew, and ought to have still<sup>0</sup> remembered always
 The high injunction not to taste that fruit,
 Whoever tempted; which they not obeying,
 15 Incurred, what could they less, the penalty,
 And manifold in sin, deserved to fall.
 Up into Heav'n from Paradise in haste
 Th' angelic guards ascended, mute and sad
 For man, for of his state by this<sup>0</sup> they knew, this time

Much wond'ring how the subtle Fiend had stol'n
 Entrance unseen. Soon as th' unwelcome news
 From earth arrived at Heaven gate, displeas'd
 All were who heard, dim sadness did not spare
 That time celestial visages, yet mixed
 With pity, violated not their bliss.
 About the new-arrived, in multitudes
 Th' ethereal people ran, to hear and know
 How all befell: they towards the throne supreme Accountable made haste to make appear
 With righteous plea, their utmost vigilance,
 And easily approv'd;<sup>1</sup> when the Most High
 Eternal Father from his secret cloud,
 Amidst in thunder uttered thus his voice:

"Assembled Angels, and ye Powers returned
 From unsuccessful charge, be not dismay'd,
 Nor troubled at these tidings from the earth,
 Which your sincerest care could not prevent,
 Foretold so lately what would come to pass,
 When first this tempter crossed the gulf from Hell.
 I told ye then he should prevail and speed<sup>0</sup>
 On his bad errand, man should be seduced
 And flattered out of all, believing lies
 Against his Maker; no decree of mine
 Concurring to necessitate his fall,
 Or touch with lightest moment<sup>2</sup> of impulse
 His free will, to her own inclining left
 In even scale. But fall'n he is, and now
 What rests,<sup>0</sup> but that the mortal sentence pass
 On his transgression, death denounced<sup>0</sup> that day,
 Which he presumes already vain and void,
 Because not yet inflicted, as he feared,
 By some immediate stroke; but soon shall find
 Forbearance no acquittance ere day end.<sup>3</sup>
 Justice shall not return as bounty scorn'd.
 But whom send I to judge them? Whom but thee
 Vicegerent Son, to thee I have transferred
 All judgment, whether in Heav'n, or earth, or Hell.<sup>4</sup>
 Easy it may be seen that I intend
 Mercy colleague with justice, sending thee
 Man's friend, his mediator, his designed
 Both ransom and redeemer voluntary,
 And destined man himself to judge man fall'n."

So spake the Father, and unfolding bright
 Toward the right hand his glory, on the Son
 Blaz'd forth unclouded deity; he full
 Resplendent all his Father manifest
 Expressed, and thus divinely answer'd mild:

succeed

remains decreed

1. The angels, "accountable" for guarding Eden, rush to God's throne to explain that they had exercised "utmost vigilance"; their plea is readily accepted ("easily approved").

2. The smallest weight that would tip the scales.

3. A proverb: "Abstinence from enforcing a debt is not release from it." Next line: My justice must not be scorn'd as my generosity has been.

4. Cf. John 5.22: "For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son."

"Father Eternal, thine is to decree,
 Mine both in Heav'n and earth to do thy will Supreme, that thou in me thy Son beloved
 May'st ever rest well pleased. I go to judge
 On earth these thy transgressors; but thou know'st,
 Whoever judged, the worst on me must light,
 When time shall be, for so I undertook
 Before thee; and not repenting, this obtain
 Of right, that I may mitigate their doom
 On me derived,<sup>0</sup> yet I shall temper so
 Justice with mercy, as may illustrate most<sup>0</sup> diverted
 Them fully satisfied, and thee appease. best show
 Attendance none shall need, nor train,<sup>0</sup> where none attendants
 Are to behold the judgment, but the judged,
 Those two; the third best absent is condemned,
 Convict<sup>0</sup> by flight, and rebel to all law: proved guilty
 Conviction to the serpent none belongs."
 Thus saying, from his radiant seat he rose
 Of high collateral<sup>0</sup> glory: him Thrones and Powers, placed side by side
 Princedoms, and Dominations ministrant
 Accompanied to Heaven gate, from whence
 Eden and all the coast<sup>0</sup> in prospect lay. region
 Down he descended straight; the speed of gods
 Time counts not,<sup>5</sup> though with swiftest minutes winged.
 Now was the sun in western cadence<sup>0</sup> low falling
 From noon, and gentle airs due at their hour
 To fan the earth now waked, and usher in
 The evening cool, when he from wrath more cool
 Came the mild Judge and Intercessor both
 To sentence man: the voice of God they heard
 Now walking in the garden, by soft winds
 Brought to their ears, while day declined; they heard,
 And from his presence hid themselves among
 The thickest trees, both man and wife, till God
 Approaching, thus to Adam called aloud.
 "Where art thou Adam, wont<sup>0</sup> with joy to meet used before
 My coming seen far off? I miss thee here,
 Not pleased, thus entertained with solitude,
 Where obvious duty erewhile appeared unsought:
 Or come I less conspicuous, or what change
 Absents thee, or what chance detains? Come forth."
 He came, and with him Eve, more loath, though first
 To offend, discount'nanced both, and discomposed;
 Love was not in their looks, either to God
 Or to each other, but apparent<sup>0</sup> guilt, easily seen
 And shame, and perturbation, and despair,
 Anger, and obstinacy, and hate, and guile.
 Whence Adam falt'ring long, thus answered brief:
 "I heard thee in the garden, and of thy voice Afraid, being naked, hid myself." To whom

5. The Son's descent is immediate; Raphael had taken much of the morning to travel from Heaven to earth (8.110-14).

The gracious Judge without revile" replied: abuse
 "My voice thou oft hast heard, and hast not feared, 120 But still" rejoiced, how is it now become always
 So dreadful to thee? That thou art naked, who Hath told thee? Hast thou eaten of the tree
 Whereof I gave thee charge thou shouldst not eat?"
 To whom thus Adam sore beset replied.
 125 "O Heav'n! in evil strait this day I stand
 Before my Judge, either to undergo Myself the total crime, or to accuse
 My other self, the partner of my life;
 Whose failing, while her faith to me remains,
 130 I should conceal, and not expose to blame
 By my complaint; but strict necessity
 Subdues me, and calamitous constraint,
 Lest on my head both sin and punishment,
 However insupportable, be all 135 Devolved;" though should I hold my peace, yet thou fallen on Wouldst easily detect what I conceal.
 This woman whom thou mad'st to be my help,
 And gav'st me as thy perfect gift, so good,
 So fit, so acceptable, so divine,
 140 That from her hand I could suspect no ill,
 And what she did, whatever in itself,
 Her doing seemed to justify the deed;
 She gave me of the tree, and I did eat."<sup>6</sup>
 To whom the Sov'reign Presence thus replied.
 145 "Was she thy God, that her thou didst obey
 Before his voice, or was she made thy guide,
 Superior, or but equal, that to her
 Thou didst resign thy manhood, and the place
 Wherein God set thee above her made of thee,
 150 And for thee,<sup>7</sup> whose perfection far excelled
 Hers in all real dignity: adorned
 She was indeed, and lovely to attract
 Thy love, not thy subjection, and her gifts
 Were such as under government well seemed,
 155 Unseemly to bear rule, which was thy part
 And person,<sup>8</sup> hadst thou known thyself aright."
 So having said, he thus to Eve in few" few words
 "Say woman, what is this which thou hast done?"
 To whom sad Eve with shame nigh overwhelmed,
 160 Confessing soon, yet not before her Judge
 Bold or loquacious, thus abashed replied:
 "The serpent me beguiled and I did eat."
 Which when the Lord God heard, without delay
 To judgment he proceeded on th' accused
 165 Serpent though brute, unable to transfer

6. Compare Adam's speech in Genesis 3.12, and the elements Milton adds of complaint, veiled accusation of God, and self-exculpation; also compare Eve's answer in Genesis 3.13 and in lines 159-62 below.

7. Cf. 1 Corinthians 11.8-9: "For the man is not of the woman; but the woman of the man. / Neither was the man created for the woman; but the woman for the man."

8. Role and character (persona), as in a drama.

The guilt on him who made him instrument
 Of mischief, and polluted from the end<sup>0</sup> purpose
 Of his creation; justly then accursed,
 As vitiated in nature:<sup>9</sup> more to know
 170 Concerned not man (since he no further knew)
 Nor altered his offense; yet God at last
 To Satan first in sin his doom applied,
 Though in mysterious terms, judged as then best:
 And on the serpent thus his curse let fall.
 175 "Because thou hast done this, thou art accursed
 Above all cattle, each beast of the field;
 Upon thy belly groveling thou shalt go,
 And dust shalt eat all the days of thy life.
 Between thee and the woman I will put 180 Enmity, and between thine and her Seed;
 Her Seed shall bruise thy head, thou bruise his heel."<sup>1</sup>
 So spake this oracle, then verified
 When Jesus son of Mary second Eve,
 Saw Satan fall like lightning down from Heav'n,<sup>2</sup>
 185 Prince of the air; then rising from his grave
 Spoiled Principalities and Powers, triumphed
 In open show, and with ascension bright
 Captivity led captive through the air,
 The realm itself of Satan long usurped,
 190 Whom he shall tread at last under our feet;
 Ev'n he who now foretold his fatal bruise,
 And to the woman thus his sentence turned.
 "Thy sorrow I will greatly multiply
 By thy conception; children thou shalt bring 195 In sorrow forth, and to thy husband's will Thine shall submit, he over thee shall rule."
 On Adam last thus judgment he pronounced.
 "Because thou hast hearkened to the voice of thy wife,
 And eaten of the tree concerning which 200 I charged thee, saying: Thou shalt not eat thereof,
 Cursed is the ground for thy sake, thou in sorrow
 Shalt eat thereof all the days of thy life;
 Thorns also and thistles it shall bring thee forth
 Unbid, and thou shalt eat th' herb of the field,
 205 In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread,
 Till thou return unto the ground, for thou
 Out of the ground wast taken: know thy birth,
 For dust thou art, and shalt to dust return."
 So judged he man, both judge and savior sent,
 210 And th' instant stroke of death denounced<sup>0</sup> that day announced
 Removed far off; then pitying how they stood

9. The serpent was "unable to transfer" (line 165) his own guilt in being "polluted" from his proper end and nature onto Satan, who made him "instrument," so he was "justly . . . accursed," but the terms of that judgment have a "mysterious" (line 173) or hidden meaning that applies to Satan.

1. This is the so-called protoevangelion or judgment of the Serpent (Satan) that contains at the same time the promise of the Redeemer ("her Seed"); Adam and Eve are led to understand it by degrees.

2. Cf. Christ's comment to his disciples (Luke 10:18: "I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven"), and also Colossians 2:15 and Ephesians 4:8, to the following lines, 185-88.

Before him naked to the air, that now
 Must suffer change, disdained not to begin
 Thenceforth the form of servant to assume,
 As when he washed his servants' feet,<sup>3</sup> so now
 As father of his family he clad
 Their nakedness with skins of beasts, or<sup>o</sup> slain, either
 Or as the snake with youthful coat repaid;
 And thought not much" to clothe his enemies: too much
 Nor he their outward only with the skins
 Of beasts, but inward nakedness, much more
 Opprobrious, with his robe of righteousness,
 Arraying covered from his Father's sight.
 To him with swift ascent he up returned,
 Into his blissful bosom reassumed
 In glory as of old, to him appeased
 All, though all-knowing, what had passed with man
 Recounted, mixing intercession sweet.
 Meanwhile ere thus was sinned and judged on earth,
 Within the gates of Hell sat Sin and Death,
 In counterview within the gates, that now
 Stood open wide, belching outrageous" flame unrestrained
 Far into Chaos, since the Fiend passed through,
 Sin opening, who thus now to Death began:
 "O son, why sit we here each other viewing
 Idly, while Satan our great author<sup>o</sup> thrives father
 In other worlds, and happier seat provides
 For us his offspring dear? It cannot be,
 But that success attends him; if mishap,
 Ere this he had returned, with fury driv'n
 By his avengers, since no place like<sup>o</sup> this as well as
 Can fit his punishment, or their revenge.
 Methinks I feel new strength within me rise,
 Wings growing, and dominion giv'n me large
 Beyond this deep; whatever draws me on,
 Or sympathy, or some connatural force
 Powerful at greatest distance to unite
 With secret amity things of like kind
 By secretest conveyance.<sup>4</sup> Thou my shade
 Inseparable must with me along:
 For Death from Sin no power can separate.
 But lest the difficulty of passing back
 Stay his return perhaps over this gulf
 Impassable, impervious,<sup>o</sup> let us try impenetrable
 Advent'rous work, yet to thy power and mine
 Not unagreeable, to found<sup>o</sup> a path establish
 Over this main from Hell to that new world
 Where Satan now prevails, a monument
 Of merit high to all th' infernal host,
 Easing their passage hence, for intercourse,<sup>o</sup> passing back and forth

3. Cf. Philippians 2:7: "[Christ] took upon him the form of a servant"; John 13:5: "he poureth water into a basin, and began to wash the disciples' feet."

4. Sin feels an attraction ("sympathy") drawing two things together, or an innate ("connatural") force, linking her to Satan.

Or transmigration,<sup>0</sup> as their lot shall lead. emigration
 Nor can I miss the way, so strongly drawn
 By this new-felt attraction and instinct."
 Whom thus the meager<sup>0</sup> shadow answered soon: emaciated
 "Go whither fate and inclination strong
 Leads thee, I shall not lag behind, nor err
 The way, thou leading, such a scent I draw
 Of carnage, prey innumerable, and taste
 The savor of death from all things there that live:
 Nor shall I to the work thou enterprisest
 Be wanting, but afford thee equal aid."
 So saying, with delight he snuffed the smell
 Of mortal change on earth. As when a flock
 Of ravenous fowl, though many a league remote,
 Against<sup>0</sup> the day of battle, to a field, anticipating
 Where armies lie encamped, come flying, lured
 With scent of living carcasses designed<sup>0</sup> marked out
 For death, the following day, in bloody fight.
 So scented the grim feature,<sup>0</sup> and upturned
 His nostril wide into the murky air,
 Sagacious<sup>0</sup> of his quarry from so far. keenly smelling, wise
 Then both from out Hell gates into the waste
 Wide anarchy of Chaos damp and dark
 Flew diverse,<sup>0</sup> and with power (their power was great) in different directions
 Hovering upon the water, what they met
 Solid or slimy, as in raging sea
 Tossed up and down, together crowded drive
 From each side shoaling<sup>0</sup> towards the mouth of Hell. assembling
 As when two polar winds blowing adverse
 Upon the Cronian Sea,<sup>5</sup> together drive
 Mountains of ice, that stop th' imagined way
 Beyond Petsora eastward, to the rich
 Cathaian coast. The aggregated soil
 Death with his mace petrific,<sup>6</sup> cold and dry,
 As with a trident smote, and fixed as firm
 As Delos floating once; the rest his look
 Bound with Gorgonian rigor not to move,<sup>7</sup>
 And with asphaltic slime;<sup>0</sup> broad as the gate, pitch
 Deep to the roots of Hell the gathered beach
 They fastened, and the mole<sup>0</sup> immense wrought on pier
 Over the foaming deep high-arched, a bridge
 Of length prodigious joining to the wall<sup>0</sup> outer shell
 Immovable of this now fenceless world
 Forfeit to Death; from hence a passage broad,
 Smooth, easy, inoffensive<sup>0</sup> down to Hell. free from obstacle
 So, if great things to small may be compared,
 Xerxes,<sup>8</sup> the liberty of Greece to yoke,

5. The Arctic Ocean; the "imagined way" (lines 291-93) is the Northeast Passage to North China ("Cathay") from Pechora ("Petsora"), a river in Siberia, which Henry Hudson could only imagine (in 1608) because it was blocked with ice.

6. Turning things to stone.

7. Anything the Gorgon Medusa looked upon turned to stone. Death's materials are the "cold and dry" elements; his mace is associated with Neptune's "trident," which was said to have "fixed" the floating Greek island of Delos.

8. The Persian king Xerxes ordered the sea whipped when it destroyed the bridge of ships he built over the Hellespont (linking Europe and Asia)

From Susa his Memnonian palace high
 Came to the sea, and over Hellespont
 Bridging his way, Europe with Asia joined,
 And scourged with many a stroke th' indignant waves.
 Now had they brought the work by wondrous art
 Pontifical,<sup>9</sup> a ridge of pendent rock
 Over the vexed<sup>0</sup> abyss, following the track
 Of Satan, to the selfsame place where he
 First lighted from his wing, and landed safe
 From out of Chaos to the outside bare
 Of this round world: with pins of adamant
 And chains they made all fast, too fast they made
 And durable; and now in little space
 The confines<sup>0</sup> met of empyrean Heav'n
 And of this world, and on the left hand Hell
 With long reach interposed; three sev'ral ways
 In sight, to each of these three places led.<sup>1</sup>
 And now their way to earth they had descried,<sup>0</sup>
 To Paradise first tending, when behold
 Satan in likeness of an angel bright
 Betwixt the Centaur and the Scorpion<sup>2</sup> steering
 His zenith, while the sun in Aries rose:
 Disguised he came, but those his children dear
 Their parent soon discerned, though in disguise.
 He, after Eve seduced, unminded<sup>0</sup> slunk
 Into the wood fast by, and changing shape
 To observe the sequel, saw his guileful act
 By Eve, though all unweeting,<sup>0</sup> seconded
 Upon her husband, saw their shame that sought
 Vain covertures;<sup>0</sup> but when he saw descend
 The Son of God to judge them, terrified
 Fie fled, not hoping to escape, but shun
 The present, fearing guilty what his wrath
 Might suddenly inflict; that past, returned
 By night, and list'ning where the hapless pair
 Sat in their sad discourse, and various plaint,
 Thence gathered his own doom, which understood
 Not instant, but of future time.<sup>3</sup> With joy
 And tidings fraught, to Hell he now returned,
 And at the brink of Chaos, near the foot
 Of this new wondrous pontifice,<sup>0</sup> unhop'd
 Met who to meet him came, his offspring dear.
 Great joy was at their meeting, and at sight
 Of that stupendous bridge his joy increased.
 Long he admiring stood, till Sin, his fair
 Enchanting daughter, thus the silence broken:

so as to invade Greece. "Susa" (next line): Xerxes' winter residence, founded by the mythical prince Memnon.

9. Bridge-building, with a pun on "papal" (the pope had the title "pontifex maximus").

1. The golden staircase or chain linking the universe to Heaven, the new bridge linking it to Hell, and the passage through the spheres down to earth.

2. Satan steered between Sagittarius ("the Centaur") and Scorpio, thereby passing through Anguis, the constellation of the Serpent.

3. This evidently refers to the complaints and discourse of Adam and Eve (lines 720-1104 below), which therefore precede Satan's return to Hell (lines 345-609).

"O parent, these are thy magnific deeds,
 Thy trophies,<sup>4</sup> which thou view'st as not thine own,
 Thou art their author and prime architect:
 For I no sooner in my heart divined,
 My heart, which by a secret harmony
 Still moves with thine, joined in connection sweet,
 That thou on earth hadst prospered, which thy looks
 Now also evidence, but straight<sup>0</sup> I felt at once
 Though distant from thee worlds between, yet felt
 That I must after thee with this thy son;
 Such fatal consequence<sup>5</sup> unites us three:
 Hell could no longer hold us in her bounds,
 Nor this unvoyageable gulf obscure
 Detain from following thy illustrious track.
 Thou hast achieved our liberty, confined
 Within Hell gates till now, thou us empow'red
 To fortify thus far, and overlay
 With this portentous<sup>0</sup> bridge the dark abyss. marvelous, ominous
 Thine now is all this world, thy virtue<sup>0</sup> hath won power, courage
 What thy hands builded not, thy wisdom gained
 With odds<sup>0</sup> what war hath lost, and fully avenged advantage
 Our foil in Heav'n; here thou shalt monarch reign,
 There didst not; there let him still victor sway,
 As battle hath adjudged, from this new world
 Retiring, by his own doom alienated,
 And henceforth monarchy with thee divide
 Of all things parted by th' empyreal bounds,
 Flis quadrature, from thy orbicular world,<sup>6</sup>
 Or try<sup>0</sup> thee now more dangerous to his throne." discover by experience

Whom thus the Prince of Darkness answered glad:
 "Fair daughter, and thou son and grandchild both,
 High proof ye now have giv'n to be the race
 Of Satan (for I glory in the name,
 Antagonist<sup>7</sup> of Heav'n's Almighty King)
 Amply have merited of me, of all
 Th' infernal empire, that so near Heav'n's door
 Triumphal with triumphal act<sup>8</sup> have met,
 Mine with this glorious work, and made one realm
 Hell and this world, one realm, one continent
 Of easy thoroughfare. Therefore while I
 Descend through darkness, on your road with ease
 To my associate powers, them to acquaint
 With these successes, and with them rejoice,
 You two this way, among those numerous orbs
 All yours, right down to Paradise descend;

4. Objects or persons captured in battle were displayed in the Triumphs accorded Roman generals and emperors who had won a great military victory; the term casts Satan's conquests in Eden in such terms.

5. Connection of cause and effect.

6. Revelation 21.16 describes the City of God as "foursquare, and the length is as large as the breadth"; Satan's new conquest, earth, is an orb.

Sin may imply its superiority (being a sphere).

7. The name "Satan" means "adversary" or "antagonist."

8. The repeated word emphasizes that Satan is enacting a Triumph, passing over a triumphal bridge rather than through triumphal arches; the scene would likely evoke the "Roman" Triumph and triumphal arches celebrating the Restoration of Charles II.

There dwell and reign in bliss, thence on the earth
 Dominion exercise and in the air,
 Chiefly on man, sole lord of all declared,
 Him first make sure your thrall,<sup>o</sup> and lastly kill. slave
 My substitutes I send ye, and create
 Plenipotent<sup>o</sup> on earth, of matchless might with full power
 Issuing from me: on your joint vigor now
 My hold of this new kingdom all depends,
 Through Sin to Death exposed by my exploit.
 If your joint power prevail, th' affairs of Hell
 No detriment need fear, go and be strong."

So saying he dismissed them, they with speed
 Their course through thickest constellations held
 Spreading their bane;<sup>o</sup> the blasted<sup>o</sup> stars looked wan, poison / ruined
 And planets, planet-strook,<sup>9</sup> real eclipse
 Then suffered. Th' other way Satan went down
 The causey<sup>o</sup> to Hell gate; on either side causeway
 Disparted Chaos over-built exclaimed,
 And with rebounding surge the bars assailed,
 That scorned his indignation.<sup>1</sup> Through the gate,
 Wide open and unguarded, Satan passed,
 And all about found desolate; for those<sup>2</sup>
 Appointed to sit there, had left their charge,
 Flown to the upper world; the rest were all
 Far to the inland retired, about the walls
 Of Pandemonium, city and proud seat
 Of Lucifer, so by allusion<sup>o</sup> called, metaphor
 Of that bright star to Satan paragoned.<sup>3</sup>
 There kept their watch the legions, while the grand<sup>4</sup>
 In council sat, solicitous<sup>o</sup> what chance
 Might intercept their emperor sent, so he
 Departing gave command, and they observed.
 As when the Tartar from his Russian foe
 By Astracan over the snowy plains
 Retires, or Bactrian Sophi from the horns
 Of Turkish crescent, leaves all waste beyond
 The realm of Aladule, in his retreat
 To Tauris or Casbeen:<sup>5</sup> so these the late
 Heav'n-banished host, left desert utmost Hell
 Many a dark league, reduced<sup>o</sup> in careful watch drawn together
 Round their metropolis, and now expecting
 Each hour their great adventurer from the search
 Of foreign worlds: he through the midst unmarked,<sup>o</sup> unnoticed
 In show plebeian angel militant

9. Suffering not merely a temporary eclipse but a real loss of light, as from the malign influence of an adverse planet.

1. Chaos is the instinctive enemy of all order, so hostile to the bridge built over it.

2. Sin and Death.

3. Satan before his fall was Lucifer, the Light-bringer, and the morning star is named Lucifer because it is compared ("paragoned") to him.

4. The "grand infernal peers" who govern (cf. 2.507).

5. The simile, begun in line 431, compares the fallen angels, withdrawn from other regions of Hell to guard their metropolis, to Tartars retiring before attacking Russians and Persians retreating before the attacking Turks. "Astracan": a region west of the Caspian Sea inhabited by Russia and defended against Turks and Tartars; "Aladule": the region of Armenia, from which the last Persian ruler, called Anadule, a "Bactrian Sophi" (Persian shah), was forced to retreat from the Turks, to Tabriz ("Tauris") and Kazvin ("Casbeen").

Of lowest order, passed; and from the door
 Of that Plutonian<sup>6</sup> hall, invisible

 Of richest texture spread, at th' upper end canopy
 Was placed in regal luster. Down a while
 He sat, and round about him saw unseen:
 At last as from a cloud his fulgent head
 460 And shape star-bright appeared, or brighter, clad
 With what permissive<sup>0</sup> glory since his fall permitted
 Was left him, or false glitter: all amazed
 At that so sudden blaze the Stygian<sup>7</sup> throng
 Bent their aspect, and whom they wished beheld,
 465 Their mighty chief returned: loud was th' acclaim:
 Forth rushed in haste the great consulting peers,
 Raised from their dark divan,<sup>8</sup> and with like joy
 Congratulant approached him, who with hand
 Silence, and with these words attention won:
 470 "Thrones, Dominations, Princedoms, Virtues, Powers,
 For in possession such, not only of right,
 I call ye<sup>9</sup> and declare ye now, returned
 Successful beyond hope, to lead ye forth
 Triumphant out of this infernal pit
 475 Abominable, accurst, the house of woe,
 And dungeon of our tyrant: now possess,
 As lords, a spacious world, to our native Heaven
 Little inferior, by my adventure hard
 With peril great achieved. Long were to tell
 480 What I have done, what suffered, with what pain
 Voyaged th' unreal,<sup>0</sup> vast, unbounded deep unformed
 Of horrible confusion, over which
 By Sin and Death a broad way now is paved
 To expedite your glorious march; but I
 485 Toiled out my uncouth<sup>0</sup> passage, forced to ride strange
 Th' untractable abyss, plunged in the womb
 Of unoriginal<sup>1</sup> Night and Chaos wild,
 That jealous of their secrets fiercely opposed
 My journey strange, with clamorous uproar
 490 Protesting Fate<sup>2</sup> supreme; thence how I found
 The new-created world, which fame in Heav'n
 Long had foretold, a fabric wonderful
 Of absolute perfection, therein man
 Placed in a paradise, by our exile
 495 Made happy: him by fraud I have seduced
 From his Creator, and the more to increase
 Your wonder, with an apple. He thereat
 Offended, worth your laughter, hath giv'n up
 Both his beloved man and all his world,
 500 To Sin and Death a prey, and so to us,
 Without our hazard, labor, or alarm,
 To range in, and to dwell, and over man

6. Pertaining to Pluto, ruler of the classical underworld.

7. Of the river Styx in Hades, the river of hate.

8. The Turkish Council of State.

9. I.e., you now have these titles not only by right but by possession (from the conquest on earth).

1. Having no origin, uncreated.

2. Protesting both to and against Fate.

To rule, as over all he should have ruled.
 True is, me also he hath judged, or rather
 Me not, but the brute serpent in whose shape
 Man I deceived; that which to me belongs,
 Is enmity, which he will put between
 Me and mankind; I am to bruise his heel;
 His seed, when is not set, shall bruise my head:
 A world who would not purchase with a bruise,
 Or much more grievous pain? Ye have th' account
 Of my performance: what remains, ye gods,
 But up and enter now into full bliss."<sup>3</sup>

So having said, a while he stood, expecting
 Their universal shout and high applause
 To fill his ear, when contrary he hears
 On all sides, from innumerable tongues
 A dismal universal hiss, the sound
 Of public scorn; he wondered, but not long
 Had leisure, wond'ring at himself now more;
 His visage drawn he felt to sharp and spare,
 His arms clung to his ribs, his legs entwining
 Each other, till supplanted<sup>0</sup> down he fell
 A monstrous serpent on his belly prone,
 Reluctant,<sup>0</sup> but in vain, a greater power
 Now ruled him, punished in the shape he sinned,
 According to his doom: he would have spoke,
 But hiss for hiss returned with forked tongue
 To forked tongue, for now were all transformed
 Alike, to serpents<sup>4</sup> all as accessories
 To his bold riot:<sup>5</sup> dreadful was the din
 Of hissing through the hall, thick swarming now
 With complicated<sup>0</sup> monsters, head and tail,
 Scorpion and asp, and amphisbaena dire,
 Cerastes horned, hydrus, and ellops drear,
 And dipsas<sup>5</sup> (not so thick swarmed once the soil
 Bedropped with blood of Gorgon, or the isle
 Ophiusa)<sup>6</sup> but still greatest he the midst,
 Now dragon grown, larger than whom the sun
 Engendered in the Pythian vale on slime,
 Huge Python,<sup>7</sup> and his power no less he seemed Above the rest still to retain; they all
 Him followed issuing forth to th' open field,
 Where all yet left of that revolted rout
 Heav'n-fall'n, in station stood or just array,<sup>8</sup>
 Sublime<sup>0</sup> with expectation when to see

3. Ironically, the final word of Satan's proud, triumphal speech rhymes with and so prepares for the "hiss" (line 508) that will soon greet him, as his would-be triumph is turned by God to abject humiliation.

4. The scene recalls Dante's vivid description of the thieves metamorphosed to snakes in Inferno 24-25.

5. The "scorpion" has a venomous sting at the tip of the tail; "asp" is a small Egyptian viper; "amphisbaena" supposedly had a head at each end; "Cerastes" is an asp with horny projections over each eye;

"hydrus" and "ellops" were mythical water snakes; "dipsas" was a mythical snake whose bite caused raging thirst.

6. Drops of blood from the Gorgon Medusa's severed head turned into snakes; "Ophiusa" in Greek means "isle of snakes."

7. A gigantic serpent engendered from the slime left by Deucalion's flood; Apollo slew him and appropriated the "Pythian" vale and shrine at Delphi.

8. I.e., at their posts or on parade.

In triumph issuing forth their glorious chief;
 They saw, but other sight instead, a crowd
 Of ugly serpents; horror on them fell,
 540 And horrid sympathy; for what they saw,
 They felt themselves now changing; down their arms,
 Down fell both spear and shield, down they as fast,
 And the dire hiss renewed, and the dire form
 Caught by contagion, like in punishment,
 545 As in their crime. Thus was th' applause they meant,
 Turned to exploding hiss, triumph to shame
 Cast on themselves from their own mouths. There stood
 A grove hard by, sprung up with this their change,
 His will who reigns above, to aggravate
 550 Their penance," laden with fair fruit, like that punishment
 Which grew in Paradise, the bait of Eve
 Used by the Tempter: on that prospect strange
 Their earnest eyes they fixed, imagining
 For one forbidden tree a multitude
 555 Now ris'n, to work them further woe or shame;
 Yet parched with scalding thirst and hunger fierce,
 Though to delude them sent, could not abstain,
 But on they rolled in heaps, and up the trees
 Climbing, sat thicker than the snaky locks
 560 That curled Megaera:<sup>9</sup> greedily they plucked
 The fruitage fair to sight, like that which grew
 Near that bituminous lake where Sodom flamed;<sup>1</sup>
 This more delusive, not the touch, but taste
 Deceived; they fondly" thinking to allay foolishly
 565 Their appetite with gust," instead of fruit relish
 Chewed bitter ashes, which th' offended taste
 With spattering noise rejected: oft they assayed," attempted
 Hunger and thirst constraining, drugged as oft,
 With hatefulest disrelish writhed their jaws
 570 With soot and cinders filled; so oft they fell
 Into the same illusion, not as man
 Whom they triumphed once lapsed.<sup>2</sup> Thus were they plagued
 And worn with famine, long and ceaseless hiss,
 Till their lost shape, permitted, they resumed,<sup>3</sup>
 575 Yearly enjoined, some say, to undergo
 This annual humbling certain numbered days,
 To dash their pride, and joy for man seduced.
 Flowever some tradition they dispersed
 Among the heathen of their purchase" got, plunder
 580 And fabled how the serpent, whom they called Ophion with Eurynome, the wide-
 Encroaching Eve perhaps, had first the rule
 Of high Olympus, thence by Saturn driv'n
 And Ops, ere yet Dictaeon Jove was born.<sup>4</sup>

9. One of three Furies with snaky hair.

1. Sodom apples reputedly grew on the spot where the accursed city once stood, now the Dead Sea ("that bituminous lake"); the apples look good but dissolve into ashes when eaten.

2. Unlike man who fell once, they try to eat the dissolving apples over and over again.

3. God permitted them to regain their "lost shape" as fallen angels; but they are undergoing a slower, natural metamorphosis into grosser substance by their continuing commitment to and choice of evil.

4. The Titan Ophion (whose name means "snake") and his wife Eurynome ("the wide-reacher") ruled Olympus until driven away by "Sat-

585 Meanwhile in Paradise the hellish pair
 Too soon arrived, Sin there in power before,
 Once actual, now in body, and to dwell
 Habitual habitant;<sup>5</sup> behind her Death
 Close following pace for pace, not mounted yet
 590 On his pale horse:<sup>6</sup> to whom Sin thus began:
 "Second of Satan sprung, all-conquering Death,
 What think'st thou of our empire now, though earned
 With travail<sup>0</sup> difficult, not better far labor
 Than still at Hell's dark threshold to have sat watch,
 595 Unnamed, undreaded, and thyself half-starved?"
 Whom thus the Sin-born monster answered soon:
 "To me, who with eternal famine pine,
 Alike is Hell, or Paradise, or Heaven,
 There best, where most with ravin<sup>0</sup> I may meet; prey
 600 Which here, though plenteous, all too little seems
 To stuff this maw, this vast unhidebound corpse."<sup>7</sup>
 To whom th' incestuous mother thus replied:
 "Thou therefore on these herbs, and fruits, and flow'rs
 Feed first, on each beast next, and fish, and fowl,
 605 No homely morsels, and whatever thing
 Thy scythe of Time mows down, devour unspared,
 Till I in man residing through the race,
 His thoughts, his looks, words, actions all infect,
 And season him thy last and sweetest prey."
 610 This said, they both betook them several ways,
 Both to destroy, or unimmortal make
 All kinds, and for destruction to mature
 Sooner or later; which th' Almighty seeing,
 From his transcendent seat the saints among,
 615 To those bright orders uttered thus his voice:
 "See with what heat these dogs of Hell advance
 To waste and havoc<sup>0</sup> yonder world, which I plunder
 So fair and good created, and had still Kept in that state, had not the folly of man
 620 Let in these wasteful furies, who impute
 Folly to me, so doth the Prince of Hell
 And his adherents, that with so much ease
 I suffer them to enter and possess
 A place so heav'nly, and conniving seem 625 To gratify my scornful enemies,
 That laugh, as if transported with some fit
 Of passion, I to them had quitted all,<sup>o</sup> handed everything over
 At random yielded up to their misrule;
 And know not that I called and drew them thither
 630 My hellhounds, to lick up the draff<sup>3</sup> and filth dregs
 Which man's polluting sin with taint hath shed
 On what was pure, till crammed and gorged, nigh burst

urn" and his wife Ops, who were in turn overthrown by Jove, who lived on the mountain Dicte. Milton suggests that these may represent versions of the story transmitted by the fallen angels to the pagans (lines 578—79).

5. Sin was present in Eden in the actual sins committed by Adam and Eve; now she will dwell there in her own body and in all other bodies.

6. Cf. Revelation 6.8: "behold a pale horse: and his name that sat on him was Death, and Hell followed with him."

7. Its hide does not cling close to its bones:
 Death's hunger is such that it can never fill its skin.

With sucked and glutted offal, at one sling
 Of thy victorious arm, well-pleasing Son,
 Both Sin, and Death, and yawning grave at last
 Through Chaos hurled, obstruct the mouth of Hell
 Forever, and seal up his ravenous jaws.
 Then Heav'n and earth renewed shall be made pure
 To sanctity that shall receive no stain:
 Till then the curse pronounced on both precedes."<sup>8</sup>

takes precedence

He ended, and the heav'nly audience loud
 Sung hallelujah, as the sound of seas,
 Through multitude that sung: "Just are thy ways,
 Righteous are thy decrees on all thy works;
 Who can extenuate<sup>0</sup> thee? Next, to the Son,
 Destined restorer of mankind, by whom
 New heav'n and earth shall to the ages rise,
 Or down from Heav'n descend." Such was their song,
 While the Creator calling forth by name
 His mighty angels gave them several charge,
 As sorted<sup>0</sup> best with present things. The sun
 Had first his precept so to move, so shine,
 As might affect the earth with cold and heat
 Scarce tolerable, and from the north to call
 Decrepit winter, from the south to bring Solstitial summer's heat. To the blank<sup>0</sup> moon
 Her office they prescribed, to th' other five
 Their planetary motions and aspects<sup>8</sup>
 In sextile, square, and trine, and opposite,
 Of noxious efficacy, and when to join
 In synod<sup>0</sup> unbenign, and taught the fixed<sup>0</sup>
 Their influence malignant when to show'r,
 Which of them rising with the sun, or falling,
 Should prove tempestuous:<sup>0</sup> to the winds they set
 Their corners, when with bluster to confound
 Sea, air, and shore, the thunder when to roll
 With terror through the dark aerial hall.
 Some say<sup>9</sup> he bid his angels turn askance
 The poles of earth twice ten degrees and more
 From the sun's axle; they with labor pushed
 Oblique the centric globe:<sup>0</sup> some say the sun
 Was bid turn reins from th' equinoctial road<sup>0</sup>
 Like distant breadth to Taurus' with the sev'n
 Atlantic Sisters, and the Spartan Twins
 Up to the Tropic Crab; thence down amain<sup>0</sup>
 By Leo and the Virgin and the Scales,
 As deep as Capricorn, to bring in change
 Of seasons to each clime; else<sup>0</sup> had the spring

8. Astrological positions. The next line names positions of 60, 90, 120, and 180 degrees, respectively.

9. The poem offers both a Ptolemaic and a Copernican explanation of the shifts made in the cosmic order so as to change the prelapsarian eternal spring. The Copernican explanation (offered first) proposes that the earth's axis is now tilted (lines 668–71); the Ptolemaic explanation is that the plane of the sun's orbit is tilted (lines 671–78).

1. Lines 673–78 trace the sun's apparent (Ptolemaic) journey from Aries through Taurus and the rest of the zodiac over the course of the year.

680 Equal in days and nights, except to those Beyond the polar circles; to them day
 Had unbenighted<sup>0</sup> shone, while the low sun without any night
 To recompense his distance, in their sight
 Had rounded still<sup>0</sup> th' horizon, and not known always 685 Or<sup>o</sup> east or west, which had forbid the snow either
 From cold Estotiland, and south as far
 Beneath Magellan.<sup>2</sup> At that tasted fruit
 The sun, as from Thyestean banquet, turned
 His course intended;<sup>3</sup> else how had the world
 690 Inhabited, though sinless, more than now,
 Avoided pinching cold and scorching heat?
 These changes in the heav'ns, though slow, produced
 Like change on sea and land, sidereal blast,<sup>4</sup>
 Vapor, and mist, and exhalation hot,
 695 Corrupt and pestilent: now from the north
 Of Norumbega, and the Samoed shore
 Bursting their brazen dungeon, armed with ice
 And snow and hail and stormy gust and flaw,<sup>0</sup> squall
 Boreas and Caecias and Argestes loud
 700 And Thrascias rend the woods and seas upturn;
 With adverse blast upturns them from the south
 Notus and Afer black with thund'rous clouds
 From Serraliona,<sup>5</sup> thwart of these as fierce Forth rush the Levant and the ponent<sup>0</sup> winds opposing 705 Eurus and Zephyr with their lateral noise,
 Sirocco and Libeccchio.<sup>6</sup> Thus began
 Outrage from lifeless things; but Discord first
 Daughter of Sin, among th' irrational,
 Death introduced through fierce antipathy:<sup>7</sup>
 710 Beast now with beast gan war, and fowl with fowl,
 And fish with fish; to graze the herb<sup>o</sup> all leaving, grass
 Devour'd each other; nor stood much in awe
 Of man, but fled him, or with count'nance grim
 Glared on him passing: these were from without 715 The growing miseries, which Adam saw
 Already in part, though hid in gloomiest shade,
 To sorrow abandoned, but worse felt within,
 And in a troubled sea of passion tossed,
 Thus to disburden sought with sad complaint:
 720 "O miserable of happy!<sup>8</sup> Is this the end
 Of this new glorious world, and me so late

2. The region of the Straits of Magellan, at the tip of South America. "Estotiland" (line 686): northern Labrador.

3. As a revenge, Atreus killed one of the sons of his brother Thyestes and served him in a banquet to that brother; the sun changed course to avoid the sight.

4. Malevolent stellar influences. "Norumbega" (line 696): northern New England and maritime Canada; "Samoed" Shore: northeastern Siberia.

5. Winds (701-6) from the south ("Notus," "Afer") come from Sierra Leone ("Serraliona") on the west coast of Africa; "Boreas," "Caecias," "Argestes," and "Thrascias" are all winds that blow from the north, northeast, and northwest, bursting from the cave ("brazen dungeon") in which Aeolus imprisoned the winds (lines 695-700).

6. Crossing the north and south winds ("thwart," line 703) are the "Levant" (from the east) and "Eurus" (east southeast), from the west "Zephyr," the west wind; "Sirocco" and "Libeccchio" come from the southeast and southwest, respectively.

7. Discord (personified as daughter of Sin) introduced Death among the animals ("th' irrational") by stirring up "antipathy" among them.

8. Adam's complaint begins with the classical formula for a tragic fall, or peripeteia, the change from happiness to misery.

The glory of that glory, who now become
 Accurst of blessed, hide me from the face
 Of God, whom to behold was then my height
 725 Of happiness: yet well, if here would end
 The misery, I deserved it, and would bear
 My own deservings; but this will not serve;
 All that I eat or drink, or shall beget,
 Is propagated<sup>9</sup> curse. O voice once heard
 730 Delightfully, 'Increase and multiply,'
 Now death to hear! For what can I increase
 Or multiply, but curses on my head?
 Who of all ages to succeed, but feeling
 The evil on him brought by me, will curse
 735 My head: 'Ill fare our ancestor impure,
 For this we may thank Adam'; but his thanks
 Shall be the execration; so besides
 Mine own that bide upon me, all from me
 Shall with a fierce reflux on me redound,
 740 On me as on their natural center light
 Heavy, though in their place.<sup>1</sup> O fleeting joys
 Of Paradise, dear bought with lasting woes!
 Did I request thee, Maker, from my clay
 To mold me man, did I solicit thee
 745 From darkness to promote me, or here place
 In this delicious garden? As my will
 Concurr'd not to my being, it were but right
 And equal<sup>0</sup> to reduce me to my dust, just
 Desirous to resign, and render back
 750 All I received, unable to perform
 Thy terms too hard, by which I was to hold
 The good I sought not. To the loss of that,
 Sufficient penalty, why hast thou added
 The sense of endless woes? Inexplicable
 755 Thy justice seems; yet to say truth, too late
 I thus contest; then should have been refused
 Those terms whatever, when they were proposed:
 Thou<sup>2</sup> didst accept them; wilt thou enjoy the good,
 Then cavil<sup>0</sup> the conditions? And though God object frivolously to 760 Made thee without thy leave, what if thy son
 Prove disobedient, and reprov'd, retort,
 'Wherefore didst thou beget me? I sought it not':
 Wouldst thou admit for his contempt of thee
 That proud excuse? Yet him not thy election,<sup>0</sup> choice
 765 But natural necessity begot.
 God made thee of choice his own, and of his own
 To serve him, thy reward was of his grace,
 Thy punishment then justly is at his will.
 Be it so, for I submit, his doom is fair,

9. Handed down from one generation to the next.
 1. I.e., Adam's 'own' curse will remain ('bide') with him, and the curse ('execration') of 'all' who descend from him will 'redound' on him as to their 'natural center'; objects so placed ('in their place") were thought to be weightless ("light"), but these curses will be "heavy."

 2. Adam turns from addressing God to address himself.

That dust I am, and shall to dust return:
 O welcome hour whenever! Why delays
 His hand to execute what his decree
 Fixed on this day? Why do I overlive,
 Why am I mocked with death, and lengthened out
 To deathless pain? How gladly would I meet
 Mortality my sentence, and be earth
 Insensible, how glad would lay me down
 As in my mother's lap! There I should rest
 And sleep secure; his dreadful voice no more
 Would thunder in my ears, no fear of worse
 To me and to my offspring would torment me
 With cruel expectation. Yet one doubt
 Pursues me still, lest all I<sup>o</sup> cannot die,
 Lest that pure breath of life, the spirit of man
 Which God inspired, cannot together perish
 With this corporeal clod; then in the grave,
 Or in some other dismal place, who knows
 But I shall die a living death? O thought
 Horrid, if true! Yet why? It was but breath
 Of life that sinned; what dies but what had life
 And sin? The body properly hath neither.
 All of me then shall die:<sup>3</sup> let this appease
 The doubt, since human reach no further knows.
 For though the Lord of all be infinite,
 Is his wrath also? Be it, man is not so,
 But mortal doomed. How can he exercise
 Wrath without end on man whom death must end?
 Can he make deathless death? That were to make Strange contradiction, which to God himself
 Impossible is held, as argument
 Of weakness, not of power. Will he draw out,
 For anger's sake, finite to infinite
 In punished man, to satisfy his rigor
 Satisfied never; that were to extend
 His sentence beyond dust and nature's law,
 By which all causes else according still
 To the reception of their matter act,
 Not to th' extent of their own sphere.<sup>4</sup> But say
 That death be not one stroke, as I supposed,
 Bereaving" sense, but endless misery
 From this day onward, which I feel begun
 Both in me, and without<sup>o</sup> me, and so last
 To perpetuity; ay me, that fear
 Comes thund'ring back with dreadful revolution<sup>o</sup>
 On my defenseless head; both Death and I
 Am found eternal, and incorporate<sup>o</sup> both,
 Nor I on my part single, in me all

all of me

taking away

outside of return

made one body

3. After debating the matter, Adam concludes that the soul dies with the body; Milton in his Christian Doctrine worked out this "moralist" doctrine, with its corollary, that both soul and body rise at the Last Judgment.

4. Adam convinces himself that "finite" matter (line 802) cannot suffer "infinite" punishment by an axiom of traditional philosophy, that by "nature's law" (line 805) the actions of agents are limited by the nature of the object they act upon.

Posterity stands cursed: fair patrimony
 That I must leave ye, sons; O were I able 820 To waste it all myself, and leave ye none!
 So disinherited how would ye bless
 Me now your curse! Ah, why should all mankind
 For one man's fault thus guiltless be condemned,
 If guiltless? But from me what can proceed,
 825 But all corrupt, both mind and will depraved,
 Not to do<sup>o</sup> only, but to will the same act
 With me? How can they then acquitted stand
 In sight of God? Him after all disputes
 Forced I absolve: all my evasions vain
 830 And reasonings, though through mazes, lead me still
 But to my own conviction: first and last
 On me, me only, as the source and spring
 Of all corruption, all the blame lights due;
 So might the wrath.<sup>5</sup> Fond<sup>o</sup> wish! Couldst thou support foolish
 835 That burden heavier than the earth to bear,
 Than all the world much heavier, though divided
 With that bad woman? Thus what thou desir'st,
 And what thou fear'st, alike destroys all hope
 Of refuge, and concludes thee miserable
 840 Beyond all past example and future,
 To Satan only like both crime and doom.
 O conscience, into what abyss of fears
 And horrors hast thou driv'n me; out of which I find no way, from deep to deeper plunged!"
 845 Thus Adam to himself lamented loud
 Through the still night, not now, as ere man fell,
 Wholesome and cool, and mild, but with black air
 Accompanied, with damps" and dreadful gloom, noxious vapors
 Which to his evil conscience represented
 850 All things with double terror: on the ground
 Outstretched he lay, on the cold ground, and oft
 Cursed his creation, Death as oft accused
 Of tardy execution, since denounced" pronounced
 The day of his offense: "Why comes not Death,"
 855 Said he, "with one thrice-acceptable stroke
 To end me? Shall Truth fail to keep her word,
 Justice divine not hasten to be just?
 But Death comes not at call, Justice divine
 Mends not her slowest pace for prayers or cries.
 860 O woods, O fountains, hillocks, dales, and bow'rs,
 With other echo late I taught your shades
 To answer, and resound far other song."<sup>6</sup>
 Whom thus afflicted when sad Eve beheld,
 Desolate where she sat, approaching nigh,
 865 Soft words to his fierce passion she assayed;<sup>o</sup> attempted
 But her with stern regard he thus repelled:
 "Out of my sight, thou serpent,<sup>7</sup> that name best

5. Cf. the Son's offer to accept all humankind's guilt (3.236-41), and Eve's similar offer (10.933-36).

6. Cf. their morning hymn (5.1 53-208).

7. Adam's bitter, misogynistic outcry begins with reference to the patristic notion that the name Eve, aspirated, means "serpent."

Befits thee with him leagued, thyself as false
 And hateful; nothing wants," but that thy shape, is lacking
 870 Like his, and color serpentine may show
 Thy inward fraud, to warn all creatures from thee
 Henceforth; lest that too heav'nly form, pretended<sup>8</sup>
 To hellish falsehood, snare them. But" for thee except
 I had persisted happy, had not thy pride
 875 And wand'ring vanity, when least was safe,
 Rejected my forewarning, and disdained
 Not to be trusted, longing to be seen
 Though by the Devil himself, him overweening" overconfident
 To overreach, but with the serpent meeting
 880 Fooled and beguiled, by him thou, I by thee,
 To trust thee from my side, imagined wise,
 Constant, mature, proof against all assaults,
 And understood not all was but a show
 Rather than solid virtue, all but a rib
 885 Crooked by nature, bent, as now appears,
 More to the part sinister" from me drawn, the left side
 Well if thrown out, as supernumerary
 To my just number found.<sup>9</sup> O why did God,
 Creator wise, that peopled highest heav'n
 890 With Spirits masculine,<sup>1</sup> create at last
 This novelty on earth, this fair defect
 Of nature,<sup>2</sup> and not fill the world at once
 With men as angels without feminine,
 Or find some other way to generate
 895 Mankind? This mischief had not then befall'n,
 And more that shall befall, innumerable
 Disturbances on earth through female snares,
 And strait conjunction<sup>3</sup> with this sex: for either
 He never shall find out fit mate, but such 900 As some misfortune brings him, or mistake,
 Or whom he wishes most shall seldom gain
 Through her perverseness, but shall see her gained
 By a far worse, or if she love, withheld
 By parents, or his happiest choice too late
 905 Shall meet, already linked and wedlock-bound
 To a fell" adversary, his hate or shame: hitter
 Which infinite calamity shall cause
 To human life, and household peace confound."
 He added not, and from her turned, but Eve
 910 Not so repulsed, with tears that ceased not flowing,
 And tresses all disordered, at his feet
 Fell humble, and embracing them, besought
 His peace, and thus proceeded in her plaint:
 "Forsake me not thus, Adam, witness Heav'n
 915 What love sincere, and reverence in my heart

8. Held in front, as a cover or mask.

9. It was supposed that Adam had thirteen ribs on the left side, so he could spare one for the creation of Eve and still retain the proper ("just") number, twelve.

1. The Miltonic bard indicated that angels can assume at will "either sex . . . or both" (1.424).

2. Aristotle had claimed that the female is a defective male.

3. Close, hard-pressing, binding union: Adam then projects the problems of future marriages.

I bear thee, and unweeting<sup>0</sup> have offended, unintentionally
 Unhappily deceived; thy suppliant
 I beg, and clasp thy knees;<sup>4</sup> bereave me not,
 Whereon I live, thy gentle looks, thy aid,
 920 Thy counsel in this uttermost distress,
 My only strength and stay: forlorn of thee,
 Whither shall I betake me, where subsist?
 While yet we live, scarce one short hour perhaps,
 Between us two let there be peace, both joining,
 925 As joined in injuries, one enmity
 Against a foe by doom express" assigned us, explicit judgment
 That cruel serpent: on me exercise not
 Thy hatred for this misery befall'n,
 On me already lost, me than thyself
 930 More miserable; both have sinned, but thou
 Against God only, I against God and thee,
 And to the place of judgment will return,
 There with my cries importune Heaven, that all
 The sentence from thy head removed may light
 935 On me, sole cause to thee of all this woe,
 Me me only just object of his ire."<sup>5</sup>
 She ended weeping, and her lowly plight," posture
 Immovable till peace obtained from fault
 Acknowledged and deplored, in Adam wrought
 940 Commiseration; soon his heart relented
 Towards her, his life so late and sole delight,
 Now at his feet submissive in distress,
 Creature so fair his reconcilement seeking,
 His counsel whom she had displeased, his aid;
 945 As one disarmed, his anger all he lost,
 And thus with peaceful words upraised her soon:
 "Unwary, and too desirous, as before,
 So now of what thou know'st not, who desir'st
 The punishment all on thyself; alas!
 950 Bear thine own first, ill able to sustain
 His full wrath whose thou feel'st as yet least part,
 And my displeasure bear'st so ill.<sup>6</sup> If prayers
 Could alter high decrees, I to that place
 Would speed before thee, and be louder heard,
 955 That on my head all might be visited,
 Thy frailty and infirmer sex forgiv'n,
 To me committed and by me exposed.
 But rise, let us no more contend, nor blame
 Each other, blamed enough elsewhere, but strive
 960 In offices of love, how we may light'n
 Each other's burden in our share of woe;
 Since this day's death denounced, if aught I see,
 Will prove no sudden, but a slow-paced evil,
 A long day's dying to augment our pain,

4. Eve assumes the posture of the classical suppliant, clasping the knees of the one she begs from.

5. Eve also echoes the Son's offer (3.236-41). Cf. Adam's cry (10,832-34).

6. I.e., you could hardly bear God's "full wrath" since you are so distraught when you feel only the smallest part of it, and you can "ill" bear my displeasure.

965 And to our seed (O hapless seed!) derived."<sup>0</sup> passed on
 To whom thus Eve, recovering heart, replied:
 "Adam, by sad experiment I know
 How little weight my words with thee can find,
 Found so erroneous, thence by just event<sup>0</sup> consequence
 970 Found so unfortunate; nevertheless,
 Restored by thee, vile as I am, to place
 Of new acceptance, hopeful to regain
 Thy love, the sole contentment of my heart
 Living or dying, from thee I will not hide
 975 What thoughts in my unquiet breast are ris'n,
 Tending to some relief of our extremes,
 Or end, though sharp and sad, yet tolerable,
 As in our evils, and of easier choice.
 If care of our descent perplex us most,<sup>7</sup>
 980 Which must be born to certain woe, devoured
 By Death at last, and miserable it is
 To be to others cause of misery,
 Our own begotten, and of our loins to bring
 Into this cursed world a woeful race,
 985 That after wretched life must be at last
 Food for so foul a monster, in thy power
 It lies, yet ere conception to prevent
 The race unblest, to being yet unbegot.
 Childless thou art, childless remain; so Death
 990 Shall be deceived<sup>0</sup> his glut, and with us two cheated of
 Be forced to satisfy his rav'nous maw.
 But if thou judge it hard and difficult,
 Conversing, looking, loving, to abstain
 From love's due rites, nuptial embraces sweet,
 995 And with desire to languish without hope,
 Before the present object<sup>8</sup> languishing
 With like desire, which would be misery
 And torment less than none of what we dread,
 Then both ourselves and seed at once to free
 1000 From what we fear for both, let us make short,<sup>0</sup> lose no time
 Let us seek Death, or he not found, supply
 With our own hands his office on ourselves;
 Why stand we longer shivering under fears,
 That show no end but death, and have the power,
 1005 Of many ways to die the shortest choosing,
 Destruction with destruction to destroy."
 She ended here, or vehement despair
 Broke off the rest; so much of death her thoughts
 Had entertained, as dyed her cheeks with pale.
 1010 But Adam with such counsel nothing swayed,
 To better hopes his more attentive mind
 Laboring had raised, and thus to Eve replied.
 "Eve thy contempt of life and pleasure seems
 To argue in thee something more sublime

7. I.e., if concern for our descendants most torment ("perplex") us.

8. I.e., Eve herself, who then projects her own frustrated desire if they were to forgo sex.

1015 And excellent than what thy mind contemns;<sup>9</sup> despises
 But self-destruction therefore sought, refutes
 That excellence thought in thee, and implies,
 Not thy contempt, but anguish and regret
 For loss of life and pleasure overloved.

1020 Or if thou covet death, as utmost end
 Of misery, so thinking to evade
 The penalty pronounced, doubt not but God
 Hath wiselier armed his vengeful ire than so
 To be forestalled; much more I fear lest death

1025 So snatched will not exempt us from the pain
 We are by doom to pay: rather such acts
 Of contumacy<sup>0</sup> will provoke the Highest contempt
 To make death in us live. Then let us seek
 Some safer resolution, which methinks

1030 I have in view, calling to mind with heed
 Part of our sentence, that thy seed shall bruise
 The serpent's head; piteous amends, unless
 Be meant, whom I conjecture, our grand foe
 Satan, who in the serpent hath contrived

1035 Against us this deceit: to crush his head
 Would be revenge indeed; which will be lost
 By death brought on ourselves, or childless days
 Resolved, as thou proposest; so our foe
 Shall scape his punishment ordained, and we

1040 Instead shall double ours upon our heads.
 No more be mentioned then of violence
 Against ourselves, and willful barrenness,
 That cuts us off from hope, and savors only
 Rancor and pride, impatience and despite,

1045 Reluctance<sup>0</sup> against God and his just yoke resistance
 Laid on our necks. Remember with what mild
 And gracious temper he both heard and judged
 Without wrath or reviling; we expected
 Immediate dissolution, which we thought

1050 Was meant by death that day, when lo, to thee
 Pains only in childbearing were foretold,
 And bringing forth, soon recompensed with joy,
 Fruit of thy womb:<sup>9</sup> on me the curse aslope
 Glanced on the ground,<sup>1</sup> with labor I must earn 1055 My bread; what harm? Idleness had been worse;

 My labor will sustain me; and lest cold
 Or heat should injure us, his timely care
 Hath unbesought provided, and his hands
 Clothed us unworthy, pitying while he judged;

1060 How much more, if we pray him, will his ear
 Be open, and his heart to pity incline,
 And teach us further by what means to shun
 Th' inclement seasons, rain, ice, hail, and snow,
 Which now the sky with various face begins

9. Adam's prophetic echo of Elizabeth's address to Mary, mother of Jesus (Luke 1.41-42), "blessed is the fruit of thy womb," lays the ground for their fuller understanding of the promise about the "seed" of the woman.

 1. I.e., the curse, like a spear that almost missed its target, glanced aside and hit the ground,

1065 To show us in this mountain, while the winds
 Blow moist and keen, shattering<sup>0</sup> the graceful locks scattering
 Of these fair spreading trees; which bids us seek
 Some better shroud,<sup>0</sup> some better warmth to cherish shelter
 Our limbs benumbed, ere this diurnal star<sup>0</sup> the sim
 1070 Leave cold the night, how we his gathered beams
 Reflected, may with matter sere<sup>0</sup> foment, dry
 Or by collision of two bodies grind
 The air attrite to fire,<sup>2</sup> as late the clouds
 Justling or pushed with winds rude in their shock
 1075 Tine<sup>0</sup> the slant lightning, whose thwart<sup>0</sup> flame driv'n down ignite / slanting
 Kindles the gummy bark of fir or pine,
 And sends a comfortable heat from far,
 Which might supply<sup>0</sup> the sun: such fire to use, take the place of
 And what may else be remedy or cure
 1080 To evils which our own misdeeds have wrought,
 He will instruct us praying, and of grace
 Beseeching him, so as we need not fear
 To pass commodiously this life, sustained
 By him with many comforts, till we end
 1085 In dust, our final rest and native home.
 What better can we do, than to the place
 Repairing where he judged us, prostrate fall
 Before him reverent, and there confess
 Humbly our faults, and pardon beg, with tears
 1090 Watering the ground, and with our sighs the air
 Frequenting,<sup>0</sup> sent from hearts contrite, in sign filling
 Of sorrow unfeigned, and humiliation meek.
 Undoubtedly he will relent and turn
 From his displeasure; in whose look serene,
 1095 When angry most he seemed and most severe,
 What else but favor, grace, and mercy shone?"
 So spake our father penitent, nor Eve
 Felt less remorse: they forthwith to the place
 Repairing where he judged them prostrate fell
 1100 Before him reverent, and both confessed
 Humbly their faults, and pardon begged, with tears
 Watering the ground, and with their sighs the air
 Frequenting, sent from hearts contrite, in sign
 Of sorrow unfeigned, and humiliation meek.<sup>3</sup>

Book 11

Thus they in lowliest plight repentant stood<sup>1</sup>
 Praying, for from the mercy-seat above
 Preventing grace<sup>2</sup> descending had removed

2. Adam projects the invention of fire: they might, by striking two bodies together, rub ("attrite") the air into fire by friction; or else (lines 1070–71) focus reflected sunbeams (through some equivalent of glass) on dry ("sere") matter.
 3. The final six lines repeat, almost word for word, lines 1086–92, as the poet describes Adam's proposed gesture of repentance carried out in every detail.

1. "Stood" may mean "remained," or that, after prostrating themselves (10.1099) they prayed standing upright; their demeanor ("port") was "Not of mean suitors" (11.8–9), and they had stood to pray before (4.720).

2. Grace given before the human will can turn from sin, enabling it to do so.

The stony from their hearts, and made new flesh
 Regenerate grow instead, that sighs now breathed
 Unutterable, which the spirit of prayer
 Inspired, and winged for Heav'n with speedier flight
 Than loudest oratory: yet their port
 Not of mean suitors, nor important less
 Seemed their petition, than when th' ancient pair
 In fables old, less ancient yet than these,
 Deucalion and chaste Pyrrha to restore
 The race of mankind drowned, before the shrine
 Of Themis stood devout.<sup>3</sup> To Heav'n their prayers
 Flew up, nor missed the way, by envious winds
 Blown vagabond or frustrate:<sup>4</sup> in they passed
 Dimensionless through heav'nly doors; then clad
 With incense, where the golden altar fumed,
 By their great Intercessor, came in sight
 Before the Father's throne: them the glad<sup>o</sup> Son Presenting, thus to intercede began:

pleased

"See Father, what firstfruits on earth are sprung
 From thy implanted grace in man, these sighs
 And prayers, which in this golden censer, mixed
 With incense, I thy priest before thee bring,
 Fruits of more pleasing savor from thy seed
 Sown with contrition in his heart, than those
 Which his own hand manuring<sup>o</sup> all the trees
 Of Paradise could have produced, ere fall'n
 From innocence. Now therefore bend thine ear
 To supplication, hear his sighs though mute;
 Unskillful with what words to pray, let me
 Interpret for him, me his advocate
 And propitiation, all his works on me
 Good or not good ingraft,<sup>5</sup> my merit those Shall perfect, and for these my death shall pay.
 Accept me, and in me from these receive
 The smell of peace toward mankind, let him live
 Before thee reconciled, at least his days
 Numbered, though sad, till death, his doom (which I
 To mitigate thus plead, not to reverse)
 To better life shall yield him, where with me
 All my redeemed may dwell in joy and bliss,
 Made one with me as I with thee am one."

cultivating

To whom the Father, without cloud, serene:
 "All thy request for man, accepted Son,
 Obtain, all thy request was my decree:
 But longer in that Paradise to dwell,
 The law I gave to nature him forbids:
 Those pure immortal elements that know

3. In Greek myth, when Deucalion and his wife Pyrrha (like Noah's family) alone survived a universal flood, they sought direction from Themis, goddess of justice; she told them to throw stones behind them, which became men and women.

4. I.e., their prayers were not scattered ("blown vagabond") by spiteful ("envious") winds, or prevented ("frustrate") from reaching their goal. "Dimensionless": without physical extension.

5. The theological term for Christ's standing in the place of humankind, taking onto himself all their deeds, perfecting the good by his merit, and, by his death, "paying" (see next line) the debt due God's justice for their evil deeds.

No gross, no unharmonious mixture foul,
 Eject him tainted now, and purge him off
 As a distemper, gross to air as gross,
 And mortal food,<sup>6</sup> as may dispose him best
 For dissolution<sup>0</sup> wrought by sin, that first death
 Distempered all things, and of incorrupt
 Corrupted. I at first with two fair gifts
 Created him endowed, with happiness
 And immortality: that fondly<sup>0</sup> lost, foolishly
 This other served but to eternize woe;
 Till I provided death; so death becomes
 His final remedy, and after life
 Tried in sharp tribulation, and refined
 By faith and faithful works, to second life,
 Waked in the renovation<sup>7</sup> of the just,
 Resigns him up with Heav'n and earth renewed.
 But let us call to synod<sup>0</sup> all the blest assembly
 Through Heav'n's wide bounds; from them I will not hide
 My judgments, how with mankind I proceed,
 As how with peccant<sup>0</sup> angels late they saw; sinning
 And in their state, though firm, stood more confirmed."
 He ended, and the Son gave signal high
 To the bright minister that watched, he blew
 His trumpet, heard in Oreb<sup>8</sup> since perhaps
 When God descended, and perhaps once more
 To sound at general doom. Th' angelic blast
 Filled all the regions: from their blissful bow'rs
 Of amarantine<sup>0</sup> shade, fountain or spring, unfading
 By the waters of life, where'er they sat
 In fellowships of joy, the sons of light
 Hasted, resorting to the summons high,
 And took their seats; till from his throne supreme
 Th' Almighty thus pronounced his sov'reign will:
 "O sons, like one of us man is become
 To know both good and evil, since his taste
 Of that defended<sup>0</sup> fruit; but let him boast forbidden
 His knowledge of good lost, and evil got,
 Happier, had it sufficed him to have known
 Good by itself, and evil not at all.
 He sorrows now, repents, and prays contrite,
 My motions<sup>0</sup> in him; longer than they move, promptings
 His heart I know, how variable and vain
 Self-left.<sup>9</sup> Lest therefore his now bolder hand
 Reach also of the Tree of Life, and eat,
 And live forever, dream at least to live
 Forever,<sup>1</sup> to remove him I decree,

6. The pure elements of the Garden of Eden will themselves "purge" Adam and Eve as an impurity or disorder ("distemper"), ejecting them to a place where the air and food are more gross, like themselves.

7. The resurrection and renewal of body and soul on the Last Day.

8. Where God delivered the Ten Commandments to the sound of a trumpet (Exodus 19.19); it will sound again at the Last judgment ("general doom," line 76).

9. Left to itself, without my continual promptings ("motions," line 91), I know his heart to be "variable and vain."

1. Milton adds the phrase "dream at least to live forever" to suggest that parts of God's speech

And send him from the garden forth to till
 The ground whence he was taken, fitter soil.
 "Michael, this my behest have thou in charge,
 Take to thee from among the Cherubim
 Thy choice of flaming warriors, lest the Fiend
 Or<sup>o</sup> in behalf of man, or to invade either
 Vacant possession some new trouble raise:
 Haste thee, and from the Paradise of God
 Without remorse<sup>o</sup> drive out the sinful pair, pity
 From hallowed ground th' unholy, and denounce
 To them and to their progeny from thence Perpetual banishment. Yet lest they faint<sup>o</sup> lose courage
 At the sad sentence rigorously urged,
 For I behold them softened and with tears
 Bewailing their excess,<sup>o</sup> all terror hide. violation of law
 If patiently thy bidding they obey,
 Dismiss them not disconsolate; reveal
 To Adam what shall come in future days,
 As I shall thee enlighten,<sup>2</sup> intermix
 My cov'nant in the woman's seed renewed;
 So send them forth, though sorrowing, yet in peace:
 And on the east side of the garden place,
 Where entrance up from Eden easiest climbs,
 Cherubic watch, and of a sword the flame
 Wide-waving, all approach far off to fright,
 And guard all passage to the Tree of Life:<sup>3</sup>
 Lest Paradise a receptacle prove
 To spirits foul, and all my trees their prey,
 With whose stol'n fruit man once more to delude."
 He ceased; and th' archangelic power prepared
 For swift descent, with him the cohort bright
 Of watchful Cherubim; four faces each<sup>4</sup>
 Had, like a double Janus, all their shape
 Spangled with eyes more numerous than those
 Of Argus, and more wakeful than to drowse,
 Charmed with Arcadian pipe, the pastoral reed
 Of Hermes, or his opiate rod. Meanwhile
 To resalute the world with sacred light
 Leucothea<sup>5</sup> waked, and with fresh dew embalmed
 The earth, when Adam and first matron Eve
 Had ended now their orisons, and found
 Strength added from above, new hope to spring
 Out of despair, joy, but with fear yet linked;

(especially lines 84—85 and 93—95, closely quoted from Genesis 3.22) are ironic.

2. God, it seems, has to "enlighten" Michael with knowledge of humankind's future at the same time Michael presents that future to Adam (cf. 12.128); Michael is told to "intermix" in his account God's "cov'nant in the woman's seed" (lines 115—16), the "mysterious" promise of the redeemer hinted when the Son pronounced judgment on the serpent (10.179-81).

3. Cf. Genesis 3.24: "he placed at the east of the garden of Eden Cherubims, and a flaming sword which turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life."

4. Ezekiel 1.6 Janus (line 129), the Roman god of doorways, had two faces; in one version he had four, corresponding to the four seasons and the four quarters of the earth. Argus (line 131), a giant with one hundred eyes, was set by Juno to watch Jove's mistress Io, but Hermes (Mercury) put all of his eyes to sleep with his music ("pipe") and his sleep-producing caduceus ("opiate rod").

5. Roman goddess of the dawn.

HO Which thus to Eve his welcome words renewed:
 "Eve, easily may faith admit, that all
 The good which we enjoy, from Heav'n descends;
 But that from us aught should ascend to Heav'n
 So prevalent" as to concern the mind influential

145 Of God high-blest, or to incline his will,
 Hard to belief may seem; yet this will prayer,
 Or one short sigh of human breath, upborne
 Ev'n to the seat of God. For since I sought
 By prayer th' offended Deity to appease,

150 Kneeled and before him humbled all my heart,
 Methought I saw him placable and mild,
 Bending his ear; persuasion in me grew
 That I was heard with favor; peace returned
 Home to my breast, and to my memory

155 His promise, that thy seed shall bruise our foe;
 Which then not minded in dismay, yet now
 Assures me that the bitterness of death
 Is past, and we shall live. Whence hail to thee,
 Eve rightly called, mother of all mankind,

160 Mother of all things living, since by thee
 Man is to live, and all things live for man."<sup>6</sup>
 To whom thus Eve with sad demeanor meek:
 "Ill-worthy I such title should belong
 To me transgressor, who for thee ordained

165 A help, became thy snare; to me reproach
 Rather belongs, distrust and all dispraise:
 But infinite in pardon was my Judge,
 That I who first brought death on all, am graced
 The source of life; next favorable thou,

170 Who highly thus to entitle me vouchsaf' st,
 Far other name deserving. But the field
 To labor calls us now with sweat imposed,
 Though after sleepless night; for see the morn,
 All unconcerned with our unrest, begins

175 Her rosy progress smiling; let us forth,
 I never from thy side henceforth to stray,
 Where'er our day's work lies, though now enjoined
 Laborious, till day droop; while here we dwell,
 What can be toilsome in these pleasant walks?

180 Here let us live, though in fall'n state, content."
 So spake, so wished much-humbled Eve, but fate
 Subscribed not; nature first gave signs," impressed omens
 On bird, beast, air, air suddenly eclipsed" darkened
 After short blush of morn; nigh in her sight

185 The bird of Jove, stooped from his airy tow'r,<sup>7</sup>
 Two birds of gayest plume before him drove:
 Down from a hill the beast that reigns in woods,<sup>8</sup>
 First hunter then, pursued a gentle brace," pair

6. The name Eve is cognate with the Hebrew word meaning "life." In Genesis 3.20 Adam names his wife Eve only after the Fall; Milton's Adam has named her before (4.481) and now affirms that that name is right.

7. The eagle swooped ("stooped") from his soaring flight ("tow'r").

8. The lion.

- Goodliest of all the forest, hart and hind;
 190 Direct to th' eastern gate was bent their flight.
 Adam observed, and with his eye the chase
 Pursuing, not unmoved to Eve thus spake:
     "O Eve, some further change awaits us nigh,
 Which Heaven by these mute signs in nature shows
 195 Forerunners of his purpose, or to warn
 Us haply too secure" of our discharge overconfident
 From penalty, because from death released
 Some days; how long, and what till then our life,
 Who knows, or more than this, that we are dust,
 200 And thither must return and be no more.
 Why else this double object in our sight
 Of flight pursued in th* air and o'er the ground
 One way the selfsame hour? Why in the east
 Darkness ere day's mid-course, and morning light
 205 More orient" in yon western cloud that draws bright
 O'er the blue firmament a radiant white,
 And slow descends, with something heav'nly fraught."<sup>0</sup>
     He erred not, for by this<sup>0</sup> the heav'nly bands laden
 Down from a sky of jasper lighted<sup>0</sup> now by this time
 210 In Paradise, and on a hill made alt,<sup>o</sup> alighted, shone
 A glorious apparition, had not doubt halt
 And carnal fear that day dimmed Adam's eye.
 Not that more glorious, when the angels met
 Jacob in Mahanaim,<sup>9</sup> where he saw 215 The field pavilioned with his guardians bright;
 Nor that which on the flaming mount appeared
 In Dothan, covered with a camp of fire,
 Against the Syrian king, who to surprise
 One man, assassin-like had levied war,
 220 War unproclaimed.' The princely hierarch<sup>2</sup>
 In their bright stand, there left his powers to seize Possession of the garden; he alone,
 To find where Adam sheltered, took his way,
 Not unperceived of Adam, who to Eve,
 225 While the great visitant approached, thus spake:
     "Eve, now expect great tidings, which perhaps
 Of us will soon determine,<sup>o</sup> or impose make an end
 New laws to be observed; for I descry
 From yonder blazing cloud that veils the hill
 230 One of the heav'nly host, and by his gait
 None of the meanest, some great potentate
 Or of the Thrones above, such majesty
 Invests him coming; yet not terrible,
 That I should fear, nor sociably mild,
 235 As Raphael, that I should much confide,
 But solemn and sublime, whom not to offend,

9. Jacob gave that name, meaning "armies" or "camps" ("field pavilioned," line 215), to a place where he saw an army of angels (Genesis 32.2).

1. He had levied war against "Dothan" (line 217) in order to capture Elisha the prophet ("One man," line 219), but the Lord saved him by sending "horses and chariots of fire" (2 Kings 6.8ff.).

2. Michael, who left his angelic forces ("powers") in their formation ("stand") to take possession of the garden (lines 221—22).

With reverence I must meet, and thou retire."
 He ended; and th' Archangel soon drew nigh,
 Not in his shape celestial, but as man
 Clad to meet man; over his lucid arms
 A military vest of purple flowed
 Livelier than Meliboean, or the grain
 Of Sarra,<sup>3</sup> worn by kings and heroes old
 In time of truce; Iris<sup>4</sup> had dipped the woof;
 His starry helm unbuclled showed him prime
 In manhood where youth ended; by his side
 As in a glistering zodiac<sup>0</sup> hung the sword, belt
 Satan's dire dread, and in his hand the spear.
 Adam bowed low, he kingly from his state<sup>0</sup>
 Inclined not, but his coming thus declared:
 "Adam, Heav'n's high behest no preface needs: stately bearing
 Sufficient that thy prayers are heard, and Death,
 Then due by sentence when thou didst transgress,
 Defeated<sup>0</sup> of his seizure<sup>0</sup> many days
 Giv'n thee of grace, wherein thou may'st repent,
 And one bad act with many deeds well done cheated / possession
 May'st cover: well may then thy Lord appeased
 Redeem thee quite from Death's rapacious claim;
 But longer in this Paradise to dwell
 Permits not; to remove thee I am come,
 And send thee from the garden forth to till
 The ground whence thou wast taken, fitter soil."
 He added not, for Adam at the news
 Heart-strook with chilling gripe<sup>0</sup> of sorrow stood, spasm
 That all his senses bound; Eve, who unseen
 Yet all had heard, with audible lament
 Discovered<sup>0</sup> soon the place of her retire: revealed
 "O unexpected stroke, worse than of Death!
 Must I thus leave thee Paradise? thus leave
 Thee native soil,<sup>5</sup> these happy walks and shades,
 Fit haunt of gods? where I had hope to spend,
 Quiet though sad, the respite<sup>0</sup> of that day delay
 That must be mortal to us both. O flow'rs,
 That never will in other climate grow,
 My early visitation, and my last
 At ev'n which I bred up with tender hand
 From the first op'ning bud, and gave ye names,<sup>6</sup>
 Who now shall rear ye to the sun, or rank
 Your tribes,<sup>0</sup> and water from th' ambrosial<sup>0</sup> fount? species / fragrant
 Thee lastly nuptial bower, by me adorned
 With what to sight or smell was sweet; from thee
 How shall I part, and whither wander down
 Into a lower world, to<sup>0</sup> this obscure compared to
 And wild, how shall we breathe in other air

3. Both Meliboea and Tyre ("Sarra") in Thessaly were famous for purple dye.

4. Goddess of the rainbow.

5. Unlike Adam, Eve was created in the Paradise of Eden.

6. Departing from Genesis 2.19–20, in which Adam alone gives names, Milton has Eve name the flowers, an action that signifies (like Adam's naming of the beasts, 8.352–54) intuitive knowledge of their nature.

285 Less pure, accustomed to immortal fruits?"
     Whom thus the angel interrupted mild:
 "Lament not Eve, but patiently resign
 What justly thou hast lost; nor set thy heart,
 Thus overfond, on that which is not thine;
 290 Thy going is not lonely, with thee goes
 Thy husband, him to follow thou art bound;
 Where he abides, think there thy native soil."
     Adam by this from the cold sudden damp<sup>0</sup>
 Recovering, and his scattered spirits returned,
 295 To Michael thus his humble words addressed:
     "Celestial, whether among the Thrones, or named
 Of them the highest, for such of shape may seem Prince above princes, gently hast thou told
 Thy message, which might else in telling wound,
 300 And in performing end us; what besides
 Of sorrow and dejection and despair
 Our frailty can sustain, thy tidings bring,
 Departure from this happy place, our sweet
 Recess, and only consolation left
 305 Familiar to our eyes, all places else
 Inhospitable appear and desolate,
 Nor knowing us nor known: and if by prayer
 Incessant I could hope to change the will
 Of him who all things can," I would not cease
 310 To weary him with my assiduous cries:
 But prayer against his absolute decree
 No more avails than breath against the wind,
 Blown stifling back on him that breathes it forth:
 Therefore to his great bidding I submit.
 315 This most afflicts me, that departing hence,
 As from his face I shall be hid, deprived
 His blessed count'nance; here I could frequent,
 With worship, place by place where he vouchsafed
 Presence Divine, and to my sons relate:
 320 'On this mount he appeared, under this tree
 Stood visible, among these pines his voice
 I heard, here with him at this fountain talked:
 So many grateful altars I would rear
 Of grassy turf, and pile up every stone
 325 Of luster from the brook, in memory,
 Or monument to ages, and thereon
 Offer sweet-smelling gums and fruits and flow'rs:
 In yonder nether world where shall I seek
 His bright appearances, or footstep trace?
 330 For though I fled him angry, yet recalled
 To life prolonged and promised race,<sup>7</sup> I now
 Gladly behold though but his utmost skirts
 Of glory, and far off his steps adore."
     To whom thus Michael with regard benign:
 335 "Adam, thou know'st Heav'n his, and all the earth,

dejectionknows, can do

7. His descendants, from whom will spring the "promised Seed." See 10.180—81 and note 1, and 12.623.

Not this rock only; his omnipresence fills
 Land, sea, and air, and every kind that lives,
 Fomented<sup>0</sup> by his virtual<sup>0</sup> power and warmed: nurtured / potent
 All th' earth he gave thee to possess and rule,
 340 No despicable gift; surmise not then
 His presence to these narrow bounds confined
 Of Paradise or Eden: this had been
 Perhaps thy capital seat, from whence had spread
 All generations, and had hither come
 345 From all the ends of th' earth, to celebrate
 And reverence thee their great progenitor.
 But this preeminence thou hast lost, brought down
 To dwell on even ground now with thy sons:
 Yet doubt not but in valley and in plain
 350 God is as here, and will be found alike
 Present, and of his presence many a sign
 Still following thee, still compassing thee round
 With goodness and paternal love, his face
 Express, and of his steps the track divine.
 355 Which that thou may'st believe, and be confirmed,
 Ere thou from hence depart, know I am sent
 To show thee what shall come in future days
 To thee and to thy offspring,<sup>8</sup> good with bad
 Expect to hear, supernal<sup>0</sup> grace contending heavenly
 360 With sinfulness of men; thereby to learn
 True patience, and to temper joy with fear
 And pious sorrow, equally inured<sup>0</sup> tempered
 By moderation either state to bare,
 Prosperous or adverse: so shalt thou lead
 365 Safest thy life, and best prepared endure
 Thy mortal passage when it comes. Ascend
 This hill; let Eve (for I have drenched her eyes)<sup>9</sup>
 Here sleep below while thou to foresight wak'st,
 As once thou slept'st while she to life was formed."
 370 To whom thus Adam gratefully replied:
 "Ascend, I follow thee, safe guide, the path
 Thou lead'st me, and to the hand of Heav'n submit,
 However chast'ning, to the evil turn
 My obvious<sup>0</sup> breast, arming to overcome exposed 375 By suffering, and earn rest from labor won,
 If so I may attain." So both ascend
 In the visions of God: it was a hill
 Of Paradise the highest, from whose top
 The hemisphere of earth in clearest ken<sup>0</sup> view
 380 Stretched out to amplest reach of prospect lay.
 Not higher that hill nor wider looking round,
 Whereon for different cause the Tempter set
 Our second Adam in the wilderness,
 To show him all earth's kingdoms and their glory.<sup>1</sup>

8. Prophetic visions are a common feature in epic, e.g., Aeneas's vision of his descendants culminating in the Roman Empire (Virgil, Aeneid 6.754–854).

9. Put a soporific liquid ("drench") in her eyes.
 1. When Satan tempted Christ (the subject of Milton's "brief epic" Paradise Regained), he took him up to "an exceeding high mountain" and

His eye might there command wherever stood
 City of old or modern fame, the seat
 Of mightiest empire, from the destined walls
 Of Cambalu, seat of Cathaian Can,
 And Samarkand by Oxus, Temir's throne,
 To Paquin of Sinaean kings, and thence
 To Agra and Lahore of Great Mogul
 Down to the golden Chersonese,<sup>2</sup> or where
 The Persian in Ecbatan sat, or since
 In Hispahan, or where the Russian czar
 In Moscow, or the sultan in Bizance,
 Turkestan-born;<sup>3</sup> nor could his eye not ken<sup>o</sup>
 Th' empire of Negus to his utmost port
 Ercoco and the less maritime kings
 Mombaza, and Quiloa, and Melind,
 And Sofala thought Ophir, to the realm
 Of Congo, and Angola farthest south;<sup>4</sup>
 Or thence from Niger flood to Atlas mount
 The kingdoms of Almanson, Fez and Sus,
 Marocco and Algiers, and Tremisen;<sup>5</sup>
 On Europe thence, and where Rome was to sway
 The world: in spirit perhaps he also saw
 Rich Mexico the seat of Motezume,
 And Cuzsco in Peru, the richer seat
 Of Atabalipa, and yet unspoiled
 Guiana, whose great city Geryon's sons
 Call El Dorado:<sup>6</sup> but to nobler sights
 Michael from Adam's eyes the film removed
 Which that false fruit that promised clearer sight
 Had bred; then purged with euphrasy and rue<sup>7</sup>
 The visual nerve, for he had much to see;
 And from the well of life three drops instilled.
 So deep the power of these ingredients pierced, showed him "all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them" (Matthew 4.8). The passage that follows details the places "he" (Christ and / or Adam) might see (lines 386-411).

2. His first views are of "destined" (yet to come) great kingdoms in Asia: "Cambalu," capital of "Cathay," the region of North China ruled by such khans as Genghis and Kublai; "Samarkand," ruled by Tamburlaine ("Temir"), near the "Oxus" river near modern Uzbekistan; Beijing ("Paquin," Peking), ruled by Chinese ("Sinaean") kings; "Agra" and "Lahore," capitals in northern India ruled by the "Great Mogul"; "golden Chersonese," an area sometimes identified with the Malay Peninsula.

3. Next, Persian and Turkish kingdoms. From Persia (Iran): Ecbatana ("Ecbatan"), a summer residence of Persian kings, and the 16th-century Persian capital Isfahan ("Hispahan"); and Byzantium ("Bizance," Constantinople, Istanbul), capital of the Ottoman Empire after falling to the Turks in 1453.

4. From Africa: Abyssinia (empire of King "Negus"); Arkiko ("Ercoco") in Ethiopia, a Red Sea port; Mombasa ("Mombaza") and Malindi ("Melind") in Kenya; Kilwa ("Quiloa") in Tanzania; "Sofala," sometimes identified with the biblical "Ophir" from which Solomon took gold for his Temple (1 Kings 9.28); and "Congo" and "Angola" on the west coast.

5. In North Africa: the kingdoms of "Almanson" (the name shared by various Muslim rulers, here referring probably to Abu-Amir al Ma-Ma'afiri, caliph of Cordova) reached from the "Niger" River in northern Morocco to the "Atlas" Mountains in Algeria, taking in Morocco (and its capital, "Fez"), Tunis ("Sus"), and part of Algeria called Tiemecen ("Tremisen").

6. Because they lay on the other side of the spherical earth, Christ and/or Adam could only see places in the New World "in spirit" (line 406): Mexico, the seat of Montezuma ("Motezume"), the last Aztec emperor; "Cuzsco in Peru," seat of Atahualpa ("Atabalipa"), the last Incan emperor (murdered by Pizarro); and "Guiana" (a region including Surinam, Guyana, and parts of Venezuela and Brazil). Unlike Mexico and Peru it was "yet unspoiled" by the Spaniards (sons of the evil monster "Geryon," in Spenser an allegory of the great power and oppression of Spain), though they identified its chief city, Manoa, with the fabled city of gold, "El Dorado."

7. Both herbs were thought to sharpen eyesight.

Ev'n to the inmost seat of mental sight,
 That Adam now enforced to close his eyes,
 420 Sunk down and all his spirits became entranced:
 But him the gentle angel by the hand
 Soon raised, and his attention thus recalled:
 "Adam, now ope thine eyes, and first behold
 Th' effects which thy original crime hath wrought
 425 In some to spring from thee, who never touched
 Th' excepted<sup>0</sup> tree, nor with the snake conspired, forbidden
 Nor sinned thy sin, yet from that sin derive Corruption to bring forth more violent deeds."
 His eyes he opened, and beheld a field,
 430 Part arable and tilth,<sup>0</sup> whereon were sheaves cultivated
 New-reaped, the other part sheep-walks and folds;
 I' th' midst an altar as the landmark<sup>0</sup> stood boundary marker
 Rustic, of grassy sord;<sup>o</sup> thither anon turf
 A sweaty reaper from his tillage brought 435 Firstfruits, the green ear, and the yellow sheaf,
 Unculled,<sup>o</sup> as came to hand; a shepherd next picked at random
 More meek came with the firstlings of his flock
 Choicest and best; then sacrificing, laid
 The inwards and their fat, with incense strewed,
 440 On the cleft wood, and all due rites performed.
 His off'ring soon propitious fire from Heav'n
 Consumed with nimble glance, and grateful steam;
 The other's not, for his was not sincere;<sup>8</sup>
 Whereat he inly raged, and as they talked,
 445 Smote him into the midriff with a stone
 That beat out life; he fell, and deadly pale
 Groaned out his soul with gushing blood effused.
 Much at that sight was Adam in his heart
 Dismayed, and thus in haste to th' angel cried:
 450 "O teacher, some great mischief hath befall'n
 To that meek man, who well had sacrificed;
 Is piety thus and pure devotion paid?"
 T' whom Michael thus, he also moved, replied:
 "These two are brethren, Adam, and to come
 455 Out of thy loins;<sup>9</sup> th' unjust the just hath slain,
 For envy that his brother's offering found
 From Heav'n acceptance; but the bloody fact<sup>0</sup> crime
 Will be avenged, and th' other's faith approved
 Lose no reward, though here thou see him die, 460 Rolling in dust and gore." To which our sire:
 "Alas, both for the deed and for the cause!
 But have I now seen death? Is this the way
 I must return to native dust? O sight
 Of terror, foul and ugly to behold,
 465 Horrid to think, how horrible to feel!"
 To whom thus Michael: "Death thou hast seen

8. Milton's version of the Cain and Abel story (Genesis 4.1—16) provides a clear reason for God's rejection of Cain's sacrifice.

9. Adam has to be told that these are his own sons, not simply descendants,

In his first shape on man; but many shapes
 Of Death, and many are the ways that lead
 To his grim cave, all dismal; yet to sense
 470 More terrible at th' entrance than within.
 Some, as thou saw'st, by violent stroke shall die,
 By fire, flood, famine; by intemperance more
 In meats and drinks, which on the earth shall bring Diseases dire, of which a monstrous crew
 475 Before thee shall appear; that thou may'st know
 What misery th' inabstinence of Eve
 Shall bring on men." Immediately a place'
 Before his eyes appeared, sad,<sup>o</sup> noisome, dark, lamentable
 A lazar-house it seemed, wherein were laid
 480 Numbers of all diseased, all maladies
 Of ghastly spasm, or racking torture, qualms
 Of heartsick agony, all feverous kinds,
 Convulsions, epilepsies, fierce catarrhs,
 Intestine stone and ulcer, colic pangs,
 485 Demoniac frenzy, moping melancholy
 And moonstruck madness," pining atrophy,
 Marasmus, and wide-wasting pestilence,<sup>2</sup> lunacy
 Dropsies, and asthmas, and joint-racking rheums.
 Dire was the tossing, deep the groans, Despair
 490 Tended the sick busiest from couch to couch;
 And over them triumphant Death his dart
 Shook, but delayed to strike, though oft invoked
 With vows, as their chief good, and final hope.
 Sight so deform what heart of rock could long
 495 Dry-eyed behold? Adam could not, but wept,
 Though not of woman born; compassion quelled
 His best of man,<sup>o</sup> and gave him up to tears manliness, courage
 A space, till firmer thoughts restrained excess,
 And scarce recovering words his plaint renewed:
 500 "O miserable mankind, to what fall
 Degraded, to what wretched state reserved!
 Better end here unborn. Why is life giv'n
 To be thus wrested from us? Rather why
 Obtruded on us thus? who if we knew
 505 What we receive, would either not accept
 Life offered, or soon beg to lay it down,
 Glad to be so dismissed in peace. Can thus
 Th' image of God in man created once
 So goodly and erect, though faulty since,
 510 To such unsightly sufferings be debased
 Under inhuman pains? Why should not man,
 Retaining still divine similitude
 In part, from such deformities be free,
 And for his Maker's image sake exempt?"
 515 "Their Maker's image," answered Michael, "then
 Forsook them, when themselves they vilified<sup>o</sup> debased

1. This is the only nonbiblical sight shown to Adam, a "lazar-house" (line 479)—a hospital for leprosy and infectious diseases, especially syphilis.

2. The plague. "Marasmus": a wasting disease of the body,

- To serve ungoverned appetite, and took<sup>0</sup> took away
 His image whom they served, a brutish vice,
 Inductive<sup>0</sup> mainly to<sup>o</sup> the sin of Eve. produced /from
- 520 Therefore so abject is their punishment,
 Disfiguring not God's likeness, but their own,
 Or if his likeness, by themselves defaced
 While they pervert pure nature's healthful rules
 To loathsome sickness, worthily," since they deservedly
- 525 God's image did not reverence in themselves."
 "I yield it just," said Adam, "and submit.
 But is there yet no other way, besides
 These painful passages, how we may come
 To death, and mix with our connatural dust?"
- 530 "There is," said Michael, "if thou well observe
 The rule of not too much, by temperance taught
 In what thou eat'st and drink'st, seeking from thence
 Due nourishment, not gluttonous delight,
 Till many years over thy head return:
- 535 So may'st thou live, till like ripe fruit thou drop
 Into thy mother's<sup>3</sup> lap, or be with ease
 Gathered, not harshly plucked, for death mature:
 This is old age; but then thou must outlive
 Thy youth, thy strength, thy beauty, which will change
- 540 To withered weak and gray; thy senses then
 Obtuse, all taste of pleasure must forgo,
 To what thou hast, and for the air of youth
 Hopeful and cheerful, in thy blood will reign
 A melancholy damp<sup>0</sup> of cold and dry depression of spirits
- 545 To weigh thy spirits down, and last consume
 The balm<sup>o</sup> of life." To whom our ancestor: preservative essence
 "Henceforth I fly not death, nor would prolong
 Life much, bent rather how I may be quit
 Fairest and easiest of this cumbrous charge,
- 550 Which I must keep till my appointed day
 Of rend'ring up, and patiently attend<sup>0</sup> await
 My dissolution." Michael replied:
 "Nor love thy life, nor hate; but what thou liv'st
 Live well, how long or short permit to Heav'n:
- 555 And now prepare thee for another sight."
 He looked and saw a spacious plain,<sup>4</sup> whereon
 Were tents of various hue; by some were herds
 Of cattle grazing; others, whence the sound
 Of instruments that made melodious chime
- 560 Was heard, of harp and organ; and who moved
 Their stops and chords was seen: his volant touch
 Instinct through all proportions low and high
 Flew and pursued transverse the resonant fugue.<sup>5</sup>
 In other part stood one<sup>6</sup> who at the forge

3. "Mother" earth.

4. Adam's third vision is based on Genesis 4.19—22; "tents" (next line) identifies these as the descendants of Cain, described as "such as dwell in tents."

5. Genesis 4.21 describes Cain's descendant Jubal as "father of all such as handle the harp and organ." "Volant": nimble; "instinct": instinctive; "proportions": ratios of pitches; "fugue": musical form in which one statement of the theme seems to chase another.

6. Tubal-cain, "instructor of every artificer in brass and iron" (Genesis 4.22).

565 Laboring, two massy clods of iron and brass
 Had melted (whether found where casual<sup>0</sup> fire accidental
 Had wasted woods on mountain or in vale,
 Down to the veins of earth, thence gliding hot
 To some cave's mouth, or whether washed by stream
 570 From underground) the liquid ore he drained
 Into fit molds prepared; from which he formed
 First his own tools; then, what might else be wrought
 Fusile<sup>0</sup> or grav'n in metal. After these, cast
 But on the hither side a different sort<sup>7</sup>
 575 From the high neighboring hills, which was their seat,
 Down to the plain descended: by their guise
 Just men they seemed, and all their study bent
 To worship God aright, and know his works
 Not hid,<sup>8</sup> nor those things last which might preserve
 580 Freedom and peace to men: they on the plain
 Long had not walked, when from the tents behold
 A bevy of fair women, richly gay
 In gems and wanton dress; to the harp they sung
 Soft amorous ditties, and in dance came on:
 585 The men though grave, eyed them, and let their eyes
 Rove without rein, till in the amorous net
 Fast caught, they liked, and each his liking chose;
 And now of love they treat till th' evening star<sup>9</sup>
 Love's harbinger appeared; then all in heat
 590 They light the nuptial torch, and bid invoke
 Hymen,<sup>1</sup> then first to marriage rites invoked;
 With feast and music all the tents resound.
 Such happy interview and fair event<sup>0</sup> outcome
 Of love and youth not lost, songs, garlands, flow'rs,
 595 And charming symphonies attached<sup>0</sup> the heart
 Of Adam, soon<sup>0</sup> inclined to admit delight,
 The bent of nature; which he thus expressed:
 "True opener of mine eyes, prime angel blest,
 Much better seems this vision, and more hope
 600 Of peaceful days portends, than those two past;
 Those were of hate and death, or pain much worse,
 Here nature seems fulfilled in all her ends."
 To whom thus Michael: "Judge not what is best
 By pleasure, though to nature seeming meet,<sup>0</sup> appropriate
 605 Created, as thou art, to nobler end
 Holy and pure, conformity divine.
 Those tents thou saw'st so pleasant, were the tents
 Of wickedness, wherein shall dwell his race
 Who slew his brother; studious they appear
 610 Of arts that polish life, inventors rare,
 Unmindful of their Maker, though his spirit
 Taught them, but they his gifts acknowledged none.
 Yet they a beauteous offspring shall beget;

7. The descendants of Seth, Adam's third son (Genesis 5.3); "hither side": away from the "east" (Genesis 4.16), where Cain's sons lived.

8. They studied God's visible works, not the "matters hid" that Raphael had warned Adam against.

9. Venus.

1. God of marriage.

For that fair female troop thou saw'st, that seemed
 Of goddesses, so blithe, so smooth, so gay,
 Yet empty of all good wherein consists
 Woman's domestic honor and chief praise;
 Bred only and completed<sup>0</sup> to the taste
 Of lustful appetite,<sup>0</sup> to sing, to dance,
 To dress, and troll<sup>0</sup> the tongue, and roll the eye.
 To these that sober race of men, whose lives
 Religious titled them the sons of God,<sup>2</sup>
 Shall yield up all their virtue, all their fame
 Ignobly, to the trains<sup>0</sup> and to the smiles
 Of these fair atheists, and now swim in joy,
 (Erelong to swim at large) and laugh; for which
 The world erelong a world of tears must weep."

accomplished desire move

iviles, snares

To whom thus Adam of short joy bereft:
 "O pity and shame, that they who to live well
 Entered so fair, should turn aside to tread
 Paths indirect, or in the mid-way faint!
 But still I see the tenor of man's woe
 Holds on the same, from woman to begin."

"From man's effeminate slackness it begins,"
 Said th' angel, "who should better hold his place
 By wisdom, and superior gifts received.
 But now prepare thee for another scene."

He looked and saw wide territory spread
 Before him, towns, and rural works between,
 Cities of men with lofty gates and tow'rs,
 Concourse<sup>0</sup> in arms, fierce faces threat'ning war,
 Giants<sup>3</sup> of mighty bone, and bold emprise;<sup>0</sup>
 Part wield their arms, part curb the foaming steed,
 Single or in array of battle ranged<sup>0</sup>
 Both horse and foot, nor idly must'ring stood;
 One way a band select from forage drives
 A herd of beeves, fair oxen and fair kine
 From a fat meadow ground; or fleecy flock,
 Ewes and their bleating lambs over the plain,
 Their booty; scarce with life the shepherds fly,
 But call in aid, which makes a bloody fray;
 With cruel tournament the squadrons join;
 Where cattle pastured late, now scattered lies
 With carcasses and arms th' ensanguined<sup>0</sup> field
 Deserted: others to a city strong
 Lay siege, encamped; by battery, scale, and mine,<sup>4</sup>
 Assaulting; others from the wall defend
 With dart and jav'lin, stones and sulphurous fire;
 On each hand slaughter and gigantic deeds.
 In other part the sceptered heralds call

encounters
chivalric adventure

drawn up in raniS

blood-stained

2. Like many exegetes, Milton identifies the "sons of God" as the descendants of Seth, and the "daughters of men" whom they wed (Genesis 6.2) as the descendants of Cain.

3. Adam's fourth vision, based on Genesis 6.4, is of the "Giant" offspring of the previous marriages (identified at lines 683-84); Milton makes them exemplify false heroism and false glory sought through military might and conquest (lines 689-99).

4. I.e., by battering, scaling, and tunneling under the walls.

To council in the city gates: anon
 Gray-headed men and grave, with warriors mixed,
 Assemble, and harangues are heard, but soon
 In factious opposition, till at last 665 Of middle age one<sup>5</sup> rising, eminent
 In wise deport, spake much of right and wrong,
 Of justice, of religion, truth and peace,
 And judgment from above: him old and young
 Exploded,<sup>0</sup> and had seized with violent hands, mocked
 670 Had not a cloud descending snatched him thence Unseen amid the throng: so violence
 Proceeded, and oppression, and sword-law
 Through all the plain, and refuge none was found.
 Adam was all in tears, and to his guide
 675 Lamenting turned full sad; "O what are these,
 Death's ministers, not men, who thus deal death
 Inhumanly to men, and multiply
 Ten-thousandfold the sin of him who slew
 His brother; for of whom such massacre
 680 Make they but of their brethren, men of men?
 But who was that just man, whom had not Heav'n
 Rescued, had in his righteousness been lost?"
 To whom thus Michael: "These are the product
 Of those ill-mated marriages thou saw'st:
 685 Where good with bad were matched, who of themselves
 Abhor to join; and by imprudence mixed,
 Produce prodigious births of body or mind.
 Such were these giants, men of high renown;
 For in those days might only shall be admired,
 690 And valor and heroic virtue called;
 To overcome in battle, and subdue
 Nations, and bring home spoils with infinite
 Manslaughter, shall be held the highest pitch
 Of human glory, and for glory done
 695 Of triumph, to be styled great conquerors,
 Patrons of mankind, gods, and sons of gods,
 Destroyers rightlier called and plagues of men.
 Thus fame shall be achieved, renown on earth,
 And what most merits fame in silence hid.
 700 But he the sev'nth from thee,<sup>6</sup> whom thou beheld'st
 The only righteous in a world perverse,
 And therefore hated, therefore so beset
 With foes for daring single to be just,
 And utter odious truth, that God would come
 705 To judge them with his saints: him the Most High
 Rapt in a balmy cloud with winged steeds
 Did, as thou saw'st, receive, to walk with God
 High in salvation and the climes of bliss,

5. Enoch, who "walked with God: and he was not; for God took him" (Genesis 5.24); Milton elaborates on the story.

6. Here Enoch is more precisely identified by generation, but neither he nor the other biblical personages in these pageants are named. Apparently, Michael and Adam together see the pageants, and Michael (by God's illumination) can interpret them rightly, but neither of the two knows the names these persons will later bear.

Exempt from death; to show thee what reward
 710 Awaits the good, the rest what punishment;
 Which now direct thine eyes and soon behold."
 He looked, and saw the face of things quite changed;
 The brazen throat of war had ceased to roar,
 All now was turned to jollity and game,
 -15 To luxury<sup>0</sup> and riot,<sup>0</sup> feast and dance, lust / debauchery
 Marrying or prostituting, as befell,
 Rape or adultery, where passing fair<sup>0</sup> surpassing beauty
 Allured them; thence from cups to civil broils.
 At length a reverend sire<sup>7</sup> among them came,
 720 And of their doings great dislike declared,
 And testified against their ways; he oft
 Frequented their assemblies, whereso met,
 Triumphs or festivals, and to them preached
 Conversion and repentance, as to souls
 725 In prison under judgments imminent:
 But all in vain: which when he saw, he ceased
 Contending, and removed his tents far off;
 Then from the mountain hewing timber tall,
 Began to build a vessel of huge bulk,
 730 Measured by cubit, length, and breadth, and height,
 Smear'd round with pitch, and in the side a door
 Contrived, and of provisions laid in large
 For man and beast: when lo a wonder strange!
 Of every beast, and bird, and insect small
 735 Came sevens and pairs, and entered in, as taught
 Their order: last the sire and his three sons
 With their four wives; and God made fast the door.
 Meanwhile the south wind rose, and with black wings
 Wide hovering, all the clouds together drove 740 From under heav'n; the hills to their supply<sup>0</sup> assistance
 Vapor, and exhalation dusk<sup>0</sup> and moist, dark mist
 Sent up amain;<sup>0</sup> and now the thickened sky with main force
 Like a dark ceiling stood; down rushed the rain
 Impetuous, and continued till the earth
 745 No more was seen; the floating vessel swum
 Uplifted; and secure with beaked prow
 Rode tilting o'er the waves, all dwellings else
 Flood overwhelmed, and them with all their pomp
 Deep underwater rolled; sea covered sea,
 750 Sea without shore;<sup>8</sup> and in their palaces
 Where luxury late reigned, sea monsters whelped
 And stabled; of mankind, so numerous late,
 All left, in one small bottom<sup>0</sup> swum embarked. boat
 755 The end of all thy offspring, end so sad,
 Depopulation; thee another flood,
 Of tears and sorrow a flood thee also drowned,

7. Noah. Milton's account is based on Genesis 6-9.

8. The "sea without shore" and some other features of this description are taken from Ovid's account of Deucalion's Flood (Metamorphoses 1.292-300, Sandys, translation).

And sunk thee as thy sons; till gently reared
 By th' angel, on thy feet thou stood'st at last,
 760 Though comfortless, as when a father mourns
 His children, all in view destroyed at once;
 And scarce to th' angel utter'dst thus thy plaint:
     "O visions ill foreseen! Better had I
 Lived ignorant of future, so had borne
 765 My part of evil only, each day's lot
 Enough to bear; those now, that were dispensed
 The burd'n of many ages, on me light
 At once, by my foreknowledge<sup>9</sup> gaining birth
 Abortive, to torment me ere their being,
 770 With thought that they must be. Let no man seek Henceforth to be foretold what shall befall
 Him or his children, evil he may be sure,
 Which neither his foreknowing can prevent,
 And he the future evil shall no less
 775 In apprehension than in substance feel
 Grievous to bear: but that care now is past,
 Man is not whom to warn:<sup>1</sup> those few escaped
 Famine and anguish will at last consume
 Wand'ring that wat'ry desert: I had hope
 780 When violence was ceased, and war on earth,
 All would have then gone well, peace would have crowned
 With length of happy days the race of man;
 But I was far deceived; for now I see
 Peace to corrupt no less than war to waste.
 785 How comes it thus? Unfold, celestial guide,
 And whether here the race of man will end."
     To whom thus Michael: "Those whom last thou saw'st
 In triumph and luxurious wealth, are they
 First seen in acts of prowess eminent
 790 And great exploits, but of true virtue void;
 Who having spilt much blood, and done much waste
 Subduing nations, and achieved thereby
 Fame in the world, high titles, and rich prey,
 Shall change their course to pleasure, ease, and sloth,
 795 Surfeit, and lust, till wantonness and pride
 Raise out of friendship hostile deeds in peace.
 The conquered also, and enslaved by war
 Shall with their freedom lost all virtue lose
 And fear of God, from whom their piety feigned
 800 In sharp contest of battle found no aid
 Against invaders; therefore cooled in zeal
 Thenceforth shall practice how to live secure,
 Worldly or dissolute, on what their lords
 Shall leave them to enjoy, for th' earth shall bear
 805 More than enough, that temperance may be tried:
 So all shall turn degenerate, all depraved,
